There is one way in which I think we might do rather more to elevate the life of your young people, and that is by teaching them the great and lasting worth of a living love of nature. This love of nature contains a wonderful power for good, and it is an infinite pity that it is largely as a closed book to, I am afraid, a very large number. Of course, we all of us have a general love for natural beauty, but the thorough sympathy that takes into the heart the very breath of nature's outpouring, and assimilates it, so that it becomes a part of the inmost being, is rare. The old brute instinct which causes boys to take a delight in killing wild animals (and which sometimes continues until they write M.F.H. after their names) is yet powerful in our midst, and we shall have done a noble work if we can turn this activity and enthusiasm into a higher channel, and show our scholars that a living dog is indeed better than a dead lion, and that far greater and truer enjoyment is obtained by stimulating a reverence for all life, and by studying the natural habits of birds and animals, rather than in destroying life and beauty, even if for the sake of a collection.

Then, again, we should do well to teach our young people to appreciate the beauty which lies all around us day by day, and not merely the exceptional sights and sounds which they may perhaps see or hear when they go once a year into the country. Thank God, bricks and mortar, the devouring agents of our time, by which many beautiful spots are swallowed up, cannot shut out the glories of the sunset or the starlit sky, and although our town children may not day by day have much chance of hearing the thrilling music of the thrush, yet the often despised town sparrow has beauties and marvels to which the careless or indifferent might be blind. In our parks, also, what a wealth is to be found; the trees, with their wonderful fretwork of twig and branch, best seen in winter, and most beautiful at other times; the ripple on the water; the exquisite construction and colouring of the daisy; the beautiful arrangement and blending of the different blades of grass; only those who have experienced it know the strange gladness that comes from the contemplation of and intimate communion with nature in her own home. It will be much, very much, if we can lead our elder scholars by pleasant paths to become nature enthusiasts. It is a grand thing for filling up those odd moments which so frequently go to waste, or worse, and should serve to heighten and ennoble by leading from nature to nature's God. I would like to suggest that our Sunday-school superintendents and others might do a good deal to foster this love by choosing as prizes, where funds will allow, such books as Richard Kearton's charming nature volumes, with their captivating letterpress and wonderful illustrations.

So many of our young folk are, as it were, living in a dream, not having realised, because they have never been fully revealed to them, the great possibilities, the true inwardness or the real meaning of life. Surely it is our place in our Sunday-schools to open up to them these infinite possibilities, to prepare and train their minds, so that when this revelation does come, it may be to them not as a shadow, decreasing their light-heartedness, and shutting out any real enjoyment and happiness, but rather as the flood of sunlight which will show them the many opportunities which have passed them unseen, opportunities of enriching their lives and filling them with the happiness that will stand the test of time and change.

We members of congregations and teachers in Sunday-schools must have a moving faith in our own principles and convictions—yes, a faith that will move us to action in spreading the light, that will not be satisfied with silent acquiescence and passive acceptance. We know that this spirit does exist among us, but there is ever need for us to encourage and hearten each other, so that the willingness to spend and be spent in the service of our cause may be strengthened. Without this living enthusiasm you will not find the link between the church and the Sunday-school so real as, I think, we should all like to see it. I, for one, believe in looking on the Sunday-school as the nursery of the church, and I would teach our children the value of our religious services. Teach them the noble heritage of our churches, and what they stand for; show them that by supporting these churches by their attendance and practical aid, they are helping to spread these higher principles and views of life; imbue them with your own enthusiasm, and you may then inspire them, not only to become useful citizens, but also active members of our congregations and loyal workers in the cause of right.

Mrs. Rawlings, of Denton, then read a paper on "The Sunday-school from the Scholars' point of view." She had made a serious attempt to obtain from the scholars themselves their opinions as to the object and value of Sunday-school teaching. In a certain number of schools questions had been put to them which are usually put only to teachers. They were as follows:—1. What is the Sunday-school meant to do? or, What do you go to Sunday-school for? 2. What kind of subject do you like best? 3. Would you like to become a Sunday-school teacher? If so, why? If not, why not? An analysis of the answers received made a most interesting and thoughtful paper, and showed how much scholars differ amongst themselves as to the objects and aims of Sunday-school work. Similar questions were also put to a number of scholars in day-schools, who seem to have taken quite a different point of view upon some of them, especially the first two. The inquiry had deeply impressed the writer with a sense of the high value of Sunday-school teaching, and she urged that those engaged in it, though they might at times feel that their best effort was very poor, must still be brave and continue doggedly to engage in it with all the power they possess.

Mr. Woodhead, of Upper Brook-street, followed with some interesting remarks on the paper, and the meeting was brought to a close by the singing of a hymn.

The day's proceedings had been highly stimulating, and the attendances were excellent.

The Executive Committee of the Central Public-house Trust Association, of which Lord Grey is president, has just issued its third annual report, from which it appears that there are now 29 Trust companies in England, one in Wales, 11 in Scotland, and one in Ireland. The movement is spreading to the Colonies, and has attracted attention in Germany, and there are similar societies in America. Instances are given of the great increase in the trade in non-alcoholic refreshments and the decrease in the consumption of intoxicants under the management of Trust public-houses, and of the way in which ordinary publicans display signs to the effect that teas are provided, in competition with the houses owned by the Trust. The Trust Companies of the United Kingdom have now a capital of £300,000, and have under their management 130 public-houses.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

EASTERN DISTRICT.

The greatest drawback to united work among the churches in the Eastern District is their geographical distance from one another. And whatever improvement may be made in the means of locomotion, that difficulty will probably never be overcome. Imagine the churches at Oxford and Northampton included in the London District Unitarian Society, or those at Shrewsbury and York included in the Manchester District Association, and some idea will be gained as to the anomaly known as the Eastern Union of Unitarian and Free Christian Churches. The great aim of the executive of that body has been to diminish space. This object was partly achieved last June, when the most representative meeting of the members of our churches ever organised in East Anglia was held in Norwich. A special fund was raised, and tickets were issued to the young people at reduced fares. The result was that sixty-five Unitarians, hailing from such widely distant places as Long Sutton in Lincolnshire, Bedfield, Bury St. Edmunds, Framlingham, and Ipswich in Suffolk, Lynn and Yarmouth in Norfolk, and Braintree in Essex, met one another for the first time, and were welcomed by an equal number of Octagonians. Partly they were on pleasure bent, this being considered the best way of introducing the visitors to each other. By pleasure was meant visiting such interesting places as the Norwich Castle and Cathedral, and partaking of meals together. Speeches were reduced to the minimum, but they were clear and telling. "Never," said a London visitor, "did I see speakers keep within their limits as they have done on this occasion." Orders were issued that no two members of the same church were to be seen walking together, and creditably obeyed. All introductions were dispensed with; and no strangeness was experienced in talking to any newly-found friend. The spirit of bonhomie and joy prevailed throughout the day and inspired enthusiasm for our cause. A musical and devotional service brought the day for us to a most appropriate close. Miss Herford represented the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and delivered a happy and inspiring address. Our friends parted, expressing the hope that a re-union would soon be possible.

This event was an experiment. Before it was made many expressed grave doubts as to the possibility of its success; and at one time even the promoters and organisers lost heart and nearly abandoned the scheme. But it proved an experiment worth repeating, and an effort is to be made to hold a similar gathering at Yarmouth in July next.

This is the sunniest side of our work, for some of our churches have gone through a most arduous and trying time. The chapel at Lynn has unfortunately been closed. Let no one outside the district be too severe upon us because the services in a pleasant little chapel, situated in a town of 20,000 people, have been allowed to cease. The congregation cannot support a minister, even with the usual assistance from denominational funds. Then why not supply it with lay help from Norwich? Because Norwich, though a near neighbour in the Unitarian East Anglian sense, is thirty-nine miles away and there are no Sunday trains.

We have eight ministers in our district, three of whom settled in 1903. The Rev. John Birks has taken charge of our work at Yarmouth, and is organising and using what strength we have there to its fullest extent. A literary and social union has been formed, and has been a means of attracting some strangers to the Sunday services. Though the congregation was founded 200 years ago, Mr. Birks' work will be that of a pioneer, and it is to be hoped that all those friends who visit Yarmouth or Gorleston during the coming summer will not forget the Old Meeting.

Mr. Rump, who was formerly a superintendent of the Norwich Octagon Sunday Schools, supplied the pulpit at Hapton on several Sundays, with the result that he was invited by the congregation to become their minister. An induction service was necessary. Three ministers, according to the trust deed, had to take part. One of these, the Rev. John Holden, M.A., who preached the sermon, was a Congregationalist, and the other two were Unitarians. We imagine that this is one of the first ordination services in which Unitarian ministers and the minister of another denomination have joined. Since Mr. Rump's settlement, a Sunday-school has been opened, and men's clubs and mothers' meetings have been started. But very little can be done here, for the country is under-populated. In some parts of it, one may walk a mile without passing a house, and in the parish of Hapton itself I suppose there are less than 100 inhabitants.

Mr. Newell succeeded Mr. Amey as minister of Bedfield and Framlingham. He came with good credentials, which he has fully justified. Besides taking a leading part in the concerns of Framlingham and commencing fresh movements at Bedfield, he has gone, with true missionary spirit, to Debenham, and explained the Unitarian faith in the open air to any people who would gather round him.

Now I am mentioning individuals, I must not forget Miss S. S. Dowson, our Postal Mission Correspondent. From the little village of Geldeston, near Beccles, Miss Dowson is distributing our literature in our district and beyond. Last year she wrote 620 letters in answer to inquiries concerning our belief, sent out 1,256 pamphlets, and lent several books. This is one of the strongest arms of the Postal Mission, and the Eastern Union is deeply grateful to Miss Dowson for her extensive and painstaking work.

The Braintree congregation has been increased by the addition of some young people, who have been attracted to the services by the active work of Mr. Fuller in the moral elevation of the town. The principal hall has been packed to overflowing on more than one occasion to hear him speak on such questions as gambling and education.

The Ipswich congregation makes steady headway. Every year of Mr. Tavener's earnest ministry has seen new names added to the list of members. But the most important work done there of late has been of a novel character. Two years ago Mr. Tavener undertook to give painting lessons to the younger members. And after a year's tuition, it was decided that the pictures painted in 1903 should be the property of the Sunday-school, which had been recently re-opened, and is now under the efficient management of Mrs. Wilkinson. And on the walls of the building are now to be seen copies of the masterpieces of Burne-Jones, Millet, and Watts. At the further end of the room is a large representation of Jesus preaching to the multitudes, copied by the minister. The intervening space on the walls has been artistically decorated by one of the members. Some of this work may seem conspicuously amateur to a hypercritical eye, but it is worth while to visit the building in order to see how attractive a school can be made.

Our Long Sutton friends hope to restore their chapel. And their minister, the Rev. W. J. Pond, is trying to raise the sum of £100 for that purpose.

Of Norwich I must say but little. The last four years have seen great losses by death. One after another our friends have been called away from us; and sometimes the minister has felt severely tried by having had so constantly to officiate at the graves of men and women who have won his deepest respect. But a goodly band of young people have connected themselves with our chapel. Many of them have been formally welcomed into church membership; and over a hundred are united in our Guild. We have societies enough. Fifteen different branches of work are represented on our Church Council, which meets monthly. In September next the lease on our Girls' Day School buildings, which have been used for Sunday-school purposes, will run out, and we have to face the gigantic problem and task of finding a home for nearly 400 Sunday scholars.

The B. and F. U. A. has again generously helped the Eastern Union. Through its grants special services are now being held at Braintree, Ipswich, Norwich, and Yarmouth. Those at Braintree were commenced by the Rev. J. H. Wicksteed, and those at the other three places by the Rev. John Page Hopps. To both the Ipswich and Norwich chapels Mr. Hopps attracted upwards of 400 people, some of whom have attended on the following Sundays. Mr. Hopps also delivered lectures during the week on "The Joys and Sorrows of Evolution," and on William Blake at Ipswich and Norwich respectively. We cannot say what the outcome of these special efforts will be, but at least Mr. Hopps' power as a lecturer will not be soon forgotten in East Anglia. Some of those belonging to other denominations thought his condemnations of orthodox theology a little too severe, but acknowledged the earnestness with which he expressed his opinions. The churches in this district will require increased zeal, if they are to maintain their position during the next few years. We have some noble old men and women still remaining with us; we have also several young people, who have, however, to win their way; but the number of workers between the ages of twenty-five and fifty is comparatively small. But we look forward and work with hope, nothing doubting.

Alfred Hall.

THE CHURCH THAT SUCCEEDS.

Preaching in the Richmond Free Church on March 13, from the text, "And then thou shalt have good success," Josh. i. 8, the Rev. Silas Farrington spoke as follows:—

I meant, when I began this sermon, to say something about success in our church life. What is commonly understood as success here is visible and manifest—large congregations, every seat taken; large subscriptions, a surplus even in the treasury; large charities carried on; many affiliated institutions. That is a very real and even delightful success. I am sure you all often long for it, and feel how interesting and encouraging it would make our union here, and I am sure no one feels that more than the minister does.

But there is another kind of success. There is a sense of fidelity to conviction, of loyalty to the truth you see and feel, nourished by coming here, a seeing more of this truth, and of its application to life; a getting stimulus and assurance from it; and to draw this from our church is succeeding. That is, our church is fulfilling that exact purpose it is here for, as it does thus minister to our loyalty to the truth we see.

But also our union here is meant to deepen our sense of God; to bring us into more close and intimate relation with Him, into such a consciousness of these through our prayer and our praise that our whole life will be filled with it. We come to bring Him ourselves—our thanks, our wants, our imperfections, our faults, our hopes, and our better purposes. We want to grow more humble, more faithful, more trustful, more thoughtful, to find some reinforcement of our better selves. This is what we want to get from our church, and so far as any one of us finds this through it or in it, our church is a success. It is fulfilling our purpose.

Sometimes I have thought, friends, that if each of us were more intent on this kind of success—if each of us used our church diligently and simply, with this end in view, that he might draw from it all that inward profit to his spiritual life it offers—that he might grow more sensitive to all that is pure and good, more conscious of his own weakness, more fervent in his aspirations, more ardent in his charity, quicker in his perception of things divine; if each concentrated himself on growing better and holier—then the other kind of success might come also. For in church life, at least, what is mechanical, such as organisation, rules, regulations, formalities, count for so little; and spirit, disposition, heart, count for so much! Unless these are right, nothing is right, nor ever can be. Unless we feel what it is we are to get from the Church, unless we seek that special good, and seek it constantly, we shall miss it, always miss it; and our efforts themselves will go wide of the mark.

This is the success, friends, that we may each ensure for ourselves. May I say, we each must ensure it for ourself; yes, and most certain is it, and most encouraging, that we each can attain it for ourself. "Then shalt thou make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success."

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Wednesday, or Thursday Morning at latest.]

Blackley.—The congregation have placed on record, and sent a letter of condolence to the Rev. Frank K. Freeston on the death of the Rev. Joseph Freeston, whose eleven years' devoted service as minister at Blackley will ever be cherished by those who knew him. His influence for all good works is still felt and his name honoured and revered in the district.

Congleton.—In carrying out its excellent arrangement of sending special ministers to show sympathy with small and struggling churches, the B. & F.U.A. arranged for the Rev. R. Davis, of Evesham, to visit Congleton on Sunday, the 27th ult. Advantage was taken of the occasion for him to preach the annual sermons in aid of the funds of the East Cheshire Christian Union. Mr. Davis delivered two thoughtful and earnest sermons on "The Kingdom of Heaven Likened to Leaven," and on "Proving all Things, and holding fast to that which is Good." After the evening service, a conference with the congregation was held, when the visitor explained the object of his presence, assuring them of the goodwill and interest of the Association, and wishing to learn, as fully as might be, their position, desires, and prospects. By judicious questions and frank replies, these matters were gradually brought out, and many kind and wise suggestions given.

Leigh.—Sunday-school anniversary services were held on Sunday week, when the special preacher afternoon and evening was the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, and the morning address to parents and children was given by the Rev. R. S. Redfern, minister of the church. There were good congregations, and the collections amounted to over £12.

Lewes.—Westgate Chapel was crowded on Palm Sunday evening, when a sacred cantata, "Earth and Heaven" (Nicholl), was rendered by the choir, with instrumental accompaniment.

London: Essex Church.—An impressive Service of Consecration and Recognition was held on the morning of Palm Sunday, in succession to a similar one two years ago. As in the former case, those taking part had attended the Minister's Preparation Class, and now sat together in the front pews. The Rev. Gordon Cooper read the lessons, and the Rev. Frank K. Freeston preached the sermon, which pleaded for consecration, service, friendship, and church fellowship. At the close he gave the right hand of welcome to each one, after which the sixteen new members signed the Roll Book of the Church, in the sight of all present. The service was felt by all to be both helpful and memorable, as emphasising the more definite recognition of the young in the life of the congregation, and filling church membership with religious meaning.

London: Forest Gate.—The congregation has lost a valued member by the death of Miss Margaret Annie Warriner, whose remains were laid in the City of London Cemetery, the funeral service being conducted by her friend and minister, Mr. Perris. A teacher by profession, she was unsparing in her efforts to do her duty, even when physically unfit. A wide circle of friends in Newcastle, from whence her family came some years ago, as well as her fellow-worshippers and co-workers here, deplore her decease at the early age of thirty-two; and great sympathy has been shown to her sorrowing mother, sisters, and brothers.—The recent marriage of Mr. Sydney H. Brown, treasurer of the church, prompted the presentation of a revolving book-case; members and friends desiring to mark their appreciation of his devoted services. Mrs. Brown, who as Miss Nellie Wilson, has been very helpful in the Sunday-school and in the musical service, was fittingly associated with her husband in the gift. A course of Sunday evening sermons by the Rev. H. W. Perris, on "Messages of the Spirit enshrined in the works of some great Poets," has been listened to with marked interest by large congregations.

London: Peckham.—At the close of the service on Sunday evening last at the Avondale Unitarian Church, the Rev. G. Carter, in the name of the congregation, wished Godspeed to one of the members, Mr. W. H. Lawton, who is about to settle in the United States. Mr. Lawton has been actively engaged in Sunday-school and Band of Hope work for many years, and as assistant treasurer of the church. As a small token of appreciation and esteem he was presented with a pair of gold sleeve links, and made a suitable acknowledgment.

Lye.—The annual sermons were preached at the Unitarian Chapel, March 27, by the Rev. L. P. Jacks, M.A., afternoon and evening. The collections amounted to £9.

Macclesfield.—A memorial sermon, dedicated to the late Rev. Joseph Freeston, was preached in the King Edward-street Chapel by the Rev. W. G. Cadman on March 27, where Mr. Freeston ministered from 1888 to 1897. After which the following resolution was passed in reverent silence:—"The minister and congregation of King Edward-street Chapel do place on record their sorrow at the death of the Rev. Joseph Freeston, their friend and a former minister of this congregation. They, in common with many others, recognise the good work he so faithfully and for so many years accomplished in furtherance of all that lends to enlightenment, freedom, progress, and religion, and they will ever hold his memory in grateful and affectionate remembrance."

Maidstone.—The annual congregational meeting took place on March 30. After tea the chair was taken by the Rev. S. S. Brettell, M.A., and reports in connection with the chapel, the Sunday-school, the sewing circle, and the Young People's Guild were read, all showing that much good work had been done during the year. The Rev. F. K. Freeston, President of the Provincial Assembly, was present. The chairman, in introducing Mr. Freeston to the meeting, said he bore an honoured name, and he was sure they would all sympathise with him in the bereavement he had recently sustained in the death of his father. His father was most highly esteemed by his brother ministers and a large public for his lofty character and his powerful advocacy of many noble causes, and his son was worthily walking in his father's steps. Mr. Freeston made a bright and encouraging speech, and the meeting was also addressed by Messrs. F. W. Ruck, M. A. Ruck, Moseley, Large, and the chairman. The committee and officers for the ensuing year were elected. The business being concluded, Mr. Freeston delivered his Priestley Centenary Lecture, illustrated by numerous lantern slides. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Freeston brought the proceedings to a close.

Portsmouth: St. Thomas-street.—The eighteenth annual tea and sacred concert were held on Good Friday. Nearly 100 partook of tea, after which the church was filled with a larger number than on any previous occasion, and a good programme of sacred music was rendered by the choir and friends. Mr. T. Bond again presided.

Rhondda Valley.—A social meeting was held on Good Friday in the Assembly Hall, of the Queen's Hotel, Tylorstown, where until recently fortnightly services had been held, to make presentations tothe Rev. D. Rees and members of his family, in recognition of their services in that district, which terminated last July, on Mr. Rees's removal to Pontypridd. In acknowledging the gifts to himself, his wife and daughter, Mr. Rees took the opportunity of pleading for closer co-operation between the Unitarians of Cardigan and Glamorgan.

Stockton-on-Tees.—On Wednesday, March 30, the Rev. H. V. Mills, of Kendal, concluded a series of three lectures on "Evolution and Religion," which was greatly appreciated. The lecturer earned the thanks and gratitude of many people, who received by the lectures a deeper knowledge of themselves and the ways of God; and hence a deeper reverence and more of the essential spirit of religion.

Walmsley (Appointment).—At a special meeting of the Walmsley trustees and congregation it was unanimously decided to appoint the Rev. E. E. Jenkins, assistant minister of Upper Chapel, Sheffield, to the pastorate rendered vacant by the retirement of the Rev. Edward Allen. Mr. Jenkins has accepted the invitation.

Freedom of thought being intimately connected with the happiness and dignity of man in every stage of his being, is of so much more importance than the preservation of any constitution, that to infringe the former under pretence of supporting the latter, is to sacrifice the means to the end. Robert Hall.

It is because I have learned the essential equality of men before the common Father that I cannot endure to see one man establishing his arbitrary will over another by fraud, or force, or wealth, or rank, or superstitious claims. It is because the human being has moral powers, because he carries a law in his own breast, and was made to govern himself, that I cannot endure to see him taken out of his own hands and fashioned into a tool by another's avarice or pride. It is because I see in him a great nature, the divine image, and vast capacities that I demand for him means of self-development, spheres for free action, that I call society not to fetter, but to aid his growth. Without intending to disparage the outward temporal advantages of liberty, I have habitually regarded it in a higher light as the birthright of the soul, as the element in which men are to put themselves forth, to become conscious of what they are, and to fulfil the end of their being.

Channing.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

SUNDAY, April 10.

Acton, Central Auction Room, Market-place, High-street, 7 P.M., Rev. J. H. Wicksteed, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7 P.M., Rev. Eustace Thompson.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. B. Kirkman Gray.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. W. Stanley.

Child's Hill, All Souls' Free Church, corner of Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Edgar Daplyn.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. J. Jupp.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. Marchant.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Gordon Cooper, B.A.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. W. Perris.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M., and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. Bloor.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. Greaves.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M., Rev. H. S. Perris, M.A., and 7 P.M., Rev. E. Savell Hicks, M.A.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. Critchley, B.A.

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 A.M., Rev. J. E. Stronge.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M. Rev. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 A.M. Rev. E. Savell Hicks, M.A., and 7 P.M., Rev. H. S. Perris, M.A.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7 P.M., Rev. John Ellis.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. Carter.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. L. Jenkins Jones.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M., Rev. S. Farrington, and 7 P.M., Rev. John Page Hopps.

Stepney Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Mr. C. A. Ginever.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and, 7 P.M., Rev. W. Wooding, B.A.

Stratford, Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. T. Elliot.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. J. Mummery.

PROVINCIAL.

Bath, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. McDowell.

Blackpool, Dickson-road, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Pulpit Vacant.

Blackpool, South Shore Unitarian Church, The Hall, Lytham-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

Bootle, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. Morley Mills.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. Coe.

Brighton, Christ Church, New-road, North-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. S. Gardner Preston.

Buxton, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. George Street.

Canterbury, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11 A.M., Rev. J. H. Wicksteed, M.A.

Dover, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. Burrows.

Guildford, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. Rattenbury Hodges.

Hastings, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. Marten.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. P. Jacks, M.A.

Liscard, Memorial Church, Manor-road 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. Ernest Parry.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Charles Craddock.

Liverpool, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. D. Roberts.

Liverpool, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. Collins Odgers, B.A. Evening Subject: "Causes of Unrest in the Religious World."

Maidstone, Earl-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. Sidaway Brettell, M.A.

Manchester, Platt Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. T. Poynting, B.A.

Newport, Isle of Wight, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. E. Pike.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. J. E. Carpenter, M.A.

Portsmouth, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Rev. W. Birks.

Portsmouth, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. Thomas Bond.

Scarborough, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M. Rev. Ottwell Binns.

Sevenoaks, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Rev. F. Teasdale Reed.

Sheffield, Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. Agar.

Southport, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Frederick B. Mott.

Torquay, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'Connor.

Trowbridge, Conigre Church, 11 A.M. and 6 P.M. Rev. J. Wain.

Tunbridge Wells, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

IRELAND.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 7 P.M., Rev. G. H. Vance, B.D.

WALES.

Aberystwith, New Market Hall, 11 A.M.

Cape Town, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45 P.M., Rev. R. Balmforth.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY SOUTH PLACE, FINSBURY.—April 10, at 11.15 A.M., JOHN M. ROBERTSON, "Recent Christian Apologetics."

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss Lilian Talbot, B.A. Honours Lond. Preparation for London Matriculation, Trinity College, and Associated Board of Musicians. Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. Apply to the Head Mistress.

YORKSHIRE.—WESTBOURNE, (SHEFFIELD).
BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

Head Mistress.
MISS F. GORDEY, B.A. Lond.

Preparation for Matric., Associated Board of R.A.M. and R.C.M. and Camb. Locals.
School "Recognized by Board of Education."
Splendid situation 600 ft. above sea level.
Hockey, tennis, swimming, Swedish Gymnasium attached to House.
Apply PRINCIPAL for prospectus.

FRUITARIAN CAKES.
MADE ENTIRELY OF FRUIT AND NUTS,
Uncooked, Concentrated, Natural Food.
READY FOR USE WITHOUT PREPARATION.
For travelling they are ideal. A meal will go in the pocket.

PEAR and WALNUT	7d.	per 8 oz. packet.
APRICOT and NUT	7d.	,, ,,
MUSCATEL and ALMOND	6d.	,, ,,
FRUIT and NUTS	5d.	,, ,,
DATE and GINGER	4d.	,, ,,
DATE and LEMON	4d.	,, ,,
DATE and ORANGE	4d.	,, ,,
FIG and CITRON	4d.	,, ,,
DATE and NUT	3d.	,, ,,
FIG and NUT	3d.	,, ,,

Sample Box containing 14 varieties Fruitarian Cakes, 8d.; or with 3 varieties of Nut Butters, post free, 1s.

HUGH MAPLETON, Nut Food Manufacturer,
ARDWICK GREEN, MANCHESTER.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY,
ADELAIDE PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE E.C.
Assets, £158,000.

DIRECTORS.
Chairman—Sir H. W. Lawrence, Bart., J.P. 17, Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—Mark H. Judge, A.R.I.B.A. 7, Pall Mall, S.W
Miss Cecil Gradwell, 7, Victoria-street, S.W.
F. H. A. Hardcastle, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st. S.W.
Miss Orme, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
Stephen Seaward Tayler, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham, S.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4 per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3 and 3½ per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

BORROWER'S INTEREST 4 per cent. Monthly Repayment, including Principal, Premium, and Interest for each £100.

10 years.	12 years.	15 years.	18 years.	21 years.
1 1 1	0 18 4	0 15 6	0 14 2	0 12 11

Compare the above rates with those of other Societies. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager

BIRTHS.

Rodger.—On March 31st, at 41, Lorne-road, Stroud Green, the wife of Samuel T. Rodger, of a son.

Scott.—On April 3rd, at Broomfield, Alderley Edge, to Mr. and Mrs. Russell Scott, jun., a son.

Worsley.—On April 3rd, at 15, York-road, Edgbaston, the wife of Philip J. Worsley, jun., of a son.

MARRIAGE.

Wicksteed—Wells.—On March 30th, at the Friends' Meeting House, Nantwich, Arnold, elder son of Charles Wicksteed, Bryn Hafod, Kettering, to Helen, younger daughter of the late Frederick Wells, of Kettering, and Mrs. Wells, Woodeaves, Nantwich.

DEATHS.

Love.—On the 27th ult., at Redlands, Addiscombe Grove, Croydon, Ellen, daughter of the late Samuel Love, of Shoreham, Kent. Aged 73.

Nicholson.—On April 4th, at Barrington-road, Altrincham, in her 84th year, Margaret, widow of Robert Nicholson, and eldest daughter of Samuel Thornely of Liverpool. Interment at Hale Chapel on Thursday, at 3 p.m. No cards and no flowers by request.

NOW READY. APRIL NUMBER, 2s. 6d. net.

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL

A Quarterly Review of Religion, Theology, and Philosophy.

Subscription, 10s. per Annum, post free.

THE CHIEF CONTENTS OF THE APRIL NUMBER ARE:

The Moral Aspect of the Fiscal Question. By HENRY JONES, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Moral Philosophy, Glasgow.

Suggestions towards the Re-Interpretation of Christian Doctrine. By Sir OLIVER LODGE, D.Sc., F.R.S.

The Resurrection of Jesus Christ. By the Rev. Canon HENSLEY HENSON, B.D.

Gladstone as a Moral and Religious Personality. By the Right Rev. LORD BISHOP OF RIPON.

Mr. Myers's Theory of "The Subliminal Self." By ANDREW LANG, M.A., LL.D.

The Axiom of Infinity: A New Presupposition of Thought. By Prof. CASSIUS J. KEYSER, M.A., Ph.D.

The Passing of Conviction. By Prof. W. JETHRO BROWN, LL.D., Litt.D.

North Arabia and the Bible: A Defence. By Dr. HUGO WINCKLER.

Discussions, Reviews, and Bibliography of Current Literature.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, London, W.C.

TESTAMENT OF JESUS.
The Only Genuine Gospel. 1s.

MONOTHEISM v. PRIESTCRAFT.
The Riddle of the Universe solved. 1s.
POST FREE.

C. W. HILLYEAR, 223, St. Albans Road, Watford.

For those who love Priestley.

ILLUSTRATED CENTENARY EDITION OF THE

Memoirs of Dr. Priestley,

Comprising his AUTOBIOGRAPHY, With continuation by his Son.

Sixteen Full Page Illustrations.
(Portraits, Statues, &c.), on Best Art Paper.
NOW READY. Limited Issue only, 3/- net.

London: H. R. ALLENSON, Ivy Lane, Paternoster Row.

OLD SUBJECTS: NEW TREATMENT.

BY DR. C. INGLIS ("Rejected").

REPENTANCE ENJOINED BY THE BIBLE. Price 6d.; post free 7d.

THE AUTHORITY OF THE BIBLE. Price 6d.; post free 7d.

Two striking pamphlets, original and unconventional.
The two together for 1s. post free from
A. BONNER, 1 & 2, Took's Court, London, E.C.
(Off Chancery Lane and Holborn.)

DEVOTIONAL BOOKLETS.
By the REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

DAILY MEDITATIONS
(Fourth Edition Revised.)

NIGHT UNTO NIGHT.
Cloth, red edges, 6d.; roan gilt, 1s.
PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C.

THE RED CROSS LIGHT CURE
Massage and Chiropody Institute,
12, DUKE ST., SOUTHPORT.

Light and Radiant Heat Baths, Electrical Vibrating Massage, Massage, Electro Massage.
Patients can consult their own Physicians, and have every home comfort whilst undergoing treatment.
MISS BLAKEY, Principal
(London Certificated).
DR. S. DOWSE.
ESTABLISHED IN SOUTHPORT FIFTEEN YEARS

PULPIT SUPPLY.—Rev. D. DAVIS, 24, Warbreck Drive, Blackpool.

Situations, VACANT AND WANTED.

WANTED.—LADY HELP to share work with another. Small family. No servant.—B., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

DEAF CHILDREN taught to Speak and Educated. Lip-reading Lessons for Adults or Children. Defects of Speech treated.—Miss DOBELL, "Lansdowne," Greenfield-avenue, Stourbridge.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION AND STAMFORD STREET CHAPEL.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at Stamford Street Chapel on Monday, 18th April.

Tea, to which Subscribers and Friends are cordially invited, will be provided at 7 p.m.

The Chair will be taken at 8 p.m. by W. ARTHUR SHARPE, Esq., supported by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, S. S. Tayler, Esq., C. F. Pearson, Esq, Dr. C. Herbert Smith, and other Ministers and Laymen.

WIDOWS' FUND.

The ANNUAL SUBSCRIBERS' MEETING of the Society for the Relief of Necessitous Widows and Children of Protestant Dissenting Ministers will be held on Monday, April 11th, at the Offices of the Sunday School Union, 56, Old Bailey.

The Chair will be taken at Two o'clock.

FREDK. LONG & SON,
AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS,
Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.
Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

Terms for Advertisements.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF-PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6

Special Terms for a Series.
Calendar Notices, 10s. per year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.
Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge 1/6.
Situations Vacant and Wanted,
20 words, 1s. 3 insertions charged as 2.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. The entire remittance should accompany all orders to insert Advertisements.

Board and Residence.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH. — ARNEWOOD. Pension. Commanding position in the West Cliff-road; full South aspect; sea views and private grounds; close to Winter Gardens, Cliff Promenade, Square or Pier; moderate Tariff.—Apply, MANAGERESS.

CHELTENHAM.—Board and Residence in the best part of Sunny Cheltenham, sheltered from North and Easterly winds. Near the Spas and Gardens. Comfortable home. Moderate terms. Excellent cuisine.—A. G., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, W.C.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE; most comfortable throughout. Sea View, excellent cuisine. billiard and smoke room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

LANGLEY HOUSE, DAWLISH, DEVON.—A delightful HOLIDAY RESORT for Ladies and School-girls (Boys under 15). Beautiful country, bracing climate. Sea and Moorland. Prospectus from MISS N. JONES, Matron; or A. E. JONES, Esq, Proprietor.

FELIXSTOWE.—Comfortable HOME for Permanent BOARDERS, Adults or Scholars; also APARTMENTS on reasonable terms.—Apply, Mrs. ROBINSON, Kimberley, Ranelagh-road, Felixstowe.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea-level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort.

SIDMOUTH.—A few paying Guests received (permanent or otherwise) in private family.—W., INQUIRER Office, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

TWO LADIES, with Two Little Girls, wish to be received as paying guests for a short time from 19th inst. Farm-house might suit. Neighbourhood of Dorking, Hindhead, Limpsfield or Shanklin. Terms moderate.—Miss TEBB, Ashburnham, Shortlands.

THE ABERYSTWYTH CONGREGATION will gladly assist Visitors to find Apartments.—Stamped envelope, A. JOINSON, Chairman, Pier-street.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL
Enlarged, Remodelled, Refurnished.
PRONOUNCED BY THE PRESS TO BE THE BEST TEMPERANCE HOTEL IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.
Accommodation for about 250 Guests.
Highly commended by the Rev. Dr. Aked, Rev. Rowland Hill, Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. Alderman White, M.P., the Misses Cadbury and thousands of other guests.
Spacious Coffee, Reading & Drawing Rooms.
Electric Light throughout.
Apartments, Service and Table d'Hote Breakfast from 5/- to 6/6 per day (with Dinner from 8/- to 9/6.
77 & 101,
Southampton Row, London.
FREDERIC SMITH & SONS.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Sole Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 20 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale). JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, April 9, 1904.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3225. NEW SERIES, No. 329.] LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 16, 1904. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 241
ARTICLES—
Professor Wendt, of Jena... 246
Frances Power Cobbe 249
The National Conference Guilds' Union 251
LEADER—
Religion in London 248
CORRESPONDENCE—
Politics, &c. 243
London Sunday School Society 244
Evil versus Divine Goodness 244
POETRY—To the Aspidistra... 242
LITERATURE—
Articlesi n the Reviews 245
Short Notices... 245
OBITUARY—
Mrs. R. D. Darbishire 246
Sir Thomas Frost 247
PROVINCIAL LETTER—Wales 253
CHILDREN'S COLUMN 247
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 254
OUR CALENDAR 255
ADVERTISEMENTS 255

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE funeral of Miss Frances Power Cobbe took place on Friday of last week, with the utmost simplicity, according to her own directions. She had specially asked that friends should not wear mourning, and the coffin was taken from Hengwrt to the Llanelltyd church-yard, not in a hearse, but in her own carriage, in which she had so long been accustomed to drive about that beautiful country. The service, both at the house and by the grave-side, was conducted by the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter. What he then said concerning Miss Cobbe, he afterwards embodied in a memorial address on Sunday morning in the Manchester College Chapel at Oxford. This address is published in full in our present issue.

IT is a very long time since so important a contribution was made to the world's progress as the series of treaties signed last week by the British and French Governments. International friendships wax and wane, and though one rejoiced in the expressions of mutual goodwill of which the exchange of visits of the English King and the French President were alike the occasion and the fruit, it was manifest that, by themselves, they offered no guarantee of permanent amity. The real usefulness of this accession of friendly feeling lay in the opportunity it created for the peaceful settlement of outstanding differences, and, to their infinite credit, the Ministers of the two States have realised and acted upon the fact. The agreements arrived at are a permanent gain, not depending on any future fluctuations in the mutual regard of the two countries; and they will exert a permanent influence in reducing to a minimum the occasions for disagreement when the first novelty of "l'entente cordiale" shall have worn away. Congratulations upon the Agreement are due not only to the King and the President and their respective Ministers but to the many unofficial workers who have for so long striven to bring about a better appreciation of the good qualities of each of the two nations by the other.

THERE was much in the beginnings of the British dominion in Egypt in which many Englishmen are unable to feel any pride. But under the able and patient viceroyalty of Lord Cromer work has been done there in full accordance with the very highest traditions of British administration of dependent territories. That work has, however, been greatly hampered by the covert hostility of France, and by her steady preservation of her undoubted right to take exception to our position there. The full and frank recognition now conceded by the French Government is of enormous value, not only in connection with Lord Cromer's administration, but as strengthening the position of Great Britain in the counsels of Europe by putting an end to her constant liability to have the irregularity of her position thrown in her face whenever she might seek international approval of an improvement in the status of other nominal possessions of the Sublime Porte.

OUR acquiescence in France's intervention in Morocco, with which her acceptance of our position in Egypt is bought, is merely an anticipation of the inevitable. Morocco is too near to Europe, and European trade is too important, for it to have been possible to allow the present anarchy there to continue indefinitely. Spain is not strong enough to undertake the work of restoring order. Our own intervention would have aroused too many jealousies, while the position of France in Algeria clearly points to her as the natural undertaker of the work. At the same time, it may surely be assumed that the obligation she is under to us for supporting her in her aims, gives us some claim to urge upon France that her suzerainty shall be exercised in a manner making for the happiness and contentment of the Moorish people.

THE other outstanding differences are settled by the sensible means of mixed arbitration commissions and guarantees of an open door to trade (except in Madagascar, where the door has been shut too long to make its reopening a matter of practical politics). It is this recognition of the importance of opportunities of trade in preference to the mere acquisition of territory which is one of the most hopeful signs afforded by the new arrangement. It is a recognition of the fact that the dictum, "trade follows the flag," does not embody the last word of political wisdom in Empire-building.

MR. BRODRICK moved in the House of Commons on Wednesday to authorise the expense of military operations in Tibet for the protection of the political Mission to the Government of that country being defrayed by Indian revenues. This was to cover the breach of the Act of 1858 to which we referred last week. The debate was so far satisfactory that it brought a distinct repudiation on the part of the Government of Lord Curzon's forward policy, and an explicit statement by the Prime Minister:—

> Our wish is to live at peace with Tibet, to leave Tibet independent, to have no responsibility with regard to the internal affairs of Tibet, not to keep a Resident at Tibet, with the responsibility which inevitably attaches to keeping a Resident.

At the same time, while the idea of a Russian invasion of India by way of Tibet was very properly scouted, it was clearly implied that none but British influence could be allowed to be dominant in that country. So the real inwardness of this lamentable business is manifest. The Times correspondent with this peaceful mission told on Thursday how on the way to Gyangtse, which the Mission has now reached, after the slaughter in the advance to Guru—

> The guns of the enemy on the crests were silenced by ours, and the 32nd Pioneers forced a passage through. The enemy's casualties were 200 killed. We had no killed, and under ten slightly wounded.

AT the annual conference of the National Union of Teachers which was held at Portsmouth last week, some highly important declarations as to educational policy were made. Doubtless, we shall be reminded that the teachers are salaried servants of the public, and in matters where that consideration is pertinent it must be fully weighed. But when so large a body of intelligent persons—there were 2,000 present, representing a membership of 50,000—expresses a clear opinion on such a matter, for example, as religious teaching, no sensible man will dismiss lightly what is said. Allowing for a broad margin of the average unwisdom of human nature, one cannot but believe that those who are daily engaged in actually doing the work of elementary education know something about the problem. It is worth while, therefore, to look attentively to the terms of the resolution which, after considerable discussion but slight opposition, was passed by this important Conference.

The resolution, which was submitted on the part of the Executive, was as follows:—

While Conference cannot but approve the idea of a compromise which might tend to diminish the strife with regard to the denominational nature and management of the non-provided (Voluntary) schools, it wishes firmly to express the opinion that no proposals should be entertained which require as a condition for further public control over denominational schools the abandonment of the Cowper-Temple clause, and the non-denominational character of the teaching in the provided schools. These schools, formerly called Board schools, and now known as Council schools, represent about one-half of the school provision for the country, and in them no denominational religious teaching nor theological test on teachers at present exists. In the opinion of Conference that desirable condition should be maintained.

What the teachers deprecate, and we might almost say what they dread, is an abandonment in our really public schools of that broad-minded policy which, although not at all perfect in detail, has resulted well on the whole, both for teachers and scholars. It is evident that the enthusiastic supporters of sectarian teaching are determined, if possible, to secure an entry into these quondam Board schools and to make them a sort of happy hunting-ground. The teachers look upon the prospect with dismay, and naturally, for it would mean serious interference with the harmonious working of the schools as well as a tendency to diminish the teacher's authority over the scholars, and to curtail his liberty in religious matters. We hold that their resistance to all suggested compromises which tend this way is good not only for themselves but for the public at large. Whatever special terms may be temporarily advisable in the case of non-provided (i.e., "Voluntary") schools, there must be no concession to clerical interference in the community's own schools.

The air is full of rumours on this subject, and we are promised a Bill with a view to amending the Education Acts on a give and take princip'e. It is a good thing to have had so unmistakable a declaration in advance from the teachers, and we trust, not only that our own friends will resist to the utmost any further reaction, but also that those who were opponents of the Board school system will take warning and retreat from the contemplated fresh act of mischief. They may do so with the better grace as the teachers, through their president, Mr. Sharples, of Manchester, unequivocally welcomed the recent legislation as in many ways beneficial. It tends to order, if order is not at once secured. Our system, so long most unsystematic, will now at least be worthy of an intelligent community. The chief administrative blot on it remains to be removed, and to judge by the opinion of the teachers, it is destined to go soon. "Most moderate men," said the President, "had only one opinion—that all schools maintained by public money must be under public control and management, and if partly maintained, the control and management should bear a proportionate ratio to the cost contributed." That does not seem a very difficult principle to master, but Mr. Balfour's Acts were set up in defiance of it. To that extent they are inevitable failures, and time will surely bring in its revenges.

In view of the proposed union of three of the Methodist bodies, careful financial and statistical tables are being compiled, comparing the income, the expenditure, and the fixed and circulating capitals of the three denominations. The average incomes of the ministers are given, and the differences are doubtless of practical importance to the bodies concerned, but hardly necessary to be reproduced here. It may be of more interest to note that for Home and Foreign Missions the United Free Churches contribute annually £12 11s. 7d. for every one hundred members, the New Connexion £15 8s. 7d., and the Bible Christian £17 7s. 1d. Great disparity is shown in the amounts of Connexional capital, but less in the total revenues raised: reckoned on the basis of one hundred members, the amounts vary from £33 to £39 per annum. The Circuit Trust property of the three denominations amounts to a value of more than £4,000,000.

We have only noted such figures as may be supposed to have a legitimate interest for other Christian bodies. It is well to see what others are able to do, and to gain some idea of how they carry on their work. The message of the Methodists, taken as a whole, their work among the people, is essentially different from our own. Yet surely something of that which we would wish to do is done wherever there is a Methodist Church, and one earnest Methodist worker. In every such place people are reminded of the Jesus Christ in whom we believe. They hear those Scriptures read from which we still draw some of our deepest lessons. If the impatient reader remarks, "Yes, everyone knows that; why mention it?" the answer is that these considerations seem absurdly left out of account when any discussion arises, not between Unitarianism and Methodism, but between the Free Churches and the Established Church of England. Representatives of the latter seem to put the voluntary churches and all their doings aside when they are speaking of religious influences, and the latter retort by declaring, in the words of a letter sent to the Daily News, that if you give the Church parson, with his catechisms and confessions, opportunity to teach religion in the day-schools, "you poison our Free Church life at the spring." It is exasperating to be ignored; it is exasperating to have to furnish funds to be managed by those who commit the injustice. But it does no good to aggravate the wrong by imagining that the Church which the State unduly favours is a vendor of poison. Speaking broadly, it reads the same Scriptures, acknowledges the same Jesus Christ, sings many of the same hymns, makes many of the same confessions as the churches of the free. It is, in its imperfect way, a Christian Church after all.

In the April number of Scribner's Magazine the interesting publication of the Letters of Mrs. George Bancroft, wife of the American Ambassador in London, is concluded, and the letters are to appear immediately in an amply illustrated volume, with many portraits from English private galleries. The letters in this number belong to the winter and spring of 1847-8. On Dec. 30, 1847, Mrs. Bancroft wrote.—

I have passed one evening for the first time at Mr. Tagart's, the Unitarian clergyman, [printed in Scribner's "Tagent"] where I met many of the literary people who are out of the great world, and yet very desirable to see. There, too, I met the Misses Cushman, Charlotte and Susan, who attend his church.

Another interesting reference is in the letter dated March 31, 1848:—

On Sunday Mr. Emerson dined with us, with Lady Morgan and Mrs. Jameson—the authoress. On Monday I took him to a little party at Lady Morgan's. His works are a good deal known here. I have great pleasure in seeing so old a friend so far from home.

We are informed by Messrs. Williams & Norgate that Herbert Spencer's Autobiography will be published simultaneously in England and America on the 22nd of this month. The work will form two large volumes of 556 and 542 pages respectively, and the price will be 28s. net.

TO THE ASPIDISTRA:

(The Manchester Household Plant.)

Thou child of gloom and solitary shade,
Was thy first home beneath the Stygian wave,
Or that dark haunt where dreaded Hydra lay?
Did miner lift thee from the stony bed
Of forest old, or diver from the floor
Of weedy cavern washed with barren brine?
Thou know'st no seasons, dead alike to all;
No promise thou fulfillest; scent and bloom
Are never thine; no touch, no eager hum,
No flash of painted wing, no gladdened glance
Of raptured eye doth greet thee; year to year
Thou art the same—unwithered, yet unclad
In verdure new; with self-arresting growth
Thy heavy leaves o'erhang the soddened soil,
Impoverished—a parable to men
Of life contracted to a darkened day,
Of life consumed in effort to survive.

E. P. B.

To trust God and obey Him, to honour man and help him—these seem to me the characteristic traits of Christ's conduct and teaching, and in these we may all imitate him, and surely so doing, or even trying our poor best so to do, we shall merit his recognition and prove our discipleship, a discipleship which it is competent to no church and no assembly to confer or to take away. Charles Hargrove.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. Letters cannot be inserted without the writer's name; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

POLITICS, ETC.

Sir,—I am glad to find that so many of your readers are taking an active interest in the subject of my recent letter which you courteously published.

Mr. Tarrant's reply is too lengthy to deal with in detail. I will only note that he seeks support of his views in the speeches of certain dignitaries of the Anglican Church. Now, as such men have had no experience of the practical side of life, and as their judgment is liable to be guided by the heart rather than by the head, I do not consider their opinions carry much weight. It is on sentimental ground, I take it, rests the general conviction that of all cultivated men the minister of religion is least qualified to pronounce upon political questions.

In regard to the Chinese Ordinance, inasmuch as the exact terms of the Indenture are "not yet settled," it seems unfortunate that that which is only partly known should be wholly condemned. It is not gratifying to find a religious association like the B. and F.U.A. sanction a resolution which manifests entire lack of faith in such a devoted public servant and high-minded statesman as Lord Milner is known to be, and, in so doing, I venture to think that the Council have not taken a very dignified position.

Allow me to add, whatever may be the views taken of Mr. Tarrant's resolution, I am assured that all your readers will feel that he was actuated by the highest motives.

On the general question of religion and politics, it appears to me that it is time for the preacher to consider whether he is not taking an unfair advantage of his congregation when he launches out on politics, knowing as he must do that those who listen may be silent victims of his unshackled oratory.

I fully concur in the views expressed by Mr. Wallingham as regards leaderettes in The Inquirer. Most of your readers have enough of politics in the week time, and desire to be spared on the Sunday.

April 12. H. J. Bakewell.

Sir,—I hope you will allow "an old subscriber" to utter his thanks for your admirable number of April 9. In Mr. Tarrant's letter surely the thoughts of many hearts were revealed. How can our religion be separated from our moral judgments of the doings of our own people, the policy advocated in our own newspapers, and carried out by our own Government? Unless our lives are so to be restricted that we care for nothing but the welfare of our individual families and the accounts of our own church, we are bound to feel relieved and grateful when our Government smooths away difficulties with neighbours on the other side of the English Channel; and we are bound to feel sick at heart when it sanctions an Ordinance by which our fellow-men will be degraded and made to degrade themselves; by which employers scheme to make huge profits out of human beings whom they despise; who never will be treated as comrades, co-operators, fellow-citizens, but as an unclean set, to be watched, suspected, kept within their own strictly defined boundaries like moral lepers; who will only be endured because they produce gold at a less cost than those who are frankly recognised as human. Where shall our religious emotion have exercise if not in upholding what we believe to be right, and hating and opposing what we believe to be wrong? The letter and the editorial in which it was endorsed did my soul good.

J. Ruddle.

Sir,—We are told that the "polemical" attitude of The Inquirer with regard to the political questions of the day is to be regretted in the best interests of the paper. May we be told what these "interests" are? Are they advertisements and subscriptions?

To some of us it seems that the best interest of a religious newspaper lies in bringing the principles of religion to bear upon the facts of every-day life, in showing what connection there is between the Sunday preaching and the week-day practice. When then the Editor for trying to do this is solemnly warned and rebuked what does it mean? Has he mistaken his function, or does he fail in his duty, not when he discusses these questions of practical religion, but when he has the misfortune not to think as we do about them?

Because we are not all advanced Radicals, and Mr. Balfour is going to do something for the brewers, the Editor must not treat of the temperance question. Because we are not all passive resisters, he must be silent on the education question. He must not talk about social purity, for very good reasons. Just where men are most anxious to learn what religion and ethics have to say with regard to some burning question of practical, present, and absorbing interest, and many have no use at all for a so-called religion that does not help them in these matters, the Editor is warned off. He is told not to be polemical; in other words, if he does not agree with this section or that he must be silent.

For my part I hope that Unitarians have more faith in themselves and sufficient confidence in their cause to consider patiently opinions that are not theirs, and grace enough to be thankful to have those opinions set forth in their best and strongest form. Other editors of religious papers are not condemned to speak with bated breath and whispering humbleness on these great subjects. They speak plainly and boldly, and they have their reward. They influence public opinion. It is only the "representative organ of our body" that must be silent. Is the Editor of The Inquirer indentured and forbidden to stray from the "compound." If The Inquirer is to represent only what is agreed upon among us it will not represent much.

As one who, not always agreeing with The Inquirer, yet admires its "tone" in matters of controversy, its manifest courtesy towards all, above all its quiet courage in taking an unpopular side, I trust it will still continue in these respects to be representative, and that it will not seek refuge in dishonoured silence. Though the "loyalty" of Plato and Socrates may suffer strain, let the greater friendship be preserved.

The old country knight, whose untanned boots offended Queen Elizabeth's sense of smell, shrewdly opined it was not his boots but his errand that stank. So with many, it is not taking part that offends, but taking the other part. Nevertheless, long may The Inquirer take its own part in the fight for "civil and religious liberty all the world over," until that principle is as dead as Free Trade and other follies of our fathers.

Edward Parry.

Sir,—The correspondence concerning Mr. Tarrant's resolution, and the conduct of your paper, raises the question whether the time has not arrived when ministers of religion, and all leaders of public opinion, should do their best to get rid of the party system entirely, and put politics upon a reasonable basis. However useful, or even necessary, the system may have been in the past, it is thoroughly discredited in the minds of those thoughtful and earnest people today whose one and only object is the physical, moral, and spiritual welfare of the community. The folly of electing councillors and guardians according to their adhesion to a political party and not according to their fitness for the office in question has already attracted the attention of the majority of those ratepayers who avail themselves of the privilege of the vote. What is wanted is that the attention of Parliamentary electors should be continually drawn to the same illogical and altogether undesirable method on which our legislating machine is worked. Doubtless there will be "a long row to hoe," but pioneers were we ever.

Arthur Harvie.

Sir,—As it seems to me, the question is not as you state it: "Whether our religion is rightly concerned with questions of politics or not," but rather the very different question, Whether or not it is fitting that in a body like ours there should be any pronouncement of what purports to be an authoritative collective opinion on debateable questions of practical politics. We utterly refuse to concede to anyone the right of making such pronouncements in matters of doctrine. Why should we be less jealous in matters of politics?

You say of a number of political subjects, that they are all questions "with which citizens of this country must be concerned, and on which they must seek to the best of their ability to form a right judgment. And you say well. And you say that conscientious difference of opinion is no reason for refusing to take counsel together in the light of religious faith, and the highest moral ideals. But what is objected to does not present itself as an effort to enlighten the conscience, but rather as an attempt to throw into the scales wherein practical matters are weighed and decided the alleged collective opinion of persons the principle of whose association together admits of differences of opinion on the matter in hand.

Geo. Carslake Thompson.

April 13.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

COUNTRY HOLIDAY MOVEMENT.

Sir,—Will you kindly allow me this year to make an early appeal for subscriptions to the Children's Holiday Movement. We need a steadily increasing fund to meet our expenses, whereas I am sorry to find that our subscription-list has considerably decreased. These holidays are becoming each year more of a necessity to the children. The little lives born and bred among town influences become a ready prey to illness of all kinds. The quiet time spent among healthy scenes does much to restore the health and to give quiet to the nervous temperament, becoming, alas, too common to-day even among children. Until healthier playgrounds than the streets can be given to our future citizens the fortnight in the country offers the only opportunity for restoring the child to real health, and of giving freedom to those parts of its nature for which London life gives no scope.

I acknowledge with many thanks subscriptions already received from Mr. Hugh Martineau, £3 3s., and Mr. Young, 10s. 6d., and I shall gratefully receive further contributions. Parcels of clothing should be addressed to Miss Murphy, 63, Elsham-road, Holland-road, London, W.

Annie F. Lawrence.

23, Campden House-chambers, Campden-hill, London, W., April 10.

EVIL VERSUS DIVINE GOODNESS.

Sir,—Dr. Warschauer is unable to accept the theory of a dual power as an explanation of the world's evil. Such a theory, he says, has always appealed to many as offering a comparatively simple solution of a deep and bewildering problem; but, he continues, "I am afraid it is neither a solution nor as simple as it looks," and in this week's Inquirer Mr. W. Whitaker endorses Dr. Warschauer's objections, and adds that it is difficult to see how it would help us. "It only drives the problem one stage farther back," by which I presume Mr. Whitaker means that even if by this theory of a second power we account for the existence of evil, we still have to account for the existence of the author of evil. "It is not a solution," says Dr. Warschauer; "it does not exculpate the One Creator; it does not rehabilitate the Divine Goodness." "Why not?" I ask. "Because," says Dr. Warschauer, "this second power is a created being, and, being such, God must be assumed in creating him to have known, and, fore-knowing, fore-ordained all the havoc he would work in the world."

When, some few years back, I published a small book on the subject, I had letters from all points of the compass raising just these difficulties, and in the later editions I tried to show that it must altogether depend upon the nature of free-will, of which we really know nothing. It may be that even "omnipotence" cannot foresee the course of free-will, and that the free-will which could be foreseen would not, and could not, be free-will. As I understand Dr. Warschauer, his contention is that there cannot be an evil power in the universe, because such a power cannot be self-existent, and he cannot have been created, for the Creator must have foreseen the havoc he would make, and would not have created him.

That seems to me the most curious of argumentative positions, because, whether the Creator can foresee evil or not, it is, of course, quite indisputable that He does create beings capable of it. By just the same argument as that by which Dr. Warschauer disproves the existence of an evil personality at work in the universe, I could disprove the existence of Napoleon Buonaparte or Lucrezia Borgia. They could not have been self-existent. If they existed at all, they must have been created beings, and God must have foreseen all the evil they would do, and, therefore, He must have fore-ordained it. But it is quite impossible that God could have done that; therefore, there never could have existed a Napoleon Buonaparte or a Lucrezia Borgia. Quod erat demonstrandum. But we know that here, in this finite sphere, these creatures of mysteriously perverted will actually did exist. Why may it not reasonably be assumed that precisely the same thing may have taken place in the sphere and on the scale of the Universe? If we may assume that, and also assume that some sublime but perverted will was exerted in antagonism to the beneficent scheme of perfect evolution, we have a complete solution of the great riddle of both the moral and physical disorder of things.

The test of a scientific theory is that it shall explain all the phenomena. Martineau's theory, to which Mr. Whitaker alludes—the planting out of human wills to be made answerable for their own actions, independent of the Divine will—does not stand that test. It would account for all the evil arising from the exercise of perverted human wills, but that is only a part of the world's evil. Everybody can see that there is something wrong in the lower animal world, as well as in human life—suffering and unhappiness, cruelty and strife—and that even in the physical world there are catastrophes and disorders closely corresponding to the accidents and maladjustments of human life. All this would be entirely left out by Martineau's theory of planted-out human wills.

What is required to account for evil in the universe of a God of perfect goodness is some disturbing, maleficent cause common to the whole created order of things. Now that we have begun to perceive that that whole created order is one sublime process of evolution—one vast scheme of evolving law, of delicately balanced forces comprising in their sweep all matter and all life, it is easier than it ever was in the whole history of the world before to conceive the possibility of such disturbance. The writer of Genesis knew nothing of evolution, but he looked out over the whole field of created things, and detected clear evidence of a disturber. It was a splendid flash of intuitive genius, and I maintain that it has been rendered a thousand times more probable as the explanation of evil now that we have arrived at the evolutionary conception of creation. Let some malignant interference in the nicely adjusted balance of vital and physical laws have taken place early in the grand procession of things, and assume that that interference was the act of an absolutely free will, and you do exonerate the Creator, though, of course, you leave the mystery of that freedom of will as impenetrable as ever. To that extent it is no solution of the riddle; but, as Mr. Whitaker says, only a putting back of the problem. Assume that hostile interference, and you have a theory which may easily account for every phase and form of evil. It will account for all the phenomena. There is absolutely no other theory that will do.

G. F. Millin.

Brixton, April 11.

The London federation of Christian Endeavourers, which includes no less than 717 societies, with a membership of over 32,000, held very successful Good Friday conferences at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. The subjects for the two sessions of conference are skilfully worded. The topic for the afternoon was "Our Life: Keyword, Christian." In the evening the complementary thought was presented: "Our Work: Keyword, Endeavour."

The April Cornhill opens with a memorial article on Sir Leslie Stephen, who was a constant contributor and for eleven years editor, before he took up the editorship of the "Dictionary of National Biography" in 1882. Mr. Frederic Harrison, who writes the article, speaks of his forty years of strenuous devotion to letters, and gives some delightful glimpses of his pleasure in mountaineering and other wanderings over the country. Here is one of them:—

> The Alps were to Stephen the elixir of life, a revelation, a religion. And we may rank his enthusiasm for nature, and his familiarity with grand scenery, as amongst the best influences of our time in teaching us the moral and spiritual force which nature can impress on the soul of man. Men and women, who are deaf to Byron and Wordsworth, Keats and Shelley—ignorant even of Ruskin and of Symonds—have been led up by Stephen to a pure love of walking in the midst of beautiful landscapes, and have been drawn off from tedious jabber about the beasts they have killed. When Leslie had hung up the ice-axe that had won so many virgin peaks, he organised the pedestrian company of the "Tramps," who would foot it on Sundays over so many a Surrey heath and Sussex down. It was Nature in all its infinite aspects that Stephen loved, not athletic feats, or "record" time, not the dangerous glaciers and icy crags for any reason but their beauty, not what Ruskin called "climbing a greasy pole." To Stephen a climb or a walk meant always the glory of the Earth, the light and air of Heaven, health, and good fellowship. I think he loved the Hindhead, the Blackdown, the New Forest, and the Cornish Coast almost as much as the Alps. I can recall his enjoyment of the Hog's Back, near which I then lived, and how he grumbled when we gave his pack of "Tramps" roast beef and apple tart in the middle of their eight-hour course, for he said that bread and cheese and ale-house beer was their regulation ration, and "Tramps" should not be pampered.

LITERATURE.

ARTICLES IN THE REVIEWS.

The Contemporary this month is rich in articles of varied interest. It opens with a powerful statement by Mr. Herbert Samuel, M.P., on the subject of Chinese Labour, declaring that the issue cannot rest where it stands.

> The sentiment of antagonism to this measure, not only in England, but also in the great self-governing Colonies, and among large sections of the population of the Transvaal itself, is so strong, it rests on such firm foundations of argument, that the ultimate repeal of the Ordinance and abandonment of the scheme appear to be inevitable.

Mr. Augustine Birrell writes of Lord Acton's Letters, as a book that will rank with Selden's and with Coleridge's "Table Talk," and as possessing a human interest beyond theirs. Mr. Robert Christie contributes a trenchant criticism of "Haekel's Monistic Philosophy," as "in conflict with modern science and itself rent asunder by contradictions which cannot be healed." The Rev. J. B. Smith's article on the Athanasian Creed should be of special interest to the clergy and their congregations, especially in the matter of the damnatory clauses, and bolder still is Canon Hensley Henson's article on "The Future of the Bible." He quotes the recently published Old Testament History for Schools, by the Headmaster of Berkhampstead School, to show how far rational interpretation of at any rate the Old Testament has now gone, and adds that the same principles "will assuredly in good time exact a great revolution in the current teaching with respect to the New Testament." The clergy, he urges, ought to consider more seriously the effect upon their people of the lessons read in church. "The more thoughtful and sensitive people are often seriously troubled by what they hear, and coarser minds are moved to contempt, greatly to their own moral injury." In the interests of Christianity itself, "a drastic revision of the lectionary would seem to be urgently called for." And we welcome very warmly from a Canon of Westminster such a declaration as the following:—

> It is hard to see why the traditional practice of limiting the Lessons read in Church to the Bible should for ever continue. It was the custom in the Primitive Church and throughout the Middle Ages to read the lives of the saints, and though, no doubt, the practice became discredited by the puerilities which, under that description, were generally included, still, the principle is sound enough, and when we remember how great an accumulation of devotional and edifying literature the Christian Church possesses, and how very little of this is known, or likely to be known, to the masses of Christian people, it does seem a strange failure of duty on the part of the Church to make no use of it in her public services. We want to supplement the canonical scriptures by the Christian compositions which have secured the approval of general acceptance, and taken the rank of spiritual classics among religious people, just as in the worship of the Church the Psalter has been supplemented by hymns and anthems. The unhappy rigidity which restricts the modern English Church at the lectern to the canonical scriptures, and, in the reading desk, to the Prayer-book, is as intrinsically indefensible as it is practically mischievous.

Canon Henson then shows how, notwithstanding this demand, the Bible will still hold its place as supreme in the religious literature of the world, as a great instrument in higher education and guardian of spiritual religion.

The Nineteenth Century and After gives the place of honour to a welcome article on "The United States and Great Britain," by the editor of the North American Review, which shows how strong are now the ties of genuine friendship which unite the two peoples. Sir R. Blennerhassett has an interesting article on "University Education in Ireland," in which he pleads that universities after the model of those of Germany are what would best meet the needs of his people. But what many readers will find most attractive in this number is Lady Ribblesdale's thoroughly gossipy account of a "Visit to Hawarden," in which M. Waddington and Max Müller are actors, as well as Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone.

In the Independent Review the most valuable article this month is perhaps Mr. Arthur Sherwell's on "First Principles of Temperance Reform," and there is also a timely comment on the London County Council Elections, by Mr. G. L. Bruce. A warm appreciation of "The Art of Blake," by Laurence Binyon, and an article on "Lord Acton at Cambridge," are among the most interesting items in this number.

The illustrated article in the Monthly Review is on "The True Story of the Stratford Bust," and there is an article on Edward Fitzgerald, written about 1897 by the late W. Elwin, formerly Editor of the Quarterly Review. "Dear old Fitz." was Thackeray's best friend, and an intimate of the Tennysons also. In 1850 he wrote to Frederic Tennyson: "I get shyer and shyer, even of the few I knew." He was a recluse who loved the country, and some of our friends will be glad of the following passage on his vegetarianism:—

> At twenty-four he became a vegetarian for health's sake. He gained, he said, "in lightness and airiness of head, whereas he was always before clouded, and more or less morbid after meat." Even among vegetarians he was abstemious. He avoided soups and green vegetables as being "washy and diluent," and kept chiefly to bread with a seasoning of apples and pears. He invigorated his mind by culture and his body by temperance, and did not seek satisfaction in luxury and sloth.

In the World's Work will be found a description of "The Chinaman in the Colonies," by one who has lived long in their neighbourhood, and a fully illustrated article on "Korea and the Koreans." Here, also, one may read of the part the motor may play in "The Possibilities of British Agriculture"; and there are articles on "Small Holdings in Denmark" and "Pure Milk in Denmark."

SHORT NOTICES.

The Rev. F. K. Freeston has done honour to the memory of Dr. Joseph Priestley in a way for which many will be grateful to him, by bringing out a centenary edition of his "Memoirs," well printed and bound, and enriched by sixteen full-page illustrations. Miss Emily Sharpe's cheap reprint of the Memoirs, issued in 1893, is still procurable, but this centenary edition is the book which lovers of Priestley will now desire to possess. There are four portraits of Priestley himself, that by Opie serving as a frontispiece, and representations of the Oxford, Birmingham, and Leeds statues. Among the portraits of contemporaries are those of Mrs. Barbauld, Lindsey, and Price. Here we see also Priestley's humble birthplace, the Nantwich Chapel, where in early life he was minister, and the Warrington Academy. Priestley in his Memoirs is characteristically reticent on the subject of the Birmingham riots, and in this edition the gap is filled by a description reprinted from Mrs. C. H. Beale's volume, published in 1891, "Reminiscences of a Gentlewoman of the Last Century, Letters of Catharine Hutton." The long list of Priestley's works, given in the 1809 edition of the Memoirs, is also reprinted here. (H. R. Allenson. 3s. net.)

A new series of Cambridge English Classics begins with the Leviathan of Thomas Hobbes, to be followed by the English Works of Roger Ascham and the Poems of Richard Crashaw. The purpose of this series is to reproduce the text of each work, from the last edition revised by the author, or the first or most authentic posthumous edition, without any note or comment, except of a purely textual and bibliographical character. The Leviathan is edited by Mr. A. R. Waller, with the quaint illustrated title-page of the edition of 1651 reproduced. It makes a substantial volume, strongly bound, a welcome gift to students of English literature and history. (Cambridge University Press. 4s. 6d. net.)

Waiting upon God.—"This volume," says the preface, "contains a final selection from the sermons of the late Professor A. B. Davidson." Attention was directed in our columns some time ago to the former collection of Professor Davidson's sermons, to which Mr. Taylor Innes prefixed an admirable biographical sketch. A perusal of the second series leaves us less impressed—the fault may be ours; or, perhaps, as sometimes happens, the desire to emulate a first success has led to making up a book from matter less valuable. At any rate, the cream seems to have been taken off at the first attempt, and we have here discourses, not indeed lacking in many a word worthy alike of a scholar and a deeply religious mind, but also not on the whole differing in character from any sample taken from the stores of average good ministers. One might almost suspect that the editor, Dr. Paterson, had done his best to find the sermons which departed least from traditional views of scripture narration and Christian doctrine. But a reader who can read with intelligent sympathy even the page that abounds with unacceptable assumptions will not find his patience abused. Gentle earnestness, clear spiritual insight, a firm though often a sad faith, make their appeal here, and serve to complete our acquaintance with a true teacher. (T. and T. Clark, 1904. 6s.)

We prepare ourselves for sudden deeds by the reiterated choice of good or evil which gradually determines character.

George Eliot.

PROFESSOR WENDT, OF JENA.

THIS YEAR'S ESSEX HALL LECTURER.

The British and Foreign Unitarian Association is to be heartily congratulated on having secured Professor H. H. Wendt, of Jena, for the Essex Hall Lecture at the annual meetings in Whit-week. "The Idea and Reality of Revelation" is to be the subject of the lecture, which will be delivered in English. Professor Wendt will also lecture at Manchester College, Oxford, on the Friday afternoon of the same week. In view of this visit, the Rev. W. Tudor Jones has been good enough to send us the following notes:—

It may prove interesting to readers of The Inquirer, if I dwell on some aspects of the important visit of Dr. Wendt to the annual meetings of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. I take upon myself the liberty of doing so, because I have had a great deal to do with Professor Wendt during the past year, and had the great privilege of attending his classes in Jena for nearly four months in the summer of last year. The visit of the well-known Professor is significant from many points of view. The Unitarians of England will have the privilege of welcoming one of the most noted New Testament scholars of the day. As far as Great Britain is concerned, no European scholar has during the past twelve years left a deeper mark on our Theology than Dr. Wendt.

When Messrs. T. and T. Clark, of Edinburgh, put forth the two important volumes, "The Teaching of Jesus," before the British public, they deviated far from an old-established custom of that well-known firm of issuing only the most conservative books of German theologians. But the publishers are to be congratulated on having placed the volumes before us. They have passed through several editions; they have found their way to the most orthodox libraries—private and public—and in less than ten years have contributed largely in altering the New Testament theological conceptions of many. The change effected by Dr. Wendt's books has been in the direction of separating the permanent from the transient elements in the Gospels, and of laying the greatest emphasis on the former, showing that there alone is the essence of Christianity. The "Gospel of John" translated by one of our ministers—Mr. Lummis—has also been well received in denominational circles, and is likely to make many aware of a problem which had no existence for them before.

It is interesting to ask why do Professor Wendt's books find such an acceptance in conservative circles, while he himself is a liberal theologian. He once described his position to me in an English sentence to the following effect: "Professor Harnack and I think the same over these things." Probably the answer is to be found in the fact that he is always constructive. He knows that when a man has penetrated into the meaning and experience of the ethical and spiritual, the miraculous and mythical drop out of sight.

In his forthcoming Essex Hall lecture on "The Idea and Reality of Revelation," we are sure not only to have a scholarly presentation of the subject but a profound ethical and religious utterance as well. Dr. Wendt is not the merely dry analytical scholar. And when in his lectures he passes from the interpretation of a scriptural passage to its inward, deeper meaning he becomes full of fire and eloquence. The man's face, always beautiful, becomes now transfigured. He expounds the meaning of the teaching of Jesus as one who, without a doubt, has experienced it, has known that the deepest meaning and significance of the Gospels are not fathomed by the mere logical understanding of man.

I may state that Dr. Wendt knows a good deal about us already. Some American Unitarians have called to see him in his beautiful home in Jena, and English-speaking people are always welcomed by Mrs. Wendt and himself. Theological students, especially from Scotland, find their way to his class-rooms, and when invited to the Professor's home the British students are encouraged to speak English. Perhaps it is hardly necessary for me to state that such a privilege removes a load from the new-comer's heart.

That Professor Wendt will give us a contribution of real value there cannot be a doubt, and of his sympathy with us and with our work we are assured. Let us hope that this is the first of a series of visits we shall have from him. Dr. Wendt is still young—he was fifty last June. The presence and sympathy of such an eminent theologian will encourage us much in the peculiar difficulties which are imbedded in the work of all liberal religious teachers. It is, perhaps, through international co-operation like this that such difficulties can be overcome, and so a higher level of theology and religion be permanently reached.

W. Tudor Jones.

From that invaluable directory Who's Who we learn that Dr. Hans Hinrich Wendt was born at Hamburg, June 18, 1853, and that he has been since 1893 Professor of Theology in the University of Jena. Previously he had been Privatdocent and Professor at Göttingen, Professor of New Testament Exegesis at Kiel, and from 1885 to 1893 Professor of Systematic Theology at Heidelberg. He is author of the recent editions of the "Acts of the Apostles" in Meyer's New Testament Commentary (eighth edition, 1899); the two volumes of his work on "The Teaching of Jesus" appeared in 1886 and 1890; second edition 1901; his "Gospel of John" in 1900. Of these two works the English translations appeared in 1892 and 1902 respectively.

The repentance which cuts off all moorings to evil, demands something more than selfish fear. George Eliot.

If we always bore in mind this solemn truth that life is but the vestibule of the everlasting temple; the first stage of a progress that shall know no limit; the novitiate or apprenticeship both of heart and intellect, I think we should acknowledge more fully the high importance of the trust, and endeavour to fulfil its duties in a purer and holier spirit.—W. H. D. Adams.

OBITUARY.

MRS. R. D. DARBISHIRE.

Many friends will have heard with sorrow of the death of Mrs. Robert Darbishire, but with thankfulness that she should be released from the long trial of a distressing illness. She was in her seventy-seventh year, and passed away from her home in Victoria Park, Manchester, on Monday, April 4. A most admirable memorial notice was published in the Manchester Guardian of April 6, from which we cannot do better than reproduce the following passages:—

"Few Manchester women have been more closely identified with the social progress of the city than Mrs. Robert Darbishire, or have better deserved the gratitude of their fellow-citizens. It is not too much to say that most of the agencies for the benefit of women and girls which are at work in Manchester owe something to her initiative or to her fostering care in their early years. Mrs. Darbishire was born in 1828. She was a member of a well-known Unitarian family in Banbury, of broad culture and liberal opinions. To early training as well as to inheritance may perhaps be attributed the sturdy Radicalism, the uncompromising love of truth, justice, and fair play, the hatred of bigotry, and the quiet persistence in face of obstacles which distinguished her in after years. In 1852 Miss Harriett Cobb became the wife of Mr. R. D. Darbishire, and Manchester was thenceforward her home. The American Civil War afforded her her first opportunity of public work, and she entered actively into the distribution of relief and the organisation of sewing classes in connection with a centre opened in Renshaw Street by the Misses Ewart. Within the next ten years she gave much time and attention to the foundation and management of the Governesses' Home, the Institute of District Nurses, and the Servants' Registry and Home. To each enterprise she brought the same unwearying diligence, broad sympathies, and admirable business qualities, and in time it almost came to be taken for granted that any scheme which secured her co-operation would succeed."

But Mrs. Darbishire's chief claim to the gratitude of her fellow-citizens, the Guardian notice proceeds, was in connection with the foundation of the High School for Girls. She was treasurer of the Manchester Association for Promoting the Education of Women, and in 1874 the scheme for the establishment of a good public secondary school for girls took definite shape. It was largely due to the influence of Mr. and Mrs. Darbishire that this school was finally designed on broader lines than had been at first intended, while to the perfecting of its household arrangements throughout the course of its progressive development Mrs. Darbishire gave herself with the utmost devotion. The general tone of the school owed much to her wide and tolerant spirit. She shared also, though less actively, in the formation of the Women's College in Brunswick-street, opened in 1877, and was a member of the governing body until the institution was merged in Owens College.

And thus the Guardian notice concludes:—"Of private benevolence and of personal kindnesses rendered to individuals this is not the place to speak fully, but they formed a constant feature in a long and active life, and were characterised by extreme tact and delicacy, which removed all hesitation from the recipients. If a more truly social way of living should ever come into being among us, the rich sharing their advantages with those less fortunate, it may be remembered that Mrs. Darbishire, while disclaiming theories, led the way in a practical exercise of hospitality which sought out and welcomed with singular perspicacity the strangers and unfriended of either sex whom chance or the necessity of earning a livelihood brought to Manchester. In these, as in other respects, Mrs. Darbyshire was a worthy helpmate to a citizen whose public spirit has earned for him the freedom of the city of Manchester."

SIR THOMAS FROST.

Chester has lost a distinguished citizen, and Matthew Henry's Chapel a life-long member, through the death of Sir Thomas Gibbons Frost, which occurred at his residence, Redcliff, Queen's Park, on April 6, in his eighty-fourth year.

The second of the four sons of Mr. F. A. Frost, the founder of the successful milling business, with which the family has been so long identified in Chester, Sir Thomas was an exemplary man of business, being habitually found at the mill by seven o'clock in the morning, and being known throughout his long life as a man of upright and generous nature. His devotion to this great industry was very far from narrowing his outlook upon life, or his sympathies. Entering the City Council in 1856 he gave forty-seven years of unbroken service to the community, and three times held the chief magistracy. On the first occasion, 1868-9, he had the honour of receiving King Edward, then Prince of Wales, who came to open the new Town Hall, and, as a consequence, received the further honour of knighthood. He was also a Justice of the Peace for city and county, and in 1874 unsuccessfully contested a Parliamentary election for his native city. Only last November, amid tokens of warm public regard, he retired from the Council. Sir Thomas was a strong Liberal in politics, but, though a personal friend of Mr. Gladstone's, felt obliged to join in the Unionist secession of 1886. He was a loyal Unitarian, and member of the congregation of Matthew Henry's Chapel, but his generosity was extended to the good work of all religious bodies as well as to public charities.

Born Sept. 20, 1820, he passed away in a ripe old age, and the high regard in which he was held by his fellow-citizens was testified by the great concourse at the funeral last Saturday. From the Mayor and Coporation downwards every section of the community was represented, as well as a wide circle of personal friends. The service at the cemetery was conducted by the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, of Manchester, both in the chapel, where the hymn "Abide with me" was sung, and at the grave, where the Bishop of Chester was among those present, and "Nearer, my God, to Thee," was sung.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

SHAKESPEARE AND CHILDREN.

I expect that most of you have heard of William Shakespeare, who lived 300 years ago, in the time of Queen Elizabeth and King James I. Next Saturday, which is the day kept as Shakespeare's birthday, I will tell you something about his childhood, his children, and his grandchild. To-day it is to be his story-children.

Perhaps some of you know stories from his plays. These plays were written for grown-up people. However, he brings in enough children and enough about children to make us quite sure that he loved them.

He knew that a small boy likes to chase a butterfly, or to play at soldiers with a tiny sword, or to ride on a man's shoulder. He knew that a little girl is impatient to wear a new frock, and also that she can sew and sing.

He knew that children find it hard not to fidget. He tells us of a small boy of five who could tell tales of spirits and goblins, but could not sit still. His mother asks him to sit down beside her and tell her a tale. He is quite willing to tell her a tale, either merry or sad, but he cannot remember to sit still. His mother gets him to sit down beside her—for a minute—and he begins: "There was a man." But he is already up again. After another reminder to "sit down," he goes on: "dwelt by the churchyard." Up once more, he is just going to whisper the rest of the story softly in his mother's ear when they are interrupted. It is the big people's story that goes on, and the child's tale is not finished.

Shakespeare knew that children sometimes come in for teasing, and his story-children know how to take teasing cheerfully. There is a little English prince who is teased for growing too fast—like a weed. And there is a little London page-boy who is teased for being too small. This boy's name is Robin, and in spite of the teasing he is always bright and chirpy, like a little robin red-breast. He finds that it takes more than size to make a man, and that however small he is, he may be manly if he is brave and honest.

I am sure that Shakespeare liked to see children happy, and I think he liked to see them playing or working happily with their companions. Many of his children appear in pairs, and friends as children remain as friends all through their lives.

There is a happy industrious pair of little school-girl friends, called Hermia and Helena, who used to sit together, sew together, sing together. With their needles they embroidered one flower, as they sat on one cushion, both warbling of one song. So they Grew together like to a double cherry, ...

Two lovely berries moulded on one stem.

When you see two cherries growing like that on one stem, will you think of Hermia and Helena and their happy "school-days' friendship"?

Two of Shakespeare's men friends had been chums since they were children. They tell how they used to fish in the sunshine together, and bleat at one another in fun, just like twin lambs.

I hope you will agree with me that Shakespeare knew something about children, and loved them. At the same time his stories are about the big people, and the children do not get much attention. His story-children help, each in his own way; but the story is generally something bigger than the children can understand.

This may suggest to you a lesson that Shakespeare would teach us all if we would learn it.

We must not expect to get all the attention. Our home people, our friends and acquaintances, have other things to think about besides you and me.

There is a great deal going on in the world of which we know nothing, and can know nothing. Other people's affairs are more important than our own.

A little boy I know once asked his mother: "Why are there so many people in the world?"

Another little boy of five had gone with his mother to a place in the City where many people were having dinner in one room. Instead of one set of people at one table, as at home, there were different people at different tables. The child was interested in the other people there, and talked about them. At last he said: "Mother, we are other people to them."

Do you see what he meant?

We do not know these people. We are ourselves, and they are the other people. But imagine yourself at their table. They do not know us. We are only other people to them.

Now, will you try to notice with the little boy that there are a great many people in the world? And try to understand, with the other little boy, that we are only "other people" to them.

Our home is for our own family and our friends. The world is not only for us but for other people too. Shakespeare helps us all to be more interested in other people, so I want you to think of it more in connection with his story-children. Just as there are other people in Shakespeare's stories besides the children, and more important than the children, so also in the great world there are a great many other people besides you.

Think of all the other people whom you see, in your own neighbourhood, in other neighbourhoods, in other places in England, in other countries. To each one of these you are only one of the many "other people."

You come across many other people from day to day as you walk through the streets or buy things in shops, or go from place to place in trams or boats. Their affairs are probably more important than yours. I wonder whether each of you can think of some little way in which you can take thought for these other people rather than for yourself.

We may take the thought of other people into our prayers, remembering that our Father in Heaven is Father to them too.

Will each of you say through the Lord's prayer, and think whether, when you say the us and the our all through, you mean only yourselves or also others. Let us make these words big enough to take in not only ourselves and our family and our friends, but the other people in the world too.

Lilian Hall.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

Terms of Subscription.

The Inquirer can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
Per Quarter	1	8
Per Half-Year	3	4
Per Year	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Advertisements for The Inquirer should be addressed to the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on Thursday, to appear the same week.

All payments in respect to The Inquirer to be made to E. Kennedy, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C.

London, April 16, 1904.

RELIGION IN LONDON.

I should wish to preface these suggestions by saying that for my own part I do not attach too great an importance to statistics; the Spirit of God does much more than can be put into religious committee reports; the spirit of praise and prayer, of true worship, "bloweth where it listeth"; one of the most religious men I ever met in East London was an old Chartist who never attended a place of worship, and who made no profession of religion. Nevertheless, figures are some guide, and it cannot be denied that this census enables us to "size up" the religious forces that are at work throughout London. It visualises, so to speak, what before has been obscure and vague; it throws into relief the inveterate apathy of the working classes, and even if some amount of strife and contention has emerged as a result, let us remember that anything is better than stagnation. What is needed in East London, as everywhere else, is the revival of the spirit of Christ, the spirit of brotherhood and self-sacrifice.

So writes Mr. Percy Alden in drawing to a conclusion his essay on "The Problem of East London," in the bulky volume which gathers up in a most elaborate form the results of the recent Daily News Religious Census of London.*

We speak of the volume as bulky (it is a very cheap six shillings' worth) from no desire to be disrespectful, but because that is the literal truth, and to emphasise the fact that we want the heart of the volume in much handier form, not for six shillings but for sixpence or even threepence, that it might be brought directly home in many thousands of copies to the people, north, south, east, and west, in the churches of this vast metropolis. It is the people in the churches who must attend to this matter, the people and the parsons equally; for, as Mr. C. F. G. Masterman says, in another of the essays in this volume, "It is we professing Christians, as has been a little cynically asserted, who are the the chief obstacles to the spread of Christianity in England."

There can be no doubt that Mr. Mudie-Smith, in organising and carrying out the Daily News Religious Census of London, accomplished a most difficult task in a thoroughly admirable manner, and this volume is a worthy monument of his achievement. We feel with Mr. Percy Alden about the figures, but here they are, section after section, compiled with the most elaborate care, a finger of judgment pointed at all the churches, and only at a very few, with a warning against conceit, where the totals largely over-top those of the majority; and, besides the figures, there are a number of diagrams, showing the attendance and analysis of attendance in each district, which we have no doubt are equally exemplary, and useful to those who can understand them. Mr. Mudie-Smith contributes also as an introduction a good part of what he wrote in the Daily News after the completion of the work, as to the methods and lessons of the census. Of this we have already spoken in these columns, and only point out in passing that in his final word as to the results, he appears to have forgotten a consideration on which he had dwelt not long before. The total result for London and Greater London, he says, (with a population of 6,240,336), is 1,514,025 attendances, and 1,252,433 worshippers, the difference being due to the reckoning of those who attend two services a Sunday. And, he goes on, "In other words, four persons out of every five, not dwelling in institutions, are either careless or hostile as regards public worship." But this, surely, is to forget the aged, the young children, the sick, and those who are kept away not by indifference, but by duty. Considering how many of such there are in families which are anything but careless or hostile to religion, we have a very different and much more satisfactory result in estimating the numbers of the religiously inclined and disinclined in the vast population of London.

But when we spoke of the heart of this volume, which we should like to put into the hands of every member of a church in London, and have earnestly considered in every pulpit of the Metropolis, we were thinking not of the elaborate tables of figures, and the diagrams, nor of the introduction, but of four essays, on the Problem of London, East, West, North and South, contributed by Mr. Percy Alden, Mr. Arthur Sherwell, Mr. W. R. Warren, and Mr. C. F. G. Masterman, respectively. There are other slighter essays included in the volume, among them one on the Settlement Ideal, by Mr. P. W. Whitwell, and another on Men's Services in the Church of England, by the Rev. J. E. Watts Ditchfield, while Mr. W. C. Braithwaite writes on the Adult School Movement; but those four chief essays contain the heart of the matter, and particularly Mr. Alden's on the East, and Mr. Masterman's on the South, are of vivid interest and very searching in their appeal.

Mr. Percy Alden writes with intimate knowledge of East London, as one who for years has lived and worked among the people there, in the truest spirit of comradeship; and this is a record of his experience:—

> There is far less open antagonism and hostility to religion or religious influences than there used to be. Ten years ago I found a considerable amount of undisguised hatred both of the parson and of the Church. To-day there is little of this to be found, although it must be admitted that neither Church nor parson is loved by the Socialist working man, or the Trade Unionist with a strong political leaning. Moreover, an intimate acquaintance with many thousands of men has taught me that, even when there is no hostility whatever to religion, there is a sort of sub-conscious and unrecognised feeling of antagonism to the Church as an institution or corporate body, and to the parson as a paid teacher of religion. Much of this can be overcome, and is constantly being overcome, by the man who makes his Church the home of the people during the week, and who meets them both Sundays and week-days on a footing of equality, as a man among men, a brother and a friend. Wherever a church is successful in the highest and truest sense, one may be perfectly sure that it is the man and not the clergyman—the personality and not the profession—that has appealed. Mr. Booth says that the mass of the population remains "alienated or unconcerned." On the whole, it seems to me to be a true verdict, and so far as this is the effect of professionalism in the church, or disregard of the social welfare of the working classes, the evil can surely be remedied.

The churches, Mr. Alden urges with great force, must be manifestly alive with human sympathies, and he describes his ideal of an "institutional church" as best fitted to touch and hold the people of East London. And by way of contrast he points to the character of many present City chapels:—

> The church of the people must be the home of the people; many of these chapels and mission halls remind one of nothing so much as a second-rate mortuary; the walls are damp and discoloured, the pews stiff and formidable; a general musty odour hangs about the building, and reveals only too plainly the fact that the ventilation is bad, and that the church or chapel is scarcely ever used except on the Sunday.

Mr. Masterman is not less emphatic as to the need for closer contact with the actual life of the people. "Religion," he says, "has rejoiced in the clear knowledge of God and forgotten the fellowship of man." And the penalty has been a darkening of that vision of the spiritual world and the unseen Father. "The way back to the unclouded height may be through the humble and deliberate search after that fellowship which has been offended and denied."

Such are the lessons urgently pressed upon our attention by these essays, and we can only hope that throughout the churches they will be very earnestly taken to heart.

To Correspondents.—Letters, &c., received from F. A., R. B., S. B., T. H. G., A. H., A. J. H, C. H., J. H., H. A. R. J., A. L., H. B. L., J. E. M., C. R., H. R., W. H. S., E. L. H. T., N. M. T., C. B. U., D. J. W.

* "The Religious Life of London," edited by Richard Mudie-Smith, Hodder and Stoughton, 6s.

FRANCES POWER COBBE.

By J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A.*

Since I spoke in this place last Sunday, I have been called suddenly to the grave-side of a venerated friend, whose death removes from the field of English religion, letters, and philanthropy a personality of rare power and distinction. Not often is it given to a single life to be equally well acquainted with the secrets of the student's chamber, the peasants of an Irish estate in famine time, the old women of an English workhouse, the office of a London journal, the salons of Florence or Rome: still less to exemplify in the course of an active career the great religious transition which marked the last century, to find a solitary way out of a traditional creed, to lay broad and deep the foundations of a new faith, and to welcome others into the sanctuary of infinite Holiness and everlasting Love. So remarkable was the career of Frances Power Cobbe, so full has it been of all that is best in the religious thought and life which this college strives to represent—she was herself for many years the hearer of its late Principal, alike in his pulpit and in his class-room, her sympathy being especially prized by him—that I shall ask leave to depart to-day from the ordinary pulpit conventions, and depict to you some aspects of a rich and potent nature, some elements of her work for God, his children, and his creatures.

Hers was a noble and a strenuous spirit, full of elements of happiness which she delighted to diffuse and to enjoy; full of gladness in mere living, in sunshine and flowers, in woods and hills; full of joy in the affection of friends, for she loved to love and to be loved; full of the swift sympathetic humour of the Irish temperament; full of courage—she was proud to think that her father had served under Wellington; full of tenacity and resolution, whether she sought to make her way through the problems of philosophy for the attainment of truth, or to get a Bill through Parliament for the relief of some social wrong; full, also, of a certain passionateness, which might still flame out in presence of what she conceived to be injustice to the helpless even in her latest days.

Born in 1822, the only sister of four brothers older than herself, she spent her childhood chiefly at her father's home at Newbridge, near Dublin. Her education, save for two years at Brighton, was conducted alone. It was of unusual range. History, philosophy, languages, mathematics, she absorbed them all, and to the last days of her life she could recall the delight with which vast prospects of literature opened before her, and the treasures of human thought were open for wonder and for joy. To her, as Wordsworth wrote:—

> Bliss was it in that dawn to be alive,
> But to be young was very heaven.

Here is her testimony to the significance of the genuine passion for study, as distinguished from some present-day methods of learning for examination. As you hear it, remember that her voice was among the first raised amid laughter long and loud (as is the rude fashion of creation's lords) to demand University degrees for women:—

> When I was young there were no honours, no rewards of any kind for a woman's learning; and as there were no examinations, there was no hurry or anxiety. There was only healthy thirst for knowledge of one kind or another, and of one kind after another. When I came across a reference to a matter which I did not understand, it was not then necessary, as it seems to be to young students now, to hasten over it, leaving the unknown name, or event, or doctrine, like an enemy's fortress on the road of an advancing army. I stopped and sat down before it, perhaps for days and weeks, but I conquered it at last, and then went on my way strengthened by the difficulty. Recently, I have actually heard of students at a college for ladies being advised by their "coach" to skip a number of propositions in Euclid, as it was certain they would not be examined on them. One might as well help a climber by taking rungs out of his ladder! I can make no sort of pretensions to have acquired, even in my best days, anything like the instruction which the young students of Girton and Newnham and Lady Margaret Hall are so fortunate as to possess; and much I envy their opportunities for obtaining accurate scholarship. But I know not whether the method they follow can, on the whole, convey as much of the pure delight in learning as did my solitary early studies. When the summer morning sun rose over the trees and shone, as it often did, into my bedroom, finding me still over my books from the evening before, and when I then sauntered out to take a sleep on one of the garden seats in the shrubbery, the sense of having learned something, or cleared up some hitherto doubted point, or added a store of fresh ideas to my mental riches, was one of purest satisfaction.

A mind thus independent was likely soon enough to run against difficulties in her childhood's faith. Trained in the dear home-usages at a mother's knee, she early felt the great beauty and glory of Evangelical Christianity, of the Arminian, not the Calvinistic, type. She saw in it a thorough amalgamation of the ideas of duty and devotion. Secret practices of piety were sweet to her. They prepared her for the impassioned appeal of the preacher; and she could recall a night during her brief school-life at Brighton when she walked back from church, with the waves thundering up the beach, and the wind tossing the clouds in the evening sky overhead, and the whole tremendous realities of the moral life seemed borne in on her heart. So, when she had returned home in her seventeenth year, she passed through a definite crisis which she interpreted as her conversion. Religion became the supreme interest of her life; and the sense that she was pardoned was her greatest joy.

But already, years before, the first seeds of difficulty had planted themselves in her busy mind. She sat with her mother and her governess in the great dining-room one Sunday evening, with the servants of a large Irish household duly assembled, while her father read aloud a sermon on the feeding of the five thousand. "How did it happen?" she began to think. "Did the fish grow and grow, as they were broken and eaten? And the bread the same? And the twelve baskets full taken up at the end, when there was not nearly so much at the beginning? It is not possible!" "Oh, heavens!" was the next thought, "I am doubting the Bible. God forgive me, I must never think of it again." But as her imagination played round these themes in later days, the struggle was renewed, and, after four years of anxious conflict and unspeakable pain, she found herself at twenty-one with no faith in the future, no hope beyond the grave, unable either to affirm or to deny the very being of God. Not to everyone who has gone through that dread experience has it been given to recognise so clearly the first steps on the path of recovery.

One day, while thus literally creedless, I wandered out alone as was my wont into a part of our park a little more wild than the rest, where deer were formerly kept, and sat down among the rocks and the gorse, which was then in its summer glory of odorous blossoms, ever since rich to me with memories of that hour. It was a sunny day in May, and after reading a little of my favourite Shelley, I fell, as often happened, into mournful thought. I was profoundly miserable; profoundly conscious of the deterioration and sliding down of all my feelings and conduct from the high ambitions of righteousness and holiness, which had been mine in the days of my Christian faith and prayer; and, at the same time, I knew that the whole scaffolding of that higher life had fallen to pieces and could never be built up again. While I was thus musing, despairingly, something stirred within me, and I asked myself, "Can I not rise once more, conquer my faults, and live up to my own idea of what is right and good? Even though there be no life after death, I may yet deserve my own respect here and now, and, if there be a God, He must approve of me."

The resolution was made very seriously. I came home to begin a new course, and to cultivate a different spirit. Was it strange that in a few days I began instinctively, and almost without reflection, to pray again?

By and by books came in her way. She saw an advertisement of the Discourse of Religion by Theodore Parker, and she read it as soon as it came to England in 1845. It threw a flood of light upon her difficult way. Perplexities wrought by a discarded doctrine of revelation vanished. She learned that as every devout and obedient soul may expect to share in divine grace, so the devout and obedient souls of all ages have shared in divine inspiration. She was thus carried to the immediate source of a present teaching, the primal utterance of God's holiness and love within the soul. These fundamental truths of Theism she embraced with alacrity and joy, and she bore without resentment the reproach of her family that her faith was only a word in a dictionary, not a religion.

Well was it that the new trust was firmly planted in her heart. Sorrow came upon sorrow. The beloved mother passed from the home. The widowed father, when he leaned the extent of his daughter's heresies—she, moreover, the kinswoman of five archbishops and a bishop—wrote roughly to tell her that if she rejected Christ and disbelieved the Bible, a man was called upon to keep the plague of such opinions from his own house. It was in the terrible years of famine and fever. She had been wrestling with the spectres of hunger and disease amid the crowded cabins on her father's estate. Now she was sent to a farm in the wilds of Donegal, not knowing whether she would ever be permitted to return home. In her solitude she still laboured upon the problems of religion. She marshalled a long series of parallels between the precepts of the Bible and those of the Greek poets and philosophers, the Rabbis of the Talmud, even the scriptures of Persia and India in such translations as were then available. She corresponded with Parker, and her belief in immortality slowly returned. After ten months her father recalled her to take her place at the head of his household. There between her thirtieth and thirty-third years she wrote her Essay on the Theory of Intuitive Morals, which was the first attempt to explain to English readers Kant's profound conception of the Moral Law as wrought by God into the inmost spiritual nature of man. This book was her severest piece of thinking. Here she elaborated that strong fabric of faith in conscience as the immediate witness to divine things in the soul, speaking with no created authority, and containing the promise of immortal growth, which was ever after her support and stay. Lofty were the prospects of God's love and goodness which she unfolded. Far, far, through eternal vistas, stretched the just and beneficent purposes of the Infinite Father. Within our own nature, however marred or defaced, lay the present testimony to the everlasting right. This book she re-issued (for the fourth time) only two years ago. She added to it the attestation of her life's conviction:—

* An address delivered in Manchester College Chapel, Oxford, on April 10, embodying words uttered beside her grave on April 8.

I have known great and long happiness and also great sorrow. And now on the verge of the final experience of mortality, I can humbly testify that my early faith in God's absolute goodness, and in a blessed life hereafter, has not failed me or broken down. I can, therefore, offer this book to a younger generation of readers with the honest belief that with all its faults and shortcomings it is capable of affording a satisfying solution of some of the deeper questions of the intellect, and views of the holy Law of Conscience, and of the great purposes of human existence, which can scarcely fail to uplift and comfort the soul by which they may be received.

Much did she write afterwards on these high themes, and in the English edition of the works of Theodore Parker, which was issued under her care, she paid a noble tribute to the man who had helped her in her time of need. In the sequel to the Intuitive Morals, on Religious Duty, she sought to work out the austere principles of her first work in the sphere of the devout affections of the soul towards God. Then she proceeded to apply the same conceptions to the existing phases of religious thought and life in England. She reached a finer appreciation of the place of Jesus in history than she had been willing to accord to him in the first years of revolt. She saw that his career corresponded in the larger story of the race to that moment of quickening which she had herself personally experienced. She ceased to compare Christian ethics with the precepts of other religions; what she now found in the Gospels was a new spirit of life. In the little volume to which she gave the Tennysonian title Broken Lights, she expounded the relations of different branches of the Church—High, Low, and Broad—to the processes of change which she saw everywhere around her. Three years later, in a second volume designated Dawning Lights, she traced more fully the issues of the newer thought in its bearings on personal character, on ideas of sin, death, and punishment, of prayer, and of the perfect life to come. For this great hope she pleaded with a certain passionate and insistent claim. Essay after essay flowed forth from an ever active pen in its support. When the devoted friendship of her maturest womanhood* was severed by death, it was on this that she relied in the seven years of lonely survivorship. If man is not immortal, she was bold enough to argue, God is not just.

Here was labour enough for a course of more than common energy and fulness. Had she done nothing more she must have been famous. She had served her generation faithfully; she had set forth visions of undying truth. But yet another memorable hour deserves to be recalled, marking a further crisis of duty and love. From childhood she had been led to offices of kindness and help. She had taught Sundays and week-days in the village schools. She had nursed the sick at her father's park gates, she had fed the hungry, she had tended the dying. But as she looked back she could see that she had striven to perform such service as part of moral rectitude, in obedience to a law or a demand, rather than in a spirit of loving-kindness. Some pride of knowledge still enveloped her. She loved its pleasures, and gloried in the old philosopher's maxim, "Man was created to know and contemplate." But "suddenly again," she wrote, "it came to me to see that Love is greater than Knowledge; that it is more beautiful to serve our brothers freely and tenderly, than to 'hive up learning with each studious year'; to compassionate the failures of others and ignore them when possible, rather than undertake the hard process (I always found it so!) of forgiveness of injuries; to say, 'What may I be allowed to do to help and bless this one—or that?' rather than 'What am I bound by duty to do for him, or her; and how little will suffice?' As these thoughts swelled in my heart, I threw myself down in a passion of happy tears, and passed most of the night thinking how I should work out what I had learned."

That was, indeed, to be the aim of the rest of her life. The death of her father a year or two later caused her departure from the family home. She made an adventurous journey, alone and unfriended, in the East, as far as Cairo, Jerusalem, and Damascus. Then she settled in Bristol, in the house of Mary Carpenter, and began, in 1858, those labours for others which ceased only with her death. One deep passion animated them all, the demand for justice. She claimed that the righteousness of God should be realised in the conduct of men, and this begot an immediate protest against every form of tyranny and oppression that came clearly within her view. She started among the ragged children of the Bristol streets. It was not easy work, and she sometimes longed for the beauty and peace of nature as of old. One afternoon, as she sat for half an hour upon the Downs, under a horse chestnut tree, in all the charm of its young spring leaves, she had "a very stiff fight" with herself, "one of those," she recorded, "which leave us stronger or weaker ever after." She conquered the craving for enjoyment and ease. She toiled with her dearly loved friend, Miss Elliot (daughter of the Dean of Bristol), among the sick in workhouses. She wrote pamphlets on destitute incurables; she visited hospitals in Paris and Italy; she gathered in young servants to Sunday classes at the Deanery, and Miss Elliot and she laid the foundations of what became afterwards widely known as the "Association for Befriending Young Servants." She read papers on "Friendless Girls and How to Help Them," at social science congresses. She got articles and letters about workhouse abuses into newspapers. Her essay on "The Philosophy of the Poor Laws" having attracted the attention of the President of a Commission on pauper legislation in New South Wales, she had afterwards the gratification of learning that her views had been adopted as the basis of permanent arrangements in the colony; and at a congress at the World's Fair in Chicago, 1893, it was reported that these were still working perfectly well. Needless to say that she pleaded for the political enfranchisement of women on the same terms as men. With the same insistence she raised her voice on behalf of their education. She was among the foremost in the work of opening up those new facilities which are now the commonplaces of so many girls' careers. She understood girls, she sympathised with them; and her gifts of imagination and humour were never better employed than when she discoursed of the Duties of Women, or wrote of religion with that clearness, simplicity, and kindling power which made her words fall on troubled hearts like those of an intimate and trusted friend.

Her visitations in Bristol had revealed to her the sorrowful secrets of many homes. The sad knowledge of the brutal cruelties of husbands to wives lay heavy on her heart. Seven years' experience on the staff of the London Echo brought many other grievous cases before her notice. Again and again she spent her days in tracking out miseries of suffering and sin; and she was thus led to give her earnest support to the Married Women's Property Act, which she considered the most important step yet gained for women in England. More emphatically still, as she read one day in 1878 a whole series of frightful cases of marital ferocity, did she rise from her chair, half dazed with horror, saying to herself, "I will never rest till I have tried what I can do to stop this." She wrote articles, she consulted friends. Mr. Alfred Hill, son of the great promoter of so much noble reformatory work, Matthew Davenport Hill, whom she had deeply reverenced, put her proposals into legal form. Parliamentary friends were found ready to help, and ere the session was out the remedy she had desired was embodied in the law of the land. "I am always longing for you to know the active result of your achieved work," wrote a devoted fellow-labourer to her six years later—"this, that poor battered, bruised women are relieved, are safer, and bless you, as I do, from a full heart." "If I could hear before I die that I had been able to do as much for tortured brutes," was Miss Cobbe's comment, "I should say Nunc dimittis, and wish no more."

* With Miss Mary Lloyd, of Hengwrt, North Wales. They lived together, first in London, and afterwards in the beautiful Welsh family home, for more than thirty years.

As early as the year 1863 she had been deeply concerned with the horrors of Continental vivisection, which came to her knowledge during a residence at Florence in consequence of an accident which long crippled her. As further evidence accumulated, the subject loomed larger and larger before her, until the protection of animals from scientific cruelty became the central purpose of her life. The dogs and horses and cattle on her father's estate she had always loved. Even as a girl, after the crisis which she called her conversion, she had given up fishing as a sport no longer tolerable. In hunting and shooting she took no part, and she did not feel compelled to judge the father and brothers who did. Now she dedicated time, thought, and means to a great crusade against what she conceived to be a hideous wrong. She finally demanded nothing less than the total prohibition of all vivisection. As she brooded over the hateful narratives, her indignation at times seemed to shake her whole being. But her wrath had in it no selfish aim. However it might lack the judicial temper, it was always the passion of a noble soul. If in the Welsh home to which (in 1884) she retired with the devoted companion of her life, she could not easily enter into the neighbourly relations with the village folk around her which she naturally desired, she only threw herself with the more ardour into the wider field. Doubtless, like all pioneers, she made mistakes. But when she was convinced that she had been in error, she strove at once with prompt frankness and large magnanimity to avert its evils and repair the wrong. Undaunted she faced opposition and bore ridicule and obloquy; they never drove her from the course she had marked out. Disclosures of cruelty sometimes sickened her: at one time she was well-nigh borne down. Her trust in the Eternal Righteousness itself seemed shaken as she gazed on helplessness and suffering inflicted in the sacred name of science. It was a dark and sorrowful hour; yet she swerved not, and confidence and serenity returned.

Delighting in social intercourse, "given to hospitality," friend of many of the noblest men and women of her time, as far apart as Elizabeth Barrett Browning and Mary Carpenter, Mrs. Somerville, Fanny Kemble, Anna Swanwick, Theodore Parker and Lord Shaftesbury, Charles Darwin and Keshub Chunder Sen, Cardinal Manning and Dr. Martineau, she concealed no principle, evaded no difficulty, withheld no conviction. She bound them to her in a wider fellowship than that of creed. She loved truth with transparent sincerity; she loved justice with no less ardour and equal single-mindedness. Like the poet whom she had known, first in Florence and then in London, she was "ever a fighter":—

One who never turned her back, but marched breast forward;
Never doubted clouds would break;
Never dreamed, though right were worsted,
wrong would triumph;
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better,
Sleep to wake.

And so she laid her down again early that Tuesday morning (April 5), and "slept to wake" into the dawn of a more wondrous day. She passed, as she wished to pass, swiftly, silently, and without pain. She shared the trust of the great Indian teacher, Keshub Chunder Sen, with whom she had had deep and intimate communion. "Faith in God, and in our eternal union with him," so he once said to her, "are not two doctrines of our creed, but one." Or, as she herself had written years before:—

In his hands we are safe; we falter on Through storm and mire;
Above, around, beside us, there is One
Will never tire.

What though we fall, and bruised and wounded lie,
Our lips in dust?
God's arm will lift us up to victory!
In him we trust.

For neither life nor death, nor things below,
Nor things above,
Can ever sever us that we should go
From his great love.

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE GUILDS' UNION.

The third annual meeting of this Union was held at the New Meeting House, Kidderminster, on Easter Tuesday, April 5. There was a very fair attendance of delegates and friends, though more than half of the Guilds in the Union were unable to be represented, the distance and the travelling expenses being in many cases very considerable.

Proceedings began with the reception of delegates and visitors in the schoolroom. This was followed by the annual business meeting, which was held in the church, the President of the Union, the Rev. Joseph Wood, being in the chair. In the unavoidable absence, through ill-health, of the secretary, the Rev. John Ellis, the Report of the Council was read by the Chairman.

The report stated that the Council had met four times during the year, and had considered various methods by which the Guild idea might be kept prominently before the churches, and the affiliated Guilds drawn into closer fellowship. In the hope of promoting the study of more serious subjects among Guild members a second essay competition had been announced last October. The subjects selected were:—(i) "The Religious Teaching of Dr. Channing as shown in 'The Perfect Life'"; (ii) "Dr. Priestley: His Life and Opinions as a Christian Minister"; (iii) "The Ministry and Teaching of Jesus Christ as Related in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke." To the great regret of the Council the response to their efforts in this direction had not been very satisfactory. Only fifteen essays had been sent in from four Guilds—nine on "Dr. Priestley," four on "Dr. Channing," and two on "The Gospels." The report referred to other ways in which the Council had endeavoured to extend the Guild movement. Copies of the Rev. J. J. Wright's address at Liverpool had been sent to all the Guilds. Copies of the Year Book, together with the President's stimulating message from the United States, had been despatched to all the Guilds of the Union, to kindred societies in the churches, and to several ministers, in the hope that fresh enthusiasm would by this means be generated. There were 30 Guilds in the Union: in some the membership had slightly diminished, while in others it had greatly increased. As typical of the spirit and method of the Guilds, the following brief extracts were quoted from the reports to hand:—"For three years past an average of five members of the Guild have become members of the Church." "A visiting committee has been formed for the purpose of visiting cases of sickness and distress; also for visiting absentee scholars." "Members have given concerts at the Missions, and three times during the past year have entertained about 30 blind workers." "For the eleventh year in succession the 'Robins' Treat was given to poor children. Articles useful in a sick-room have been in constant use since last year. Guild members have made house-to-house visitation to invite non church-goers to People's services." "Members handed over £10 to the church funds." "Sixty-one new members joined the Guild in 1903. Guild members entertained 24 men and boys of the Great Meeting Class for Deaf Mutes." "The penny-a-week fund raised over £12 in six months for the School funds." "Monthly meetings have been more interesting since the introduction of the Guild's Union Manual. Sixteen children were sent into the country at the expense of members."

Mr. H. P. Greg, as treasurer, having submitted a statement of accounts, which showed a balance in hand of £4 7s. 7½d., the Chairman moved the adoption of the Report. He spoke of the disappointment of the Council at the comparative failure of the Essay scheme, and strongly urged all the guilds to devote more time to religious study and religious exercise. On the benevolent side, all the Guilds seemed to be in a healthy condition, and to be actively engaged in good works of every description. He concluded by suggesting that the Guilds should be divided into certain districts — each district to be visited by a vice-president of the Guilds Union, who should report to the Council on the work and the needs of the Guilds in his district. This plan had been adopted with success in America; and it would help to keep the Council in touch with all the Guilds, and to bring the Guilds into closer fellowship.

The motion was seconded by Rev. E. A. Voysey, and carried unanimously.

On the motion of Mr. H. P. Greg, seconded by Mr. W. Cheshire, the Rev. Joseph Wood was unanimously re-elected president for the coming year, and the following ladies and gentlemen were elected members of the Council:—

Miss Edith Gittins (Leicester), Miss Tremain (Highgate), Mr. W. Cheshire (Birmingham), Rev. E. D. Priestley Evans (Kidderminster), Rev. Frank K. Freeston (London), Rev. Henry Gow (London), Rev. E. W. Lummis (Leicester), and Rev. J. J. Wright (Chowbent), leaving four others to be co-opted.

The Rev. Joseph Wood then delivered the President's Address. He began by offering a hearty welcome to all the delegates and friends, and spoke of the pleasure of meeting at Kidderminster. It was the home of one of their largest and most flourishing Guilds: it was the city of Richard Baxter, a saying of whom he recalled, "That is the best religious doctrine which makes the best men." In reviewing the work of the Guilds' Union, he referred to the loss of four Guilds, to the failure of the Essay scheme, and to the want of interest and enthusiasm in some quarters. But he was no pessimist, and he looked forward to the time, which would come sooner or later, when every church would have its Guild of Young People. It was the day of small beginnings, and they must not be discouraged if they did not immediately meet with all the success they hoped for. Recently he had stood in the room where Emerson had delivered his famous Divinity School Address. That address was delivered to an audience of not more than 35. It was received in silence, and created no stir at the time; but how great has been its influence on religious life and thought! Mr. Wood then emphasised three ideas which were of the utmost importance in the work of their guilds. First he spoke of the need for co-operation. The word "together" summed up the Guild idea. He impressed upon his hearers the need for sympathetic comradeship one to another. Secondly, he spoke of the need for loyalty—of loyalty to their guilds, loyalty to their churches. The smallness of their numbers was an additional reason for their loyalty. The churches were their homes, dear to them for the work they had done in the past, dear to them for the work that they had still to do. And thirdly, he spoke of the need for service: "Freely ye have received, freely give." Let them keep these three watchwords before them through the coming year—co-operation, loyalty, and service, and the future success of their guilds and of their churches would be assured.

Miss Tremain (of Highgate) then read a paper on "Consecration." Consecration, she said, meant religious dedication, and its essential meaning was the consecration of a place, thing, or person to sacred uses. She traced the idea of consecration from its origin and use in relation to the more materialistic aspect of religion, down to the purer and nobler and more spiritual conception which prevails to-day; as in the consecrating ceremonies of Christening or Baptism, and Confirmation; the first, the consecration to God of the young life by the parents; the second, a reconsecration by the desire of the individual, when arrived at a responsible age. She noticed the tendency of modern times to apply the idea of consecration more and more to our daily life, to make all life sacred. The ideal of the hermit and the ascetic was not our ideal; for we realised that religion, to have any practical value, must walk hand in hand with everyday duties and pleasures, and that we must consecrate, i.e., devote to the service of God and humanity, our common everyday life. Frances R. Havergal's hymn, "Take my life, and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee:" or Whittier's poem, beginning "Hast thou, 'midst life's empty noises, Heard the solemn steps of time," expressed the spirit of self-consecration. The Guilds, in the practical side of their work, provided members with plenty of opportunities to show the earnestness of their consecration to the cause of God and humanity. Let them not repine at the smallness of their service, for if they did it heartily it served its purpose as well as more ambitious endeavours.

Mr. H. P. Greg, the treasurer of the Union, read a paper on "Bearing Witness," in which he dwelt on the value of the guild life in bearing witness to the spirit of Christ. Why are we so fascinated, he asked, with the story of Jesus? The fascination of Christ lies not in what he did, not in what he said, but in what he was, in what he is. And so with us; though every kind word, every kind act, is of importance, it is the spirit within us that really matters. That it is which makes the difference between seeming a Christian and being a Christian: that it is which enables the presence of a truly great man to send an influence forth which is felt by all, though no word is uttered, no act performed; an influence which is so keenly felt that we say we are the better merely for being in that man's presence. Such an influence all keenly felt who were privileged to be present at the communion service conducted by Dr. Martineau at the opening of Manchester College, in the beautiful chapel, in October, 1893. How then can we cultivate this unseen but most powerfully felt influence? The first necessity is that the mind should be well employed. A soil that is uncultivated naturally grows profitless weeds: so the idle mind naturally turns to base, ignoble, unworthy thoughts. The Guilds helped the members here by giving them occupation for thought, by providing them with opportunities for common study. But each individual must make the effort that is necessary, and take every opportunity for what is called self-improvement. That is a duty all men owe to God. Mr. Greg strongly urged all the members of the Guilds to go to lectures when they had the chance; and he also advised them to take up some hobby. In such ways they would keep the mind always well employed. The mind, like the body, wanted recreation; and, like the body, it found the best recreation, not in idleness, but in change. He recommended botany as a suitable hobby for all. The Guild is made up of individuals: the better the individuals the better the Guild, and the more influential for good is the Guild life. And herein lay the importance of each individual cultivating the mind, developing the inner man, cherishing the spirit; for it is along these lines that we gain communion with God, that we obtain the fellowship with noble souls of all ages and all races. Each must develop the inner man, must cherish the spirit, for himself; it was a personal matter between the individual and God. Others may help him, but he cannot hand over the work to any other living being. "Therefore, quietly and steadfastly take up this work of seeing that the mind is kept employed on lofty, pure and noble actions; and by this means you and your Guild will most effectively, though unostentatiously, bear witness to the spirit of Christ, the loftiest, purest, and noblest the world has known. 'Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life.'"

The Rev. E. A Voysey then spoke on "Bearing Witness." He mentioned the qualities which were essential in a witness in a court of law. He must have the power of observation, and some power to describe what he had seen. He must know what he was talking about, and be willing to confess his ignorance. He must speak the truth, and nothing but the truth, and he must have moral courage. If all these qualities were of importance in earthly matters, were they not of even greater importance in the spiritual life in bearing witness to God? A man who possessed these qualities could not remain idle; he would have something of Wesley's aggressive spirit. So we must make our presence felt in the world, as Faithful, in Bunyan's fable, made his goodness felt. This would involve strife, but we must be prepared to set an example to others and to suffer if needs be. We must not only see and approve, but be prepared to follow what is good. True witness-bearing would cost us something, but God was always near to those who were willing to suffer for Him.

The Chairman heartily thanked the readers of the papers for their addresses, and added a few words of encouragement to those who were present to be worthy of the high ideals which had been set before them. He referred to the consecration of Channing, and to the life of Gladstone as noble and worthy examples.

In the evening a service was held in the New Meeting House, conducted by Mr. W. Cheshire, of the Old Meeting, Birmingham, and addresses were given by the Rev. J. Worsley Austin and the Rev. E. W. Lummis.

At a subsequent meeting of the Council of the Guilds' Union, the following resolution was unanimously passed:—

That this Council in accepting the resignation of the Rev. John Ellis, places on record its great appreciation of the services rendered to the Guilds' Union by Mr. Ellis during the three years he has held the office of secretary to the Union; and offers to him most grateful thanks for the thought, time, and labour he has given in promoting the Guild idea, and in bringing into closer fellowship with each other the various Guilds belonging to our churches. The Council much regrets to lose Mr. Ellis's valuable services, and hears with sorrow of his illness. The members of the Council take this opportunity of expressing their sympathy with Mr. Ellis, and assure him of their earnest wishes for his speedy recovery to health and strength.

The Rev. Gordon Cooper was elected secretary to the Union, in succession to Mr. Ellis.

An International Co-operative Congress is to be held at Buda-pest, September 5-8, and Mr. W. H. Shrubsole suggests to correspondents who have inquired of him as to an excursion to Hungary this autumn, that they might apply to Miss Halford, secretary of the London Committee, at 19 Southampton Row.

The Provincial Assembly Messenger, of London and the South-Eastern Counties, of which an advertisement will be found in another column, bears on the cover of its April number a portrait of Mr. Frederick Nettlefold, the Assembly's first president. The Rev. T. E. M. Edwards in his monthly letter continues an interesting account of the churches of the province, telling of Bessell's Green, Canterbury, Chatham, Dover, and Deal. The Messenger embodies the Seed Sower, where will be found the sermon preached before the Assembly by the late Dr. Brooke Herford. There is also the conclusion of an interesting account of cremation and the Birmingham Crematorium by Mr. Charles Harding.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

WALES.

The Welsh Unitarian Association was founded in 1802, under the inspiration of high hopes for human progress and enlightenment ushered in by the French Revolution. Some of the founders, like Edward Williams, the noted Bard of Glamorgan, had been in sympathy with the great movement across the Channel, and had, in consequence, become objects of suspicion on the part of the authorities. Their souls aflame with the principles of liberty, they girded themselves for a conflict with the dominant forces of orthodoxy. But it was a very unequal conflict. The Church of England stood safely entrenched behind its positions of respectability, prestige, and State patronage. The great Methodist Revival was gradually maturing itself into an organisation that was going to be the most powerful religious agency in the principality; and apart from the high emotional fervour characteristic of the movement, it employed means in the prosecution of its work which our old Unitarian fathers unfortunately looked upon with a sort of disdain.

Lay preaching by men, many of whom had barely learnt to read their Welsh Bible, but whose pulpit power and simple eloquence of appeal struck a fresh note in the history of preaching, was the secret of the success of the Methodist movement. In our Welsh churches this method has been looked upon with suspicion and met with discouragement. We have had a traditional zeal for an educated ministry, and it was a saying of some ministers I knew in my youth that no man had a right to enter a pulpit who could not construe the Greek Testament. The Rev. David Davis, of Castellhywel, has the credit of rearing in one of his churches and in his school two of the most popular ministers in Wales, one of whom was no other than Christmas Evans; but both had to leave our order of churches in their inability to avail themselves of a college education.

The loss of two such men was nothing less than disastrous, and, in my opinion, this policy has been the bane of our churches through all their history. The closing of our small chapels in Carmarthenshire and Glamorganshire is mostly due to the neglect of lay-preaching, the services being irregularly sustained by the angel visits of stated ministers and students' supplies. Nothing but the paralysis of all congregational and religious activity can result from one service in a fortnight, and no Sunday-school; and that was the fare upon which many churches I knew in the sixties had a semblance of life—to be finally closed, when in such an attenuated atmosphere there was nothing to expect but the extinguishing, sooner or later, of the last flicker of devotion on their altars.

When Christianity in all its forms must be a missionary religion in order to realise its primal idea of a seed thrown into the field of the world, and when it can only live by the vigour of its propagation, it is no reply to refer to the eminent men Unitarianism has produced in Wales, to their valuable services socially and educationally, and to the leavening influence of their views in the few centres to which their activities were confined. Certainly Welsh Unitarianism can boast of great men, who are not a whit behind the greatest on the roll of other denominations. An eloquent member for a North Wales constituency, in a speech in the House of Commons, not long ago, described the Church of England in Wales as being cursed with intellectual impotence and the lack of genius for any high literary endeavour throughout the centuries of its domination over the religious life of the principality. The names of Price, the philosopher, Edward Williams and David Davis, the poets, Josiah Rees, the pioneer of the Welsh periodical press, Thomas Stevens, the historian, and Gwilym Marles, the preacher and littérateur redeem our small body from that condemnation.

The impact of men like these upon the life of their time, of course, cannot be measured; but, out of their own sphere, must bear upon a mere handful who are in sympathy with their work and their aspirations. Whole extended areas are left untouched, and the silent influence of a liberal religion could only trickle from sources remote and uncertain. Through our history we have lacked much in initiative, and when our ministers, from sheer necessity, had to alienate more than half their energies from their own proper work in order to eke out a living, we were too slavishly attached to traditional ideas to utilise ready material at hand for helping them, and for carrying on as well the missionary work of our churches.

These remarks are suggested by a resolution passed by the committee held in connection with the quarterly meetings of the South Wales Unitarian Association at Allt-y-placa, on Wednesday and Thursday in Easter week—a resolution to adopt Mr. T. G. Thomas, a well-known church and Sunday school worker at Capel Fadfa as a lay preacher of the Association. He is the first so recognised, and the committee hope to have a number of lay preachers enrolled, who will not only relieve our ministers from time to time, but will carry our message with the power of a consecrated zeal outside the borders of our churches. In view of this belated resolution, I cannot help thinking what would have happened if this policy had been adopted one hundred years ago, when the message was fresh, when hopes were high, and extensive tracts of the missionary field were unoccupied.

Whatever opportunities have been missed, however unfaithful we have been to our great trust, we are still a living power on the banks of the Teifi, as the late meetings testify. Though they were held in the midst of the busy sowing season, the Allt-y placa Chapel, which still wears the freshness of its renovated appearance when opened eleven years ago, was more than crowded at two services out of the four. There was a large muster of ministers; in fact, all presiding over Welsh congregations on the roll of the Association were present; and, in addition, the Rev. J. E. Jenkins, of Padiham, formerly of Dowlais, paid us a flying visit. Sermons, of course, and not a few, were in evidence—a feature unintelligible to our English friends, and, I am afraid, unappreciated, but of which we Welshmen are never tired. Of the seven preached, and all by Glamorganshire ministers, by the way, I may safely say, without hurting anybody's sensibilities, that the two most notable utterances were those of the Rev. D. Rees, Bridgend, the appointed preacher, and the Rev. R. J. Jones, M.A., Aberdare. Mr. Rees, in preaching on the parable of the lost sheep, struck in a most pathetic way the fresh note of social Christianity in its adaptation to the crying evils of the time. Mr. Rees, though one would never find it out, has not had a college education, but he is a born preacher, and will be heard of again. Mr. Jones's was a theological pronouncement on the "Divine Fatherhood," written out in extenso, a very unusual course for him, and delivered with an impressiveness and a vigour which he has not surpassed even in his younger days. Composed carefully, with the love of an artist for his art and the enthusiasm of a prophet for his message, this fine sermon seemed to me to be the flowering of a life and the concentrated essence of the gospel which Mr. Jones has been preaching for nearly fifty years. It will find a place in a volume soon to be published under the title of "Pwlpud y Beirdd," or the "Poets' Pulpit," and edited by a Congregational minister in Pembrokeshire. The volume will contain thirty-five sermons by so many poet-preachers of Wales, and Mr. Jones will figure in it as the sole representative of Unitarianism. In closing, let me say that the well-known Unitarian minister of Cardiganshire, the Rev. John Davies, will attain the fortieth year of his ministry at Allt-y-placa in July next. He settled there in 1864, when the congregation was at a very low ebb, at a salary of £8 a year. He has lived to see a great change for the better in all respects as the result of his labours, and both he and his church will have good reason for celebrating with all honour the fortieth year of that union when the time comes round.

Llandyssul. W. James.

"Scepticism and Orthodoxy," is the title of the Rev. R. A. Armstrong's sermon in this month's Sermons for the Day. It was preached in Hope-street Church on behalf of the Liverpool District Missionary Association, and points out the mischiefs to faith arising from an insistence on "Orthodoxy," pleading earnestly for the maintenance of free churches.

The April number of the Mill Hill Pulpit contains the sermon preached by the Rev. Charles Hargrove on Easter Sunday morning, prior to leaving home on his mission to Australia. "Alleluia!" is the title, and the first word of the text (Rev. xix. 6), and the sermon is an utterance of steadfast faith in the immortal life and the Eternal Goodness. In his Chapel Record Mr. Hargrove tells of the cordial meeting of the congregation held on Easter Monday evening to bid him and Mrs. Hargrove God-speed upon their way, and says that he has left sermons ready for the monthly issue during his absence. For the rest of this month the Rev. L. P. Jacks is preaching at Mill Hill.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Wednesday, or Thursday Morning at latest.]

Aberdare: Highland-place.—On Easter Sunday morning, two beautiful mural tablets were unveiled to the memory of Mrs. Richard Lewis, of Fairfield House, Aberdare, and Mrs. L. N. Williams, of Cawed. The Rev. H. Fisher Short delivered a suitable sermon based on the texts inscribed on the tablets:—"There is no death," and "The memory of the just is blessed."

Aberystwyth.—The service last Sunday morning was conducted by the Rev. R. J. Jones, M.A., of Aberdare, when the following resolution was passed in reverent silence:—"That this congregation, meeting for the first time since the passing of its honoured member, Frances Power Cobbe, desires to place on record in its minutes its thankfulness for her life of more than eighty years, consecrated to the noblest services for man, woman, and brute. Associated with us from our formation in 1902 as a congregation for the worship of Almighty God, free from all doctrinal tests, the members must ever feel grateful for her countenance, support, and cheery messages from time to time received."

Bridgwater.—On Sunday evening Mrs. Broadrick (who has been in charge of the chapel here since the death of the late Rev. T. B. Broadrick) gave an In Memoriam address on "Frances Power Cobbe," which was the more interesting on account of the personal acquaintance, extending over many years, which she had with Miss Cobbe.

Carlisle (Resignation).—The Rev. Charles Travers has resigned the pulpit of the Viaduct Unitarian Church, after a ministry of nearly eleven years.

Chichester.—The last Sunday-school social of the present series was given on Thursday, April 7, and much enjoyed by all present. The programme consisted of readings by the Rev. C. A. Hoddinott, and recitations, songs, &c., by the children. Between the parts Mr. Hopkins kindly gave some interesting and effective gramaphone records.

Edinburgh.—The St. Mark's Literary Society have again completed a very successful session. During the winter fourteen meetings were held, which included two musical evenings, dramatic recital, readings Shakesperian, American, &c., two lectures with lime-light illustrations, debates on the "Fiscal Policy," and a lecture by the President of the Edinburgh Shakespeare Society on "Hamlet." The diversity of the programme attracted encouraging audiences, although the inclemency of the weather proved a formidable opponent on most of the occasions.

Leeds (Holbeck).—The Rev. W. R. Shanks gave last Sunday evening the first of a series of discourses on "The People of Japan: Their National Characteristics and Religious History." A good congregation assembled. On the evening of Easter Tuesday a social meeting promoted by the young men of the second class was held in the school-room, and was attended by a large number of the young people. The proceeds are to be handed to the bazaar fund.

Liverpool Unitarian Temperance Society.—A meeting for young people was held on Monday evening, April 11, in the Hope Street Day Schools. After tea in the lower room, over 200 assembled in the upper room for the entertainment and addresses. The Revs. R. A. Armstrong and J. Morley Mills gave stirring addresses, which were listened to with great attention, and at the close several young people signed the pledge and the roll of membership.

Newcastle-on-Tyne (Jubilee Celebration).—Special services were held on Sunday in the Church of the Divine Unity, conducted by the Rev. Henry Gow, of Hampstead, in celebration of the jubilee of the church, which is the successor of the old Hanover-square chapel. The celebration was continued on Monday evening, with a soirée and public meeting, under the presidency of the Rev. Frank Walters. The Rev. Henry Gow represented the B. and F.U.A., Dr. Barlow the Scottish Association, the Rev. F. H Vaughan the Yorkshire Union, and Mr. T. Fletcher Robinson the Manchester District Association. The chairman spoke with pleasure of the presence at that celebration of Miss Harris, daughter of his venerable predecessor, the Rev. George Harris, during whose ministry that church was built. He was thankful that his own ministry extended over that jubilee, and he asked his son to present to the secretary a memorial of the occasion. Mr. F. Walters, jun., said that during these fifty years their traditions had been upheld, and their faith strengthened, and their knowledge of God had increased as the years went by. The part their church had taken in public life had been not inconsiderable. Amongst the members of their congregation had been many of the chief public men of the city. Theirs was the first Sunday-school in the town, and they had stood for a free and liberal religion. He asked the secretary to accept a tablet, inscribed as follows:—"To the glory of God, and in memory of fifty years' work in His name. Church of the Divine Unity, April 10, 1854; April 10, 1904. To us there is but one God the Father. Placed by Frank Walters, minister of this church, 1885 to 1904, in gratitude for opportunities of service." The tablet was gratefully accepted by the secretary, Mr. Otto Levin, with the assurance that a fitting place would be found for it in the church. Alderman J. Baxter Ellis moved a hearty welcome to Miss Harris, and the representatives of the various associations present, and Mr. Vincent Errington, who seconded, told how he had been at the foundation of the church, and had kept his membership unbroken ever since. He was very much impressed by the sermon delivered at the opening by Dr. Montgomery, of Belfast. It lasted two and a half hours; but it was magnificent. He had sat under five ministers in that church. He attended the services in Hanover-square. He was one of a number of young men who were advancing towards atheistic beliefs; but Mr. Harris was at that time delivering a course of lectures on infidelity, and they attended these, and were steadied. The ministers of that church had always stood for civil and religious liberty. They were proud of their beautiful building, and they were proud of having had three such ministers as the Rev. Geo. Harris, the Rev. William Turner, and the Rev. F. Walters. Mr. G. G. Laidler supported the motion, and said that his fathers and himself had attended the Unitarian services in this city for 180 years. He himself was at the foundation stone laying, and at the opening of the church. He mentioned that the site of the church cost £1 a yard, and each year since £1 had been added to the value, and each yard was now worth £50. The resolution was heartily carried. The four representatives made fitting response to this resolution, and a vote of thanks to those who had assisted in the celebration, moved by the Rev. F. Walters, seconded by Councillor Elliott, of Gateshead, and acknowledged by Mr. Robert Affleck, brought the proceedings to a close.

Nottingham: Hyson Green.—The Sunday-school anniversary services were held on Sunday last, the preacher in the afternoon being the Rev. Wm. Lindsay, of Christ Church. In the evening a musical service was held. The devotional exercises were led by Mr. R. Briggs, and an address was given by Mr. W. E. Raistrick. On Monday evening a well-attended social was held, and a varied programme given by the scholars and teachers. Altogether the anniversary was notable for the enthusiasm prevailing, and it is hoped the little Mission may continue its good work, despite the uncertainty in which it stands at present owing to the property being for sale.

Raloo.—On Easter Sunday evening the Rev. J. M'Cleery gave a lecture on Faith and Reason, in which he showed how reflective thought is justified as the preserver of the true spiritual character of religion, and defined the helpful part played by the idea of evolution as harmoniser of thought in a progressive religious life. On Easter Monday evening the Sunday-school prize distribution was held, followed by a programme consisting of part songs, solos, and readings, given partly by the young people, which was much appreciated by all present.

Rhondda Valley.—Last week's report of the presentation at Tylerstown to the Rev. D. Rees, spoke of his removal to Pontypridd. This was a mistake for Bridgend.

Stannington.—On Sunday, April 3, Easter services were held, as usual, when the Rev. E. E. Jenkins, of Sheffield, preached afternoon and evening. Owing to the boisterous state of the weather, the congregations were not so large as usual, and consequently the collections on behalf of the choir were somewhat below the average. On Easter Tuesday the Sunday-school children were given a tea, after which about 120 teachers and friends also partook of tea in the schoolroom, afterwards proceeding to the chapel, when addresses of a helpful character were given by the chairman (Rev. I Payne), the Revs. C. J. Street, E. E. Jenkins, A. H. Dolphin, and Mr. Lacock. The speaking was interspersed with hymns and recitations by the children.

PUBLIC life is full of snares and dangers, and I think it a fearful thing for a Christian to look forward to closing his life in the midst of its (to me at least) essentially fevered activity. It has, however, some excellent characteristics in regard to mental, and even spiritual discipline, and among these in particular it absolutely requires the habits of resisting temper and of suppressing pain. I never allow myself, in regard to my public life, to realize, i.e., to dwell upon, the fact that a thing is painful. Indeed life has no time for such broodings.—Gladstone, in 1855.

IN the year 1833, the Congregational Churches adopted a Declaration of Faith and Order which for a long time occupied a prominent position in the Denominational Year Book. Some time ago this declaration was relegated to a well-merited obscurity in an appendix. There it has remained for its archæological interest. Congregationalists have not in any way felt themselves bound by it. But now there seems to be danger of its being erected into what can be little less than a credal standard. One of the reconstitution proposals is to the effect that the county unions shall consist of churches and pastors constituted in general conformity with the "Declaration." The danger that lurks in this proposal of making Congregationalism a creed-bound church is exposed by the Rev. Geo. Stallworthy in the Examiner. It is a serious one, and seems specially untimely. The not very dignified condition of thinkers who belong to a Church pledged to a creed which they do not entirely believe is hardly one that should be forced on people who are free, except for the serious difficulty of antiquated doctrinal trust-deeds, under which many of their chapels are held. They are entirely unpledged to any unchanging dogma, left free to find fresh interpretations and accept new truth. At a time when ministers and members are moving rapidly towards modes of thought somewhat discrepant from that of the Declaration, it would be unfortunate if a gratuitous obstacle to intellectual honesty should be accidentally set up.

The Chinese Labour Question.

A Speech delivered by the Right Hon. Lord COLERIDGE, K.C.,
in the House of Lords on March 18, 1904.

Three-halfpence, post free.

NATIONAL REFORM UNION,
50, Haworth's-buildings, Cross-st., Manchester.

FREDK. LONG & SON,
AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS,
Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.
Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

SUNDAY, April 17.

Acton, Central Auction Room, Market-place, High-street, 7, Mr. T. J. HARDY.
Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Rev. EUSTACE THOMPSON.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. W. STANLEY.
Child's Hill, All Souls' Free Church, corner of Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. JUPP.
Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, Sunday School Anniversary; 11, Rev. W. J. JUPP, 3.15, Rev. GORDON COOPER, B.A., 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON. Collections for School Funds.
Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. PERRIS.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. GREAVES.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7 P.M., Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11.15 and 7, Rev. G. CRITCHLEY, B.A.
Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. J. E. STRONGE.
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. JOHN ELLIS.
Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Mr. GEORGE WARD.
Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.
Stepney Green, College Chapel, 11 and 7, Mr. C. A. GINEVER.
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15, Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE, and 7, Mr. HUGH STANNUS.
Stratford, Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. C. PAIN, and 6.30, Mr. HAHNEMANN EPPS.
Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, Eastthill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. J. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MCDOWELL.
BLACKPOOL, Dickson-road, North Shore, 10.45 and 6.30, PULPIT VACANT.
BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Church, The Hall, Lytham-road, 11 and 6.30.
BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11and 7, Rev. C. C. COE.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church, New-road, North-street, 11 and 7, Mr. LAWSON DODD.
BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 7, Rev. GEORGE STREET.
CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11, Rev. H. M. LIVENS.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
GUILDFORD, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. RATTENBURY HODGES.
HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. J. MARTEN.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. L. P. JACKS, M.A.
LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. D. ROBERTS.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11, Rev. J. COLLINS ODGERS, B.A., and 6.30, Rev. T. LLOYD JONES, "Indifference to Religious Belief."
MAIDSTONE, Earl-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. SIDAWAY BRETTELL, M.A.
MANCHESTER, PLATT CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A. Sunday School Sermon. Special Service for Children at 3.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. E. PIKE.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND, B.A.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Mr. C. F. DEAR.
PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Mr. THOMAS BOND.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 7, Rev. OTTWELL BINNS.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 and 6.45, Rev. F. TEASDALE REED.
SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. AGAR.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FREDERICK B. MOTT.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TROWBRIDGE, Conigre Church, 11 and 6, Rev. J. WAIN.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 and 6.30.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 7, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

WALES.

ABERYSTWITH, New Market Hall, 11.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY SOUTH PLACE, FINSBURY.—April 17, at 11.15, JOHN A. HOBSON, M.A., "Honesty in Public Finance."

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN SQ., W.—April 17, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The Foolishness of Preaching."

THE PRESBYTERIAN FUND.

The Managers desire to give notice of the following Scholarships which are open to Theological Students of all denominations :—

Two Graduate Scholarships of £40 for three years, with free instruction for the B.D. Degree of the University of Wales, tenable at the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen.

Applications must be in the hands of the Secretary before July 23rd, 1904.

For particulars and forms of application apply to G. HAROLD CLENNELL, Esq., Secretary to Presbyterian Fund, 6, Great James-street, Bedford Row, London, W.C.

PLATT CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

On SUNDAY, APRIL 24th, the REV. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A., will preach the Annual Sermons on behalf of the Sunday School, at 11 a.m. and 6.30 p.m. Special Service for the Children at 3.

FRUITARIAN CAKES.

MADE ENTIRELY OF FRUIT AND NUTS,
Uncooked, Concentrated, Natural Food.
READY FOR USE WITHOUT PREPARATION.
For travelling they are ideal. A meal will go in the pocket.

PEAR and WALNUT	7d.	per 8 oz. packet.
APRICOT and NUT	7d.	" "
MUSCATEL and ALMOND	6d.	" "
FRUIT and NUTS	5d.	" "
DATE and GINGER	4d.	" "
DATE and LEMON	4d.	" "
DATE and ORANGE	4d.	" "
FIG and CITRON	4d.	" "
DATE and NUT	3d.	" "
FIG and NUT	3d.	" "

Sample Box containing 14 varieties Fruitarian Cakes, 8d.; or with 3 varieties of Nut Butters, post free, 1s.

HUGH MAPLETON, Nut Food Manufacturer,
ARDWICK GREEN MANCHESTER.

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A. Honours Lond. Preparation for London Matriculation, Trinity College, and Associated Board of Musicians. Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. Apply to the Head Mistress.

YORKSHIRE.—WESTBOURNE, (SHEFFIELD).
BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
Head Mistress: MISS F. GOODEY, B.A. LOND.
Preparation for Matric., Associated Board of R.A.M. and R.C.M. and Camb. Locals.
School "Recognised by Board of Education."
Splendid situation 600 ft. above sea level.
Hockey, tennis, swimming, Swedish Gymnasium attached to House.
Apply to PRINCIPAL, for prospectus.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, 14 & 15, SOUTH MARINE TERRACE, ABERYSTWYTH.

PRINCIPAL ... MISS MARLES-THOMAS.

This School is splendidly situated in one of the healthiest parts of Wales, overlooking Cardigan Bay, and close to excellent golf links. Pupils have passed the London and Welsh Matriculation; Cambridge Higher Local; Senior and Junior Cambridge Locals, besides the usual Theoretical and Practical Music Examinations. Scholarships have also been obtained at the Welsh University Colleges.

Gymnasium, Swimming, and excellent Hockey Club.

WAVERLEY SCHOOL, 24, HAMILTON ROAD, SHERWOOD RISE, NOTTINGHAM.

PREPARATORY TO THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.
HEAD MASTER, Mr. H. T. FACON, B.A.(Lond.).
Next Term begins on Monday, May 2nd.
Prospectus on application. BOARDERS received. Reference kindly permitted to the Rev. Frank K. Freeston, Essex House, Campden-hill, W.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION AND STAMFORD STREET CHAPEL.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at Stamford Street Chapel on Monday, 18th April.

Tea, to which Subscribers and Friends are cordially invited, will be provided at 7 p.m.

The Chair will be taken at 8 p.m. by W. ARTHUR SHARPE, Esq., supported by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, S. S. Tayler, Esq., C. F. Pearson, Esq., Dr. C. Herbert Smith, and other Ministers and Laymen.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY ADELAIDE PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.
Assets, £158,000.

DIRECTORS.
Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., J.P. 17, Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A. 7, Pall Mall, S.W
Miss CECIL GRADWELL, 7, Victoria-street, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st. S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham, S.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4 per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3 and 3½ per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

BORROWER'S INTEREST 4 per cent. Monthly Repayment, including Principal, Premium, and Interest for each £100.

10 years.	12 years.	15 years.	18 years.	21 years.
1 1 1	0 18 4	0 15 6	0 14 2	0 12 11

Compare the above rates with those of other Societies. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

DEATHS.

ELLIS.—On April 6th, 1904, Margaret Mace Ellis, of Hillside, Maidstone, aged 43.
SHELLEY.—On April 10th, 1904, at 10, Craven-street, Newbury, Emily, widow of the late Rev. Richard Shelley (formerly of Newbury, Cranbrook, and Great Yarmouth), aged 80 years.

NOW READY. APRIL NUMBER, 2s. 6d. net.

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL

A Quarterly Review of Religion, Theology, and Philosophy.

Subscription, 10s. per Annum, post free.

THE CHIEF CONTENTS OF THE APRIL NUMBER ARE:

The Moral Aspect of the Fiscal Question. By HENRY JONES, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Moral Philosophy, Glasgow.

Suggestions towards the Re-Interpretation of Christian Doctrine. By Sir OLIVER LODGE, D.Sc., F.R.S.

The Resurrection of Jesus Christ. By the Rev. Canon HENSLEY HENSON, B.D.

Gladstone as a Moral and Religious Personality. By the Right Rev. LORD BISHOP OF RIPON.

Mr. Myers's Theory of "The Subliminal Self." By ANDREW LANG, M.A., LL.D.

The Axiom of Infinity: A New Presupposition of Thought. By Prof. CASSIUS J. KEYSER, M.A., Ph.D.

The Passing of Conviction. By Prof. W. JETHRO BROWN, LL.D., Litt.D.

North Arabia and the Bible: A Defence. By Dr. HUGO WINCKLER.

Discussions, Reviews, and Bibliography of Current Literature.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, London, W.C.

For those who love Priestley.

ILLUSTRATED CENTENARY EDITION OF THE

Memoirs of Dr. Priestley,

Comprising his AUTOBIOGRAPHY, With continuation by his Son.

Sixteen Full Page Illustrations.

(Portraits, Statues, &c.), on Best Art Paper.

"One of the most frank and self-revealing autobiographies in the whole range of English Literature. It is presented to the purchasers of this timely volume in a permanently beautiful setting."—CHRISTIAN LIFE.

"By all true lovers of Priestley this little volume, in its new dress, will be hailed with delight."—SEED SOWER.

NOW READY. Limited Issue only, 3/- net.

London: H. R. ALLENSON, Ivy Lane, Paternoster Row.

OLD SUBJECTS: NEW TREATMENT.

BY DR. C. INGLIS ("Rejected").

REPENTANCE ENJOINED BY THE BIBLE. Price 6d.; post free 7d.

THE AUTHORITY OF THE BIBLE. Price 6d.; post free 7d.

Two striking pamphlets, original and unconventional.

The two together for 1s. post free from A. BONNER, 1 & 2, Took's Court, London, E.C. (Off Chancery Lane and Holborn.)

DEVOTIONAL BOOKLETS.

By the REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

DAILY MEDITATIONS

(Fourth Edition Revised.)

NIGHT UNTO NIGHT.

Cloth, red edges, 6d.; roan gilt, 1s.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C.

The Provincial Assembly Messenger of London and the South-Eastern Counties,

24 pages, price ONE PENNY, is Published in the middle of each month. This Magazine contains News of the Churches in the Provinces, Original Articles on Topics of Interest, also Portraits and other Illustrations.

The April number is NOW READY, and can be obtained at the Churches, at Essex Hall, and of Mr. F. EDWIN ALLEN, 5, Holland Grove, S.W.

TESTAMENT OF JESUS.

The Only Genuine Gospel. 1s.

MONOTHEISM v. PRIESTCRAFT.

The Riddle of the Universe solved. 1s.

POST FREE.

C. W. HILLYEAR, 223, St. Albans Road, Watford.

Situations, VACANT AND WANTED.

RESPECTABLE MIDDLE-AGED WOMAN requires post as CARE-TAKER, or any position of trust where only light duties are required. Manchester district preferred.—Apply for reference to Mrs. A. H. WORTHINGTON, 6, Wilmslow-road, Didsbury, Manchester.

MOTTRAM CHRISTIAN CHURCH AND SUNDAY SCHOOL.

SALE OF WORK.

HYDE ROAD SCHOOL,

Friday and Saturday, April 22nd & 23rd.

To raise Funds for Structural Repairs and Improvements and Missionary Purposes.

Plain and Fancy Goods displayed on Stalls for sale. Refreshments, Entertainments, and other attractions.

TO BE OPENED FRIDAY AT 3 BY MR. COUNCILLOR JAMES DODDS, of Warrington.

ON SATURDAY AT 3 BY DR. AUBURN, of Mottram.

Tickets of Admission: Friday, 3 to 6, 1s. each; Friday Evening and Saturday, 6d.; Season Tickets, 1s. 3d.

Support and attendance of friends in the District invited.

LONDON UNITARIAN CHORAL SOCIETY.

A MEETING will be held at Essex Hall, on Monday, April 25, to enrol Members and to consider the Rules drawn up by the Committee as to the construction and work of the Society. Tea, &c., at 7; Business Meeting at 8.30. All who are interested in the formation of the Society are requested to attend.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—Rev. D. DAVIS, 24, Warbreck Drive, Blackpool.

Board and Residence.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH. — ARNEWOOD. Pension. Commanding position in the West Cliff-road; full South aspect; sea views and private grounds; close to Winter Gardens, Cliff Promenade, Square or Pier; moderate Tariff.—Apply, MANAGERESS.

CHELTENHAM.—Board and Residence in the best part of Sunny Cheltenham, sheltered from North and Easterly winds. Near the Spas and Gardens. Comfortable home. Moderate terms. Excellent cuisine.—A. G., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, W.C.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—"Cranbrook," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE; most comfortable throughout. Sea View, excellent cuisine. billiard and smoke room, sanitary certificate. —Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

LANGLEY HOUSE, DAWLISH, DEVON.—A delightful HOLIDAY RESORT for Ladies and School-girls (Boys under 15) Beautiful country, bracing climate. Sea and Moorland. Prospectus from MISS N. JONES, Matron; or A. E. JONES, Esq., Proprietor.

FELIXSTOWE.—Comfortable HOME for Permanent BOARDERS, Adults or Scholars; also APARTMENTS on reasonable terms.—Apply, Mrs. ROBINSON, Kimberley, Rinelagh road, Felixstowe.

SIDMOUTH.—A few paying Guests received (permanent or otherwise) in private family.—W., INQUIRER Office, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

EASTBOURNE.—Comfortable private BOARDING HOUSE, close to sea and Devonshire Park. Terms moderate.—Mrs. FRANK HARRIS, Falconhurst, Jevington-gardens.

TO LET.—St. Catherine's Terrace, Guildford, Furnished House. Four reception, four bed-rooms, and dressing-room. Small garden and paddock. Five minutes' from town and railway station. — Apply, SUMMERSBURY, Shalford, Guildford.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Enlarged, Remodelled, Refurnished.

PRONOUNCED BY THE PRESS TO BE THE BEST TEMPERANCE HOTEL IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Accommodation for about 250 Guests.

Highly commended by the Rev. Dr. Aked, Rev. Rowland Hill, Rev J. H Jowett, M.A., Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. Alderman White, M.P., the Misses Cadbury and thousands of other guests.

Spacious Coffee, Reading & Drawing Rooms. Electric Light throughout.

Apartments, Service and Table d'Hote Breakfast from 5/- to 6/6 per day (with Dinner from 8/- to 9/6

77 & 101,

Southampton Row, London.

FREDERIC SMITH & SONS.

Opposite the British Museum.

THACKERAY HOTEL,

GREAT RUSSELL STREET,

LONDON.

This large and well-appointed Temperance Hotel has Passenger Lift; Bathrooms on every Floor; Electric Light throughout; Spacious Dining, Drawing, Writing, Reading, and Smoking Rooms; Fireproof Floors; Perfect Sanitation; Telephone; Night Porter.

Bedrooms from 2s. 6d. to 5s. 6d.

Inclusive charge for Bedroom, Attendance, Table d'Hôte Breakfast and Dinner, from 8s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. per day. Full Tariff and Testimonials on application.

Telegraphic Address: "THACKERAY, LONDON."

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Sole Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 20 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, April 16, 1904.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3226. NEW SERIES, No. 330.] LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 23, 1904. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 257
ARTICLES—
The Ingle Nook 260
Miss Cobbe's Philosophical Work ... 265
Easter in Italy 266
LEADER—
A Martineau Centenary Memorial ... 264
LITERATURE—
The Mediæval Stage in England ... 259
Science and Religion 260
CORRESPONDENCE—
Church Discipline among the Brahmos 261
Evil versus Divine Goodness 262
Sustentation Fund 262
Politics, &c. 262
"The Chinese Ordinance" 262
Children's Flower Fund 262
OBITUARY—Miss Margaret Mace Ellis ... 263
POETRY—The Aspidistra Replies 267
MEETINGS—
Auckland, New Zealand 267
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel 267
Hurst Street Domestic Mission, Birmingham 268
PROVINCIAL LETTER—Manchester ... 269
CHILDREN'S COLUMN 263
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 270
OUR CALENDAR 271
ADVERTISEMENTS 272

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

ON this, St. George's Day, Shakespeare's birthday will be observed at Stratford with the customary celebrations, and at Weimar a statue of the poet is to be unveiled, marking the fortieth anniversary of the German Shakespeare Society, when Professor Alois Brandl will deliver the commemorative address. For us this week is associated also with another memory, for Thursday was the birthday of James Martineau, and next year (when April 21 will be Good Friday) it will be his centenary. To a proposed centenary memorial at Norwich, where he was born, we have referred in our leading article; here we will once more recall the lines on "Two Birthdays, April 21 and April 23," sent as a birth-day greeting to Dr. Martineau, in 1896, by Mr. Thomas Hornblower Gill:—

A single day the birthdays doth divide
Of mighty intellects not unallied:
Of him, the height of whose transcendent powers
Above all genius in all ages towers;
Of him the matchless master-mind of ours.

"WHAT we seem to need above all things in England at the present time," writes the Bishop of Hereford to the League of Young Liberals, "is to be delivered from the spirit of commercial Jingoism, and to be emancipated in political affairs from excessive subserviency to party ties, and from the threatening interests of special trades. This means that our young men must be inspired with the resolve to seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and that is what I wish for all the members of your League. So I hope that you may be instrumental in reviving amongst us the spirit of peace and of goodwill to foreign nations and races, and our old-fashioned English devotion to justice, freedom, and humanity. If so, we may recover our high position in the eyes of the civilised world as the friends of every oppressed and struggling community, and may still be the leaders of progress along the ways of free and friendly intercourse all the world over. The eager race for wealth and power, with its attendant dominance of selfish interests, combinations, and trades, has, I fear, exercised a distinctly demoralising influence on English life and politics of late years; and you will do a great service if you help to make us all feel more keenly that manhood is far more precious than money, and if you can stir all our young men to aims, ideals, and enthusiasms higher than the making of money and the enjoyment of sport. It will, I hope, be your constant endeavour to stir and strengthen in English life the enthusiasm of humanity, and in this endeavour I wish you all success."

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN'S Budget has avoided some sins it was expected to fall into, but has fulfilled expectations with regard to some others. It has avoided the spendthrift expedient of suspending the Sinking Fund in time of peace; but it diverted other moneys to make good last year's deficit, which should plainly have gone towards the further liquidation of debt. The sugar duty has not been increased, but the tea duty has. Tobacco has quite properly been made to bear a slight increase, but beer and spirits have been exempted. The Income Tax has been increased, but only by a penny. Given the necessity for increased taxation and compared with some former budgets of the present Government, this balance of virtue and vice is probably as good as could be looked for, but it is an appalling production, nevertheless. Mr. Chamberlain, individually, is, of course, largely the victim of circumstances. He has not been long in his present office, and the policy of the present Government was shaped before he went there. Still, there have been Chancellors similarly placed who have, nevertheless, stood out for a change of policy, and both those who have succeeded and those who have failed and resigned, have won a prestige which, for Mr. Chamberlain, remains still to be won.

THE main ground of criticism of this Budget is the vast expenditure which has made necessary the fresh taxation. Financiers of all schools have taken alarm at its growth, and have warned the country of the grave dangers it involves. That expenditure is quite beyond anything accounted for by the cost of the South African War. Indeed, the war votes have become a mere incident in the history of our spendthrift finance. The small economies that have been put forward are mainly imaginary rather than real, and will in all probability disappear even in name before the financial year is out. It is, of course, in armaments that the increases of the past ten years have mainly been made. The excuses for big Army and Navy Estimates have largely disappeared. Russia's navy is being destroyed piecemeal by Japan; France's supposed hostile ambitions are a thing of the past. Yet though the excuses disappear the expenditure continues. Such mad finance cannot go on for ever. It must come to an end by its own folly. We hope and believe that the present is the last of a long series of spendthrift Budgets.

THE decision of the Government not to pursue the Somaliland campaign any further, if entirely welcome, is a little perplexing. Mr. Arnold-Forster explained to the House of Commons on Monday that, since he "believed the Mullah had escaped into Italian territory," since he "had sustained very severe losses in men and animals," and since the force under his command "had been routed and driven out of the Protectorate, and he was now practically without following," it had been decided to "discontinue the military operations, and to reduce the field force." The conclusion is excellent: it is the premises that are perplexing. The Mullah has retired to Italian territory before. He has, indeed, inflicted two serious defeats upon our forces while in such retirement. We have announced the routing of his force and his lack of following also on previous occasions. There is, in fact, so far as one can gather, nothing at all that is new in the present situation in Somaliland to account for the change of policy.

WE fear that that decision is due as much to lack of funds and the need for some retrenchment somewhere as to any real conviction that the task set themselves by those responsible for the expedition is accomplished. But whatever the motives, the decision itself, as we have said, so far as it goes, is welcome. So long ago as 1901 Lord Lansdowne wrote:—

> The policy of his Majesty's Government not to retain troops in the interior of Somaliland, and still less to establish British administration there, should be borne in mind. Neither course would appear to be worth the cost.

The expeditions undertaken since that pronouncement have been wholly inconsistent with the proper carrying out of such a policy. Much has been said respecting our treaty obligations to some of the tribesmen. But these, as the Manchester Guardian has pointed out more than once, only inhabit the coast line, and have no interest whatever in these operations in the far interior. The proper way to protect them is to establish a boundary around them, and to hold it against any invasion.

These "punitive expeditions" against potentates occupying territory we have no intention of administering in their stead, are inexcusable. The stories of barbarities and misgovernment with which they are prefaced, are almost always exaggerated for the purposes of the moment. This Mullah, whom we have long ceased to surname "Mad," appears to have compared very favourably with many of his class, and his supposed unpopularity is scarcely borne out by the persistent adhesion to his cause of the people he is supposed to have treated so cruelly. But, good or bad, he maintained a government of some sort, and we have no kind of right to destroy it when we intend to erect nothing in its place. We have carried ruin and desolation through whole provinces, and the net result of our action will be to leave the surviving inhabitants worse off than they were before.

The City Temple has been added to the list of Institutional Churches in the great shopping area of Central London. When the late Canon Shuttleworth went to St. Nicholas Cole Abbey he felt that the church ought to be of service to more than the six old women who then composed the congregation. His pluck and personality sufficed to bring larger gatherings to his rather unconventional services, and the incumbent himself welcomed those who came and found them seats. But his name is chiefly associated with the famous Shuttleworth Club, which quickly numbered several hundred members. The institute with all its privileges was open equally to men and women. Marriages were not infrequently the result of this free social comradeship, and this was entirely in accord with the founder's plan, though it is sometimes made a complaint against similar church agencies, as though young people would cease to marry if facilities were not provided. The restrictions at this club were indeed few, but provided what was most of all needed, an opportunity for mutual courtesy. The Canon did not believe in tight waistcoats, and has confessed to Mr. Charles Booth that the club was rather for Esau than for Jacob, because he liked Esau the better of the two.

More recently provision for social intercourse among the young people from the great business houses has been provided at the King's Weigh House, where there is a palatial set of rooms for their accommodation. And now within these last few days the opening of a somewhat similar institution at the City Temple has been celebrated by a lunch at which the Lord Mayor was officially present. The recognition that has been already extended by the City to this centre of Nonconformity is not a little curious. But then, as Sir James Ritchie is reported to have remarked, the City knows no religion, a way of expressing it that excited a smile. There must be ample scope for the new undertaking, and it is of some value in another way as a further indication that even in this slight form society is not entirely unconscious of its responsibility to those who minister indifferently to its needs and its fashions. The founders of such institutions would be the last to imagine that they serve in any considerable degree to liquidate the debt.

The publishers of the Christian World issue year by year a long and interesting May Meeting list. The dates of these fixtures remind us how largely the number of religious and philanthropic societies is increasing. May, for this purpose, begins as early as March 16, although it is not till April 12 that the engagements become numerous; but from the middle of April until late July we find a crowd of entries, closing on the 21st of the latter month with the quarterly court of the Marine Society. Even this long record is not exhaustive, and the societies which do not hold meetings at this time are very numerous. But those entered here cover many interests and several continents of labour. Meetings, prayer meetings, conferences, demonstrations, to say nothing of breakfasts, dinners, receptions, and conversaziones—truly here is a strange mirror of the wants of the world and of the well-meant efforts of charitable persons, a mirror of faiths, enthusiasms, success or failures. It provokes many thoughts about the world that suffers either physical or spiritual destitutions, and of the other world that seeks to remedy the mischiefs of civilisation. It reminds us of the reflection of an old writer, who more than a century ago was impressed with the large variety of charities just as we are to-day:—

> Reflecting on the foregoing list of various laudable institutions which it cannot be expected should be altogether perfect, but which may be said to be unparalleled in point of extent, as well as munificence, and conferring the highest honour on the national character for charity and humanity, the mind is lost in astonishment, that greater and more extensive benefits have not arisen.

There is a difference, however. The old writer only wondered, but now many are seriously turning to consider why it is that success is not more nearly in proportion to our hopes.

A little book, published by the Congregational Union, is a curious extension of denominational work. Practical Hints for the erection of Gothic Congregational Churches is a title that brings home to us the change which has been passing over Nonconformity. We are far removed from the days of tabernacles and great meeting houses, not further, perhaps, from the bald and sometimes ugly style of building than from the old modes of thought which found apt expression in square gaunt walls of brick. Whatever may be said of the plain chapel of the past, it was well suited for purposes of speech, and now the word of the one man plays ever a less important part, music ever is more abundant and ornate. For the mood of to-day the Gothic church may be better suited. This method of rennaisance of architecture by pamphlet is, however, a bold one, and it would seem possible that it may in some cases be attended with grotesque effects. It is none the less interesting to notice this extension of the conception of Church work, so that it includes a corporate sense of responsibility for the artistic training of the several members of the society.

Under the title of "The Education Question in 1903" the National Education Association has issued a verbatim report of the speeches delivered by Sir Edward Grey, M.P., Right Hon. Arthur Acland, Lord Stanley of Alderley, Sir George Kekewich, and others at the recent annual meeting of the Association. The annual report of the Executive Committee is added, and contains an interesting list of matters to be considered by Parliament when amending the Education Act. These suggestions raise more than forty important issues of educational and political interest.

Champions of the Aspidistra have arisen, both in prose and verse, to reply to the lines on "The Manchester Household Plant," which we published last week. One sonnet we have forwarded to the author of those lines; another reply in verse is published this week. "Manchester and London" are united in the following note:—

> The friend who wrote the lines to the Aspidistra in this week's Inquirer, has evidently not studied the plant. It has a most curious and interesting flower, its new leaves are beautiful also. If the "heavy leaves o'erhang the soddened soil" our friend's plant wants repotting.

Herbert Spencer's "Autobiography" was published yesterday by Messrs. Williams & Norgate, in two portly volumes (28s. net). The full record ends with Mr. Spencer's visit to America in 1882, with a brief conclusion telling of the following years down to 1889, when he was sixty-nine years of age. A subsequent chapter of "Reflections" was written four years later. There are two good portraits, that in the first volume, at the age of thirty-eight, that in the second showing the old man of seventy-eight.

A reprint from the Inquirer, in pamphlet form, of the memorial address on Miss Frances Power Cobbe, by the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, will be ready shortly. Particulars will be announced next week.

LITERATURE.

THE MEDIÆVAL STAGE IN ENGLAND.*

The restless mind of man desires more and more to go back into the beginning of things, and the methods of comparative study in history and sociology enable him daily to open up vistas formerly unsuspected. The supreme interest of the relations between religious worship and the drama has engaged the attention of many writers from many points of view, but a "short account of the origins of play-acting in England, and of its development during the Middle Ages" was wanting; more especially was necessary "a study of the social and economic facts upon which the mediæval drama rested." Mr. Chambers had intended to discourse upon the actual conditions under which Shakespeare wrote; let others, however, write upon Shakespeare, he, happily, took up instead the more difficult task of pursuing the story of the English drama through the remote facts and details, and the varied but uncertain side-issues which we find correlated in these volumes. His purpose, to "state and explain the pre-existing conditions which by the latter half of the sixteenth century made the great Shakespearean stage possible," is most liberally carried out by means of a wealth of reading and scholarship which must have cost much time and labour, albeit its own reward; assertions and statements are supported by copious quotations, facts can be verified by references and bibliographies so numerous and full as to rejoice every student's heart, whatever the ordinary reader may feel.

The field traversed by the author is a wide one. At the one end he seeks and finds in the science of folk-lore the persistent relics of ancient pre-Christian religions, dramatic in their action, existing side by side with or adopted among the customs and practices of the early Christians. The idea of this permanence of the ancient amidst the new has long been recognised; but its application to the beginnings of our drama is fresh, and owes much to the materials gathered by the labours of the modern folk-lorist. The first volume is devoted to full consideration of these subjects under the heads of Minstrelsy and Folk-Drama. The close of his journey finds the writer indicating the causes and something of the process of the transition from the religious play to the "regular" drama, a conclusion which is in itself noteworthy, though to be expected in the course of historic evolution. It is not so many years ago that the notion, diffidently put forward, that what is called the regular drama could have arisen out of the religious drama in England was scouted, they were said to be quite unconnected.

Basing his researches on the fact of "the mimetic instinct which no race of mankind is wholly without," that love of imitative action which seems inherent in human nature, Mr. Chambers traces the wide-spread survival through the empire of the spectacula and the mimes of the Roman theatre, in their degradation and decay, to the fifth and sixth centuries; and points out that though the opposition of the Church was great, it was the taste of the barbarians, the conquering Goths and Lombards, as much as Christian ethics, which triumphed in putting down that stage. But the traditions of the players of farces, dancers and jesters lived on among the people, wandering entertainers with various skill under differing names in many countries. To this current from the Latin races another flowed in from the Northern love of epic and song. The earliest Teutonic folk-song gave utterance to the emotions of religion feasting, and lore, or to the activities of labour among the rural peoples. In a most skilful sketch of the rise of the ancient scòp and gleemen among the Teutons and the English, the author emphasises the nobler spirit of the Northern minstrels; then shows how, about the tenth century merging with the Latin entertainers, they degenerated and fell under the general ban of the Church. And so the tale goes on, through the minstrel life of the eleventh to the thirteenth centuries, through the minstrel repertory including the semi-dialogue French chantons and the débats, in English the strifs or estrifs, of which last the well-known "Harrowing of Hell" is an example; through chapters which carry us back to the old folk-religion, the village ludi, to festivals and customs connected with the hallowing of the seasons and with the observations of times and the regularly recurring acts of agricultural peoples, such as the ludus de Rege et Regina, the May game, the Mummer's play, and that of St. George, the Morris and sword-dances. Of the sword-dance he says, "Its essentially agricultural character seems to be shown by the grotesques traditionally associated with it, the man in woman's clothes, the skin or tail-wearing clown and the hobby-horse, all of which seem to find their natural explanation in the facts of agricultural worship."

The folk-drama is thus studied as centring round the renewal of spring, and the time from ploughing to harvest; and again round the corresponding winter festivals and Christmas, the last giving rise to much curious inquiry as to when was winter supposed to begin and when did the year commence among different races, and into the economic causes for shifting the winter festival. The famous mediæval Feast of Fools, found chiefly in France, and the equally famous Feast of Boys, or Boy Bishop—both of ecclesiastic origin and use for celebrating the new year; the courtly Mask and Misrule, customary at Christmas; all these are carefully treated in chapters full of suggestive explanation, and are shown to have mingled their influence with that of the peasant drama.

To many readers the more fascinating will be the second volume, which deals with the Biblical religious drama and its secularisation, with moralities, interludes, and pageants. Out of the very Church which put down the heathen stage and protested against its remains among the folk, the drama was born anew, in the midst of early symbolism and forms of ritual, not only in those attending the ceremony of the Lord's Supper or the Mass, but in other liturgical rites, aided by the growth of antiphonal singing. Indeed the development of the liturgical drama closely followed the increase of pomp and ceremony in the Church services. In the Easter Quem quæritis in sepulchro, Christicolæ?—the first of a few lines sung, representing the three Marys and the angel at the tomb—is found the beginning of the liturgical drama, as early as the ninth century. With rich scholarship the author follows the origins and clustering of such action round all the chief events of the Christian year; showing the expansion of dialogue into action in the groups of the Resurrection plays at Easter; in the various plays gradually becoming attached to the Christmas festival, especially that of the Prophetæ, founded on a lesson from a pseudo-Augustinian sermon of about the sixth century, which made each prophet and sybil bear witness to Christ; performances or plays on the Conversion of St. Paul, Advent, Ascension-day, Whitsuntide, and the Annunciation. The Prophetæ contained the seeds of other plays on separate Old Testament personages, the Drame d'Adam, Daniel of Beauvais, and of later date, Abraham and Isaac, being examples. With the thirteenth century a change set in, a transition was at work in which the representatio, ceasing to occupy a place in the liturgy, gradually became popular.

Out of the hands of the clergy in their naves and choirs, it had passed to those of the laity in their market places and guild-halls. And to this formal change corresponded a spiritual or literary one, in the re-action of the temper of the folk upon the handling of the plays, the broadening of their human as distinct from their religious aspect. In their origin officia for devotion and edification, they came . . . . to be primarily spectacula for mirth, wonder, and delight.

Taking all the circumstances of change in form through the transition period, the steps in the literary evolution of the texts and the enlargement of the religious topics are traced (insistence on the mirthful rebound in mediæval life is forborne), till we reach the full development of the well-known cycles of plays at the beginning of the fourteenth century, embracing the biblical story from the Creation to the Judgment, apocryphal as well as historical. As the writer well says in concluding this portion of his subject, "beyond the limits of the fixed cadre it was now impossible to go, for these were coincident with the span of time and eternity." On the whole, though there was occasional opposition, the attitude of the Church to the drama during this later period seems to have been one of allowance if not of encouragement; it was the heretical and puritanical element among the Reformers which dubbed it irreverent and evil.

Mr. Chambers has in the course of his researches glanced at most European countries, but he gives more particular attention to the drama in France and England. Relating to England, two most interesting chapters treat of the "miracle" or "mystery" plays as performed by guilds and in parishes, and of the details of the performances; the evidence that they were widely spread over the country is abundantly shown in one of the appendices. Fresh notices of plays are found in old local accounts from time to time. Thame in Oxfordshire may now be added to Mr. Chambers' list of places. Among the Moralities, he points out, for the first time I believe, that the Paternoster plays of York, Beverley, and Lincoln, which consisted of several pageants showing up vices and virtues, were probably the earliest English Moralities (the texts are, unfortunately, all lost.) The Pride of Life and Everyman followed these. Interludes and their players, plays at schools and universities, carry on the story under new conditions; finally, the striking chapter on "Humanism and Mediævalism" shows the results of converging influences on the Tudor drama down to the beginning of Elizabeth's reign.

* The Mediæval Stage. By E. K. Chambers. (Oxford: Clarendon Press. 1903. 2 vols. 25s.)

A word must be said of the valuable appendices, in which are printed illustrative documents and a mass of information not before assembled together. Of the work as a whole the attentive reader will find it pervaded with a wide historical view, and inspired by a philosophic thought and inquiry which never lose sight of their purpose, expressed in a cheerful and happily lucid style.

L. Toulmin Smith.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.*

"Science and Religion" is the title of the latest Handbook for the Clergy in the series edited by Dr. A. W. Robinson. It is a very large subject, and a very small book. But it has an interest as proceeding from the pen of a member of the Society of St. John the Evangelist, a society better known to us perhaps under the appellation "Cowley Fathers."

Whatever one might expect in a book on science and religion coming from this source, one finds a most logical and dispassionate discussion of the bearing of various scientific doctrines on theology, with the laudable object not so much of settling difficulties as of provoking further study and discussion. The author says in his preface, "I hope that the judicious reader of this book will say that it raises more questions than it settles." The judicious reader will probably say that it raises a great many questions and settles none. The point of interest, however, lies in the method indicated for the settlement of the vexed questions that science sets theology. One is prepared for the advice, "Give up the strife and come to the peaceful shelter of Revelation." But such advice is quite alien to the spirit of Father Waggett. His demand is for further research, further discussion, further enlightenment. It is to stimulate this research and discussion among the "teachers of the nation and members of the clergy" that he writes. And in this he necessarily has our complete sympathy and best wishes for success.

As regards the matter of the book, its author has apparently drunk deeply of scientific lore, and to some good purpose. One feels a large amount of respect for any man who reads Darwin, Semper, Weismann, Romanes, &c., and calls it passing "from one delightful volume to another." One feels, too, that it is inevitable that such a man will come pretty close at times to those bases on which a natural and rational form of faith can be erected. So Father Waggett has apparently much sympathy and appreciation for those who look not merely to "a conciliation, a display of agreement between two lines of truth considered as distinct, but to the finding of the one truth in the other, to find religion in science, and God in nature." His only criticism is that too often the results are unprofitable, "at least for most of us." "The besetting weakness of the attempt to found religion on science, lies in the fact that unless faith be already secure, that which is founded on science turns out not to be religion." This indicates a slight confusion of thought—a confusion one finds in other connections here and there in the book. To "find religion in science, God in nature," is not quite the same as "founding religion on science." The former implies other sources of religion beyond science and nature, but insists that there is unity in the truths that flow from all. The latter may be interpreted as excluding other sources. So Father Waggett interprets it and criticises it, imagining he is criticising the former line of effort. We might agree with his criticism and yet hold that this line of effort is the right one, and agree with him largely, even when he says "the true origins of religious conviction lie in another region (i.e., not the scientific) of experience."

What we should like is Father Waggett's view of this "other region," those "other sources" of faith. For, of course, we are morally convinced that sooner or later a case for revelation in some fashion is to be made out. But this volume leaves the subject in mid-air. We are told, indeed, in the beginning, that "the materials for a party fight are fairly ready to our hands. What is still to seek is a firm starting ground, a just point of view, a clear conception of the kind of victory which we of the dogmatic side may fairly hope for or ought to desire." One looks, however, in vain for any description in the book of this firm starting-ground from which the dogmatic school may set out on its task. The problem of relating revealed religion to modern thought is not approached, and at the close we are left simply with the tantalising suggestion that it can be solved when the author has a mind to show us how.

Of old, grace was thought of as real mainly, or even only, as being apart from nature, and religion as venerable because it was something diverse from science. A new vision of the sacredness of nature has given men an impulse to state in some more inclusive way the value of grace and revelation. While we welcome the hopeful temper of this effort, we have to learn how to maintain in fresh circumstances of thought the transcendence and the unique character of God's spiritual revelation, the sovereign power and the sovereign claim of His grace and law as given to man in Christ.

J. Worsley Austin.

* Science and Religion. By the Rev. P. N. Waggett, M.A., of the Society of St. John the Evangelist, Cowley. (Longmans, Green and Co. 2s. 6d.)

To Correspondents.—Letters, &c., received from W. A., J. D., R. D. D., W. H. D., T. E., T. H. G., G. M., P. P., E. T., J. H. W.

THE INGLE NOOK.

The particular ingle nook in which I am writing is about the size of what the advertisements call a "reception room." It is a reception room. It receives me. It would receive a man many times my size, and several such. I have had people with modern grates ask me to come near the fire. It was kindly meant, but I never could comply. "A piece of me," in Hamlet's phrase, could—usually the piece I was least interested in at the moment. Perhaps the most obvious use of the modern fireplace is to teach anatomy. But the ingle nook takes in the whole of you, soul and superficies. The red bricks gleam between the shadows like encircling arms, ruddy and warm. The little green cupboard at your side twinkles with heat. In front is the great glowing heart of warmth. The cat slumbers on the other side, and the dog blinks at the rug. There you sit, warm in every region, provided you be warm-hearted.

It is when it blows as it does to-night, that you appreciate the ingle. Fair enough is it in quiet weather. On a frosty morning, when the new-lit logs are crackling, it is as full of charity as the sunshine among the saplings. On a Saturday in May, when the bricks have been reddened and the fire-dogs blackleaded, and a great pot of lilac set in the midst, it is truly an "ingle," for the old Gaelic aingeal, whence the word is derived, meant sunshine as well as fire. It is then the very soul of spring, and the gilliflowers and primroses in the window-seat know it. But on a windy night! People in the town don't know what wind is. They have only draught. What man does with the open-hearted impulses of his own nature he does with the winds. He checks the one by a congeries of conventions; the other by a congeries of bricks and mortar. A draught is a civilised wind. It rushes against one side of the street, and recoils against the other; is driven up a blind alley and rushes back in mad panic. It becomes sly, mean, contentious, controversial, ferocious. It has encountered all the jealousies, bickerings, plottings and counter-plottings, and abstracted the pith of each. But here in the country you have the unspoiled Wind, the true white-winged, white-haired son of Astræus and Aurora. Like the twelve mares of Boreas—so fleet they could cross the sea without wetting hoof—he comes bounding over the heath. With a mighty laugh he scours the ponds, driving the fleet of ducks ashore broadside on. Twigs and leaves are whirled aloft. The last of the winter is blown away. The spray of the fall is a lash for his mares. The grasses pipe and dance. Man, the civilised, thinks of his hat. In a moment it is twenty feet above his head. "Hurrah!" shouts the wind, "never mind your property for once; think of something else!" There is no contempt in it, only mirth; huge mirth at such a joke as a hat. How he laughs, this simple-hearted, clean-natured, romping schoolboy—God's schoolboy.

It is after a ten-mile tussle with the wind in such a mood that you appreciate the ingle nook. The roar is in the chimney. Outside, across the common, the trees of the forest clap their hands. I suppose they must have applauded in those Hebrew times, for the psalmist's simile exactly hits the sound. You can hear it quite well through the open window. The fact that the window must be open or the room would be full of smoke, would be, to many, to the disadvantage of the ingle. Some of us think that if we open anything we are bound to lose something. Doors and windows, purses and sympathies, it is all the same. All our compartments are air-tight. The advantage of the ingle nook is that it does not admit of this kind of thing. Besides, you have no need to try it. Let the wind enter freely, let the lamp dive and leap, you feel no chill here in the ingle—I mean the plural "you," for the whole family can draw around this glowing hearth. If there come thereby a smell of smoke, well, what can one smell of better than good wholesome smoke, wood smoke—oak three years seasoned?

Hats the wind laughs at, but never at an honest four-square home. With such it tries a throw, closes with it, grips it hard—I can feel the grip, though not even a window rattles—and finding it firm and steadfast, passes on with a jubilant shout through the orchard. Like charity—which also has its rough testing moods—it rejoices in the truth. "Hurrah!" it cries, "I've found a bit of honest work, of real craft. Three hundred years I have wrestled with it, and if I do for three hundred more I shall never prevail against it." So all testing rejoices when that which is tested is true.

Such a home is essentially a country product. You may have a "house" in town, but not a home. Home! we hardly understand the word. The very calibre of the places we lodge in to-day forbids their being homes. I know a farm hereabouts that has been in the occupation of one family for ten generations. During those 300 years there have been but seven successors. That may claim rank as a home." "They dreamt not of a perishable home" who built that. But nobody in town now dreams of anything else. "Run 'em up and knock 'em off" is the motto. To-morrow, with the development of the motor, we shall build on wheels, and go in for the nationalisation of the land.

But there is more in it than the mere question of masonry. The old idea of laying foundations in human blood, ghastly as it was, had this much truth in it—that the dwelling, to be a "home," must be saturated with humanity. The family ghost is essential. The very tables and chairs and nick-nacks and nullities must be steeped in memories and traditions. The fowling-piece along the beam must be a converted flint-lock, and the silhouettes hang where they hung a century ago. In town we buy our antiques—poor uncomfortable things, all the humanity of them lost in incalculable obscurity. Nothing but a dealer's receipt to link them to us. They grow their antiques here. It is a long process, yet there is no substitute. Your true antique cannot be purchased. It is transmuted substance, spiritualised material. Laughter and joy, and tears and memories, have made it what it is. You cannot buy these things. The genuine antique is symbolised love. The whole spirit of home is such.

In town, too, you have not the atmosphere necessary for a "home." The fluctuating character of your neighbour's tenancy is alone fatal to such. Everyone is going through the moods and tenses of the verb "to move." Moves, will move, has moved, is about to move, may move, might move, could move—perhaps should move. What hope is there in a world like that! It is "general post." Over the way the piano strums "Home, sweet home," while the furniture van is even at the door. Instead of your neighbour calling upon you, the tradesman calls to ask if you could oblige him with the address of the people who lived next door. It seems they removed under the sheltering wing of night. But in all probability the scene of your attempted home is a flat, and this removes the possibility further still. Home means shelter for all kinds of happy dependents—trees, flowers, herbs, slugs, worms, the patient and ubiquitous snail, cats, fowls, a cow or two, possibly pigs. What chance have these in a flat? A flat is built for humans only. Like a horse-box, it bristles with the egoism of species. A home, too, can be dug about, added to, let out, taken in at the pleasure of them that dwell therein. But a flat! Is there anything more inflexible, uncompromising, destructive of imagination? A home has a personality of its own, or rather of its owner. You cannot think of Mr. A. without a mental picture of his chimney-stack, nor see the windows of Mrs. B.'s house without recalling Mrs. B.'s smile. Such homes live their life, are companions of our joy, and brothers in misfortune. They sleep at night, wake in the morning, smile as they puff matutinal clouds from their chimneys, bask placidly in the sun, and from lamp-lit windows keep a steady eye upon the storm. But a flat has no life. It never sleeps (or never wakes), never smiles, only stares eternally from dawn to dusk, and defies the darkness with electric blaze. It resembles nothing human, for human nature is not yet quite ripe for it. In fact its whole tendency is flatness, and to be dull. Perhaps this is my tendency also, for it is certainly the way of the ingle to make one drowsy, which also is among its many commendations.

Thomas J. Hardy.

There are ways of thinking about man, as about God, which make love difficult or impossible. But we do not learn these ways in the school of Christ. Says Harnack, "We have become dearer to one another from learning of the Father." He quotes from another, "The value of a truly great man consists in his increasing the value of all mankind." Emerson held that "Jesus alone saw the greatness of man." C. G. Ames.

Country Holiday Movement.—Miss Lawrence, 23, Campden House Chambers, Campden-hill, London, W., acknowledges with thanks receipt for this fund of the following sums:—Mr. Mott, £1 1s.; Mrs. Moore, £1; Mrs. Rooke, £2 2s.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. Letters cannot be inserted without the writer's name; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

CHURCH DISCIPLINE AMONG THE BRAHMOS.

Sir,—The Indian Messenger of Feb. 28 has an item of which your readers would do well to take note.

On January 19, 1904, the Executive Committee of the Sadharan Brahmo Samaj passed a resolution "strongly disapproving of the theatrical performance to be held on the 22nd inst. at the Corinthian Theatre in aid of the building fund of the Bhowanipur Theistic Church."

On January 30 the Executive Committee of the East Bengal Brahmo Samaj "express their emphatic disapproval of the action of certain Brahmo ladies and gentlemen in having appeared, or permitted their children to appear, on the public stage in a series of tableaux, as they are of opinion that the introduction of such a practice is fraught with grave moral danger to the community."

And similarly the members of the Barisal Brahmo Samaj in annual meeting "highly disapprove the objectionable mode of raising funds towards the construction of the Theistic Church at Bhowanipur, whatever might be their spirit. The Brahmo ladies and gentlemen, whether personally appearing on the public stage, or otherwise encouraging the performance, have, in the opinion of the meeting, lowered the ideal of social purity, and thus done positive harm to the community to which they belong."

I do not feel equal to comment on these remarkable resolutions, beyond drawing attention to the facts that these Indian Theists evidently do not believe in the loose go-as-you-please methods in vogue among the group of churches in this country with which theologically they have most in common. They recall rather the faithful dealings of old-time Quaker meetings, or modern Salvationists, than anything within our Unitarian experience. One trembles to think what might be the effect of a similar pronouncement from the Executive Committee of the B. and F.U.A.

These Brahmos may be mistaken (if Bengal were England I should venture to pronounce them mistaken) in their condemnation of amateur theatricals, and they may also be wrong (though of that I am by no means sure) if they mean to deprecate generally the raising of Church funds by means of entertainments. But I am more concerned to elicit your own and your readers' opinions on the general question, whether they are right or wrong in clinging to the conception of Church discipline in voluntary religious associations, which we have practically abandoned. R. K. Wilson.

[If by "Church discipline" is meant the expression of a moral judgment by any representative body connected with a church or group of churches, we should say that when exercised with full knowledge and a due sense of responsibility, it would make for the good of the community and was justified. If, for instance, there was still need to condemn the countenancing of raffles at a big bazaar, we should hold that a responsible executive committee was fully justified in publishing a resolution to that effect. As to the specific question of the attitude of Brahmo towards theatrical performances, we could not express an opinion without fuller knowledge than we possess of all the moral bearings of the subjects in Indian society.—Ed. Inq.]

In the Indian Messenger of March 27 we find the following protest from Mr. P. K. Ray, of Dacca, on the subject of the resolutions to which Sir Roland Wilson refers:—

As a member of the Sadharan Brahmo Samáj and of the East Bengal Brahmo Samaj, I enter my short but strong protest against the resolutions, published in the Indian Messenger of February 28, about theatrical performances and tableaux. I protest against them because, in the first place I am of opinion that the social ideal of the Brahmo Samaj does not exclude them; and in the second place I doubt whether the two executive committees have acted constitutionally in passing those resolutions. . . . A glance at the social history of the Brahmo Samaj would show that theatrical performances and tableaux have for the last thirty years formed part of their social amusements. The recent tableaux were only a development of this social movement; and the fact that they were so well managed, should silence all criticism and make the two executive committees reflect on their own conduct in passing such hasty and unjust as well as retrograde resolutions. It is time that we should learn the lesson of toleration and that we should not judge of others by our own measure.

EVIL VERSUS DIVINE GOODNESS.

Sir,—The intrinsic interest of Mr. Millin's views is so great that I shall perhaps be forgiven for one last reference to the discussion. It is agreed that complete solution, on his or any one else's theory, is out of the question. It is mystery all. But different people locate the mystery at different points. Mr. Millin locates it in the freedom of the will of various agents of evil. Others put it further back, and feel that in doing so they no doubt lose somewhat in crispness of theory, but gain incalculably in the relevance of their statements to the natural agnosticism of simple religious faith. The question then is, Can we find any criterion to help us to decide between these two? I think such a criterion is to be found in the relative helpfulness of different theories to the life of moral endeavour. What kind of moral reaction in the spirits of suffering human beings will be set up by the conviction that their troubles are caused by a tremendous malignity behind the scenes? In the case of moral evils it is, no doubt, desirable that the feeling of conflict and opposition should be promoted in human minds to the most intense degree; for a theory which encouraged mere quiescence ("whatever is is right") stands self-condemned. In the human struggle, therefore, the clash of good and evil is objectified in the shape of the conflict of good and bad human wills, and religion partly consists in the faith that good will gradually triumph. But with regard to those physical evils which the theory in question interprets as the result of malignity, this class of consideration clearly has nothing to say one way or the other: for the belief in such malignity would add nothing to the urgency of the need to minimise suffering. And there is even a deeper consideration. If a Christian man believed that his sufferings were caused by one or more devils, the only desirable state of mind for him, even in such circumstances, would be one of forgiving love, not resentment. (Something like this is the idea of Omar, or Omar's translator, "Man's forgiveness give, and take.") Does the theory anticipate such a result? If not, I think it falls. But if it does anticipate it, would not a man possessed of such an effective religious experience be ready to pass beyond this, and in absolute resignation and acceptance bow before love's last mystery in God Himself? Would not the moral and religious reaction be of a higher kind under the latter, than under the former conviction? And is not this our only valid criterion, when it has been admitted that the intellect's burden of mystery is the same for either theory?

Cardiff. W. Whitaker.

SUSTENTATION FUND.

Sir,—At the annual meeting of the Sustentation Fund, on February 10, it was reported that all grants above £20 had been reduced by 10 per cent, and an appeal was made to raise the income of the Society by at least £200 per annum. The officers of the Fund have been doing what they could in this direction, and were very grateful to you for the kind sympathy you expressed with the work of the Society.

We have been favoured by several very kind and generous answers to our appeal, and the donations promised or paid amount to £533 16s. 6d., while by new and increased subscriptions our income has been augmented by £46 14s. 6d.

We hope soon to publish in your columns a full list of our friends who have kindly helped us, and I take the liberty of sending you this note in the hope that it may induce many to aid us with their gifts; as yet, with interest on new capital, and with the increased subscription list, we have only £60 a year towards the £200 we stand in need of.

S: Alfred Steinthal.

POLITICS, &c.

Sir.—The correspondence in your paper since I entered my protest at the Council meeting of the B. and F. U. A. seems to quite justify my action. I do not protest because I happen to differ with the political views of the resolution, but because I feel strongly that the introduction of these party questions invariably leads to dissension. Our ancestors and honoured pioneers spoke out on (let us grant) similar subjects, but in their individual capacity, and while I have, of course, not the slightest desire to fetter that right of personal freedom, I contend that it is out of place in meetings called or held for other purposes, and for that reason I deprecate the use of the periodical meetings of one or another of our denominational bodies for the airing of political opinions which are not, and probably never will be, the unanimous opinion of the component members of that body.

Some of your correspondents apparently think my religion lacking in robustness, or that one's sole aim is subscriptions. They are welcome to their opinion, but it will not stop me working towards the cohesion and consolidation of our members and against separation and disintegration.

Herbert B. Lawford.

April 20, 1904.

"THE CHINESE ORDINANCE."

Sir,—I am one of the very many who thought the South African war not honourably preventible, and, therefore, justly waged by us; and I read many of your comments at the time with deep resentment and almost indignation. But a conviction of the pure motives of passionate humanity which necessitated your utterances, and the sense of how much better is faithful than merely agreeable opinion, saved me from anything like expostulation. And that restraint has for some time now come into a most uncomfortable reward—my present assurance that your views of the war were altogether right and mine altogether wrong.

But what I feel now most compelled to declare is this—that of the many known to me, who like myself approved the war, I do not remember one who seemed in the least to think of the gains of the mine-owners as the concern of our country. To the best of my belief, our people 7,000 miles away never did care twopence for the dividends of the Rand. They did, indeed, unfalteringly care thousands of precious lives and millions of treasure, that their fellow-countrymen in the Transvaal should not be cunningly oppressed, that a weaker race should be treated humanely, and that our country's just rule in South Africa should not be abolished; all of which cherished ideals we honestly, if foolishly, believed were being undone or in peril. Let us, who feel that we have erred, by all means bear our heavy blame whether for dull consciences or too credulous minds. But surely it is not to be silently borne that the very men, who for their own interests played so shamefully upon our prejudice and ignorance in the name of liberty and justice, should bid us now for their selfsame gain curse those sacred things.

A. F. Jones.

Bristol.

CHILDREN'S FLOWER FUND.

Sir,—You have more than once in the past drawn the attention of your readers to the work of the Children's Flower Fund in supplying London elementary schools with flowers, with the result that we have received valuable aid at their hands. Can you allow me a little space to appeal for more help in the sending of flowers? Last year more than 700 boxes were received by London schools, but this year many of our country senders have been obliged for various reasons to give up the work, and if we do not succeed in obtaining more help several schools will be without their usual supply. If any of your readers could undertake to send flowers once a week or once a fortnight, and would communicate with me at 20, Christchurch-road, Hampstead, London, N.W., I should be very glad to put them in communication with a school, and to give them full particulars as to the packing and sending of the boxes. We are particularly anxious to interest country schools in the work. There are already several on our list of senders, and the friendships that have grown up between town and country children are by no means the least happy result of the work.

April 17. Mary S. Beard.

OBITUARY.

MISS MARGARET MACE ELLIS.

Our obituary column last week contained the sorrowful announcement of the death of Miss Margaret Mace Ellis, of Maidstone, at the age of forty-three. She was the only daughter of the late Alderman Charles Ellis, J.P., who was more than once Mayor of Maidstone, and a grandniece of the Rev. George Harris, the eloquent Unitarian preacher, who laboured so zealously and effectively in the North of England and in Scotland between the years 1817 and 1859.

The loss to the Maidstone congregation in Miss Ellis's death is too great to be yet full realised. She was a member of the chapel committee, superintendent of the Sunday-school, president of the Young People's Guild, treasurer of the sewing circle, and an industrious worker in almost every institution connected with the congregation and schools. The influence of her pure and noble life has borne rich fruit in the past and will bear fruit for many years to come in the minds and hearts of the scholars who are under her care. She was an able defender of her faith, and was of a deeply religious disposition. So beautiful a combination of gentleness and strength in a personality is seldom seen. She was ever ready, with generous unselfishness, to devote her powers, which were of no mean order, to the service of others. To her aged mother and other relatives that consolation is abundantly given which is found in testimonials from all classes of the community to a bright, useful, and philanthropic life.

The funeral service at Maidstone Cemetery on April 12 was conducted by the Rev. S. S. Brettell, who on the following Sunday also preached a memorial sermon.

At Tenterden with which Miss Ellis was also closely associated, the Rev. Harold Rylett, whose first charge was at Maidstone, made reference to the great loss they had sustained through her death.

For the Junior Guild of Service, recently established in connection with the Octagon Chapel at Norwich, a card of membership has been printed. On one side is the motto: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even unto them," and the pledge, "I promise that I will try to be considerate towards others, and that I will always do my best to keep the rules of the Guild." On the other side are the following rules:—

(1) Be honest, truthful, and pure.
(2) Help your parents as much as you can.
(3) Be kind to your brothers and sisters.
(4) Do not be selfish, but share all your good things.
(5) Always show pity, care, and consideration for all living creatures, and do not stand quietly by when others wilfully ill-use them.
(6) Never be rude to anybody, whether older or younger, richer or poorer, than yourself. (7) Be punctual.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

SHAKESPEARE'S BIRTHDAY.

William Shakespeare was a country boy. For, though his birthplace—Stratford, in Warwickshire, on the River Avon—has been a town for many centuries, it is only a small town even now, and was smaller still in his time. The streets were few, and it would take only a short time to walk from the market cross into really beautiful country. The houses in the chief streets had gardens behind, and a few minutes' walk would take the boy Will from his own home and garden to the meadows by the river and to the river itself, crossed by the great bridge of fourteen arches. We can still see the house where he was born, the garden where he played as a child, the grammar school where he learned Latin, and the adjoining chapel where the schoolboys attended service. But it is, perhaps, the River Avon that tells us most about Will's boyhood.

We all know how boys love a river, and we can understand that he would soon know the flowers and trees in the river-side meadows as well as those in his own home garden, and that the river itself would be a favourite companion.

We know from his writings that he knew all about the ways of a river, its currents, its windings, its floods, how different it looks at different times according to the weather.

He must have been what we call a noticing boy, and also a gentle one, gentle to other people and to animals. We can guess that he cared more to watch animals than to catch them. He loved animals, and birds and flowers, and knew them well enough to give us word-pictures of them. He knew much about gardening, the care of flowers, and plants and trees, especially fruit trees.

It is a fruit-growing neighbourhood, and now, when Stratford-on-Avon is celebrating the Shakespeare Festival, the country looks its best. Unless the cold winds have nipped the buds, the gardens and orchards are gay with fruit-blossom, as if they too had hung out their flags in honour of the poet who loved the country so well.

For the little town is gay to-day with flags and flowers. Inhabitants of Stratford, and also visitors assembled there for the festival, take flowers to Shakespeare's grave in the beautiful old church by the river. This custom was started some years ago by the boys of his own grammar school, and now their example is followed by so many people that the large church is quite filled on this occasion.

William Shakespeare died on April 23, 1616, on his birthday, it is said, so that the anniversary of his death is kept as his birthday also.

He married early, and when he was twenty-one he had already three children to provide for. Leaving his wife and babies in Stratford he went to London to earn a living for himself and his family. For many years he worked in London, returning home now and then for a visit. When he wrote of the little girl friends, Hermia and Helena, his own little daughters were about nine and ten years old.

The plays that have made Shakespeare famous belong to this London part of his life. But, now, when we are all rejoicing in the spring, with the brighter sunshine and flowers, and foliage, let us celebrate the Shakespeare Festival with the people of Stratford by thinking of him, specially in connection with his country home, and his love of the country. Let us remember his boyhood and youth in Stratford, and his fulfilled ambition of spending his last years in his native place. For at last he had earned enough to retire from work in London, and to settle in his country home.

Shakespeare's only boy had died at the age of eleven, whilst his girls had grown up in Stratford, and the elder one was now married, with a baby girl of her own.

I think that little granddaughter must have been very dear to Shakespeare. In the latest plays which belong to these quiet years at Stratford, and being much about country life, there is much also about children, and in two plays of this period, there is introduced, as an event of great interest—the birth of a baby girl.

I fancy that he liked to think of children growing up, as he had done, and like his children and little grandchild, in the freedom and beauty of the country; for some of his last story-children, removed from palace homes, lived in familiar companionship with flowers and birds, and other delights of open-air life in the country.

Two little British princes were stolen from their father's court and were brought up by a foster-mother and father amongst the mountains in a wild part of South Wales. They lived in a cave, and found and prepared their own food and clothing, and had a happy, healthy, open-air life till they were nearly grown up, when they were restored to their family.

A baby princess, deserted on the seashore, was found by an old shepherd in a storm. He took her home to his wife and they brought her up as their own. We see her in the story as a happy young shepherdess at a sheep-shearing feast, distributing flowers from her garden to the guests. She was called Perdita, because she was lost, but her story is a happy one, and ends happily, for she is found again by her parents.

Next week you shall hear the story of a little girl transplanted from her palace home when she was not yet three, just about the age of Shakespeare's little granddaughter when he wrote the story.

Had Shakespeare lived in these days, I expect he would have wanted to remove many a real child from town life to cottage or cave in the country.

There are so many children in the big towns who never know the pleasure of picking flowers, and seldom even see a flower at all. Some of you, are perhaps planning a day's expedition into the fields or woods to gather spring flowers, or are already watching the flowers come up in your own gardens. Would not those of you who can buy or gather flowers like to share your riches with some of the other children who have no such pleasures? For you to send flowers to the children at some town hospital or workhouse would be a new way of keeping the Shakespeare Festival, and, started by the children, the custom might grow like the custom of taking flowers to Shakespeare's grave at Stratford.

Lilian Hall.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

Terms of Subscription.

The Inquirer can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
Per Quarter	1	8
Per Half-Year	3	4
Per Year	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Advertisements for The Inquirer should be addressed to the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on Thursday, to appear the same week.

All payments in respect to The Inquirer to be made to E. Kennedy, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C.

LONDON, APRIL 23, 1904.

A MARTINEAU CENTENARY MEMORIAL.

On April 21, 1805, James Martineau was born at Norwich. Next year, therefore, the centenary will be celebrated, and, as with the Channing centenary twenty-five years earlier, it will be the occasion for a demonstration of reverence and gratitude the most profound that can stir a community in honouring the memory of a great religious teacher. What we owe to Martineau as a leader of thought, as a commanding personality, as a seer of the things of the spirit, as a gracious friend, a teacher and inspirer of our better life, will doubtless then find fitting utterance in commemorative addresses, and fresh studies of his life and writings, while in each of the places closely associated with his life's work services of devotion will mark for us the deep significance of the occasion.

And if it is asked whether there should not be also some visible and tangible memorial erected to mark permanently the centenary, we reply that the opportunity is offered, and the occasion is ripe, in the city of his birth. Manchester College, at Oxford, has already its memorial in the wonderful statue, as well as the Watts portrait; in Little Portland-street Chapel a memorial was last year unveiled; in Liverpool, Hope-street Church itself is the abiding witness to the graciousness and power of his ministry. There remains Norwich, his birthplace, where as yet no public memorial has been erected, and which, therefore, might most fittingly be enriched not merely by a local commemoration, but a national memorial to our great teacher.

In his home in Magdalen-street, and in the old Octagon Chapel, under the ministry of the Rev. Thomas Madge, the early piety of James Martineau was nourished, and there he returned in middle life to preach at the centenary of the chapel, associated also with the honoured memory of Dr. John Taylor. In the ardour of his early manhood Martineau was deeply interested in the schools connected with the Octagon, and to the end of his life cherished a warm affection for the old chapel, and set high store upon the pieties and the works of beneficence which centred there.

Now we learn that through the falling in of leases the school buildings long connected with the Octagon Chapel, the scene of generations of devoted work, with which in their day such men as John Withers Dowson, Travers Madge, and Mark Wade were identified, are passing out of the hands of the congregation, and it is essential to the continuance of the good work, and indeed to the very existence of the Octagon congregation, as a living religious and beneficent force in the city, that a new site should be secured and adequate buildings erected, as a home for the Sunday-schools and all the manifold activities which are the natural expression of the faith and energy of a living church.

A scheme has been prepared, and will doubtless very shortly be made public, showing how adequately this great need can be met, but we could not allow this anniversary to pass without a word to indicate that this undertaking is a-foot, and to express the earnest hope that it may appeal to the faith and the imagination of our people throughout the country as offering the worthiest form for a Martineau Centenary Memorial.

Let us here recall his own words, addressed to the first National Conference at Liverpool, in which he spoke of what must be demanded of every living church :—

"No Christian Society can subsist upon its own internal relations alone, and, like a monastery, shut out the confusion and the cries of the world around. We acknowledge, with all Christendom, that the Missionary spirit is inseparable from the religious life; and that it is impossible for a people to train themselves in the school of Christ, yet remain quiet neighbours to the victims of passion, ignorance, and wrong. Where there is no sorrow felt for those to whom God is dead, and the heavens are dark, no pity for those whose life is a flight from pursuing Fate into the grim arms of 'the last enemy,' no longing to seek and to save the lost, how can there be either love of God or 'enthusiasm of humanity'? No Christian Society gives any adequate expression of its essential character, unless from its heart goes forth some message of healing and entreaty to its neighbourhood; and it is but a selfish membership that looks coldly on such evangelising work. It ought not to satisfy us that we institute and equip Mission stations in parts of our large towns that need them most. Every visible place of worship needs a character, a significance, a spiritual physiognomy upon the spot. It should be more than brick and stone to the eyes that daily see it. Even from the outside let it look upon the passers-by with a gaze of tender mercy and solemn warning and recovered hope. Our Town Missions would be a doubtful blessing to us, if we made them an excuse for surrendering an essential function of every Christian Church."

It is to equip the old Octagon Chapel for such faithful work that appeal must now be made. The scheme is a great one, beyond the unaided powers of the congregation, demanding thousands for its due completion. Thus it is worthy of the occasion and of him whom it may commemorate; and we would add that far more than any local interest depends on the adequate maintenance of the Octagon congregation, in the chief city of a great province.

We cannot doubt that Dr. Martineau himself would have ardently welcomed such an opportunity to strengthen the good work, which he had so much at heart, in the city of his birth; and when this appeal is brought before the notice of the generous supporters of our churches, who have the means to give largely, where there is need, we trust that they will realise not only the significance of the occasion, to honour a venerated memory, but may rejoice to be thus associated with his spirit of faith and earnest service, in a great work of practical helpfulness. A Martineau Memorial Hall and Schools at Norwich would be indeed a happy issue from this centenary commemoration.

We spoke last week of the lessons to be gathered from the recent Daily News Religious Census of London, the results of which are published in the elaborate volume on "The Religious Life of London," edited by Mr. Mudie-Smith (Hodder & Stoughton, 6s.); and we quoted specially from the striking and very valuable essays by Mr. Percy Alden and Mr. Masterman on the "Problem of London" in the east and south respectively. Mr. Arthur Sherwell contributes a similar essay on the Problem of West London, where the "characteristic note of life" is "unspiritual and materialistic," and unbridled luxury is a vicious and disintegrating influence in the life of the community. He concludes that what is needed by the churches there, working against such insidious forces of evil, is not so much a method as a message: "To re-discover for the people of West London the meaning and value and ultimate significance of life is the real problem set before the churches." One more passage from Mr. Alden's essay we will add here, enforcing the need of securing better conditions of life for the people of East London:—"We expect too much if we expect that these people, with little or no hope in life, will ever be anything but apathetic towards the Church; they must be given more outlook and more uplook; they must be taught to comprehend the evil conditions of their own life; they must be trained to remedy these conditions, and so far as possible the strong arm of the Church and the still stronger arm of the municipality must give that opportunity for physical and mental development without which, I fear, the spiritual life becomes an impossibility."

MISS COBBE'S PHILOSOPHICAL WORK.

From the graphic picture given in last week's Inquirer, of Miss Cobbe's noble career—a career filled from first to last with manifold and strenuous efforts to benefit her fellow-creatures, whether human or sub-human—it is clearly manifest that the interest in the Ideal which dominated her nature was not chiefly intellectual or philosophical, but rather emotional and practical. In her case, as in the case of Theodore Parker, posterity will not fail to decide that, important and admirable as was her philosophical work, still more important and more admirable were her achievements as a preacher, a prophet, and a social reformer. She vigorously cultivated philosophy, because she needed philosophy to give reality and substantiality to the supreme object of her passionate spiritual affection, and to render more effective her vehement longings and strivings to uplift and bless all living beings with whom experience or imagination brought her into any sort of connection. Discerning the immanence of God alike in her own soul and in every object of nature, she felt her deep spiritual kindred with the whole creation; and seldom have the grand words of Coleridge, "He prayeth best who loveth best All things both great and small," found a more perfect and beautiful exemplification than in the life of her whose departure from among us so many of her earnest co-workers in good causes are now so sincerely lamenting.

Reared in a somewhat narrow Evangelical conception of religion, her keen intellectual insight early detected the glaring inconsistencies and absurdities of the popular scheme of theology, and for a time, as she tells us in her autobiography, she, like F. W. Robertson of Brighton, felt the bitter anguish of a desolating scepticism. Her way of escape from this Slough of Despond she found afterwards to have been precisely that of which Robertson gives such a vivid description in the imperishable words so often quoted, and so needful at this present time:—

> It is an awful moment when the soul begins to find that the props on which it blindly rested are many of them rotten. . . . I know but one way in which a man can come forth from this agony scatheless; it is by holding fast to those things which are certain still. In the darkest hour through which a human soul can pass, whatever else is doubtful, this at least is certain. If there be no God and no future state, even then it is better to be generous than selfish, better to be true than than false, better to be brave than a coward. Blessed beyond all earthly blessedness is the man who in the tempestuous darkness of the soul has dared to hold fast to these landmarks. I appeal to the recollection of any man who has passed through that agony and stood upon the rock at last, with a faith and hope and trust no longer traditional but his own.

It was, accordingly, through the clear recognition of the living presence and self-revelation of God in the Conscience that Miss Cobbe regained spiritual peace, and found both intellectual and spiritual satisfaction; and no sooner had she experienced this salvation from distressful doubt than she longed to indicate to other thoughtful spirits also this road to a faith which should meet the demands of the heart, and yet in no way conflict with the just claims of the reason. Between her thirtieth and thirty-third year she thought out and composed what she truly calls the magnum opus of her intellectual life, viz., the "Essay on the Theory of Intuitive Morals." As a preparation for this task she carefully read Semple's translation of Kant's Metaphysic of Ethics, and found it, she says, "almost dazzlingly enlightening." In her own book we find many of Kant's ideas. The best of these she retained all her life, but others she soon dropped; and in her later works her ethical views became nearly, if not quite, identical with those of her friend Dr. Martineau. Kant's sharply marked distinction between the homo phænomenon, who is in time, and the homo noumenon, who transcends time, by which the Königsberg philosopher endeavoured to harmonise psychological necessity with moral freedom. Miss Cobbe retains in outward form, but she essentially modifies the meaning of it by representing the homo noumenon as simply a man's higher self which in time, i.e., in actual experience, makes in every case of real temptation, a free choice between equally possible alternatives, and thus she transforms Kant's unintelligible speculation into a self-consistent libertarian doctrine. But the feature in the Kantian ethics which she found so inspiring and so revivifying for her religious faith was his decided condemnation of all ethical theories of a hedonistic character, and his emphatic insistence on the fact to which man's consciousness bears clear testimony, that all conduct which deserves the name of "moral" must be actuated simply by reverence for the moral law, and not at all by desires for personal gratification. Here Miss Cobbe follows the great philosopher con amore. In her lucid and brilliant style she criticises all systems which base Ethics on Happiness, whether it be the refined happiness which accompanies the pursuit of virtue and the cultivation of altruistic sympathies, or the coarser pleasure of sensual indulgence. It is to be noted that Miss Cobbe anticipated Henry Sidgwick in pointing out that that form of Utilitarianism which makes the pursuit of the greatest general happiness the test of right conduct is not really a hedonistic theory of ethics at all, for it rests upon an intuition, and not upon an empirical foundation. In her account of the moral intuitions through which man's duty is revealed, she departs from Kant and agrees with Martineau. There are, she maintains, certain basal ethical intuitions which are felt to be absolutely true and eternally obligatory, just as there are also logical and mathematical intuitions which are universal and necessary. Such intuitions, accordingly, are not only valid relatively to our human consciousness, but are absolutely valid, and must, therefore, be regarded as features in the essential nature of the personality of God. But while the fundamental principles of ethics are thus rooted in the very life of God, and are, accordingly, eternal and unchanged, the perception of the application of these principles to actual personal and social conditions is continually enlarging with increased knowledge; and hence arises the great variety and development of men's views on special questions of duty.

When this essay was written the application of the theory of Evolution to ethics by Darwin and Spencer had not yet appeared. Miss Cobbe became personally acquainted with Darwin, and was much charmed by the sweetness and transparency of his character. His doctrine of the "Descent of Man" she readily, and indeed gratefully, accepted; but his theory of the origin of the moral sentiments and his explanation of remorse cut at the very root of all that was most precious in her philosophy and faith; and she accordingly most vigorously and ably criticised this evolutionary account of man's ethical consciousness in what is certainly one of the most brilliantly written, and also one of the most permanently valuable, of her writings—viz., the article on "Darwinism in Morals," which appeared in the Theological Review for April, 1871. This admirable paper is still one of the most forcible criticisms extant of the Darwinian and Spencerian theory of ethics, and, so far as we are aware, her very lucidly expressed objections to that theory have not yet received a satisfactory answer.

From the outside (she says) it is obvious that the two human sentiments of Regret and Repentance may very easily be confounded. A theory which should account for Regret might be supposed to cover the facts of Repentance, did no inward experience of the difference forbid us to accept it. But since Coleridge pointed out this loose link in the chain of Utilitarian argument, no disciple of the school has been able to mend it; and even Mr. Darwin's theory only supplies an hypothesis for the origin of relenting Pity, not one for Penitence.

Miss Cobbe then states two apt illustrative cases, in one of which great injury has been accidentally done to a friend, while in the other jealousy and anger have prompted the withholding from a man in peril the means of safety; and she very pertinently asks:—

> Now, will Mr. Darwin, or any other thinker who traces the origin of the Moral Sense to the "agglutinated" experience of utility of a hundred generations, point out to us how that experience can possibly have bequeathed to us the latter sentiment of Remorse for a crime as contradistinguished from that of Regret for having unintentionally caused a misfortune.

It would carry us too far to enter upon an elaborate account of Miss Cobbe's philosophy of Religion. On this subject she was on the whole in agreement with Dr. Martineau, and especially so on those points where her two great friends, Dr. Martineau and Prof. F. W. Newman, differed from one another. She considered that God expresses Himself in our rational and moral intuitions, and that it is upon the self-revelations of God in our ideals of truth, beauty, righteousness, and love that religious belief eternally reposes. Hence she could not agree with Prof. Newman when the latter made religious faith rest mainly or solely on what he called spiritual experience; and it was to the little heed which Newman paid to the intuitions of the reason and the conscience that she attributed his slender hold on the belief in personal immortality, a belief which, to Miss Cobbe's great pain, he finally relinquished. In the light of the moral intuition Miss Cobbe maintained that the justice of God demands the immortality of the human soul, a contention which Newman found himself unable to endorse. But while she regarded the Conscience as involving a prophecy of individual immortality, she maintained that the reason also bears confirmatory testimony, and was convinced, as was also John Fiske, that the rationality of the universe would be violated were there no future life for man. In reference to this question, it may be of interest to some of our readers, if we conclude this paper with the following extract from a letter written from Hengwrt to the present writer between three and four years ago :—

I am delighted to find you rest a good deal on the argument (generally neglected) from the need to postulate the doctrine of human immortality on the ground of the Rationality of the Cosmos. Too much stress, I have often imagined, has been laid proportionately on the argument deduced from the Divine Goodness and Justice. A much simpler one rests (if it is not profane to use such an expression) on the Common Sense of the Author of the World. The idea came vividly to me one day in my garden. I had got over a bed-full of fine new roses direct from Lyons. The climate here is not warm enough for them, and each year the buds of many drop off unopened, not one ever blooming to perfection with all its petals open. How like, I thought, to the vast majority of human beings on earth ; and what should we say of the common-sense of the gardener who, knowing that not one would ever expand to its full beauty and sweetness, yet went on for ever planting them only to see them perish ! If there is no future life, the whole world is such a garden of never-to-be-opened blooms. And yet alas ! alas ! how hard it is—especially as one nears the great Wall of Darkness, to feel, as well as believe, that there is a world of Light behind ! Dr. Martineau told me at the time that he had gone to visit W. R. Greg when dying, and that Greg had said to him that all he wished for was Rest. Dr. Martineau asked him whether he did not think that the conclusions which he had reached when in the prime of his powers were more likely to be just than the impression he was undergoing in his failing hours ? He said that Greg answered gently that it might very probably be so, but that in his condition then only everlasting Rest seemed desirable or possible. I had the greatest regard for and sympathy with W. Greg, and this little incident has remained on my mind as a very striking one.

Charles B. Upton.

Cambridge Services.—Many of our readers will be interested to learn that the religious services conducted by Unitarian ministers will be resumed at the hall, 10, Emmanuel-street, next Sunday, April 24, when the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A., will preach. The services will be continued throughout May, and will be concluded for the present University term on Sunday, June 5. The Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A., Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, M.A., Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A., and the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie will be the preachers. The Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter will take a second service on May 22. Those who have relatives or friends at any of the colleges are desired to make the services known to them. The hon. secretary is Mr. C. H. B. Epps, B.A., Christ's College, Cambridge.

EASTER IN ITALY.

In Italy Easter has become what Christmas is in England and Germany. Besides being the most important date in the ecclesiastical calendar it is a great national holiday. The postmen ask for their "boxes," and Buona Pasqua sounds much like "A Merry Christmas." We have just seen the celebrations in Florence, and these, though not so imposing as at Rome, have a character and special interest of their own.

They begin on Holy Wednesday with the service of the Tenebrae at the Cathedral. The ceremony includes the lighting of fifteen candles to represent the Twelve Apostles and the Three Marys, and these are extinguished one by one as psalm follows psalm, and at last the only candle left burning is one hidden behind the altar, "which denotes how the Saviour in the Garden was forsaken by all, and serves further as the symbol of his life whilst hidden in the grave." Then comes a ceremony which delights the children, who are never forgotten by Roman Catholicism. At the church doors little willow wands peeled and bound with pink paper are sold in thousands, and at the close of the Tenebrae priests and congregation take these wands and strike the ground or a stone bench three times, to recall the betrayal of Christ and the scourging inflicted on him. All the next day, too, the children go about with these wands, striking the church doors and other objects, and saying, "That for Judas."

On Thursday morning comes High Mass and the Gloria in Excelsis, after which every bell is silent till noon on Saturday. In the Duomo, too, we saw another sight —familiar enough to Catholics, but impressive to us, especially in its suggestions. An aged Canon retired to one of the many confessionals, and sat there with his eyes shut, his fine, strongly marked features illuminated by a candle just in front of him, waiting for any penitent who might come for absolution. We wondered what stories he had listened to in his long life, and how far the furrows of care ploughed on his own face represented sins and sufferings he had vicariously borne.

At mid-day began the ceremony of "Visiting the Sepulchres." In nearly every church a chapel was decorated with flowers and a kind of bleached cress, laid out so as to represent a figure of the dead Christ and emblems of the Passion, while a profusion of lighted candles gave extraordinary brilliancy to the whole effect. All this afternoon the streets were crowded with people of all ages and stations going from church to church to visit these sepulchres, the proper number of visits being seven. Visiting each church included of course, for the faithful, kneeling in prayer before the altar, though in some churches the combination of the pushing crowd and the kneeling figures was most incongruous.

Meanwhile, in the choir of the Cathedral another ceremony was proceeding, which we were fortunately able to witness after waiting about an hour and a half outside a glass screen. We were the first to arrive and secure places, and it was curious to find that the crowd which gradually closed round us was composed principally, if not exclusively, of English tourists bent on doing the sight. This ceremony was the Lavanda, when the Archbishop washed the feet of twelve old men who belong to a "Cathedral Company," and are further rewarded with a pecuniary douceur. They deserved this, for some at least tottered a good deal as they came and took their places on an uncomfortable high seat in front of which was a sort of bench raised some three feet above the floor, to support the foot that was to be washed. They were clothed in white from head to foot. Even their faces were covered, much after the fashion of the Ad Misericordiam Brothers. The preliminaries involved some elaborate ceremonial, but when the actual washing began, the number of canons and choristers inside the screen left their proper places, and, regardless of our long wait outside, crowded round the Archbishop, and almost completely masked him from our view. Still, by standing on our chairs, it was possible to ascertain that the ablution and drying with a towel were of a perfunctory character, but concluded with the Archbishop kissing the place he had just washed.

It was difficult for us to attach any religious value to the whole performance, nor did the faces of those who took part in the proceedings indicate that it meant anything religious to them.

When this was over we went on to the Church of the Holy Trinity, and there we had a real treat in listening to most beautiful fifteenth century music only sung on these occasions. The church was crowded mainly with people visiting one of the finest of the "Sepulchres" already described, but also with people who paid for chairs to sit and hear the music. But, as so often happens in Italy, there was no sufficient sense of what is congruous, not to say decent, to prevent a couple of men walking about all the time clinking money in metallic collecting boxes. We could shut our eyes to the surging crowd, but, alas ! could not close our ears to this jarring rattle, which sadly clashed with the fine voices that were giving a noble rendering of this grand old music. But one must be thankful even for the good one gets, and not expect to have it pure and undefiled.

Good Friday, strange to say, seemed far more secular than Holy Thursday. Ordinary business was in full swing, the churches were almost empty, the "Sepulchres" were illuminated with their numerous candles, but some, at any rate, were being dismantled during the course of the morning, and the flowers given away apparently to poor people who came for them. Every crucifix was covered with a black veil, and also every picture or carving containing a figure of Christ or the Virgin. In the Church of the Holy Spirit only one group, representing Tobias and the Angel, was exposed to view. In one of the churches "The Three Hours' Service" was held, with preaching on the "Seven Last Words," but that we did not attend, nor did we go to see the exhibition in another church of a crucifix which is said once to have bowed its head to a saint, and there was certainly nothing in the general aspect of the place to suggest either holy day or holiday.

Saturday morning was the occasion of a most interesting ceremony peculiar to Florence, and deeply rooted in the affection of its inhabitants. This is known as "Lo Scoppio del Carro"—the Explosion of the Car. The story runs that one of the Pazzi family distinguished himself in the Crusade of 1088, and was rewarded with three pieces of flint from the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem, which are still kept in the "Canonica" of one of the Florentine churches. At 9 A.M. on this morning the Prior strikes a light from these flints and lights a taper, which is carried in procession to the Baptistery. Another legend tells how a Pazzi spent Easter at Jerusalem in connection with a later crusade, and having ignited a taper from the sacred fire of the Holy Sepulchre, then brought it alight all the way home to Florence, riding backwards so as to frustrate the efforts of the devil to blow it out. This lighted taper he deposited in the Baptistery, which from the ninth to the thirteenth century was almost the only church in Florence. In consequence of these deeds the Pazzi family obtained the honour of providing the car about to be described. How early its use began is not known, but in 1478 they were deprived of their privilege as a punishment for conspiracy. Some years later they were pardoned and the distinction restored. But, alas! times change, and in 1863 the head of the family wished to discontinue the custom, and it would have been given up had not the municipality, appreciating its popularity, come to the rescue. What now takes place is this: a lofty, massive wooden car, 300 years old, laden with fireworks, is drawn by four white oxen to the open space in front of the cathedral, between it and the Baptistery. At 11.20 an ecclesiastical procession, choristers, canons, and other dignitaries, in gorgeous robes, with the Archbishop of Florence, wearing his mitre and carrying his crozier, comes down the centre of the cathedral, and proceeds to the Baptistery to fetch from there the sacred fire, which they bring back to the high altar. From this fire is kindled at noon the "dove," a sort of rocket, which rapidly traverses a long wire stretched from the choir the whole length of the nave, and passing out of the central door to the "Carro," sets off the fireworks. This, at least, is what ought to happen, but we are prepared to vouch for the fact that this year, halfway down the nave the "dove" stuck, and went off itself with a series of bangs, and some one in the car must have started the fireworks there on his own account. It would be the more important to do this promptly, as the passage of the "dove" is watched with much anxiety, and a straight successful flight is supposed to presage a fertile harvest. Two Italian ladies near us who were not taken in by the explanation that the "dove" passed too rapidly to be seen, were in much distress over what actually occurred, and kept saying, "It is a misfortune." After this the car is wheeled off by the oxen to a street wherein is the house formerly occupied by the Pazzi, and there the remaining fireworks are discharged.

A more beautiful and impressive feature is the breaking out at noon of the bells all over the town. Partly owing to the height at which they are hung in Giotto's Tower and other campaniles, partly owing to their intrinsic merit, the musical jangle produced is rich and mellow, and after the silence of two days their proclamation of the Resurrection is very beautiful. The crowd was an interesting one, thoroughly Italian, largely composed of country peasants, and also of children, well behaved, with hardly a dozen policemen to keep order.

Sunday morning is the time specially to wish everyone "Buona Pasqua," and the churches were crowded. Some came bringing a plateful of eggs for the priest to bless and sprinkle with holy water, but crowds came for High Mass. We went to the Church of the Annunciation, and heard magnificent music sung by fine voices, well supported by a string band, and occasionally by an organ, lasting nearly two hours. Of course, we could not follow the service, but we could watch the faces of some who could, especially devout Catholic peasants, and see how real and impressive it all was to them. But only the priests and choristers inside the altar rails took the smallest active part in the ceremony. The congregation did not join in hymn or chant, and did not listen to a word of exhortation. But my purpose is not to criticise or comment, only to describe, and I am well content to keep within this limit, till I have had further opportunities of understanding what takes place, and what is the effect produced.

H. Shaen Solly.

Florence, April 4, 1904.

THE ASPIDISTRA REPLIES.

(See Inquirer, April 16, p. 242.)

Good Preacher-poet, say not so,
That I nor bloom nor seasons know.
My character I must defend;
Please look a little closer, Friend!
Is it a fault or virtue, pray,
I never wither quite away;
That all the year I keep the same
(Unlike some plants of greater fame);
That as the moments steal along
"New leaves for old" is still my song,— Contriving, could'st thou only see,
To swallow death in victory?
And—dare I say it? Yes, I may—
I too can blossom in my day.
My flow'r, I know, is humbly drest,
But 'tis a flow'r, and 'tis my best.
Go, tell the city-dweller this,
Lest he the parable should miss;
Bid Duty serve, nor think it mean
To give the world a little green;
Bid Courage bide the saddest hour
And brave the darkness with a flow'r;
And then bid Love arise and sing
Of beauty hid in everything.

W. G. Tarrant.

The higher life begins for us when we renounce our own will to bow before a Divine law. That seems hard to you. It is the portal of wisdom, and freedom, and blessedness. That wisdom is the religion of the Cross. George Eliot.

AUCKLAND, NEW ZEALAND.

The annual business meeting of the Auckland Unitarian Church was held on March 10, when the reports from the various committees represented a vigorous, flourishing, and hopeful state of affairs. The trustees reported that the final balance of the building debt had been expunged on September 3. The secretary stated that twenty-two members had been added to the roll. The treasurers, both of the church and of every subsidiary organisation, had substantial balances in hand. The Sunday-school roll numbered 59. A Postal Mission had been started, and reported a keen appreciation of our literature. The Women's Society had raised £40 for a carved pulpit, now ready to be placed in position, and the date was fixed at the end of the month for the opening of a new two-manual pipe organ, the gift of a member of the congregation. A warm vote of thanks was passed to the B. and F.U.A. for their assistance in the start and support of the church, the more hearty that it now begins to see its way to complete independence. The treasurer made a striking statement, showing how the net valuation of the church property has risen from £1 15s. 4d. in 1899 to over £1,075 in 1904.

The Rev. W. Jellie, just returned from a month's holiday, during which the pulpit was served acceptably by members, reported having met scattered Unitarians in every centre of population he visited, and a very considerable number in Wellington, the capital. All are looking forward with eagerness to the coming of the Rev. C. Hargrove, M.A., and the Chief Justice of the Colony has promised to take the chair and introduce our visitor to the public of Wellington.

March 17. William Jellie.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION AND STAMFORD-STREET CHAPEL.

The annual meeting was held at Stamford-street Chapel on Monday evening, Mr. W. Arthur Sharpe, President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, in the chair. There was a fair attendance of subscribers and friends, among those on the platform being that veteran worker, Mr. S. S. Tayler, while in the audience was Miss Preston, another link with the old Carter-lane congregation. In the course of the evening it was announced that the Rev. W. L. Tucker, the newly appointed minister, would enter on his duties in July, and that an opportunity for public welcome would be found after the summer holidays, at the beginning of the new winter's work. The meeting began with a hymn, given out by the Rev. F. W. Stanley, after which Mr. C. F. Pearson introduced the chairman.

Mr. A. A. Tayler, hon. sec., read the report of the committee, which told of the satisfactory maintenance of the work of the Mission during the ministerial interregnum.

Mr. C. F. Pearson read the treasurer's report, which showed a balance of £26 3s. 10d. in hand, but noted various items of diminished income and increased expense for the new year, so that there would be about £140 to make up. One item of income lost was the rent from the day school, carried on by Miss Pike, which had been given up.

The report of the Boys' Brigade was then read by Mr. J. E. King, that of the Young Women's Club by Miss Poulter, that of the Sunday-school by Mr. S. S. Tayler, and that of the Popular Concerts, which had been more successful than ever, by Mr. G. Ling. These and other reports, including the Provident Bank, the Band of Hope and Mercy, the Country Cottage, the Mothers' Meeting, the Children's Happy Evening, the D.G. Club ("Do Good"), show how great was the variety of admirable work centred in the Mission.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the reports, said that such work must always be its own reward. Since he had been President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, he had taken the chair at the annual meetings of several such societies, and nowhere had he seen greater evidence of work well done. Coming to the meeting he had been impressed by the enormous field of work close at the door of that building, and he wished he could say something to others who were not there to make them join in such work as was there undertaken. They endeavoured to bring home to the multitudes the advantages of social intercourse and intelligent occupations during their leisure. They had to begin not with any dogmatic teaching, but by showing sympathy in a brotherly and sisterly manner, proving themselves friends and helpers of those in trouble, and so bring them to something higher than mere pleasure.

The Rev. T. E. M. Edwards, in seconding, dwelt on the need of improvement in the Sunday services, advocating plenty of good music and short addresses, if possible, with a variety of speakers, and that earnest laymen should speak on subjects in which the people have a living interest. The social welfare of the people, he said, largely depended on such missions as that, ministering to physical, social, and spiritual wants, as centres of regenerating life.

The reports having been unanimously adopted, the Rev. V. D. Davis moved and Mr. King seconded the appointment of the committee and officers and Mrs. Mace moved and Mr. Mutch seconded a vote of thanks to all who had helped in the work during the year.

The Rev. W. Copeland Bowie then moved:—

That this meeting of subscribers to and friends of the Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel learns with deep regret that owing to ill-health, Miss Bridgett is obliged to relinquish the social work which she has carried on with such signal success for the past thirty years, and it tenders to her its hearty thanks for her valuable assistance in the past, and trusts that she may be speedily restored to health and able to again assist in the work she has so much at heart.

He told how since his coming to Stamford-street Chapel, in 1880, he had known Miss Bridgett's devoted work, which she had previously carried on at the old Carter-lane Mission, and, after an interval, then took up again. With very poor health, hardly a week without some physical suffering of her own, she had never thought of herself, but always of others; from early morning, when she came down into the district, she had been ready to give herself all day to work among the people, in a spirit of splendid devotion and unselfishness. There must be hundreds of people in that district who would bear her work and her memory in their hearts as long as they lived. No service was too small, and none too great, for her to give herself to it with unsparing devotion. It was one of the glories of their humanity that there were such people in the world.

Mr. James Welch seconded the resolution, and a letter was read from Mr. Percy Preston warmly commending such a resolution of sympathy, and referring especially to Miss Bridgett's work in the founding of the Provident Bank.

A vote of thanks to the chairman, moved by the Mr. C. F. Pearson, was cordially passed, and Mr. Sharpe in responding, said that he was glad to be there to express the sympathy of Unitarians in all parts of London with that work.

Another hymn and the Benediction, pronounced by the Rev. F. W. Stanley, brought the meeting to a close.

HURST STREET DOMESTIC MISSION, BIRMINGHAM.

The sixty-fifth annual meeting was held on Monday evening last, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor of Birmingham, Alderman Hallewell Rogers. The chapel was crowded.

The report of the committee was presented by the secretary, Mr. E. Ellis Townley, and stated that the expenditure had exceeded the income by £279. Of this, however, £130 was expenditure of an abnormal character, which had been made necessary by some special requirements by the City magistrates. On the other hand, an appeal made during the autumn for increased annual subscriptions had resulted in an increased income of £230 from 75 old subscribers who had increased their subscriptions, and 190 new subscribers. The committee wished to assure Mr. Clarke of their sincere and high appreciation of his abilities and energy in conducting the work of the Mission, and of his continued and unabated interest in the various institutions connected with it, and to express the hope that he might long continue to enjoy the health and strength necessary for the fulfilment of his duties. The financial statement was read by the treasurer, Mr. Russell Jolly.

Mr. W. J. Clarke read a deeply interesting and comprehensive report with reference to the work of the Mission generally, and expressed the conviction that the past year could safely be regarded as one of the most useful and richly blest of the nineteen years during which he had had the privilege of acting as their missionary.

The report gave the following list of activities:—

The following agencies have been in more or less active operation:—Religious Services, morning, afternoon, and evening every Sunday; Chapel and Sunday-School Choirs; Sunday Schools; Classes for the study of the Bible, for Chemistry, Physiography, Dress Making, and Vocal and Instrumental Music; Recreation Room; Cricket Club; Minstrel Troupe; Gymnasium; Social Gatherings; Ladies' Committee; Junior Band of Hope; Adult Band of Hope; Magazine Circulation; Flower Distribution; Mothers' Meeting; Advice Bureau; Guild of Sympathy; Sick Savings' and Benevolent Clubs, numbering eleven.

10,984 visits have been paid to and received from the poor, 2,918 medical notes have been obtained from 940 contributors, and £1,176 15s. 10d. in 2,170 subscriptions from 1,265 subscribers. For relief and other purposes, 3,444 medical notes, 2,981 garments, and help in various forms have been distributed, involving an expenditure of not less than £1,500. 140 indoor winter and outdoor summer treats have been provided for the aged poor, and 86 summer parties for poor children.

In connection with the Police-Aided Association for Clothing Destitute Children and the Military Veterans' Association, 1,573 destitute children have been supplied with 9,180 garments and 1,542 pairs of boots; relief to the amount of £267 has been distributed among, and twelve pensions of 9d. per diem obtained for, distressed military veterans.

Mr. Clarke, in conclusion, urged strongly the view that the poor, and even those who seemed the most worthless and hopeless among them, were in far greater measure than was commonly supposed the helpless victims rather than the responsible instruments of their own undoing. That drink was a direct and very potent cause of poverty could not, of course, admit of the slightest doubt. But he held strongly that poverty, overcrowding, insanitary surroundings, and like causes were directly productive of a far larger measure of excessive drinking than was usually thought to be the case. No amount of investigation would suffice to make clear the exact proportion in which poverty is an effect or a cause of drinking; but there was ample work for those who took either view. Of nothing was he more confident than of this: that any honest, well-meant effort to grapple with ills and wrongs which have already dimmed our national greatness far too long, tended to invest with deeper truth and diviner beauty our belief in the Fatherhood of God, to lend more of reality and of inspiring power to our talk of the brotherhood of man, and to stamp on this twentieth century Christianity of ours a closer likeness than it now bears to what Christ himself intended it to be.

The Lord Mayor, in moving the adoption of the reports, paid a high tribute to the worth and excellence of the work done by Mr. Clarke, observing that no one could long occupy the position of Lord Mayor in Birmingham without becoming aware of the enormous amount of good work of which the Hurst Street Mission was the centre. In the name of the city he congratulated Mr. Clarke on his restoration to health, and expressed the hope that he would be spared for many years to continue his fruitful labours for the Mission, and for the city at large.

The Rev. Joseph Wood, in an eloquent and impressive speech, seconded the resolution, referring in warmly appreciative terms both to the excellent character and to the vast extent of the work accomplished by the Mission, much of which he was personally acquainted with.

Officers and Committee were elected for the ensuing year, and the proceedings, which were throughout of an inspiring and enthusiastic character, were brought to a close by the singing of a hymn, and the pronouncing of the Benediction.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT.

SINCE I wrote my last letter several interesting events have occurred in this district. Indeed, it is scarcely possible to conceive of any other district in the kingdom where activities in connection with our group of churches are more varied or more sustained. A Manchester minister has no spare time on his hands; on the contrary, he has to be constantly scheming in order to fit all his engagements in. He would be a strange sort of man who could confine his efforts to his own church. There seems to be something in the atmosphere he breathes that makes isolation impossible. A fraternal spirit dominates us all and makes us interested in each other's work. We probably meet more frequently than the ministers of any other district, and since the monthly visitation scheme was started in 1902, a stronger sympathy than ever has sprung up between the members of different congregations. What with the District Association of Churches, the Domestic Mission, the Home Missionary College, the District Sunday School Association, and other organisations with large committees, we ministers have a pretty full time of it. Moreover, it is such important and interesting work that, although we sometimes grumble at the amount of time it takes, yet it fascinates us to such an extent that our threatened resignations never take effect. Mutual interest between church and church is maintained by fairly frequent change of residence, followed by transference of membership. The new member reminds us on occasion of the fact that his old church is aiming at the same ideals and fighting the same hard fight that we are. But the strongest bond of union between us is, undoubtedly, the District Association. Its business is to keep alive the sense of mutual regard and obligation, and in this it succeeds remarkably well. For it is not stereotyped in its methods, but is ever devising something fresh to stimulate our enthusiasm, and bind us closer together. It never was in better working order than it is now, and, judging from their attendances, the members of the governing body never allow their interest to flag or their ardour to abate.

At the end of January the then President of the Association, Mr. Percy H. Leigh, and Mrs. Leigh extended an invitation to all the members of the committees of all our district Churches and to their wives to a soirée held in the Memorial Hall. The hall was quite filled with guests. An excellent programme of music was provided, and refreshments were served during the evening. The time was spent purely socially, and no speeches were made. It was a very happy thought that prompted this event, for the evening was spent in a most enjoyable manner, and resulted in an intercourse which could but strengthen the ties that bind church to church.

The monthly meetings this year have been held at Longsight, Bradford, and Chorlton, and the April meeting was held last Saturday at Altrincham. There are twenty-two churches within the Association, of which nineteen have already extended invitations to the Governing Body to hold meetings in their buildings. The annual report says:—"The members of the churches visited have expressed very cordial appreciation of the benefit derived from the services and meetings, and the very representative attendances of members of other churches have created a more warm and social feeling throughout the congregations of the district, and the high ideals of the scheme have been well maintained." It is also gratifying to note that the North and East Lancashire Unitarian Mission have adopted the scheme in their district with most satisfactory results, and I am given to understand that the Northumberland and Durham Association are intending to give the scheme a trial even amongst their very scattered churches.

Our friends at Dob Lane, showing as usual remarkable energy and spirit, held a bazaar at which they raised about £300, required for extensions to their school premises, which are a very popular centre of week evening classes. The work done there has received the highest commendation from the Manchester Education Committee. Sales of Work, also very successful, have been held both at Moss Side and Chorlton.

A new organ has been built for and placed in the church at Moss Side, at a cost of £650. It is a three manual instrument, and the builders are Messrs. Jardine & Co., of Manchester. The instrument, which is a very sweet-toned one, has thus far given entire satisfaction. Members of other churches in Lancashire and Cheshire will have an opportunity of hearing it in June, when the Annual Meetings of the Provincial Assembly are to be held at Moss Side.

The Rev. Neander Anderton, who commenced his ministry at Pendleton on March 1, received a very hearty welcome at a soirée held in the schoolroom on March 12. There was a grand gathering of members of the congregation, and of ministers and members of other congregations. The proceedings must have been most encouraging to Mr. Anderton. His ministry there commences very auspiciously. A good spirit prevails amongst his people. Prior to his settlement they made a praiseworthy effort to raise nearly £600 with which to wipe out a church deficit, and to pay off a mortgage on the church property. The church has been fitted with incandescent lights, new seating, and new hymn books. We all feel sure that the settlement of Mr. Anderton in Manchester will not only mean the revival of good times at Pendleton, but also that the work of the whole district will benefit by his sharing in it.

Over £1,000 has already been received towards the cost of extending the premises at Bradford, but £150 more is urgently required. The building contract has been placed, and operations will be shortly commenced. The number of scholars is with great difficulty kept within the capacity of the existing premises, and there is reason to believe that the work there will increase by leaps and bounds when the additional accommodation is provided.

The same may be said of Renshaw Street Mission. The building contract has also been placed for extension of premises there, and by the end of the summer it is hoped that the new rooms will be available for Sunday-school and other allied purposes. Exactly what is to be done at Willert Street is not yet settled, but I understand it is to be definitely decided at the next meeting of the Domestic Mission Committee.

It is with regret that I record the removal of Mr. C. Harding from Manchester. Although increasing years has latterly made it impossible for him to take so active a part in the work of this district as formerly, yet the traditions of his enthusiastic advocacy of all that appertained to the welfare of our Unitarian cause here in Manchester, extend back over the unusual period of sixty years. There is probably no institution in this district which does not owe much to his strenuous support in days gone by; and now that he has hung up his armour, he carries with him into his retirement our deepest respect, and our best wishes that in the years that are left to him he may enjoy good health, and be happy in the remembrance of the worthy example he has set a generation of younger men, of downright earnest and unselfish endeavour to promote the common weal.

We were highly favoured by the weather on Good Friday for the annual meetings of the District Sunday School Association, at Liverpool. The morning service was held in the beautiful church at Ullet-road, and was attended by a crowded congregation. The popularity of these meetings is wonderfully maintained, and nearly all our Sunday-schools were as usual represented. The evening meeting in Hope-street was also a full one. Unfortunately, there was no time for any discussion after the reading of Mrs. Rawlings' paper. On the whole the meetings were highly successful, and will no doubt be long remembered.

The really big thing that is likely to overshadow all others here in this district is the Jubilee of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, which is to be celebrated this year. Elaborate arrangements are to be made for the celebration to take effect in right royal style. Those interested in the college have been canvassed for suggestions as to what would be the best thing to do in order to perpetuate its usefulness. The scheme which has been mainly spoken of is that of the establishment of a college residence for the students and an endowment fund. The need of such a residence has been felt for many years by the students themselves. From many points of view the Memorial Hall is becoming less and less suitable for the purposes of the college. The strongest advocates of the residence scheme are the old students, who, having passed through the college, know "where the shoe pinches." They have practically unanimously signed an appeal to the Committee of the college that the jubilee should be celebrated by the establishment of a residence, and further to demonstrate earnestness in the matter they have themselves promised £1,000 towards the cost. When one bears in mind that they are ministers who for the most part find it hard to eke out their small stipends, it will be seen that the force of their appeal is practically irresistible.

The thirteenth annual report of the Governing Body, presented at the annual meeting of the Association last month, was full of interest. A Lay Preachers' Union is being formed; sixteen of the churches have considered the proposal, and some nineteen names were suggested as those of suitable members. Says the report:—"Every church has a duty to perform in the world, and it cannot continue to discharge that duty unless it makes a demand upon the young men to give themselves to the work of the Gospel." It is confidently expected that a great deal of good will result from the establishment of this Union.

The new effort at Broughton is being prosecuted with vigour. The members have resolved themselves into various committees in order to cover the different departments of church work, but it is now felt that if the resources of the district and the real value of the new movement are to be fully tested it is desirable to appoint for a period a minister who can devote the whole of his time to the work. The obstacle is one of expense; the old Strangeways Church is not yet sold, and the only source of income is that of subscriptions and offertories, at present contributed by those practically interested in the effort.

Since Christmas the Association has been arranging a series of pulpit exchanges, with the consent of the ministers of the district churches, in order to create a greater interest in the religious work and aims which should characterise us all. Although not attempted until late in the winter, it was found possible to arrange for courses of Sunday evening lectures to be delivered in sixteen of the churches during the month of February. These were much appreciated, and no doubt the experiment will be continued next winter. Thus it may be seen that those who are officering the Association are full of new ideas, and that the ministers and laity generally are willing to give any scheme a fair trial, if it has in it any promise of conferring benefit upon the churches. And now we have in our new President, the Rev. D. Agate, a man who is intimately acquainted with the needs and characteristics of all the churches in the district; a man, too, who is himself full of enthusiasm, and who will assuredly leave his mark upon the history of the Association when the term of his office expires. With the advent of Spring, we are all somewhat slackening, and looking forward to a recuperation of our energies in the sunny days; so that when winter comes again, we may once again put a full measure of strength into the new work that will await us.

Charles Roper.

Tito himself, while he triumphed in the apparent verification of his lie, wished that he had never made the lie necessary to himself—wished he had recognised his father on the steps—wished he had gone to seek him—wished everything had been different. But he had borrowed from the terrible usurer, Falsehood, and the loan had mounted and mounted with the years, till he belonged to the usurer, body and soul.

George Eliot.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Wednesday, or Thursday Morning at latest.]

Bolton: Bank-street (Welcome Meeting).—At the Spring Soirée in the Bank-street schoolroom, on Wednesday, April 13, a cordial welcome was offered to the Rev. J. H. Weatherall, the new minister, and to Mrs. Weatherall. 300 sat down to tea in the lower room, and the number was considerably greater at the subsequent meeting upstairs. Mr. J. Percy Taylor, J.P., who presided, on behalf of the congregation and schools offered a very cordial welcome to Mr. and Mrs. Weatherall, and spoke of the fine tradition of ministerial service in their chapel and their confidence in the future. The Rev. R. T. Herford, on behalf of the District, and the Rev. H. W. Turner, on behalf of other Nonconformist Churches in the town, joined in the welcome, and Mr. Weatheral responded. He thanked the various speakers for their kindly references, and for their cordial welcome, and acknowledged the kindness with which he had been received by the congregation and the school. It was a great honour for any man to assume the ministry of Bank-street Chapel with its long and noble list of ministers. They however, were not content to rely on departed glories and to live on the reputation of a thing that was. His experience was that there was a great and strong vitality amongst them, and they would keep it up. They had to fight the materialism and the indifference of the age, but believing in the old faith one dared to stand up and say in spite of the tendency of the age, God is, not simply was. They would be glad to help so far as they could other agencies for good than those connected with Bank-street. The remainder of a pleasant evening was spent in a social manner. On Saturday, April 16, the congregation at Halliwell-road Free Church, which is in connection with Bank-street Chapel, also met to extend a warm welcome to Mr. and Mrs. Weatherall. Mrs. Grindrod and Mr. Bullough, expressed, in appreciative words, the general feeling of pleasure at the new settlement, and the hope of the congregation that the church might steadily progress towards independence under the new ministry. The Rev. John Page Hopps, who was also present, addressed the gathering. The meeting at both churches were inspiring and helpful, and give every promise of future progress.

Carlisle.—The resignation of the Rev. Charles Travers, which we announced last week, has been regretfully accepted by the congregation, he having accepted an invitation to Preston. The Carlisle Journal, referring to Mr. Travers' coming departure, speaks of the admirable social and educational work he has done in the city, as a member of the School Board, where he was specially active as chairman of the School Attendances Committee, and also as chairman of the Carlisle Workers' Municipal Committee and in other ways. Mr. Travers will leave Carlisle in July or August.

Colne.—A sale of work, tea, and concert, were held on Saturday last, in aid of the church funds, opened by the mayor, Alderman Hewitt, J.P. Chairman, Mr. D. Harrison, Padiham. There was a choice and varied assortment of useful articles, pictures, flowers, refreshments, &c. An excellent programme of vocal and instrumental music was supplied by a Japanese troupe from Padiham, and by members of the congregation. The attendance was most encouraging, other churches of the town being well represented and the proceeds amounted to £50.

Dudley.—The Annual Trust Fund sermons were preached on Sunday, the 17th inst., by Miss Gertrude von Petzold, M.A., Minister-elect of Narborough-road Church, Leicester. There was a large congregation in the morning, and in the evening every pew was full. Miss von Petzold's discourses were most earnest and impressive, and were highly appreciated, having a marked effect on all present.

Exeter.—On Wednesday evening, April 13, the Sunday-school children gave a very successful entertainment to an audience that completely filled the Lecture Hall of George's Chapel. The programme included a very pretty little Devonshire play by Miss Biss, entitled "The Fairies of the Lyd."

Failsworth.—At the close of service last Sunday the congregation of Dob-lane Chapel passed a vote of condolence with the family of the late Rev. Joseph Freeston, a former minister of the congregation, who, during his occupancy of the pulpit, endeared himself to a large circle of friends by his noble self-sacrificing work and his zeal in the furtherance of all that led to the physical and spiritual improvement of his fellow men.

London: Kentish Town.—A very successful soirée, arranged by the committee of the Church and the Literary and Dramatic Institute, was held in the schoolroom on the 13th inst. After refreshments had been served and songs rendered by some of the friends, the Rev. Geo. Critchley introduced the subject of the bazaar (to be held in November next) for the consideration of the meeting. He stated the object in view was to raise a sum of at least £100. The hon. secretary announced that the contributions to the fund already amounted to £10, and he urged all those present to work hard and continuously so as to make the bazaar a success. A strong committee of ladies and gentlemen was appointed, and it is hoped that this effort to further the Unitarian cause at Kentish Town will be well supported.

London: Welsh Unitarians.—A meeting of Welsh Unitarians and friends, presided over by Miss Tagart, was held at the Portland Institute and Schools last Sunday afternoon, "To consider proposals for holding Unitarian services in the Welsh language on Sunday evenings at some convenient centre in London." Though the meeting was small, a provisional committee (with power to add to number) was formed, which will meet next week. They hope to gain a good response from the Welsh Unitarians resident in, or passing through London, when further particulars are announced.

Long Sutton, Lincolnshire.—The 204th anniversary of this place of worship, and the fourteenth of the settlement of the Rev. W. J. Pond, was celebrated on Sunday and Monday, 17th and 18th insts. The sermons were preached by Rev. Percy Francis, of Nottingham, formerly of Long Sutton (Congregationalist), to good congregations, in the evening the chapel being more than full. On the Monday evening a public meeting was held in the chapel. The collections, which were good, will be devoted to a fund for repairing the chapel, which is in a very dilapidated condition, especially one of the gable ends, which is in danger of collapsing. With the exception of a new roof in 1860, and some occasional patching, the building has had nothing done to it since its erection. A special effort is being made to raise £100.

Manchester District Association. | The eighteenth of the monthly visits was paid on Saturday last to Altrincham, and eighteen congregations were represented at service or meeting. It turned out a beautiful afternoon, and the considerable number of people who had taken the risks were amply repaid for their trouble both by the glory of the day and the good spirit of the gatherings. Rev. Neander Anderton (Pendleton) led the devotions, and the Rev. H. J. Rossington (Longsight) preached the sermon taking his text from Zechariah iv. 6: "Not by might, nor by power, but by My spirit, said the Lord of Hosts." The sermon more than counteracted the drowsiness encouraged by the warm afternoon, and the appreciation expressed on the lawns and terraces of the parsonage after tea was unmistakable. Rev. Dendy Agate, the new President of the Association, took the chair at the evening meeting and addresses were delivered by Rev. William Holmshaw (Blackley), who spoke of the social message that must accompany the moral and spiritual affirmations of our faith; and the Rev. Henry Pilling (Chorlton), who dealt with the Temperance Question, and made a series of suggestions for strengthening the work of the Association. Mr. Paterson, a former secretary of the Association, welcomed the visitors, and the proceedings terminated with the Benediction pronounced by the chairman. Musical items were provided during the evening by Altrincham friends.

Manchester: Pendleton.—The church anniversary services were conducted on Sunday last by the Rev. Neander Anderton, who preached in the morning on "Dependence and Independence in Religion, and in the evening on "A Unitarian's Belief about Jesus." Both services were fully attended, at the evening service the church was crowded.

North Cheshire Unitarian Sunday School Union.—The annual conversazione was held at the Old Chapel Schools, Dukinfield, on Saturday last, and was attended by about 300 teachers and friends. After tea a meeting of the committee was held, and at this and the after proceedings the President, Mr. Wm. Lawton, presided. The chair was supported by the Revs. H. E. Dowson, W. L. Tucker, A. C. Fox, W. Harrison, W. C. Hall, and H. B. Smith, with the delegates from kindred unions, and Messrs. T. Bradley and A. Slater (hon secretary). Interesting addresses were given by the delegates: Rev. F. Allen (Sunday School Association), Rev. J. Moore (Manchester District S.S.A.), and Mr. J. Wigley (Manchester Unitarian S.S.U). An excellent programme was rendered by the Dukinfield friends, consisting of songs, part songs, action songs by the children, gymnastic exercises by the boys' and girls' gymnasium, and a dramatic sketch. Votes of thanks, hymns, and benediction concluded one of the most successful meetings of the Union.

Norwich.—In place of the usual evening service at the Octagon Chapel on Easter Day, Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was performed by the choir, with a little outside assistance. There was a large congregation, every part of the building being filled. A successful Easter egg service was held on Sunday, in connection with the Octagon Young People's Guild of Service. The service was conducted by the warden, the Rev. A. Hall, and the address was given by Mr. Hipperson, who took for his subject "Selfishness and Unselfishness." Nearly 300 eggs were contributed, which were afterwards divided between the Jenny Lind Hospital, the Isolation Hospital, the Boys' Home, the Girls' home, and some aged poor connected with the chapel.

Preston (Appointment).—The Rev. Charles Travers, of Carlisle, has accepted an unanimous invitation to become the minister of the Preston Congregation.

Sheffield: Upper Chapel.—On Wednesday evening, April 13, Channing Hall was crowded to witness an entertainment, and listen to a cantata, "The White Garland," given by the children of the Guild of Good Endeavour. The Rev. C. J. Street presided, and the whole entertainment was a great success.

Stalybridge (Resignation).—The Rev. W. Harrison has resigned the pulpit here after a ministry of fifteen years and seven months. As the terms of the resignation seemed to put reconsideration out of the question, the following resolution was last Sunday passed:—"That as the Rev. W. Harrison feels that the time has come for him to resign his position as minister of this church, this meeting of members in general meeting assembled, accept his resignation with regret; and take this opportunity of expressing to him their warm thanks for the efficient manner he has laboured on their behalf, both in the pulpit and in all other duties connected with his ministerial work; and their hopes that he may long be spared to enjoy the rest he has so well earned." Mr. Harrison will terminate his ministry on the last Sunday in June.

Torquay.—A series of lectures and concerts during the winter session was brought to a close with a lecture on "Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity." On Sunday week we were favoured with an address at the morning service by Miss G. von Pezold, M.A., of Oxford, who was on a visit to Torquay. During the past few weeks visitors have been numerous, and the attendances excellent.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

SUNDAY, April 24.

Acton, Central Auction Room, Market-place, High-street, 7, Mr. T. J. HARDY.
Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Rev. EUSTACE THOMPSON.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. L. TUCKER, M.A.
Brixton Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. W. STANLEY.
Child's Hill, All Souls' Free Church, corner of Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. JUPP.
Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON, and 7, Rev. GORDON COOPER.
Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. PERRIS.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.
Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. GREAVES.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7 P.M., Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11.15 and 7, Rev. G. CRITCHLEY, B.A.
Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. J. E. STRONGE.
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. JOHN ELLIS.
Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. CARTER.
Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.
Stepney Green, College Chapel, 11 and 7, Mr. C. A. GINEVER.
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15, Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, and 7, Mr. HUGH STANNUS.
Stratford, Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. A. PHARAOH, and 6.30, Mr. E. CAPLETON.
Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, Easthill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. J. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MCDOWELL.
BLACKPOOL, Dickson-road, North Shore, 10.45 and 6.30, PULPIT VACANT.
BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Church, The Hall, Lytham-road, 11 and 6.30.
BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11and 7, Rev. C. C. COE.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church, New-road, North-street, 11 and 7, Rev. J. J. MARTEN.
BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 7, Rev. GEORGE STREET.
CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11, Mr. H. G. CHANCELLOR.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
GUILDFORD, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. RATTENBURY HODGES.
HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30,
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. L. P. JACKS, M.A.
LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. COLLINS ODGERS, B.A., "What has Science done for Religion?"
MAIDSTONE, Earl-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. SIDAWAY BRETTELL, M.A.
MANCHESTER, PLATT CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A. Sunday School Sermon. Special Service for Children at 3.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. E. PIKE.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. GEORGE LANSDOWN.
PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Mr. THOMAS BOND.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 7, Rev. OTTWELL BINNS.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 and 6.45, Rev. F. TEASDALE REED.
SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. AGAR.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FREDERICK B. MOTT.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TROWBRIDGE, Conigre Church, 11 and 6, Rev. J. WAIN.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, Mr. HAHNEMANN EPPS, 11, "Congregational Worship," and 6.30, "The New Birth."

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 7, Rev. A. CHALMERS.

WALES.

ABERYSTWITH, New Market Hall, 11.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY SOUTH PLACE, FINSBURY.—April 24, at 11.15, HERBERT BURROWS, "Krapotkin's 'Mutual Aid.'"

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN SQ., W.—April 24, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "Priests and People in Ireland."

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A. Honours Lond. Preparation for London Matriculation, Trinity College, and Associated Board of Musicians. Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. Apply to the Head Mistress.
Next Term begins Friday, May 6th.

YORKSHIRE.—WESTBOURNE, (SHEFFIELD).
BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
Head Mistress: MISS F. GOODEY, B.A. LOND.
Preparation for Matric., Associated Board of R.A.M. and R.C.M. and Camb. Locals.
School "Recognised by Board of Education."
Splendid situation 600 ft. above sea level.
Hockey, tennis, swimming, Swedish Gymnasium attached to House.
Apply to PRINCIPAL, for prospectus.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY, ADELAIDE PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.
Assets, £158,000.

DIRECTORS.
Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., J.P. 17, Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A. 7, Pall Mall, S.W
Miss CECIL GRADWELL, 7, Victoria-street, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st. S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham, S.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4 per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3 and 3½ per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

BORROWER'S INTEREST 4 per cent. Monthly Repayment, including Principal, Premium, and Interest for each £100.

10 years.	12 years.	15 years.	18 years.	21 years.
1 1 1	0 18 4	0 15 6	0 14 2	0 12 11

Compare the above rates with those of other Societies. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

FRUITARIAN CAKES.
MADE ENTIRELY OF FRUIT AND NUTS,
Uncooked, Concentrated, Natural Food.
READY FOR USE WITHOUT PREPARATION.
For travelling they are ideal. A meal will go in the pocket.

PEAR and WALNUT	7d.	per 8 oz. packet.
APRICOT and NUT	7d.	,, ,,
MUSCATEL and ALMOND ...	6d.	,, ,,
FRUIT and NUTS	5d.	,, ,,
DATE and GINGER	4d.	,, ,,
DATE and LEMON	4d.	,, ,,
DATE and ORANGE	4d.	,, ,,
FIG and CITRON	4d.	,, ,,
DATE and NUT	3d.	,, ,,
FIG and NUT	3d.	,, ,,

Sample Box containing 14 varieties Fruitarian Cakes, 8d.; or with 3 varieties of Nut Butters, post free, 1s.

HUGH MAPLETON, Nut Food Manufacturer,
ARDWICK GREEN MANCHESTER.

The Chinese Labour Question.

A Speech delivered by the

Right Hon. Lord COLERIDGE, K.C.,

in the House of Lords on March 18, 1904.

Three-halfpence, post free,

NATIONAL REFORM UNION,
50, Hayworth's-buildings, Cross-st., Manchester.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKLETS.

By the REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

DAILY MEDITATIONS

(Fourth Edition Revised.)

NIGHT UNTO NIGHT.

Cloth, red edges, 6d.; roan gilt, 1s.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

THIRD TERM. SESSION 1903-4.

A COURSE OF TWELVE LECTURES on

IDEALISTIC ETHICS,

intended to serve as an Introduction to the Study of recent Ethical Writings, will be delivered by Prof. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.

TUESDAY and THURSDAY at 5 o'clock.
Beginning on TUESDAY, APRIL 26th, 1904.

The first Lecture is open to the public without payment or ticket. Fee for the whole course, half-a-guinea.

T. GREGORY FOSTER, Secretary.

LONDON UNITARIAN CHORAL SOCIETY.

A MEETING will be held at Essex Hall, on Monday, April 25, to enrol Members and to consider the Rules drawn up by the Committee as to the construction and work of the Society. Tea, &c., at 7; Business Meeting at 8.30. All who are interested in the formation of the Society are requested to attend.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

THE FIFTY-FOURTH ANNUAL MEETING will be held at

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand,
On WEDNESDAY, MAY 4th, 1904.

The President, W. BLAKE ODGERS, ESQ., K.C., LL.D., will take the chair at 7-45.

The Business Meeting will be preceded by a reception by the President and Mrs. Odgers at 7, to which all Members and friends of the Society are cordially invited.

PLATT CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

On SUNDAY, APRIL 24th, the REV. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A., will preach the Annual Sermons on behalf of the Sunday School, at 11 a.m. and 6.30 p.m. Special Service for the Children at 3.

BLACKPOOL, NORTH SHORE UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.

It is intended to hold a Bazaar in December next to inaugurate a Fund to clear off the liabilities upon the Church property. Particulars later.

MARRIAGE.

CARTER—BURNSIDE.—On April 5th, at the Unitarian Church, Ballymoney, by the Rev. D. Matts, assisted by the Rev. R. J. Orr, M.A., Belfast, Frank Carter, of Stamford, son of the late W. E. Carter, of Woking, Surrey, to Anna Moore, daughter of the late John Burnside, Seacon, Ballymoney.

DEATH.

TAPLIN.—On April 14th, at his residence, Heathfield House, Coventry-road, Birmingham, James Francis Taplin, M.D., youngest son of the late Rev. James Taplin.

Board and Residence.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH. — ARNEWOOD. Pension. Commanding position in the West Cliff-road; full South aspect; sea views and private grounds; close to Winter Gardens, Cliff Promenade, Square or Pier; moderate Tariff.—Apply, MANAGERESS.

CHELTENHAM.—Board and Residence in the best part of Sunny Cheltenham, sheltered from North and Easterly winds. Near the Spas and Gardens. Comfortable home. Moderate terms. Excellent cuisine.—A. G., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, W.C.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—"Cranbrook," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE; most comfortable throughout. Sea View, excellent cuisine. billiard and smoke room, sanitary certificate —Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

LANGLEY HOUSE, DAWLISH, DEVON.—A delightful HOLIDAY RESORT for Ladies and School-girls (Boys under 15) Beautiful country, bracing climate. Sea and Moorland. Prospectus from MISS N. JONES, Matron; or A. E. JONES, Esq., Proprietor.

FELIXSTOWE.—Comfortable HOME for Permanent BOARDERS, Adults or Scholars; also APARTMENTS on reasonable terms.—Apply, Mrs. ROBINSON, Kimberley, Rinelagh-road, Felixstowe.

SIDMOUTH.—A few paying Guests received (permanent or otherwise) in private family.—W., INQUIRER Office, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea-level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort.

THE ABERYSTWYTH CONGREGATION will gladly assist Visitors to find Apartments.—Stamped envelope, A. JOINSON, Chairman, Pier-street.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Enlarged, Remodelled, Refurnished.

PRONOUNCED BY THE PRESS TO BE THE BEST TEMPERANCE HOTEL IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Accommodation for about 250 Guests.

Highly commended by the Rev. Dr. Aked, Rev. Rowland Hill, Rev J. H Jowett, M.A., Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. Alderman White, M.P., the Misses Cadbury and thousands of other guests.

Spacious Coffee, Reading & Drawing Rooms.
Electric Light throughout.

Apartments, Service and Table d'Hote Breakfast from 5/- to 6/6 per day (with Dinner from 8/- to 9/6

77 & 101,
Southampton Row, London.
FREDERIC SMITH & SONS.

Near the British Museum.

KINGSLEY HOTEL

HART STREET, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON.

This well-appointed and commodious Temperance Hotel has passenger Lift; Electric Light in all Rooms; Bathrooms on every Floor; Spacious Dining, Drawing, Writing, Reading, Smoking and Billiard Rooms; All Floors Fireproof; Perfect Sanitation; Night Porter; Telephone.

Bedrooms from 3s. to 5s. per night.

Inclusive charge for Bedroom, Attendance, Table d'Hôte Breakfast and Dinner, from 8s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. per day. Full Tariff and Testimonials on application.

Telegraphic Address: "BOOKCRAFT," LONDON.

Situations,

VACANT AND WANTED.

RESPECTABLE MIDDLE-AGED WOMAN requires post as CARETAKER, or any position of trust where only light duties are required. Manchester district preferred.—Apply for reference to Mrs. A. H. WORTHINGTON, 6, Wilmslow-road, Didsbury, Manchester.

WANTED—LADY HOUSEKEEPER, Experienced, well-educated, Unitarian, over 40.—Address, J. C., 121, Deane-road, Bolton.

COMPANION HOUSEKEEPER. — Capable domesticated Lady, thirty-five, desires re-engagement, where she can give general useful assistance.—G. G., Glenholm, Burgess Hill, Sussex.

THE PRESBYTERIAN FUND.

The Managers desire to give notice of the following Scholarships which are open to Theological Students of all denominations:—

Two Graduate Scholarships of £40 for three years, with free instruction for the B.D. Degree of the University of Wales, tenable at the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen.

Applications must be in the hands of the Secretary before July 23rd, 1904.

For particulars and forms of application apply to G. HAROLD CLENNELL, Esq., Secretary to Presbyterian Fund, 6, Great James-street, Bedford Row, London, W.C.

THE LIBERATION SOCIETY'S ANNUAL MEETING, in connection with the TRIENNIAL CONFERENCE, will be held in the CITY TEMPLE on Wednesday, May 4th, at 7. The Chair will be taken by REV. DR. CLIFFORD (President); and the Speakers will include Rev. Professor GARVIE, D.D., Mr. HIRST HOLLOWELL, Mr. THEODORE E. TAYLOR, M.P., and Rev. JAMES TRAVIS (ex-President National Council of Free Churches).

Organ Recital by Mr. A. J. HAWKINS at 6.30.

Tickets may be had on application to the LIBERATION SOCIETY, 2 Serjeant's-inn, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

Terms for Advertisements.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF-PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6

Special Terms for a Series.

Calendar Notices, 10s. per year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge 1/6.

Situations Vacant and Wanted,
20 words, 1s. 3 insertions charged as 2.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. The entire remittance should accompany all orders to insert Advertisements.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street Strand, London, W.C. Sole Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 20 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale) JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, April 23 1904.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3227. NEW SERIES, No. 331.] LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 30, 1904. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 273
ARTICLES—
A Word of Encouragement 275
Alma Mater 276
Riders to the Sea 277
André Bourrier 282
Dr. Torrey and Unitarians 283
A Statement of Unitarianism 284
LEADERS—
The Faith of To-day 280
The Unitarian Home Missionary College 280
CORRESPONDENCE—
Our Two Colleges 281
The Chinese Ordinance 281
Evil versus Divine Goodness 282
LITERATURE—
The Hibbert Journal 275
MEETING—
North End Domestic Mission, Liverpool 282
OBITUARY—
Richard Enfield 278
CHILDREN'S COLUMN 279
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 285
OUR CALENDAR 286
ADVERTISEMENTS 286

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE Whitsuntide Anniversary Meetings are advertised on our back page this week, and offer a programme of unusual interest. We published recently some account of the Essex Hall lecturer, Professor H. H. Wendt, of Jena; in our present issue will be found an article on M. André Bourrier, editor of the Chretien Francais, whom it will also be a great pleasure to welcome to London.

THE annual meeting of the London Domestic Mission is to be held at Rosslyn-hill Chapel, Hampstead, on Monday evening, May 16, when the chair is to be taken by Mr. Charles Booth, and Mr. Graham Wallas is to be among the speakers. We may expect, therefore, a meeting of special interest, and ask all friends of the Mission to note the date.

LAST week we gave a sober, yet we may say, exhilarating report of the new church at Auckland, New Zealand, which, under the leadership of the Rev. William Jellie, has made such gratifying progress. A more humorous, but still valuable account of our friend's ministerial originality and pluck is given in the Wellington Free Lance, a publication which is nothing if not racy. In about three-quarters of a column of paragraphs, this journal gives notes about a journey made by Mr. Jellie on foot, and dressed in the roughest settler's attire, from Auckland to Wellington, a distance, we estimate, of not less than 300 miles, excluding two boat lifts.

ACCORDING to the Free Lance, Mr. Jellie not only revelled in scenic beauty not to be got at by the ordinary modes of travel, but in an intimacy of communion with the common folk which would not have fallen to his share if his ministerial character had been suspected. Indeed, the reporter is bold to say that he "consequently heard the New Zealand language in all its pristine beauty." Apparently, some whom he met, not understanding why a man should travel so far without goods to sell, took him for a person either uncanny, or, to say the least, unwise. But we suspect that journey will prove profitable to him in many a month to come, and infuse a vein of actuality into his sermons which is but too often lacking in pulpit literature. Mr. Jellie did not fail to give the Free Lance particulars about the Rev. Charles Hargrove's forthcoming visit, and as to his claims to be heard as a lecturer and preacher. Evidently the New Zealand Unitarians have good reason to congratulate themselves, both on their visitor and their permanent minister.

THE programme for the spring meetings of the Congregational Union holds out the promise of a very busy week, and includes in addition to the more usually recognised subjects of denominational interest, some which indicate a broader outlook. The Rev. F. Walker, of New Guinea, is to speak on Industrial Missions, a subject with which his name is already intimately connected. An address is also to be delivered on The Needs of the Industrial Classes, by Mr. W. Crooks, M.P., L.C.C. It is satisfactory to notice this recognition that industrial problems, whether in Australasia or London, are felt to be within the sphere of religious thought. A faith that does not offer guidance in the treatment of secular interests should not wonder if it is found to be ineffective even in concerns which are sometimes erroneously supposed to be more entirely spiritual. And although the mere listening to a few speeches does not count for much, yet there is always the possibility that some day hearing may lead to thinking of a serious and practical kind.

THE House of Commons carried the second reading of the Aliens Bill on Monday by a majority of 124 against an amendment by Sir Charles Dilke, which declared:—

That this House, holding that the evils of low priced alien labour can best be met by legislation to prevent sweating, desires to assure itself before assenting to the Bill that sufficient regard is had in the proposed measure to the retention of the principle of asylum for the victims of persecution.

The amendment admirably sums up the main objections to the Bill, as will be admitted on an examination of its provisions. Alien immigrants are required on landing to produce passports containing particulars as to character, antecedents, and proposed place of residence in this country, and those whose passports do not satisfy the Home Office Inspector on certain specified points may be refused permission to land. Those to whom such permission is given may be required to keep the authorities informed, like ticket-of-leave men, as to what they do and where they go for two years after landing.

DURING that time, if any common informer can show to the satisfaction of the Home Office that the licensed person is "of notoriously bad character," or is in "receipt of such parochial relief as disqualifies for the Parliamentary franchise," he may be ordered forthwith to quit the country. The grounds on which aliens may be prohibited from landing includes conviction within the past five years of a crime which would have permitted of extradition had it been committed in this country; subsistence on immorality, likelihood "to become a charge upon the public funds," lack of "visible or probable means of support," and "notoriously bad character."

Now it is fairly clear that these provisions give no security for "the retention of the principle of asylum for the victims of persecution." There is, of course, no reason why we should give asylum to criminals or to vicious or diseased persons. But, surely, when we require that the passports of immigrants from, say, Russia or Turkey shall state vaguely that they are not "of notoriously bad character," we are giving to the Governments of those countries a golden opportunity to destroy the asylum hitherto afforded by us to their persecuted subjects. Equally obnoxious is the provision by which poverty can be used as a bar to admission or as an excuse for expulsion. Poverty is an ill which has afflicted many of the finest men which this or any other country can hope to count among her citizens. Many are the stories of both immigrants and emigrants who have started a successful career on an empty pocket and "no visible or probable means of support."

BUT perhaps even more serious than its breach of the principle of asylum is the arbitrary power which the Bill gives to the executive over the liberty of the individual. So far as Englishmen are concerned, no such process as this expulsion or exclusion could possibly be adopted on mere ex-parte allegations without the proper investigation by due process of law—except, indeed, under Lord Milner's autocratic rule in South Africa. And it is surely to be deplored that a serious proposal should be made for subjecting those seeking the hospitality of our shores to bureaucratic orders based on assertions unsifted by legal process, and involving, as they often must, untold suffering for perfectly innocent and harmless people.

The Government Licensing Bill, the text of which has now been published, though not so retrograde in some respects as had been feared, will, if passed in its present form, nevertheless place a very formidable barrier in the path of future reforms. There is this to be said in its favour, that it recognises the principle that any compensation given to dispossessed licence holders must be paid out of funds levied for that purpose among the surviving licence holders, and the claim of the brewers that compensation shall be paid out of existing liquor duties is set aside. Another good point in the Bill is that so far as the reduction of licences under compensation and the transfer of licences carrying compensation are concerned, autonomy is given in the county boroughs to the magistracy of the town, and the appeal to the outside County Quarter Sessions Court is in their cases abolished. But non-county boroughs are worse off in this respect under the Bill than under the present law, for these powers are in their case transferred bodily to the County Quarter Sessions, and only the right of recommendation (without which the Quarter Sessions cannot act) remains to them.

But again this complicated Bill apparently leaves the law untouched with regard to the power to refuse renewals on "the ground that the licensed premises have been ill-conducted or are structurally deficient or unsuitable, or grounds connected with the character or fitness of the proposed holder of the licence." That is to say, refusals of renewals or transfers on these grounds remain subject to the veto in both county and non-county boroughs of the outside County Quarter Sessions Court. A third good point is that the Bill for the first time makes it possible to refuse renewals to the "anti-'69 beer-houses" on the simple ground that they are not needed, though we gather that it awards those houses compensation on a higher scale than other licensed houses.

The one supremely important ground of opposition to the Bill is, of course, its enactment that full compensation must be paid to the "persons interested" before the renewal of a licence can be refused on the ground that it is not needed. This converts at a stroke an annual tenancy into a freehold, and doubles the market value of the licence. Licensed premises and shares in the licensed trade have been bought and sold on the clear understanding that the licence is granted only for a year, and that renewal may at any time be refused. To promise that compensation shall be granted in the event of such refusal is simply to make a present of enormous monetary value without any sort of quid pro quo from the trade, the money levied towards the compensation fund being at once recouped by the surviving licencees in reduction of competition.

This present would matter less were it not that it creates an insuperable barrier to the adequate reduction of drinking facilities and other reforms of licensing administration. The alternative plan of a time notice, with compensation proportionate to the amount by which that notice is shortened, avoids this fundamental error altogether, since when that time limit had expired there would be a free field for every kind of reform. It is towards the substitution of such a time limit for the present of a freehold that the efforts of temperance reformers should be directed during the time that the Bill remains before the country. If that substitution is refused the whole Bill must be defeated at all costs.

The Ministers' Institute.—The eighth meeting of the Ministers' Institute was held at Manchester College, Oxford, on April 18, 19, and 20, and recorded the largest attendance since the Institute came into existence. The members joined in Communion in the College Chapel on the Monday evening, the Revs. J. Harwood and C. C. Coe officiating. Tuesday's proceedings commenced with a devotional service, the Rev. E. I. Fripp taking the lessons and prayers, and the Rev. H. Gow giving an address. At the subsequent conference, under the chairmanship of the Rev. W. E. Addis, the Rev. E. P. Barrow, of Manchester, read a most suggestive paper on "The Place of Habit in the Religious Life," and a very helpful discussion followed. At the afternoon meeting the Rev. J. E. Odgers read a paper entitled "Chapel Records," and renewed his proposal made at the Leicester Triennial Conference for the formation of a Historical Society. The proposal met with warm approval, and a resolution was carried by the meeting authorising the Rev. J. E. Odgers and F. K. Freeston to prepare a scheme and call a meeting for its consideration. During the evening the Rev. Frank K. Freeston exhibited a series of lantern slides illustrating the autobiography and centenary of Dr. Priestley. The Revs. E. W. Lummis and R. A. Andreæ led the devotional service on the Wednesday, Mr. Lummis delivering the address. At the third conference the Rev. J. E. Carpenter took the chair, and introduced the Rev. W. B. Selbie, of Emmanuel Church (Congregationalist), Cambridge, who spoke on "Theology in the Modern Pulpit." Mr. Selbie replied at the close of the debate, and was cordially thanked for his friendly visit. The following were elected a committee to arrange for the next Institute in 1905:—The Revs. J. W. Austin, V. D. Davis, E. I. Fripp, H. Gow, E. W. Lummis, J. E. Odgers, and C. T. Poynting. Great regret was expressed at the enforced absence from the meetings of the Principal of the College, Dr. Drummond, who was unfortunately kept to his house by a cold.

The Royal Commission which has been appointed "to inquire into the alleged prevalence of breaches or neglect of the law concerning services, ornaments and fittings, to consider the existing disciplinary procedure and recommend remedies," may come to nothing. That is the result usually to be expected of such inquiries. A Royal Commission has often been used to shelve difficult questions. On the other hand, the range of possible consequences, if the inquiry is seriously pursued, may extend even to Disestablishment. The Commissioners are all men of the Centre. Sir John Kennaway and the Principal of Ridley Hall are reputed to be Low Churchmen, but they are not extreme Protestants of the militant type, and the Protestant Church Party in the House of Commons complains that it is not represented. Lord Halifax and his friends might urge a similar complaint; but perhaps they would refuse to serve on an Erastian board. The legal element, which is strong on this Commission, always makes for toleration. The most probable outcome of its work is a modified victory for the Ritualists. After the fashion of the Lincoln judgment, they will receive a licence in certain matters which are at present doubtful, while others will be denounced as illegal. But unless Parliament acts upon the Report, it is only the indulgent part of it that will take effect.

London Unitarian Choral Society.—The first meeting of this Society since the preliminary gathering was held at Essex Hall on Monday, 25th. Some thirty-six ladies and gentlemen joined the Society, and others, who were unable to be present, will do so in due course. The Society has been very fortunate in securing the services of Dr. H. Walmsley Little as its professional conductor, and he was present at Essex Hall to interview the various members, and, where necessary, to put them through a simple test. The first practice under his supervision will be held on May 9, at 8.0, and it has been arranged to have practices on May 30 and June 13 at Essex Hall, after which the other dates will be arranged. After the enrolment of members a short business meeting was held, Mr. John Harrison, the President, in the chair, at which the Rules as drawn up by the Committee were formally passed. The Society is open to all members of, and friends from, our various churches in the London district, and it is hoped that it may be the means not only of benefiting the members who join it, but also of helping in a musical way any of our churches that may desire assistance.

Mr. Carpenter's Memorial Sermon on Miss Frances Power Cobbe, which was published in the Inquirer of April 16, is being reprinted in pamphlet form, and copies will be ready next week. They may be had at the Book Room, Essex Hall, price 1d., or 1½d. by post.

Life never seems so clear and easy as when the heart is beating faster at the sight of some generous self-risking deed: We feel no doubt then what is the highest prize the soul can win: George Eliot.

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL.*

"The strongest number that has yet appeared" was the verdict on the Hibbert Journal of last October, but the new April number seems to us fairly to equal, if it does not outstrip, that standard of excellence. A decidedly academic number it may be called, for five of the eight articles are written by University professors; but the chief of these prove themselves to have a powerful grasp of living questions of the day, and what they write is popular in the best sense, and full of interest and stimulus.

The place of honour is given to an article by Professor Henry Jones, of Glasgow, on "The Moral Aspect of the Fiscal Question," and we could wish that this might be read by every citizen of this country, and, indeed, of the Empire. He shows with great force how much more there is involved in this controversy than a question of trade. "We seem," he says, "to be looking for shorter cuts to Imperial welfare than that of moralising the people. And we are likely to lose our labours. For, whatever may be said of those who stir in the political waters, the better mind of the people of this country knows full well that human history, as it raises up and pulls down the nations of the world, teaches one fact plainly amidst all the confusion of its errant ways—the fact, namely, that national welfare, like individual well-being, rests in the last resort upon moral foundations, and that the value of a policy, old or new, fiscal or other, depends upon the way in which it tells upon the morals of the people. . . . When, as in the present instance, questions are raised which, as we are told, involve our whole material welfare, our rank and place amongst civilised nations, and even the unity of the Empire, it is not good or wise statesmanship to leave out of consideration the most fundamental of all the conditions of our Imperial well-being."

The true statesman, Professor Jones points out, though he may legislate for a section of the people, always has in view as paramount the interest and well-being of the whole community. To the good citizen "there are few mottoes which rank in moral turpitude with that with which one of the most powerful organisations within the State has disgraced the standard under which it fights—all too successfully—and which reads, Our Trade, Our Politics."

And on the same principle the policy of protection, in all its forms, "stands utterly condemned." For that, Professor Jones urges, would be its inevitable outcome, degrading politics to a conflict of selfish interests, bringing shameful corruption in its train. And he quotes (p. 449) the testimony of an American citizen, a leading lawyer and financier, who speaks from direct experience of what it means in his own country, and what England, for her own sake and the world's, must avoid. And then follows a clear exposition of the true interests of trade in a community and among the nations. The following sentence will sufficiently indicate the position taken up:—

When Rome destroyed Carthage it destroyed a great part of its own prosperity; and any "hitting back" upon our part, if that means weakening our neighbours, weakens ourselves as well.

With this article should be read that by Professor Jethro Brown, of Aberystwith, on "The Passing of Conviction," to which we have referred in a leading article.

Sir Oliver Lodge enters the list as a theologian and reformer of the creeds in his "Suggestions towards the Re-interpretation of Christian Doctrine." He will doubtless have the sympathy of Canon Hensley Henson, who follows with an article on "The Resurrection of Jesus Christ," in which he draws a clear distinction between the conflicting accounts of a bodily reappearance of the Crucified and the spiritual faith in the risen Christ. Sir Oliver does not spare the doctrinal symbols of his Church. The doctrine of the Virgin birth, as so often strenuously upheld (by his Bishop, among others), he characterises as "materialism run rampant." On the popular doctrine of atonement, with its demand for a sacrifice of blood, he is no less severe, pointing to its barbarous antecedents. In conclusion, he speaks of the permanent truths which will emerge the more clearly from a re-interpretation of doctrine in the light of modern knowledge.

We are no aliens in a stranger universe governed by an outside God; we are parts of a developing whole, all enfolded in an embracing and interpenetrating love, of which we too, each to other, sometimes experience the joy too deep for words. And this strengthening vision, this sense of union with Divinity, this, and not anything artificial or legal or commercial is what science will some day tell us is the inner meaning of the Redemption of Man.

The Bishop of Ripon's article on "Gladstone as a Moral and Religious Personality" is warm in praise of Mr. Morley's "Life," and especially of the ready and sympathetic appreciation, the just discrimination, the spirit of kindly reverence shown towards the dominant Christian convictions of Mr. Gladstone's life. Dr. Boyd Carpenter points to the characteristics of Evangelical religion which remained with Gladstone to the end, in spite of his strong leaning to a high doctrine of the Church. Having referred to Gladstone's constant Bible-reading and interest in expository preaching, he adds:—

> Let me give another trait—his habit of asking God's blessing at meal-time. Mr. Gladstone was a member of a London club, select and numerically small. The club was one which had no dwelling-place; but the members met to breakfast and dine together. One evening at dinner a veteran of the club addressed a new member and said, "Mr. Gladstone is the only member of the club who says grace when he presides at dinner." Here is a witness of the way he obeyed at eve the voice obeyed at prime. But not only in outward act of reverence or grateful acknowledgment, but in the inward habit of the soul, did Mr. Gladstone show the abiding power of the early training. Mr. Morley gives us extracts from Mr. Gladstone's diary: in these we find evidence of the spirit of vigilant self-watchfulness, which recognises that religion is a personal matter between God and the soul. We are in the presence of a heart which realises the seriousness of life, and therefore also the claims of the inward life upon all those who desire to make the Christian calling a personal and practical reality.

In the next article Mr. Andrew Lang replies to Professor Stout on the subject of the "Subliminal Self," as expounded by Mr. Myers; and then comes Professor Keyser on "The Axiom of Infinity," while the last of the principal articles is a "Defence," or rather an attack by Dr. Hugo Winckler, of Berlin, on Dr. Budge with regard to "North Arabia and the Bible."

At the beginning of the Discussions there is a protest by the President and other members of the Churchmen's Union for the Advancement of Liberal Religious Thought, against the Bishop of Worcester's treatment of the Rev. C. E. Beeby, and then the heretic himself writes in reply to another critic on the "Doctrinal significance of a Miraculous Birth." Further contributions to the discussion of the "Alleged Indifference of Laymen to Religion" follow, the last being by the Rev. E. P. Barrow, who concludes:—

> Church membership, with its pledges and responsibilities, demands too much; we prefer a vague comprehension, committing us to nothing. We respect all faiths, but will be bound by none. Be this as it may, the layman has his opportunity. Let him preach from the housetop all that the pulpit has taught in vain. Better still; let him go in and out amongst the crowd, introducing the principles of primitive Christianity into public affairs. Then, perhaps, he will feel that there is something still lacking, and will not rest until he has also recovered the principles of primitive Christian worship.

Among the reviews of books is a warmly appreciative notice of Dr. Drummond's "Enquiry into the Character and Authorship of the Fourth Gospel," by Professor Sanday.

A WORD OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

Under the title "Moral Courage," Le Protestant, our Paris contemporary and fellow-worker in the cause of liberal religion, published last week the following brief article, for which we are sincerely grateful:—

> "The English Liberal journal, The Inquirer, judges that nothing that brings into play questions of conscience and of rectitude is alien to religion or ought to be indifferent to a religious journal. It generously takes the field against all that appears to it as a national iniquity, whether it be Colonel Younghusband's expedition into Thibet or the importation of Chinese coolies into South Africa under conditions which leave to the Chinese nothing but the severely regulated use of their arms, and subject them in all other respects to a thinly disguised slavery by depriving them of the greater number of their human rights.
>
> "On account of its attitude with regard to these questions, The Inquirer has been violently attacked by a number of its readers, and threatened with the loss of subscriptions. But its directors do not flinch. They seem lacking in that savoir faire peculiar to those men and those newspapers which desire, above all, to succeed. They are not acquainted with the art
>
> Vitam præferre pudori
> Et propter vitam vivendi perdere causas.
>
> "We give them our brotherly congratulations. L. G."

* Williams & Norgate. 2s. 6d. net.

ALMA MATER.

U.H.M.C.—1854-1901.

Our Alma Mater, it must be confessed with a filial sigh, has not a pretty name, and still less pretty was her maiden name, U.H.M.B., and we, her loyal and devoted sons, are glad that, with commendable feminine sagacity, for her sons' sake, she changed it for another. Her Christian name, appropriate or not, she appropriated, as others do, by proxy. Sometimes we hear, Benign Mother dear, that thy name is not Christian at all. "Great God!" But as we are not, like Wordsworth, "standing on a pleasant lea," we drop our thunderbolts, and still in our right hand carry gentle peace to silence envious tongues. It was not, however, until we left her generous bosom that we, her nurslings, heard much about her name from a hard, cold world. And then a timely anecdote about Mrs. Ulysses Grant's eye, and the reluctance of the President to have it rectified, suppressed the rising sigh that was about to make our bosoms heave, and we exclaimed, "With all thy fault, thy only one, we love thee still!" To have known one woman—at any rate, to have known this benign mother—has been a liberal education to a hundred odd sons, or perhaps more strictly speaking, to all but two hundred. For it must be admitted, although it cannot be urged as a great fault, or any fault at all, that Alma Mater has not been prolific. And what is the basis of a truly liberal education? Is it not that as we gaze into the face of Alma Mater we should seem to see in her,

Cana veritas Atticæ philosophiæ alumna?

And Attic in any sense. For, like Emile Souvestre, most of her sons have been "Attic" philosophers of a very high order. The lower the tariff wall of lodgings, the higher the cost of living; the higher the wall (and nearer the roof), the poorer. Ah! the landladies! Alma Mater's own dwelling-place—for she too lives in a lodging house, or caravanseri rather—is yet to be. And it will be the first Sorbonne of the "Unitarian" body —a simple hostel for some poor students and their teachers. Ah! some day its name, like that, will be a charm that lulls to sleep all Argus-eyed doubt, honest or otherwise. If her sons succeed in providing her a house and home worthy of her devotion to them and of their devotion to her, it shall also be ample enough to be a place of residence for themselves, in their nursling days, that she may not only have better supervision over them, but also have joy in them, for there has always been a sprinkling of another kind of Attic philosophy amongst her sons, the cause, when guests are met and feasts are set, of a merry din. And though they will not cast a long, lingering look behind, yet they will not be ungrateful to the bevy of dainty dames of high and low degrees of "letting," who in times past let lodgings or apartments (preferential tariff styles), and who did their best to be motherly and homely, and so largely succeeded, according to their lights—and fires. "Ah! the mothers!" exclaimed Goethe, and everybody rushed to Weimar to know what he meant. "Ah! the landladies!" exclaim the students; and there will be a stampede if ever the Delphic oracle claims to mean anything. Yet there are authentic tales. A forgetful student once left behind him at his lodgings or apartments his Greek New Testament (for thou canst read, Alma Mater, Greek, a little), known to all but landladies as "Wescott and Hort." He scribbled a hasty note and posted it, or sent it otherwise post haste, begging that some one should be sent with it if coming into the city. The glorious landlady (God rest her body and soul!) guiltless of her lodger s Greek, wrote back to say that the forgetful student had not specified which waistcoat and hat he required. Misprision in the highest degree. Ah! si sic omnes! Still, ab una disce omnes.

Such seasons of refreshing as jubilees and centenaries are privileged occasions, and people emerge from oratio obliqua to oratio directa, and they form grand stopping places, not only to rest and be thankful, but also to be thankful and determined to go on rejoicing, refreshed like a giant to run our race. Under the inspiration of Alma Mater's golden birthday we return thanks to our past masters in divinity and humanity, we submit ourselves again as disciples (sadder now, and wiser men) to all our governors, teachers, spiritual pastors and masters. We order ourselves lowly and reverently to all our betters (especially to M.C.O.). We trust we shall hurt nobody by word or deed, and bear no malice nor hatred in our heart. We shall try to keep our hands from picking and stealing, though just at this present juncture, we are under sore temptation to covet and desire other men's goods.

Alma Mater looks back with reverence and gratitude to Dr. John Relly Beard. "Hoch!" she cries, and every man rises to the occasion. My earliest recollection of Dr. J. R. Beard is that of sitting under him, as a very small boy, in a very small chapel—the veteran's chapel of ease —at Sale. If anybody had asked me in those days what Dr. Beard's strong point consisted in, I should doubtless have replied, with the muddle-headedness of a budding schoolboy, that he seemed to have a weakness for Roman Catholics. Dr. Beard was, at any rate, a blessing to such a kind of boy, for if asked what the sermon was about, it was safe to say Roman Catholics, and nobody seemed to doubt either the Dichtung or the Wahrheit of it. I sometimes wonder whether I should ever have looked upon the face of Alma Mater if it had not been for a chance meeting with Dr. Beard on the Rialto at Sale. I was gazing on the placid stream of the classic Bridgewater Canal, interested chiefly in the tow-path and the barges, and looking doubtless more innocent than any boy ever was, when a voice that still rises from the past with indelible accents, asked me to show him my copy-book. Having probably approved the unimpeachable morality of its doctrines, he asked me if I should like to be a minister. I listened like a three years' child. I could not choose but hear. Whatever my thoughts were, it is clear they were worth a penny to Dr. Beard. Now people may say that this was bribery and corruption, but the fact is, account for it as one may, that almost every old gentleman who waylaid me in those days gave me a penny, and almost every old lady disappointed me with a kiss, and of younger ladies I had no opinion in those days. It was, I am afraid, only my "beaux yeux" that extracted pennies and disappointments. My thoughts were good for nothing, or, at any rate, for far less. When I got home, probably a little flustered by the recent encounter with my pastor and master, the interview was described by my respected relatives as a case of "putting ideas into a lad's head." "Be aye sticking in an idea," says Oliver Wendell Holmes somewhere; "while you're sleeping, it'll be growing." Subsequently, long years after, those ideas began to shoot and sprout, and the Rev. John McDowell (one of Alma Mater's worthiest alumni) came round with the watering-can, and did his best to prevent the crop from becoming ill weeds. During the forthcoming Jubilee celebrations, I make no doubt, Dr. John Relly Beard will inhabit the praises of his old students, and yet speak, as he yet leaves with us his undying faith.

Alma Mater acknowledges the stately scholarship of the Rev. William Gaskell, Master of Arts, whose not least claim to her gratitude is, that he married Mrs. Gaskell, knew everybody worth knowing, and could tell with an eighteenth century elegance all that was worth telling. One rarely meets an old alumnus without hearing some "good thing" of Mr. Gaskell's. Only yesterday one related how, when a student was preaching before Mr. Gaskell (who seemed at such times like the Duke of Devonshire at all times abysmally somnolent), and perorating about "in that dim past when our ancestors were swinging from bough to bough in some primeval forest," Mr. Gaskell opened his eyes and sweetly ejaculated, "Speak for yourself, Mr. X., speak for yourself." Stately, and just a shade forbidding, Mr. Gaskell was in all important affairs the quintessence of kindness. When the Rev. J. Edwin Odgers, M.A., followed in the Principal's chair, Alma Mater cast an anxious glance at the portals and tested the structure of the flooring, for she said with some little nervous palpitation, "This one has the thews of Anakim." And, indeed, she knew that in his opinion the spacious Common Room of the students was considered as a "mere cockloft," and she feared that the lecture-room would hardly afford space enough for his Samsonian voice to go out as at other times, and shake itself. It was said of him by a budding orator—too early, alas! nipped in the bud—that "he thundered from the trembling rostrum, whilst loud the rafters roared." There was, indeed, something truly of the Olympian Jupiter about him, yet when he would sometimes sit in "the cockloft" (of necessity at times, for Alma Mater's abode is only a lodging-house) and nearly filled all the space, whilst he was trying to teach two "hopeless cases" to lisp in Horatian numbers, or emulate the purity of the style of "the mightiest Julius," we recognised how

His heart
The lowliest duties on herself did lay.

The most recondite and impossible things were always "perfectly obvious" to "the capital O," as some fond students called him. After his day—as principal, for he descends still, disguised as junior visitor—cracks and fissures were seen in the general structure—not of the fabric but of the institution. And the jubilee is the occasion seized for filling them up and making them good. As to her present Principal, Alma Mater had no idea that classics and divinity were mere child's play to him, and that he considered that the serious business of life consisted in amassing an encyclopædic knowledge, a kind of Encyclopædia Cosmopolitana, of anecdotes, not of an age but of all time. And a student of the Higher Crypticism affirms, without any Galloping assumptions, that Shakespeare in one of his most successful anachronisms, is really referring to Principal Alexander Gordon, where he says:—

> A. G. cannot wither nor custom stale
> His infinite variety.

As it did not take a lifetime to unearth that cryptogram, it has that advantage in its favour. Cannot you imagine the Principal extending his tortoise-shell snuff-box to that Higher Cryptic, and wondering with a chuckle, whither Cana Veritas, naked and not ashamed, would lead her panting votaries next?

Now is it surprising, Alma Mater, that thy sons should be firmly grounded upon thee? Is it surprising that they should eagerly desire to house thee in a mansion worthy of thy past and still worthier of thy future? Is it surprising that they should consider, even in the present state of the Parliamentary Blue Books, that £20,000 is not an impossible figure to be raised? Is it surprising that all thy sons, with phenomenally few exceptions (of which few we have good hope that they have only temporarily fallen asleep in their allegiance), have as one man spontaneously desired this thing? Is it surprising that in a fortuitous concourse of the first ten men out of the hundred odd men still alive and all alive, they should promise to contribute in five years (not of their superfluity but of their living) little short of £200, and that the next ten, and the next ten up to ten times ten, will probably do something similar, so that £1,000, if not over, will be raised by them? It is true these alumni feel that the generous public had much to suffer from them in the days when they came to hear them as preaching students—if they did come, for they were mostly with us in the spirit. But we would beseech them not to remember the sins of our youth. We were as good as a soporific to some; we gave others a legitimate excuse for taking a much-needed holiday. There were no collections taken when we preached. We disturbed nobody's cherished and lifelong convictions or prejudices. We never preached politics. The worst that could be said of us was that either we were very young or that we were very promising. And in our innocence we never felt the lurking sarcasm. And so we slept peacefully, and were grateful to admiring congregations. Are not these things to be put on the credit side of the account? Have they not been worth at least £20,000 to the laity all these fifty years? If ever a body of teachers and taught alike, in learning on the one side, and in aspiration on the other, constituted a genuine College, that has come to stay, it is this one, that with amazing modesty and humility has been content to live in a veritable Caravanseri, yet unceasingly grateful for the rooms in a noble and notable building, the Memorial Hall, loaned to it. Nevertheless, Alma Mater would rather be a prisoner in the Vatican than so lodged for ever. We, her grateful sons, feel for her and wish we could house her in the Vatican for a few years, whilst her own house is being discovered. The Memorial Hall is a nice place, but it is a General Assembly Room of the first comers. "One Purpose one Building" is our motto, and if the College is worth housing it is worth housing well. I have often tried to imagine myself a rich man. Ah! Alma Mater carissima, no castle in Spain, nor yet in the air, was ever more glorious than the House would be where thy name should be honoured. Not large but beautiful. Simplex munditiis, as becomes thy twentieth century Puritanism, that deigns sometimes to smile. Is there not a Robert de Sorbon that will raise, or help to raise (or purchase), "a hostel for some poor students and their teachers"? We poor men have always preached brotherhood, and have always tried our best to be brotherly to rich men. But somehow the state of things the Blue Books divulge is not conducive to reciprocation. When things are at their best the only other change is an ebb tide; and when things are at their worst it takes a long time for the flowing tide to carry you to the crest of the wave of prosperity; and when you are there, why, it is da capo once again. It is to be feared there is nothing for it but a soldiers' battle, nor any despising of the day of small things. We love the founder, who did not despise the low estate of his students; we love the great-hearted gentlemen who have taught us, and borne with ten thousand crudities and uncouthnesses, we hundred odd men have shown ourselves by our spontaneity, brotherly and loyal, we are scattered over the three kingdoms and the Principality, we have surely put some poor wandering souls under obligation to us over that area, and others, a company whom perhaps no man can number, are open to attack along many lines of appeal. This is our Waterloo. Up, Guards, and at 'em! "Those who are grateful can afford to be sanguine."

E. L. H. THOMAS.

WE ought to speak of religion as something which we ourselves know. Its influences, struggles, joys, sorrows, triumphs should be delineated from our own history. The life and sensibility which we would spread should be strong in our own breasts. This is the only genuine, unfailing spring of an earnest ministry. Channing.

COUNTRY HOLIDAY MOVEMENT.—Miss Lawrence, 23, Campden House Chambers, Campden Hill, London, W., acknowledges with thanks receipt for this fund of the following sums:—Mrs. Timmins, 5s.; Mr. Charles Jecks, £1; Rev. Ceredig Jones, 10s. 6d.

RIDERS TO THE SEA.

A MOST interesting development in contemporary literature is to be found in the new school of Irish writers whose work has recently been brought to notice by the performances of the Irish National Theatre Society, in Ireland and in London, and by the publication of a collection of verses under the editorship of "A. E." The names of Mr. W. B. Yeats, Dr. Hyde, and Lady Gregory, and the elusive personality of "A. E.," have already become familiar to us, but now we are making acquaintance with a group of younger writers of promise. Chief among these, perhaps, is Mr. J. M. Synge, the rendering of whose "Riders to the Sea" was the central achievement of the Irish players at the Royalty Theatre, London, on March 26 last. Their programme included, besides, two short plays of the President, Mr. Yeats, but though these were marked by their author's fine qualities, "Riders to the Sea" surpassed all else in the simple intensity both of its conception and presentment.*

Indeed, Mr. Yeats himself says of it, with characteristic generosity, that to him it seems to be "the finest piece of tragic work done in Ireland of late years. One finds in it, from first to last, the presence of the sea, and a sorrow that has majesty as in the work of some ancient poet."

Mr. Synge has been spending his summers among the fisher folk of the Arran Islands, and his play is the fruit of these visits. It introduces us into a poor peasant family whose cottage is hard by the shore. They have been eleven in all, but already the father and grandfather and four of the sons have perished at sea, and now there is no news of Michael, the fifth. Only the old mother, and her two girls, and Bartley, the youngest son, are left; and now Bartley must go by the boat, though the wind is rising, to sell the pony at the fair on the mainland. As the play opens, Cathleen the older daughter, is making a cake for him; she has put it on the fire and begun to spin, when her younger sister comes in with a bundle of clothes that were taken from a drowned man off the Donegal coast. The young priest has given them to her, bidding her see if they be her brother's; but as to stopping Bartley, he had assured her that they need not fear, God would not take him and leave them destitute.

The old mother is asleep within; but now they hear her stirring, and hide the bundle as she comes in querulously saying that Bartley will not go this day. But at that Bartley himself appears in haste, subdued and sad. It is a rough day for the sea, and he knows its perils well, but this is the only boat sailing for a fortnight, and go he must. He wants the rope for the red mare's halter; it is hanging up against the new white boards they have got for Michael's coffin—if, may be, the sea shall give them back his corpse. Old Maurya tries in vain to stay him. Bartley hardly notices her words, he cannot answer them. There is already upon him some foreboding sense of his doom. Cathleen remonstrates with her mother, and chides her because she has omitted to give him her blessing. Then they find they have forgotten the cake, and they hurry off the bent old woman by a short cut, to meet Bartley. While she is gone the two girls undo the bundle of clothes, and find they are Michael's. Indeed these are the very stockings that Nora knitted.

* It was printed in Samhain for October last. Dublin: Sealy, Bryers & Walker; London: Fisher Unwin. Price 6d.

Maurya comes back, bringing the cake with her. She sits down by the fire and begins to keen softly. The girls are perplexed. "Did you see Bartley?" says Cathleen. "I seen the fearfullest thing," she answers. Cathleen looks out, and through the window she sees Bartley riding the red mare, and the grey pony behind. But Maurya cries out at that in terror. They run to her, and as they crouch beside her she declares, hoarsely, how she has seen Bartley galloping by on the red mare, and Michael following after on the pony in gay new apparel. Then Cathleen, too, begins to keen. It is the sure presentiment of death. Nora protests feebly, but in vain. Maurya, in a strange, clear, low soliloquy, tells the tale of her sons, the Riders to the Sea—of Stephen and Shawn, drowned in the golden mouth; of Sheamus and his father, lost at night, their bodies never recovered; of Patch, who perished by the upsetting of his curagh.

She is telling how the women came in that day, crossing themselves silently, and she sitting with Bartley, a baby, on her knees; and after them the men carrying something in half a sail, that dripped and left a track up to the door; when, as she tells it, the women begin to enter, and the men to carry something in a dripping sail. Then Cathleen hands her mother the package of Michael's clothes; but Maurya is not sure if, after all, it will be he. And it is not. It is Bartley they carry on a plank. The grey pony has knocked him into the sea, and he was drowned. They lay his body on the table, the carriers kneel by the door, the women keen softly. Old Maurya kneels at his head, and the girls by his feet. Then Maurya says,—

"They're all gone now, and there isn't anything more the sea can do to me." She sprinkles the body with holy water, and goes on:

"It isn't that I haven't prayed for you, Bartley, to the Almighty God, . . . but it's a great rest I'll have now, and it's time, surely. . . . It's a great rest I'll have now, and great sleeping in the long nights after Samhain, if it's only a bit of wet flour we do have to eat, and may be a fish that would be stinking." Then Kathleen turns to one of the men and asks him about the coffin; with a touch of grotesque but perfect realism, they debate about the nails, which Maurya has forgotten. Old Maurya is sprinkling Michael's clothes now; she has emptied the cup, and she feels that the end of it all is come. She asks God's blessing on the souls of her sons, and on her own soul, "and on the soul of everyone who is left living in the world. . . . Michael has a clean burial in the far north, by the grace of the Almighty God; Bartley will have a fine coffin out of the white boards, and a deep grave surely. What more can we want than that? No man at all can be living for ever, and we must be satisfied." And so the curtain falls on a scene of brusque and melancholy beauty.

It is, as will be seen even from my sketch of it, a play of extraordinary simplicity and pathos. And it was played with deliberate sincerity. It may well be that it is the best thing which theatre-goers have seen in London in our time. In any case it was a revelation of the possibilities of dramatic art, thus conceived, as the interpreter of the inner life of the people. The acting was serious throughout; no note, no gesture, jarred. There was no mannerism, no display, no rhetoric, no false sentiment. In a word, it was a piece of direct and classic art.

H. Bryan Binns.

OBITUARY.

RICHARD ENFIELD.

The name of Enfield has for generations been honourably associated with the public life of Nottingham and with the congregation of the High Pavement Chapel. In the tradition of liberal Nonconformity it goes still further back to Dr. William Enfield, minister of Benn's Garden Chapel, Liverpool (predecessor of Renshaw-street and Ullet-road), then of Warrington, where he was minister and tutor at the Academy, and finally at the Octagon Chapel, Norwich, where he died in 1797. A son of his, Richard Enfield (grandfather of the subject of the present notice), was Town Clerk of Nottingham in the early years of last century, and was succeeded in that office by his son Henry, who died in 1845 after twenty-nine years of service. His eldest son, William (great-grandson of Dr. William Enfield) then succeeded, and died in 1875 at the age of seventy-one. It is of Richard, the fourth son of Henry Enfield, that we are here to speak. He passed away at his residence, Bramcote, near Nottingham, on Saturday afternoon, April 23, the last of his generation, being eighty-seven years of age.

Richard Enfield was born February, 1817, in a house in the Low Pavement, Nottingham, and throughout his life was a faithful member of the High Pavement congregation. His mother was a Norfolk Dowson; his sister, if we remember rightly, was the wife of John Withers Dowson, of Norwich. Another elder brother was the late Edward Enfield, of London, whose son still maintains the family connection with the High Pavement congregation at Nottingham.

Born of a family of lawyers, Richard Enfield followed the same calling, and also fully maintained the family tradition of philanthropy and good citizenship. He was articled to his father, and, having been admitted as a solicitor in 1841, the rest of his life was devoted to Nottingham. He was twice President of the Incorporated Law Society of that town, and more than once served as Under-Sheriff. To the charitable and educational institutions of the town his devotion was unstinted. He took a special interest in the work of the Mechanics' Institute, and he was the trusted friend in whose hands an anonymous donor placed the £10,000 which in 1875 led to the foundation of the University College.

Mr. Enfield, though his own family have not followed him in that respect, was to the last a very earnest Unitarian, and deeply interested in the welfare of our churches. He served in 1885-6 as President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and was also President of the North Midland Association, and a constant friend in the furtherance of denominational activities. His connection with the High Pavement Chapel was life-long. Of what he did in the schools there, the following passage from the memoir in the Nottingham Guardian relates:—"His interest in education was further shown by his work and close connection with the High Pavement Day and Sunday Schools (the former of which is now represented by the High Pavement (Stanley-road) Council Schools). Few know how much the day schools, of the Board of Managers of which he was for many years chairman, owed to his care and generosity, but no notice of Mr. Enfield would be complete which failed to record his deep and abiding interest in Sunday-school work. He was for upwards of half a century a teacher of the senior classes or a superintendent of the High Pavement Sunday-school, and his faithful service, his regularity, and punctuality, and his evident sense of the importance of the work will be a cherished memory among those who were privileged to be associated with him, while the hearts of his old scholars, many of whom now occupy positions of trust and importance in the city, will be the sadder to-day for the loss of their old friend and teacher. What the private benevolence of one who took so great an interest in charitable work has been will never be told. The poor have lost a friend, who gave them not only means of subsistence in hard times, but strove daily to increase their opportunities of advancement in knowledge and the better part of life."

Preaching on Sunday evening in the High Pavement Chapel, the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas spoke of Mr. Enfield's beneficent career, and said that everywhere, and through all things, he revealed not only conspicuous ability, but great force of character, high ideals, and the loftiest tone of the Christian life. He was a type of the best citizen, and of the purest Christian culture, and his memory would remain with them to be an incentive and inspiration in all good works. Their loss was great, but it was reverent thankfulness that found chiefest place in their hearts as they thought of so noble a career.

The funeral was on Thursday afternoon at Bramcote, a memorial service being held at the same time in the High Pavement Chapel.

To Correspondents.—Letters, &c., received from E. H. C., F. W. D., C. H., J. L. H., F. H. J., W. H. J., K. L., C. R., V. A. S., W. S., J. M. Ll. T., A. H. W., J. C. W., W. W.

NORTH END DOMESTIC MISSION, LIVERPOOL: ANNUAL MEETING.

The forty-fifth annual meeting of the North-end Domestic Mission (Bond-street and Hamilton-road) was held in the Hope-street Church Hall, on Thursday, the 21st inst., Mr. W. C. Rawlins in the chair.

The reports of the Committee, and of the Rev. J. L. Haigh, Miss Wells, and Mr. W. G. Topping, giving particulars of the work at Hamilton-road and Bond-street, had been previously printed and circulated.

A letter was read from Mrs. H. D. Roberts, who, as visitor for the Liverpool Sunday School Society, had visited the Hamilton-road Mission, pointing out the inadequacy of the accommodation and the bad state of repair of the building in spite of the efforts of the people at Hamilton-road, who had papered the walls with their own hands; and stating that she had learnt that children were sent away Sunday after Sunday from lack of room. Mrs. Roberts also stated that the work of the school filled her with admiration, the earnestness, the fulness, the energy, and the vigorous young life enlisted in sympathy of effort being quite arresting and surprising, and that if so much can be done under these conditions, what might not be achieved under happier conditions?

The Chairman pointed out that, with the funds at the disposal of the committee, it was impossible to do more than was being done. The accounts showed a debit balance for the year of £120, and that unless further support was forthcoming it might be necessary to close the Mission at Bond-street, although he was sure that the work carried on there was quite as successful on a smaller scale as that at Hamilton-road itself. The fact that there was a danger of losing Miss Wells was also a great cause of anxiety to the committee.

Mr. Charles W. Jones moved—

That this meeting desires to express, on behalf of the supporters of the Mission, the full confidence they feel in their missionaries, and to offer them a renewed assurance of hearty sympathy in all branches of their work.

He stated that his experience as President of the Local Branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, convinced him of the necessity of lady missionaries among the poor.

The Rev. J. Crowther Hirst seconded, and the motion was unanimously carried.

The Rev. J. L. Haigh, Miss Wells, Mr. W. G. Topping then replied.

After the adoption of the report and accounts it was moved by the Chairman, seconded by Mr. Philip Holt, and unanimously agreed—

That this meeting accepts with the deepest regret Mr. Alfred Booth's resignation of the office of hon. treasurer, which he has so ably filled for the last thirty years, and thanks him for all his services during this long term of disinterested labour.

Mr. Booth having replied, the committee were elected, Mr. Mark P. Rathbone, 10, Exchange-court, 26 Exchange-street East, being appointed hon. treasurer. The proceedings closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

Copies of the missionaries' reports and of the accounts can be obtained from the hon. secretary, Mr. Kenneth Cook, 45, Parkfield-road, Liverpool, S.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

SHAKESPEARE'S MIRANDA.

Miranda was born in an Italian palace. She did not remember her mother, and she could afterwards recall nothing of her early life but that she had four or five women once that tended her.

Her father, Prospero, was Duke of Milan, and his business was to look after his dukedom, to see that his people were well governed. But he cared more for his books than for other people, and whilst he was "rapt in secret studies" the management of affairs was left to his brother, whom he thoroughly trusted and loved. But this brother, Antonio, was ambitious, and since he had the work and the power of a duke, he wanted the name and honour too.

So he plotted with the neighbouring King of Naples, Prospero's enemy, and made an evil bargain that he might become duke in his brother's place. One midnight Antonio opened the gates to treacherous soldiers, who seized Prospero, and hurried him and poor little crying Miranda out of Milan.

Prospero had been a gentle duke, and his people loved him too much to allow any violence to him or his little daughter. So Antonio had to gain his end by indirect means. Prospero and Miranda were put on board ship as if for a voyage, and having been taken out to sea were cast adrift in a boat so rotten that the very rats had left it as unsafe. But happily they were not without food, water, and wraps, for these things, with other necessaries, had been put into the boat through the charity of one of the King's party.

The little girl was not yet three years old. She had cried when strange soldiers hurried them along the streets in the darkness. But now, alone with her father on the open sea, under the quiet sky, she was not afraid. She knew nothing of danger from a rotten boat, rough waves, or stormy winds. Prospero could have wept tears of despair, but Miranda (as he told her afterwards), like a cherub, just smiled, and seemed so happy and brave, that her father took courage again, and was ready to wait calmly for whatever should happen.

Can you imagine these two? The lonely man who, neglecting other people, had buried himself in his books, now perhaps for the first time really made friends with his little motherless daughter, who sat there smiling at him, full of trust and love. I think that when Shakespeare imagined this part of the story, he himself knew how good a companion a little child can be.

The winds and waves were kinder to Prospero and Miranda than Antonio had wished. The old boat was at last gently washed upon the sandy shore of a beautiful island, where they landed safely.

This island proved a wonderful place indeed. There were smooth yellow sands where you could imagine water sprites dancing together and chasing the waves as the tide rose and fell. There were rocky nooks on the shore, and higher up, out of reach of the waves, a sort of cell or cave was ready to serve Prospero and Miranda as a house. This cell had a grass-plot in front, and was sheltered from the wind by a grove of lime trees whose sweet blossoms scented the air and attracted the bees.

To make this new home comfortable they had the "rich garments, linens, stuffs, and necessaries" from the boat. Amongst these things were some of the books which Prospero loved, and with these he arranged part of his cell as a study.

On the island itself was "everything advantageous to life." The salt-water pools provided fish, the rocks shell-fish; the woods supplied nuts, fruits, and plants for food, with wood also for burning.

But there were no other people on the island except a deformed savage, who showed Prospero where to find springs of fresh water, berries fit to eat, filberts and crab-apples. Prospero called him Caliban, taught him to speak, and was kind to him. But he remained a savage, and would not learn gentle ways.

Of the airy or fairy sprites of the island the chief was Ariel, who served Prospero not only obediently, but willingly and faithfully, out of gratitude, for Prospero had released him from imprisonment in a cloven pine tree. Ariel could fly, swim, dive into the fire, assume any strange shape, and even make himself invisible. He could run upon the wind, or ride upon the clouds, and was as wonderful a traveller as light or lightning. He could sing and make music. Indeed, the island was full of noises, sounds, and sweet airs that gave delight and hurt not. To Caliban, who was surly and lazy, Ariel proved a frequent tormentor, rousing him when he wanted to sleep, and urging him on to do his work.

In his former life Prospero had found his library a dukedom large enough, and had neglected other people. Now in his island kingdom, however much he needed other people, he had no subjects but Caliban and the sprites, no companion but his daughter.

And what sort of life do you think it was for Miranda? As she grew older her father taught her, and she proved a willing pupil. But however happy a child may be over its lessons, it wants to play too, and even lessons are better when not learned alone. She had no young companions, and never saw anyone but her father and Caliban. The sprites dancing and singing on the sands, she could not see. She neither sings nor dances, and we never hear her or her father laugh. Did she still remember how to smile, I wonder? Fortunately, having forgotten her early life, she did not know what she missed. But you know what a difference companions make. The most beautiful island with rippling waves and yellow sands and yellow cowslips, with sunshine and music, could not make up for the lack of other people and other children to play with.

If we realise the loneliness of Miranda's life in a world with only three people in it (and one of them a Caliban) we shall perhaps come back to our own life more grateful for our companions and for all the other people whom we see and hear of about us, who help us in so many different ways. But this is not the end of the story. What happened twelve years later, through the tempest which Prospero raised by his magic power, I must tell you next week.

Lilian Hall.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C.

LONDON, APRIL 30, 1904.

THE FAITH OF TO-DAY.

THERE is little of it, Professor JETHRO BROWN declares, in a striking article on "The Passing of Conviction," in the current number of the Hibbert Journal. The forces of disintegration have so largely had their way, that while the old structure of religious beliefs is shattered, no strong power of conviction and lofty purpose in life has come to take the vacant place.

"The vast majority of men have slackened their hold upon older forms of belief without finding new forms to take their place. Shallow minds seem ready to deny the possibility of more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in their philosophy; and a far greater number, without facing disturbing questions on their own account, are vaguely conscious of doubts and uncertainties which they cannot determine, and prefer not to think about."

The vast influx of new knowledge which has marked the past century is only one of the causes to which, in Professor BROWN's view, this enfeebling of faith is due. Another potent cause he finds in the great increase of wealth. The rule of Mammon stands in the way of any loftier ideal.

"Wealth has become the supreme object of individual effort, and almost a condition of individual distinction. The whole nation is tainted; and the term 'conflict of nations' is so identified with commercial rivalry that we are left to suppose all other kinds of excellence superfluous. Whether men pursue the new prize for its own sake, or for the luxuries which it brings, or for the social position which it assures, the materialising influence of energies devoted to the accumulation of capital have tended to develop a type comparable to the man of whom Jeremy Taylor said that he would rather die twice than lose his fortune once."

And with this rule of Mammon, there is also noted the worship of pleasure, a new despotism to which the Churches, the Press, and literature are all alike accused of bowing. We ask attention to the passage (pp. 562-3) in which this point is made. "In pretence of a full life," says Dr. BROWN, "we lead an empty one. The joy of peace and the strength which comes of calm reflection, banished from the workhour by the intensity of the competitive struggle, are driven from the hour of leisure by the unresting pursuit of diversion."

The result is that to a large proportion of the people religion has lost its serious meaning, and it is difficult to escape the fear that where serious belief has perished the degradation of society must inevitably follow. Even among habitual churchgoers our Mentor finds that any but the highest motives largely prevail.

"A few there may be who show in their lives the mystic power of the older faith; the vast majority are not religious in the Puritan sense. Their morality is based upon prudence, habit, and the fear of their neighbours' censure, rather than upon deep convictions of any kind. I do not think that the years that have passed since EMERSON spoke have done aught but add force to his censure: 'There is Faith in chemistry, in meat and wine, in wealth, in machinery, in the steam-engine, galvanic battery, turbine wheels, sewing machines, and in public opinion, but not in divine causes. A silent revolution has loosened the tension of the old religious sects, and in place of the gravity and permanence of those societies of opinion, they run into freak and extravagance. . . . Not knowing what to do, we ape our ancestors; the churches stagger backwards to the mummeries of the dark ages. By the irresistible maturing of the general mind, the Christian traditions have lost their hold.'" (Essay on Worship.)

"Make reservations as one may," Dr. Brown concludes, "it remains true that for the community knowledge has not brought wisdom, wealth and pleasure have not beautified life, and the influence of new possessions as a whole has been to undermine old beliefs without substituting new ones."

Then we have to ask, Where can we look for deliverance into a better faith, a nobler strength, and a loftier purpose in life? How shall the people gain once more a strong hold upon the true life with God?

Professor HENRY JONES helps effectually towards an answer to these questions in his article on "The Moral Aspect of the Fiscal Question," in this same number of the Hibbert Journal, where he shows that the supreme question is of character in the people, and pleads earnestly for a high ideal of national life. The patriot, the social reformer, and the minister of religion must be at one in this. The strength of a nation can be in righteousness alone, in fellow-feeling with all mankind; and in that strength of righteousness, made perfect in love, will be found anew unconquerable faith in the living GOD. The Churches have to face the facts of life, and in self-forgetting service of the Kingdom, with all true citizens, give themselves anew to be led in GOD's way. Then the light must grow clearer, and the truth be manifest, because the FATHER's will is done.

Looking upon the causes which have lowered the standard of life and enfeebled faith, one sees very clearly certain things that must be sought after. Among them, undoubtedly, a greater simplicity of life, and honour for the primitive strength and integrity of fearless, independent manhood, that will not stoop to any base service in the pursuit of luxury and wealth, but enters with delight into the glory of the world as GOD has made it, and in the spirit of true brotherhood works for the common good. The effective power of religion must be found in the service of present needs, in striving to make life for the whole people, in the world as it is, what the prophetic faith of CHRIST demands. Where men are devoted, with their whole strength, to that unselfish service, and in such steadfast purpose find a good greater than any private, personal end, there will be the beginning of the new life of faith, which will grow into conscious fulfilment of the purpose of the living GOD, in an abiding communion of the spirit, beyond the power of death.

THE UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

IN last week's Provincial Letter, writing from Manchester, Mr. ROPER referred to the coming celebration of the Jubilee of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, and especially to the enthusiasm and self-sacrifice with which the old students have thrown themselves into an effort to secure for the college they love and honour a permanent residence as the best way of celebrating the Jubilee. This week another old student, who is also one of the secretaries of the college, offers a glowing tribute to his Alma Mater, and a most persuasive plea for such a "hostel for some poor students and their teachers." With delightful humour he writes of the motherly landladies who have cared for the students in their scattered lodgings, and recalls the virtues of successive Principals, whose work has been done under difficulties in the Memorial Hall. All honour to such loyal affection! It will surely enlist the sympathies of many readers not personally associated with the college in its coming Jubilee.

For our own part we are entirely with the old students in their desire to secure for their successors and their college a common residence, and although we do not know how far the movement yet has gone, we imagine that there is no doubt that this object will be achieved, and a great benefit conferred upon the men;

At the same time, we cannot conceal the fact that the anxiety expressed by the Rev. Joseph Wood in his letter on "Our Two Colleges" is shared by many sincere friends of both, and we trust that his plea for an impartial consideration of possible developments, in the interest of our whole community, will not pass unheeded. Mr. Wood has a special right to be heard, for though not an old student of either college, he has been a lecturer at both, and knows thoroughly the conditions and opportunities of their work, and, above all, the requirements of the churches, whose need of a well-equipped ministry they are set to supply.

We have more than once asked in these columns for a serious consideration of the waste of valuable resources both of money and of men in the permanent duplication of our colleges, and on the last occasion on which we referred to the subject (in a leading article, Feb. 8, 1902) we pleaded for a development and re-arrangement of our common work, which we still believe would be of the greatest benefit to the churches. Mr. Wood, in his letter, makes a specific suggestion for the revision of the course of training for the ministry, and there will, doubtless, be others brought forward, in any consultation between the representatives of the colleges. For our own part we do not see why the Unitarian Home Missionary College should surrender its separate identity, even while it sent its graduates from Victoria University for the theological course to Oxford. And both during that course for vacation work and for a further year of special training, as Mr. Wood suggests, we should like to see a Hall of Residence maintained in Manchester, and another in London, where men might be brought into close touch with the problems of city life, and the practical social and religious work of the churches. Thus, it appears to us, we should be making the best use of our available resources, and secure for the men who are to be devoted to the ministry the most varied and the best possible training.

In the quadrangle of Burlington House, where the Royal Academy Exhibition opens to the public on Monday, stands the splendid equestrian statue in bronze by Mr. G. F. Watts, R.A., "Physical Energy." Of the pictures within we must reserve our notes for next week, and will only say here that, unlike some recent exhibitions, this year's can by no means be called dull. There is plenty to make people open their eyes, and some beautiful things.

The "Jane Agnes Chessar" Classical Scholarship at Girton College, Cambridge, has been awarded to Miss Dorothy Tarrant, daughter of the Rev. W. G. Tarrant of Wandsworth. There is keen competition for this scholarship, which is tenable for four years, and it is a special pleasure to The Inquirer to congratulate Miss Tarrant on her success.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. Letters cannot be inserted without the writer's name; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

OUR TWO COLLEGES.

Sir,—The Jubilee of the Home Missionary College will rightly be an occasion of rejoicing and congratulation. The services rendered by the College to our churches have been of the highest value, while those who were trained by it for the ministry must ever regard it with gratitude. But when it is proposed to celebrate its fiftieth anniversary by raising a fund to provide costly buildings in which the College may find a permanent home, a host of considerations arise, and specially there is forced to the front the difficult and delicate question of the relation of our two colleges to each other and to the denomination they serve. Without any unfriendliness to either men are asking, why should a small body like ours be at the expense of maintaining two institutions for the training of the ministry when it is clear that one would be amply sufficient? Has the particular purpose which fifty years ago justified the opening of a missionary college any longer a justification, now that its requirements and standards so nearly approximate to those of the older institution? Is it wise to put down, at a great expense, a second set of collegiate buildings for so small a number of students? Is it not true that in some recent years the number of men receiving their theological training in the two colleges was so small that there was one professor for every two students? Is it desirable that there should be two institutions of this kind competing with each other for funds and students? Is it not possible for the authorities at Manchester and Oxford to come to some working arrangement whereby overlapping and waste of teaching power could be prevented, and the two colleges work as one?

No one pretends that the opportunities for preaching and practical work are so good at Oxford as at Manchester, and no one will affirm that the educational facilities of Manchester are equal to those at Oxford. Before any other steps are taken, can there not be a round-table conference of the friends of both, with a view of making each serve the special ends of the other? More than one plan suggests itself. As one who has had the honour of lecturing at both places on the Tate foundation, I am greatly impressed with the need of a more thorough training in homiletics and pastoral theology than is possible under present conditions. The time is so filled with other and necessary studies, that this is grudged one poor hour a week. The loudest and most frequent complaint from our churches is that our men do not know how to preach.

I would then suggest for consideration at a joint conference the following points:—

1. The extension of the period of study from three to four years.

2. All students to receive three years' theological training at Oxford.

3. The fourth year to be spent at Manchester, the college there to be devoted to homiletics, pastoral theology, and instruction in practical work.

4. The fourth year students at Manchester to live together in collegiate life under a warden, but to be attached individually as assistants to missions or churches in the district, where they may try their powers and gain much needed experience.

5. This collegiate life in Manchester would need no expensive buildings. The leasing of a good-sized, old-fashioned house would furnish the accommodation required.

Other, and possibly better, solutions of the problem could be suggested. I offer the above for consideration as, at any rate, one way of bringing the two institutions into harmonious working, while, at the same time, preserving the individuality of each. It is in sympathy and friendliness towards both colleges I write. Yet what we most have to consider is the welfare of our churches, and their needs generally, rather than the sentiments that gather round any particular institution.

Joseph Wood.

THE CHINESE ORDINANCE.

Sir,—Mr. Tarrant, in bringing forward his motion at the late Council meeting of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, rightly treated the question of the institution of a form of slavery in the Transvaal as a moral question, and he expressed the hope that no one would think it a matter out of which party capital was being made.

He brought forward his motion quite regardless whether the ordinance was sanctioned by a Tory or Liberal Government; he would, I am sure, have spoken as warmly against it in either case; and I have little doubt that, if each person present had judged the question in the manner in which it was presented by Mr. Tarrant, there would have been but little difference of opinion at that meeting. Unfortunately, what is a great moral question was misinterpreted by some as a reflection against the Government, and the real issue was obscured by the cry of party politics.

This question soars far above the range of party politics, and it were a shame and disgrace if we Unitarians refrained from expressing, as a religious body, our hatred of an ordinance which offends against the highest and noblest instincts of our nature, encouraging as it does some of the worst evils of slavery. What would Christ's decision have been had he been with us? Would he not have have said, "Do to others as you would that they should do to you?" And are we not bound, therefore, to withstand with all our power this subversion of Christian teaching, and uphold as publicly as we can the right against the wrong?

Let us not fear that disintegration will follow our acting as disciples of Christ; rather let us feel certain that our strength and influence will wane if we, as a body, shrink from speaking out our opinions on questions of morality, without stopping to consider whether those opinions run counter to or are in accord with this or that political party.

F. Nettlefold.

EVIL VERSUS DIVINE GOODNESS.

SIR,—May I briefly point out to Mr. Whitaker that the moral and physical disorders which he discusses in this week's INQUIRER cannot be thus sharply divided and separately considered? They are inextricably mixed up, and it is of no use to frame any hypothesis for one which does not apply to the other.

I repeat that there is absolutely no theory that will cover the whole field except that which has the support of whatever authority still pertains to both Old and New Testaments, which was for eighteen centuries the belief of all Christendom; was, I think, beyond dispute an article in the faith of Christ, and, assuming that free-will is really free, entirely exculpates the Creator from all responsibility for evil.

If, as Mr. Whitaker suggests, the criterion is to be found in the relative helpfulness to the life of moral endeavour, I cannot understand how any theory can be at all comparable to that which makes the Creator the source of all that is good in the universe and attributes all that is evil to some opposing and disturbing power. Why have the Christian churches abandoned that belief, and given themselves up to the hopeless endeavour to persuade themselves, and the world around them, that a God of perfect goodness is a God who not only permits evil, but actually employs every phase and form of it for the working out of His grand scheme of things? For two generations scientists have been teaching that hideous falsehood, and for one generation the churches have been reluctantly accepting it and painfully labouring to show how it may be possible. They cannot do it. Evolution is not, of course, the only source of perplexity, but the natural and inevitable result of evolutionary teaching without any reference to a disturbing and opposing force, is that on all hands we find the rapid spread of that agnosticism to which, as I said at the outset, Mr. Robert Blatchford has only given outspoken expression.

G. F. MILLIN.

Brixton, April 24, 1904.

SIR,—The existence of the devil as an aid to faith in God is a startling thesis. Its recent presentation by a liberal thinker in the columns of THE INQUIRER helps us to comprehend the ancient mode of thought in which the belief in the existence of a vast personal power of evil grew up. It affords a refuge from the thought of the evil in the world as the work of a good God. But it really darkens rather than relieves the problem of evil, for it presents all the piteous misery of life as a work of pure malignity permitted without regard to the sufferers, and so puts a more severe strain upon faith than the facts, terrible as they are, which it is intended to explain.

And the theory does not fit the facts. The evil in the world is part of the same texture of law as the good. Much of it is involved in the combination of a sensitive and a mechanical world. There are no indications of a separate evil intelligence acting independently and thwarting the good in order to carry out an evil purpose. There are no laws designed for evil that can be picked out from the rest. The force that causes the earthquake is a portion, and an inseparable portion, of the force of upheaval which fashions and renews the habitable earth.

A thought that troubles many minds is well expressed in two lines, which I hope I remember correctly:—

> The Devil is solemnly voted out, and, of course, the thing is so,
> But who is it carries the business on? is what I should like to know.

But there is no such separate business of evil carried on by a distinct system of natural laws. And, further, all that is best in human life, which makes it most worth living, is inextricably interwoven with that which causes the most terrible suffering.

The theory of a personal power of evil, acting independently for evil purposes, does not fit the facts, and aggravates, instead of relieving the difficulty.

Some relief would be afforded by the supposition to which Martineau gave a certain adherence ("Study of Religion, Book II. chap. i. p. 406), that the Creator is limited by conditions of space, or even of some primordial material "datum." Certainly that is in all respects preferable to the devil theory. But to myself it appears to be exceedingly precarious guesswork respecting the inscrutable being of God. If some difficulty needed to be assumed, I should look for it in the creation of moral beings, with a real, though limited, independence of the divine power by which and in which they subsist.

But there is more solid satisfaction in the perceived growth of good out of evil, and the spiritual worth that is evolved out of earthly conditions, along with some dim recognition of the meaning of eternal life. We have more knowledge of the divine purpose than we could reasonably expect, and the rest we may fitly leave to Him who knows.

Facts, as we know them, may be simply evil; and so we may have to deal with them in practice. But in their completed reality and meaning as God knows them, they may be entirely different, for our knowledge of them is like the vision of a small portion of a surface compared with solid three-dimensional existence. And our faith in the goodness and supremacy of God, in spite of the existence of evil, may have a validity beyond logical argument, as the total response of our personality to the entirety of inward and outward experience.

C. D. BADLAND.

A great secret of Dr. Tuckerman's success lay in his strong interest in individuals. It was not in his nature to act on masses by general methods; he threw his soul into particular cases. Every sufferer whom he visited seemed to awaken in him a special affection and concern. I remember well the language which he once used in regard to a man who had gone far astray. He said to me with deep emotion, "I want that man's soul; I must save him." He made the worst feel that they had a friend, and by his personal interest linked them anew with their race. Channing.

ANDRE BOURRIER.

AMONG the speakers at the public meeting of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association at Essex Hall on Wednesday evening in Whit-week will be M. André Bourrier, editor of Le Chrítien Francais, who is to give an address on "The Progress of Liberal Religion among the Roman Catholic Clergy of France." M. Bourrier took part in the International meetings at Amsterdam last year, and his paper on "L'Emancipation de la Pensée, Religieuse parmi les Prêtres" is in the recently published volume of Proceedings, "Religion and Liberty." In view of the interest of M. Bourrier's coming visit to London we are specially indebted to M. Ducarmel for the following article:—

The Abbé Bourrier was priest at Marseilles for a period of twenty years, and was about forty years old when, in 1895, he resigned his post of "premier vicaire" at the Pro-Cathedral and went to the "Faculté de Théologie" at Paris to take up a course of study in order to become a Protestant pastor. The thesis he defended before the Faculty in 1896, to show that the text, "Thou art Peter," was not authentic, caused a great sensation, as it demolished the structure on which the Papal power rests. His consecration took place at Paris in the "Eglise d'Etoile," before more than fifty ministers belonging to all the various schools of Protestant thought, and a larger assembly of people than had ever been seen before in this church, even at the funeral of M. Bersier.

M. Bourrier was then appointed pastor of a little church in the neighbourhood of Paris, Sèvres-Bellevue, a place where, in the summer, several families belonging to the Protestant aristocracy live, but where the majority of the parishioners belong to the working classes.

At the same time M. Bourrier wrote articles in certain Paris papers, which succeeded in drawing the attention of the public to the abuses of the clergy and the necessity of reform. He did not at that time favour one church more than another, but, rising above ecclesiastical barriers and dogmatic confessions, he said, "Let us be Christians above all."

Several very influential writers took part in the controversy, among others being the Abbés Victor Charbonnel, A. Philippot, and A. Videlot, three very distinguished priests, who ended by leaving the Church of Rome, declaring that they could not reconcile scientific truth with the pretensions of the Romish Church. M. Victor Charbonnel, unfortunately, went further in his negations, but MM. Philippot and Videlot remained faithful to the flag of evangelical reform, and founded, with M. Bourrier, in October, 1896, the paper, Le Chrétien Français, the organ of evangelical reform among the French clergy. This paper soon had a great success in the religious world, several priests having the courage to subscribe to it, until the bishops, taking fright at its ever-increasing influence, published in their "Semaines Religieuses," and in the retreats of the clergy, severe threats against its subscribers.

Le Chrétien Français felt the result of these measures, yet retained a large number of its subscribers among the clergy, and its influence continued to show itself in a very marked manner. It often carries on controversies with the most recognised organs of Ultramontanism. Priests and even bishops sometimes write articles and letters in its columns, in which sympathy for its aims is scarcely concealed, or even courageously avowed.

In the meantime secessions began to take place among the Romish clergy, and became more and more numerous. M. Bourrier had set the example of a public letter of secession addressed to the Bishop of the diocese, and this method was preferred by the later seceders. To give shelter to these men, M. Bourrier opened at Sèvres a Home, which during the years 1898 and 1899 welcomed a large number. At the same time Le Chrétien Français started an employment bureau, in order to procure them work, and opened a subscription to help those who were without resources.

Le Chrétien Français has thus contributed to the emancipation of a large number of priests who, by its means, are able to-day to live honestly and freely and take an honourable position. Some have followed the example of M. Bourrier, and, after having gone through a course of study in the colleges, are now pastors in the various Reformed or Lutheran Churches of France. It has had the honour of helping a dozen or more of these men to become pastors; at the ordination of four of whom M. Bourrier presided, two being ordained at Paris, one in the Cevennes and on in Poitou.

At the same time the Chrétien Français has encouraged the movement against the Concordat, which has showed itself in certain parts of France, amongst others at Belmont by the manifesto of the Abbé Bessède. This movement has not come to any head, but it has helped to prove that there exists among the clergy a body of men quite willing to shake off the yoke of the Pope and the Bishops, and who will have the people on their side. This will be very useful when the impossibility of immediately denouncing the Concordat shall be recognised, and it will be the last resource of those who wish to free the State from the yoke of the political and Ultramontane episcopate.

Le Chrétien Français has also furthered the taste for Biblical criticism among the younger clergy, and has thus introduced the historical method into the clerical studies. It is largely owing to its editor and its articles that the works of the most celebrated writers on Protestant theology and exegesis have become known amongst the clergy; and several Abbés have been put into communication with the late Dean Auguste Sabatier and the Professors of the Paris Faculty of Divinity.

M. Bourrier, although belonging to a "Synodal" [i.e., Orthodox] Consistory, has never wished to impose on his protégés any dogmatic test, and has fought courageously to keep his independence and preserve for the new-comers absolute religious freedom. He has ever remained faithful to the idea of evangelical alliance, and has thus opposed the Protestant "bloc" to the Catholic "bloc."

He had, at the beginning, the illusion that he would find support among the Anglican bishops; but, by this time, he has quite recognised his error, and realises that the French clergy will never cast off the yoke of the Pope in order to throw themselves into the arms of men who still believe in the Infallibility of Councils, the Apostolic Succession, and the Creed of St. Athanasius.

Another obstacle that he has had to meet is the hostility of some priests, who have themselves left the Church of Rome, but have kept their sectarian spirit, the habits and methods of which they wished to carry into the Protestant Church. But these men have had no success among the French clergy, and only succeeded in winning the protection of a few somewhat dictatorial pastors, who have since learned to know them.

Nevertheless, these difficulties, added to all the others, have made the work of M. Bourrier particularly difficult; but, in spite of everything, it has survived, and created in France a magnificent movement towards freedom and evangelical reform, which all the power of Rome will not be able to check. LOUIS DUCARMEL.

DR. TORREY AND UNITARIANS.

FOR a full fortnight Bristol has been in the throes of a Unitarian controversy, the like of which has not been known locally within the present generation. Day by day columns of letters have been appearing in the Bristol Mercury, contents sheets have proclaimed the various phases of the contest, and leading articles have succeeded one another dealing with the issue that had suddenly become of absorbing interest. And all this in connection with a huge evangelistic "revival," which had for weeks previously been engineered and advertised on the most lavish scale, to wit, the Torrey-Alexander United Mission, still in progress at the moment when these lines are being written.

Unitarians are so little in the habit of being persecuted nowadays that a summary recital of this episode may be of some little interest to readers of THE INQUIRER. The Rev. Dr. Torrey is a revivalist of a type with which we have become somewhat unfamiliar of late. He declares his belief in the Bible "from cover to cover," he has a robust faith in hell as a place of intense physical pain; and for all who do not accept his dogmas he confidently predicts a hopeless eternity. But what distinguishes this preacher, who attracts thousands to his services, even among the hyper-orthodox, is his cheerful conviction that at the root of heterodoxy lies moral depravity. He tells his hearers that if they would show him a man who questions the Bible, he would show them every time a man who lived either a life of greed or a life of lust, or a life of pride, or a life of self-will; and he explicitly charges preachers who accept modern critical views of the Scriptures with teaching these, not because they doubt the orthodox position themselves, but from a contemptible desire to appear scholarly and up-to-date.

It was scarcely to be expected that at the hands of an "evangelist" of this order there would be very gentle treatment in store for the people called Unitarians, and of his manner of dealing with this particular heresy samples had preceded his arrival in Bristol, such as could not but arouse curiosity and impose vigilance. Nor were we to be left in uncertainty for any length of time. The mission opened on April 5, and on the day following Dr. Torrey gave forth this remarkable utterance:

> Unitarianism, as a rule, was not because of intellectual difficulties, but because of moral difficulties. If Christ was divine, it brought God very near to them; if Christ was not divine, it put God a great way off, and men living in sin could calm the accusations of their hearts. In most cases it was simply an attempt to get God as far off as possible, and to hide from God.

So gross and gratuitous an attack upon the morality of Unitarians could not pass unnoticed anywhere, least of all in Bristol, with its traditions of the Carpenters and many others of our household of faith, and it is a matter to record with the utmost satisfaction that immediately a decisive protest came from the leading Nonconformist minister of the city, the Rev. H. Arnold Thomas, M.A., an ex-Chairman of the Congregational Union, who wrote regretting that any imputation of unworthy motive should even seem to be cast on a body of Christians of whom they in Bristol had so much reason to speak with respect. For that letter, and for allowing the Christian name to Unitarians, it must be added that Mr. Thomas has been bitterly attacked by his narrower co-religionists.

On Dr. Torrey, meanwhile, the effect of this public rebuke was nil; on the contrary, he presently amplified and emphasised his original sentiments by telling his hearers that Unitarianism was embraced by people who wanted to lead more dissolute and immoral lives. Clearly a point had been reached at which silence on the part of a community so traduced would have been culpable neglect of duty, and hence the present writer—who is sorry to have to be his own chronicler—addressed a challenge to Dr. Torrey to make good his slanders at any time and in any place convenient to himself, which challenge, having been duly declined on the inevitable ground of "want of time," was forthwith made public property.

It is impossible, within the limits of a sketch like the present, to record the shifts—pretty disingenuous shifts—to which this exposed detractor of Unitarianism now had recourse; enough to say that they covered a wide field, and failed conspicuously. Here let it be gratefully recorded that among those who made a public stand on behalf of truth and decency, yeoman work was done by one of Bristol's most popular preachers, the Rev. Hugh C. Wallace, the pastor of the David Thomas Congregational Church, to whose brilliant and generous defence against Dr. Torrey's insinuations Unitarians owe a great debt. Let it not be imagined, of course, that Dr. Torrey's manners and morals did not find zealous disciples and imitators among those who flooded the columns of the Bristol Mercury with communications; what may be claimed, however, is that no inconsiderable proportion of the public have had their eyes opened to the methods of a preacher whose stock-in-trade consists of calumnies which he will not withdraw, cannot make good, and dare not debate. Nothing will better serve to reflect the state of local opinion than the following extracts from leading articles :—

If Dr. Torrey has in the thoughtlessness or the heat of a fervid impromptu oration made unjustifiable charges against Unitarians as a body, it would only be worthy of his reputation, and in the interests of the cause he has at heart, to retract and apologise. . . . . A religious cult which has had among its high priests such saintly personalities as those of James Martineau, Hamilton Thom, and Charles Beard ought not to have the finger of moral reproach lifted against them.—Bristol Mercury, April 15.

On this, it need only be said that Dr. Torrey's charges are not made "in the heat of a fervid impromptu oration" but that they are repeated verbatim in every city to which he goes. Again :

The Unitarians, here as elsewhere, are not numerically a strong body, but they are people of culture and high and honourable civic standing. We know them in their business enterprises and in their public life, and we think of names that shed lustre upon Bristol —names that recall noble and philanthropic lives. It is upon a peaceful scene like this that Dr. Torrey descends with acrid insinuations against the purity of Unitarian religious faith, and we cannot wonder at the bother he has created. . . . Some of Dr. Torrey's statements have been open to the construction that Unitarians square their religious views to make them justify a natural looseness of disposition—a pretty thing for a stranger to say about decent people. Let us have an end of this unseemliness now.—Bristol Echo, April 18.

And at this stage, as the novelists say, "a strange thing happened." We can but guess what may have been the agencies at work; so much is sure that, whether acting under direct pressure or feeling that he had made a tactical blunder, Dr. Torrey beat a retreat—and the manner of that retreat is, perhaps, the most remarkable feature of a remarkable transaction. Not from the public platform, from which he had uttered his slanders, nor in the public press which had reported them, but through the medium of a private letter to a private Unitarian, whose identity has not been allowed to become known, but who handed it to a well-known local Evangelical—who in turn handed it to the Press—he has in a half-hearted manner disavowed the obvious meaning of utterances which have been repeated by him in identical terms in city after city, terms which admit of one sense only. The whole procedure is amazing in its tortuousness; but it is perhaps the best that could be expected from a person of Dr. Torrey's calibre, and if it does not prove that he is ashamed, it presents at any rate some sort of guarantee that he has been taught a lesson as to the advantage of keeping the commandment that speaks of bearing witness concerning one's neighbour. Probably he will observe that commandment for the remainder of his stay in the capital of the West. What is more than probable is that this campaign of calumny, through being taken in hand vigorously at the start, has had results precisely the opposite of those which were intended; it is not Unitarianism that has suffered through these unscrupulous misrepresentations, but the forlorn and desperate type of "orthodoxy" which descends to the use of such poisoned weapons.

Clifton. J. Warschauer.

A STATEMENT OF UNITARIANISM.

(From the "Christian Register," January 7.)

Western papers have been giving considerable space to discussion of the action of the Des Moines Ministerial Association in excluding Rev. Mary A. Safford from its membership. This action was taken not because she is a woman, as some supposed at first, but because the organisation has recently voted to limit its membership to the clergymen of regular evangelical churches in the city, and thus exclude the Catholic, Hebrew, and Unitarian ministers.

Miss Safford, who is secretary of the Iowa Association of Unitarian and Other Independent Churches, is one of the most prominent women preachers in the West. For several years she was pastor of the Unitarian Church in Sioux City, where she had a great following. Several years ago she took up the pastorate of the First Unitarian Church in Des Moines, where she has been eminently successful.

As the action of the Ministerial Association was misunderstood by friends throughout the State, Miss Safford made a brief statement, from which the following paragraphs are taken :—

"Seriously I have no reason to complain of the action. As long as they exalt certain doctrinal beliefs above character, they cannot consistently fellowship with one who accepts the simple religion of Jesus and holds that the life is more than the creed. As long as they reject the teaching that character is salvation and sincerely believe that the acceptance of certain doctrines is essential to present and future well-being, they are compelled to exclude from fellowship all those who are striving to build the universal church,

> Lofty as is the love of God
> And ample as the wants of man.

"Because their churches have a creedal basis, while the one I have the honour to represent is based on a purpose—the promotion of truth, righteousness, and love in the world—my brothers in the orthodox ministry are placed at a disadvantage. I can extend the hand of fellowship to any earnest seeker after truth who sincerely desires to get good and be good and do good, but this privilege is denied to them.

"And because sincerity in religion is the greatest need of our age, instead of resenting the action of the Ministerial Association, so far as I am concerned, let me hasten to approve my brothers' loyalty to what they think is true. Their action shows how mistaken is the view of those who say, 'We do not need a liberal church in Des Moines, for all the churches are liberal now.' As long as so-called orthodox churches cannot consistently fellowship with the members of the church of Emerson, Longfellow, Bryant, and Lowell, Julia Ward Howe, Dorothea Dix, Mary A. Livermore, and scores of the noble men and women whom the world delights to honour as its royal benefactors, there is need of the Unitarian church in Des Moines. It is needed to promote freedom, fellowship, and character in religion, to hasten the coming of the day when

> Man shall not ask his brother any more,
> "Believest thou?" but "Lovest thou?" and all
> Shall answer at God's altar, "Lord, I love";
> For hope may anchor, faith may steer, but love,
> Great love, alone is captain of the soul."

"And because there are so many in the West who are not acquainted with the Unitarian faith, let me call the attention of these to the following statement in the preamble to the constitution of our National Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches :—

These churches accept the religion of Jesus, holding, in accordance with his teachings, that practical religion is summed up in love to God and love to man. The conference recognises the fact that its constituency is Congregational in tradition and polity. Therefore it declares that nothing in this constitution is to be construed as an authoritative test, and we cordially invite to our working fellowship any who, differing from us in belief, are in general sympathy with our spirit and our practical aim.

"While not undervaluing the worth of noble beliefs, to us religion is not a creed, but a life—the life of God in the human soul.

"For this reason, although those of other faiths may exclude us, we shall continue to include them in our spirit of fellowship. Whether they are Jews or Roman Catholics, Presbyterians or Parsees, Baptists or Buddhists, as the children of one God—our Father—they are our brothers and sisters, and members of the same family should dwell together in unity."

———

The Christian Register of Feb. 11 adds this further comment on Miss Safford's protest :—"The recent action of the Ministerial Association of the city called out protests from Dr. Cathell, of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, and Dr. Hodgdon, of the Plymouth Congregational Church. Dr. Hodgdon's church calendar contained the following statement : 'The minister of Plymouth Church is not a member of the Ministerial Association of this city, and never can be so long as fellowship is denied to Catholics, Jews, and Unitarians. He feels that the action of the Ministerial Association does not represent the sentiment of the churches, does not measure up to the Western standards of hospitality, and finds no justification in modern civilisation.'

"Miss Safford's appeal for the inclusive spirit, the upbuilding of the local church, and the maintenance of the liberal cause, touched a responsive chord in Des Moines, in Iowa, and throughout the country. Her exposition of the principles for which she stands, and the faith she would give the people, was to many the first correct insight into such beliefs and purposes, and from many parts of the country evidences come that it has helped greatly. Contributions towards the new building (plans for which are rapidly maturing) have come from those whose realisation of the need for the existence of the society was thus quickened. Moreover, the drawing together, the essential oneness, of the two branches of the Congregational church, the Trinitarian and the Unitarian, has become more strongly marked and manifest. Dr. Hodgdon's stand for inclusion instead of exclusion, the gradual working forward of common interests and thoughts and ideals, the bringing home to all churches and church members of their common aim to the neglect of those non-essentials on which they differ somewhat—these and similar features, following this little tempest, point to a purer air, a healthier condition than before."

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Wednesday, or Thursday Morning at latest.]

Aberdare: Highland Place.—On Sunday morning last an extremely gratifying event took place. A service of consecration was held, during which thirteen young people connected with the Guild, Band of Hope, and the Sunday-school, were received into full church membership. Rev. H. Fisher Short, who extended to each the right hand of fellowship, delivered a special address, basing his remarks on the text, "Choose ye, this day, whom ye will serve."

Astley.—The annual school sermons were preached on Sunday last by the Rev. W. E. George, of Swinton, to crowded congregations, special hymns, anthems, and children's hymns were sung, accompanied by a string band. Friends were present from neighbouring congregations in good numbers. The collections and donations amounted to £23.

Chichester.—There being no resident chaplain of the local poorhouse, religious services have for many years been carried on each Sunday afternoon at the workhouse by a number of the clergy, including the Bishop, and Dean of the Cathedral, and the various Nonconformist ministers. Hitherto, although the Rev. C. A. Hoddinott has been a member of the Board of Guardians for over nine years, he has not been allowed to take a share of the religious work. Now, through the intervention of a Cathedral clergyman, his name is to be included in the list of preachers, and he will take his share of the services.

Dean Row.—On behalf of the East Cheshire Christian Union's projected bazaar in the autumn of this year, a concert and dramatic performance were given in the school-room on Saturday, April 23. The entertainment proved so successful that a room twice the size of the school-room could easily have been filled. The amount realised after paying all expenses was £8 10s.

Glasgow.—A joint conference of the two Unitarian Churches in Glasgow was held in South St. Mungo-street Church on Tuesday evening, the 26th inst. Dr. John Barlow, President of the Scottish Unitarian Association, occupied the chair, and there was an attendance of about 200. After tea Dr. Barlow opened the business by stating that the meeting was a direct result of the Inter-Congregational Conference held in Edinburgh last March, and was at the initiative of Mr. Alexander MacLaren, of the South St. Mungo-street Congregation, whom he called upon to read a paper on "Unitarianism in America, its Origin, History, Achievements, and Lessons." Mr. MacLaren spoke of American Unitarianism as one of the products of the Declaration of Independence and a potent force in the making of the nation. He referred to its early history and its great names, and said that, of the lessons to be learned of Unitarian life and growth across the Atlantic, union was one of the chief. More combination of the kindred institutions of both their churches would strengthen each. He suggested that in a small central hall accommodation might be found for both church libraries, and be a meeting place for literary and social meetings, a book depot for the sale of Unitarian literature, and a welcome place of call and inquiry bureau for all Unitarian visitors to the city. Mr. James Graham opened a short discussion of the paper, and at the outset expressed the opinion that, notwithstanding the want of outward signs of great present results, the religion called Unitarianism would be embodied in the church of the future. Whether it would be organised Unitarianism or would burst out spontaneously need not greatly concern them. The fact remained that they, as organised Unitarians, had given principles to other religious bodies which they accepted, and were now working upon. Meetings of joint effort and encouragement were valuable, where the motto is, "All for each and each for all," and then it would naturally get beyond themselves to the outside world, to the common good and weal. Mr. Robert Stewart, chairman of the St. Vincent-street Church management committee, agreed in warmly thanking the lecturer for his excellent paper. The fostering of the spirit of unity was the greatest encouragement they could give each other. He strongly advised the younger members to read the earlier American writers as an inspiring and edifying means of encouragement. Rev. James Forrest hailed such meetings as a great gain to the prospects and possibilities of Unitarianism in Glasgow. Their work lay always in the van, and their watchword must always be "Forward." Rev. E. T. Russell thought such gatherings were a genuine inspiration to their future work. Votes of thanks brought a highly interesting and encouraging meeting to a close.

Glasgow: South St. Mungo-street.—The annual meeting of the Literary Society was held on Thursday, April 21, Mr. P. M. Dunlop, president, in the chair. The report, which was read by Mr. Alex. McLaren, junior, showed that during the winter 23 meetings had been held, including two social meetings, one musical evening, and one limelight lecture. The session just closed had been probably the most successful in the history of the society. On the occasion of the limelight lecture the record attendance for the society was attained, the number present being 160. The other lectures were also well attended, and the finances were in a good condition.

Glossop.—A vigorous effort of Unitarian propaganda has been made during the past weeks by the Rev. H. Bodell Smith, of Mottram, at Hadfield, a village adjoining Glossop, and included in the borough. A number of Unitarians are resident there, who find it too far to come to the neighbouring chapels, and it is hoped that a new congregation may be established. Beginning on March 17, Mr. Smith has delivered a course of five doctrinal lectures, the Rev. A. Cumliffe Fox on each occasion taking the chair. The attendances ranged from 25 to 41, being almost entirely of men, three-fourths of them strangers to Unitarianism. After the lectures questions were asked and discussion followed. Mr. Smith's clear expositions of his faith were followed with the greatest interest, and warm appreciation of the lectures was expressed.

Ipswich.—The Friars-street Social Guild has just completed a most successful session. Lantern lectures, debating, impromptu artistic demonstrations, humorous sketches, vocal and instrumental music, &c., have all contributed towards making up a series of very enjoyable evenings. Work of this kind has been a great feature since Mr. Lucking Tavener took up the ministerial duties of this place. His enthusiasm for art, clever methods of exposition, and unfailing energy have mainly secured the success of the Guild, which has been fortunate also in having a good working committee. Considering the size of the congregation, the various meetings have been well attended, and they have tended much to foster pleasant, kindly feelings. The school-room, in which the meetings have been held, has been decorated in quite an original manner. A number of large oil paintings have been fixed upon the walls, all of which have been produced by Mr. Tavener's painting-class pupils, who belong to families attending the church. The pictures are the result of only a few months' training, but are, nevertheless, most creditable, and well worthy of the position they occupy. Their effectiveness has been enhanced by the further floral colouring of the walls in artistic segments by Mr. H. W. Roberts, a member of the congregation. The work of the Guild will be resumed in the autumn, and will be looked forward to with pleasurable anticipation.

London: Limehouse.—During the past three months a very successful series of evening concerts has been given at Durning Hall; among those who provided entertainment having been Miss Blyth, of Hampstead; Mr. A. Savage Cooper, Miss Harris, Mr. Arthur Keating, Councillor Dalton, Mr. Bartlett, Rev. F. K. Freeston, of Kensington, and Messrs. Forward and Wright. The season closed on Thursday week, one of the items being the presentation to Mr. and Mrs. Collecott of wedding gifts, with good wishes for their prosperity and future happiness. Miss Dora Lawrence presented a massive gilt inkstand, with mother-o'-pearl trays, in the name of Lady Durning Lawrence and herself; Miss Shawcross, in the name of the teachers and friends of the Mission, presented a walnut bookcase and stand with glass door and carved panels. Mr. Collecott and others in the room made it evident that it is possible to retain the elder scholars. There are several workers at the Mission with a record of twenty years in the Sunday-school.

Mossley.—On Sunday the Sunday-school anniversary services, morning, afternoon, and evening, were conducted by the Rev. J. E. Manning. There were good congregations, and the collections amounted to £45 10s. 9d.

Mottram.—The sale of work held at Mottram on Friday and Saturday, April 22 and 23, to raise funds for structural repairs and improvements and other church purposes, realised about £115, and, reckoning expenses off, will clear over £100.

Northampton.—The services at the Kettering-road Church last Sunday were arranged with special reference to James Martineau, the lessons and prayers being chosen from his writings. In honour of his memory three valuable portraits were hung in the vestibule of the church, and literature from his pen was freely distributed amongst those present. In the evening, the subject taken by the Rev. Arthur Harvie was "Why we should keep the feast of James Martineau." The attendances both morning and evening were very encouraging.

Parkstone.—The Sunday services at Emerson Hall continue to be of an encouraging and hearty nature, and the number of those attending is well sustained. Last Sunday, in the absence of Mr. W. T. Bushrod, the P.S.A. was conducted by the Rev. James Burton, M.A., of Poole, who gave a very interesting address on "Home." Solos were rendered by Miss Burton, Miss Watts, of Liverpool, and Mr. J. Travers. The congregation numbered 47. The evening service was conducted by Mr. Northam. There were 60 present.

Sheffield: Upper Chapel (Appointment). Mr. Henry Dawtrey, B.A., of Manchester College, Oxford, has accepted an appointment as assistant minister to the Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B., in succession to the Rev. E. E. Jenkins, and will enter upon his duties at the beginning of September.

Stockport.—On Monday week the annual meeting of the Church was held in the schoolroom, when the chair was taken by the Senior Warden, Mr. J. F. Spedding. The usual items of business were transacted, such as election of wardens and vestry, appointment of delegates, and reception of the treasurer's accounts. A new feature was the adoption of an annual report, containing lists of officers in connection with the Church and all its institutions, reports of Sunday-school, Ladies' Auxiliary, Social Meeting, and Penny Bank, and also a list of seatholders. This report was printed, and copies were circulated at the meeting. Another new feature was the introduction of glees and songs by the choir, which many felt was a pleasant break in the routine of business. The meeting was the best attended for many years past, and, despite the unfortunate fact that the treasurer had to report a serious adverse balance, was full of good spirit. The minister, the Rev. B. C. Constable, was present, and read the annual reports, and gave a short address. The meeting was preceded by a tea, at which between fifty and sixty persons sat down. Mr. Constable preached to a good congregation on Sunday last, on "Why am I a Unitarian?" The annual sermons were preached last Sunday by the Rev. John Page Hopps, when the collections amounted to £26 7s., and will be probably made up to £30.

PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY
OF
LONDON & SOUTH-EASTERN COUNTIES.

ASSEMBLY SUNDAY, 1904.

COLLECTIONS in aid of the Assembly's Funds will be made on SUNDAY, MAY 8TH, in the Churches on the Roll of the Assembly. The Officers and Members of the respective congregations are invited to make a note of this date.

FREDERIC ALLEN, Hon. Sec.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

SUNDAY, May 1.

Acton, Central Auction Room, Market-place, High-street, 7, Rev. L. T. Badcock.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Rev. Eustace Thompson.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, Spring Flower Services, 11, Rev. T. E. M. Edwards, and 7, Rev. Gordon Cooper, B.A.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. W. Stanley.

Child's Hill, All Souls' Free Church, corner of Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. Edgar Daplyn.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., 11 and 7, Miss Gertrude von Petzold.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. A. J. Marchant.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 and 7, Rev. Frank K. Freeston, Morning Communion. Collections for Provincial Assembly.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. Perris.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. U. Bloor.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. H. Gow, B.A.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. Greaves.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7 P.M., Rev. E. Savell Hicks, M.A.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11.15 and 7, Rev. G. Critchley, B.A.

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. J. H. Wicksteed, M.A.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. H. S. Perris, M.A.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. John Ellis.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. Jenkins Jones.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. S. Farrington.

Stepney Green, College Chapel, 11 and 7, Mr. C. A. Ginever.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 and 7, Rev. W. Wooding, B.A.

Stratford, Unitarian Church, Sunday School Anniversary and Flower Services, 11, Rev. W. H. Rose, 3, Mr. Ion Pritchard, and 6.30, Rev. H. S. Perris, M.A.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, Easthill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. J. Mummery.

PROVINCIAL.

Bath, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. McDowell.

Blackpool, Dickson-road, North Shore, 10.45 and 6.30, Pulpit Vacant.

Blackpool, South Shore Unitarian Church, The Hall, Lytham-road, 11 and 6.30.

Bootle, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Morley Mills.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11and 7, Rev. C. C. Coe.

Brighton, Christ Church, New-road, North-street, 11 and 7, Mr. Herbert Rix, B.A.

Buxton, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 7, Rev. George Street.

Canterbury, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11.

Dover, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. Burrows.

Guildford, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Rattenbury Hodges.

Hastings, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Gardner Preston.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30,, Rev. J. J. Marten.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. L. P. Jacks, M.A.

Liscard, Memorial Church, Manor-road 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. Ernest Parry.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Charles Craddock.

Liverpool, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. D. Roberts.

Liverpool, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Collins Odgers, B.A.; Evening subject, "The Revolt of Conscience and Reason against the Doctrine of Propitiation by the Blood of Jesus."

Maidstone, Earl-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. Sidaway Brettell, M.A.

Manchester, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. T. Poynting.

Newport, Isle of Wight, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. E. Pike.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. J. E. Odgers, M.A.

Portsmouth, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Mr. F. Hankinson.

Portsmouth, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Mr. Thomas Bond.

Scarborough, Westborough, 10.45 and 7, Rev. Ottwell Binns.

Sevenoaks, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 and 6.45, Rev. F. Teasdale Reed.

Sheffield, Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. Agar.

Southport, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Frederick B. Mott.

Torquay, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'Connor.

Trowbridge, Conigre Church, 11 and 6, Rev. J. Wain.

Tunbridge Wells, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 and 6.30.

IRELAND.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 7, Rev. W. J. Jupp.

WALES.

Aberystwith, New Market Hall, 11.

Cape Town, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. R. Balmforth.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY SOUTH PLACE, FINSBURY.—May 1, at 11.15, Children's Service. Conducted by Dr. C. V. DRYSDALE.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN SQ., W.—May 1, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The Nonconformist Conscience."

Situations, VACANT AND WANTED.

RESPECTABLE MIDDLE-AGED WOMAN requires post as CARETAKER, or any position of trust where only light duties are required. Manchester district preferred.—Apply for reference to Mrs. A. H. Worthington, 6, Wilmslow-road, Didsbury, Manchester.

NURSE ATTENDANT.—An engagement wanted by a respectable Widow, to Lady or Gentleman. Can be well recommended.—E. D., 34, Auckland-road, Battersea-rise, S.W.

WANTED.—NURSE for Two Young Children. Must be superior; situation might suit a Young Lady. Also COOK GENERAL wanted.—Apply, stating wages and experience, to Mrs. Leonard, The Larches, Foxley-lane, Purley.

WANTED EARLY, for Three Months, by an English Lady living in German Switzerland, a YOUNG MAN to coach her son in Mathematics. Board, Residence, and German lessons in return.—Apply in first instance to F. Clarke, Esq., 17, Hornsey Rise Gardens, N.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss Lilian Talbot, B.A. Honours Lond. Preparation for London Matriculation, Trinity College, and Associated Board of Musicians. Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. Apply to the Head Mistress.
Next Term begins Friday, May 6th.

YORKSHIRE.—WESTBOURNE, (SHEFFIELD).
BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
Head Mistress: Miss F. GOODEY, B.A. Lond.
Preparation for Matric., Associated Board of R.A.M. and R.C.M. and Camb. Locals.
School "Recognised by Board of Education."
Splendid situation 600 ft. above sea level.
Hockey, tennis, swimming, Swedish Gymnasium attached to House.
Apply to PRINCIPAL, for prospectus.

WAVERLEY SCHOOL, 24, HAMILTON ROAD, SHERWOOD RISE, NOTTINGHAM.
PREPARATORY TO THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.
HEAD MASTER, Mr. H. T. FACON, B.A.(Lond.).
Next Term begins on Monday, May 2nd.
Prospectus on application. BOARDERS received. Reference kindly permitted to the Rev. Frank K. Freeston, Essex House, Campden-hill, W.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, 14 & 15, SOUTH MARINE TERRACE, ABERYSTWYTH.
PRINCIPAL ... MISS MARLES-THOMAS.
This School is splendidly situated in one of the healthiest parts of Wales, overlooking Cardigan Bay, and close to excellent golf links. Pupils have passed the London and Welsh Matriculation; Cambridge Higher Local; Senior and Junior Cambridge Locals, besides the usual Theoretical and Practical Music Examinations. Scholarships have also been obtained at the Welsh University Colleges.
Gymnasium, Swimming, and excellent Hockey Club.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY, ADELAIDE PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.
Assets, £158,000.
DIRECTORS.
Chairman—Sir H. W. Lawrence, Bart., J.P. 17, Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—Mark H. Judge, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W
Miss Cecil Gradwell, 7, Victoria-street, S.W.
F. H. A. Hardcastle, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st. S.W.
Miss Orme, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
Stephen Seaward Tayler, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham, S.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4 per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3 and 3½ per cent., withdrawable at short notice.
BORROWER'S INTEREST 4 per cent. Monthly Repayment, including Principal, Premium, and Interest for each £100.

10 years.	12 years.	15 years.	18 years.	21 years.
1 1 1	0 18 4	0 15 6	0 14 2	0 12 11

Compare the above rates with those of other Societies. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.
Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.
FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

FRUITARIAN CAKES.
MADE ENTIRELY OF FRUIT AND NUTS,
Uncooked, Concentrated, Natural Food.
READY FOR USE WITHOUT PREPARATION.
For travelling they are ideal. A meal will go in the pocket.

PEAR and WALNUT	7d.	per 8 oz. packet.
APRICOT and NUT	7d.	" "
MUSCATEL and ALMOND ...	6d.	" "
FRUIT and NUTS	5d.	" "
DATE and GINGER	4d.	" "
DATE and LEMON	4d.	" "
DATE and ORANGE	4d.	" "
FIG and CITRON	4d.	" "
DATE and NUT	3d.	" "
FIG and NUT	3d.	" "

Sample Box containing 14 varieties Fruitarian Cakes, 8d.; or with 3 varieties of Nut Butters, post free, 1s.
HUGH MAPLETON, Nut Food Manufacturer,
ARDWICK GREEN MANCHESTER.

NOW READY FOR MAY.
PRICE ONE PENNY.

"YOUNG DAYS."

29th Year.

Our Young People's Own Magazine.

Edited by Rev. J. J. WRIGHT, F.R.S.L.

CONTENTS.

A Song for Maytime.
A Coward's Heroism.
George's Picture.
Little Count Heinrich.
Old Nurse Nature's Tales and Rhymes (Illus.).
The Botanical Prize.
Two Sayings (Illus.).
"Young Days" Guild Work.
The Little Deer at the Fountain.
Mother's Motto.
Temperance Ideas (Illus.).
Dog's Friendship.
A Lump of Sugar.
The Broken Kettle.
The Land of Nod (Illus.).
The Alphabetical Man.
Puzzles and Puzzlers.
Editor's Chat, &c.

Published by
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

Manchester Agents: H. RAWSON & CO., 16, New Brown Street; JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.
Liverpool Agents: THE LIVERPOOL BOOKSELLERS' COMPANY, LTD., 70, Lord Street.

Annual Subscription by Post, One Copy, 1s. 6d.

UNITY

An Organ of Reasonable Religion for Unitarian Propaganda.

MAY ISSUE NOW READY.

Unitarian Doctrines Explained; Trinitarian Orthodoxy Refuted; the Christianity of Jesus advocated.

"UNITY" contains Thoughts from Unitarian Leaders and Advanced Thinkers, Poetry, Incidents, Special Articles of Congregational Interest, and Light for the Perplexed.

Good for Church Members, Sunday School Teachers, Adult Classes, and Home Reading.

Adopted by Churches for Sale or Free Distribution with Printed Calendar Page or without.

Single copies, by post, 1d.; 1s. a year; 5d. per doz.; 3s. per 100; Calendar Page extra.

Published every month by the EDITOR, Ivy House, Mottram, Manchester.

By REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

UNITARIANISM RE-STATED.

FOUR POPULAR LECTURES.

1. THE BIBLE. 2. JESUS CHRIST. 3. GOD. 4. A WORKING RELIGION.

In neat Pamphlet, 48 pp. Sixpence.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, ESSEX STREET, W.C.

THE SOUL'S JOURNEY TO PARADISE.

By Matilda Sharpe.

13th Edition. 9d. net; or by Post, 10d.

ALFRED HOLNES, 14, Paternoster Row, London.
R. L. ALLAN, 143, Sauchiehall Street, Glasgow.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKLETS.

By the REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

DAILY MEDITATIONS

(Fourth Edition Revised.)

NIGHT UNTO NIGHT.

Cloth, red edges, 6d.; roan gilt, 1s.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C.

BIRTHS.

COPPOCK.—On the 27th inst., at 64, Chester-road, Macclesfield, to Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Coppock, a son.

GALLUP.—April 27th, at Wick House, Downton, Wilts, the wife of H. Curtis Gallup, of a son.

HALL.—April 27, at 11, Dingle-mount, Liverpool, the wife of Arthur W. Hall, of a son.

MARSHALL.—On April 22nd, at Vernon House, Huddersfield, the wife of William Lawrence Wright Marshall, of a daughter.

DEATHS.

CORNISH.—On the 13th inst., at No. 13, Lawn-road, Haverstock-hill, N.W., Alice Clara (née Suter), wife of C. W. Cornish.

HARRIS.—On April 22nd, at 53, Lowden-road, Herne Hill, S.E., George Harris, formerly of Deptford and Islington, aged 78 years.

JOHNSTON.—On April 25th, at South Cliff, Roker, Sunderland, Eliza, beloved wife of Alderman Johnston, and daughter of the late William Fallows, J.P., of Middlesbrough.

KENSETT.—On the 26th inst., at Barrington-road, Horsham, Ann, the beloved wife of William Kensett, in her 72nd year.

Board and Residence.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH. — ARNEWOOD. Pension. Commanding position in the West Cliff-road; full South aspect; sea views and private grounds; close to Winter Gardens, Cliff Promenade, Square or Pier; moderate Tariff.—Apply, MANAGERESS.

CHELTENHAM.—Board and Residence in the best part of Sunny Cheltenham, sheltered from North and Easterly winds. Near the Spas and Gardens. Comfortable home. Moderate terms. Excellent cuisine.—A. G., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, W.C.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—"Cranfock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE; most comfortable throughout. Sea View, excellent cuisine. billiard and smoke room, sanitary certificate —Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

LANGLEY HOUSE, DAWLISH, DEVON.—A delightful HOLIDAY RESORT for Ladies and School-girls (Boys under 15). Beautiful country, bracing climate. Sea and Moorland. Prospectus from MISS N. JONES, Matron; or A. E. JONES, Esq., Proprietor.

FELIXSTOWE.—Comfortable HOME for Permanent BOARDERS, Adults or Scholars; also APARTMENTS on reasonable terms.—Apply, Mrs. ROBINSON, Kimberley, Ranelagh-road, Felixstowe.

LAKE DISTRICT.—Small House with good-sized Garden to be Let Furnished. Rural situation. Few minutes' walk from shops and Lake. Two sitting-rooms, four bedrooms.—Miss E. NEWLING, Windy How, Hawkshead, Lancashire.

HOLIDAY HOME, GREAT HUCKLOW, DERBYSHIRE.

THE MANCHESTER DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION have vacancies for the weeks commencing Saturdays, 11th and 18th June, 9th July, and 27th Aug. For terms, &c., apply to D. A. LITTLE, Bowdon, Cheshire.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Enlarged, Remodelled, Refurnished.

PRONOUNCED BY THE PRESS TO BE THE BEST TEMPERANCE HOTEL IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Accommodation for about 250 Guests.

Highly commended by the Rev. Dr. Aked, Rev. Rowland Hill, Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. Alderman White, M.P., the Misses Cadbury and thousands of other guests.

Spacious Coffee, Reading & Drawing Rooms. Electric Light throughout.

Apartments, Service and Table d'Hote Breakfast from 5/- to 6/6 per day (with Dinner from 8/- to 9/6

77 & 101,
Southampton Row, London.
FREDERIC SMITH & SONS.

Opposite the British Museum.

THACKERAY HOTEL,

GREAT RUSSELL STREET,
LONDON.

This large and well-appointed Temperance Hotel has Passenger Lift; Bathrooms on every Floor; Electric Light throughout; Spacious Dining, Drawing, Writing, Reading, and Smoking Rooms; Fireproof Floors; Perfect Sanitation; Telephone; Night Porter.

Bedrooms from 2s. 6d. to 5s. 6d.

Inclusive charge for Bedroom, Attendance, Table d'Hôte Breakfast and Dinner, from 8s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. per day. Full Tariff and Testimonials on application.

Telegraphic Address: "THACKERAY, LONDON."

TO LET.—St. Catherine's Terrace, Guildford, Furnished House. Four reception, four bed-rooms, and dressing-room. Small garden and paddock. Five minutes' from town and railway station.—Apply, SUMMERSBURY, Shalford, Guildford.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

THE FIFTY-FOURTH ANNUAL MEETING will be held at

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand,
On WEDNESDAY, MAY 4th, 1904.

The President, W. BLAKE ODGERS, ESQ., K.C., LL.D., will take the chair at 7-45.

The Business Meeting will be preceded by a reception by the President and Mrs. Odgers at 7, to which all Members and friends of the Society are cordially invited.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION SOCIETY.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at Rosslyn Hill Chapel Schools, Hampstead, on Monday, May 16th, at 8.15. Chairman: Mr. CHARLES BOOTH. Speakers: Mr Graham Wallas, Rev. F. K. Freeston, and others.

DUKINFIELD OLD CHAPEL.

ANNUAL SCHOOL SERMONS, Sunday, May 1st. Morning and Evening, Rev G. HAMILTON VANCE, B.D. Afternoon, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH. Services: 10.45, 3 0, 6.30.

APPEAL

FOR A NEW ORGAN

FOR

SPAIN LANE CHAPEL, BOSTON.

A New Organ is imperatively needed. The congregation, mostly working people, have given liberally. They now appeal to sympathising friends and those who delight to help our weaker chapels. Contributions gratefully received by Mr. A. KIMS, 26, Tower-street, Boston.

LONDON UNITARIAN CHORAL SOCIETY.

The First Practice will be held at Essex Hall on May 9th, at 8, conducted by H. W. LITTLE, Esq., Mus.Doc. (Oxon.). Friends wishing to become members are requested to be at Essex Hall at 7.30, when the Secretaries will receive names.

BLACKPOOL, NORTH SHORE UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.

It is intended to hold a Bazaar in December next to inaugurate a Fund to clear off the liabilities upon the Church property. Particulars later.

THE LIBERATION SOCIETY'S ANNUAL MEETING, in connection with the TRIENNIAL CONFERENCE, will be held in the CITY TEMPLE on Wednesday, May 4th, at 7. The Chair will be taken by REV. DR. CLIFFORD (President); and the Speakers will include Rev. Professor GARVIE, D.D., Mr. HIRST HOLLOWELL, Mr. THEODORE E. TAYLOR, M.P., and Rev. JAMES TRAVIS (ex-President National Council of Free Churches).

Organ Recital by Mr. A. J. HAWKINS at 6.30.

Tickets may be had on application to the LIBERATION SOCIETY, 2 Serjeant's-inn, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Terms for Advertisements.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF-PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6

Special Terms for a Series.

Calendar Notices, 10s. per year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge 1/6,

Situations Vacant and Wanted,
20 words, 1s. 3 insertions charged as 2.

ANNIVERSARY MEETINGS, 1904.

The British & Foreign Unitarian Association

AND THE

SUNDAY-SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

Tuesday, May 24.

11.30 a.m.—Meeting of Delegates of Sunday School Societies and Unions at Essex Hall.

1.15 p.m.—LUNCHEON at the Holborn Restaurant, High Holborn, W.C. Tickets 2s. 6d.

2.45 p.m.—ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING at Essex Hall, when The President, MISS MARIAN PRITCHARD, will take the Chair.

3.45 p.m.—CONFERENCE on "Religious Education." MISS CLEPHAN (Leicester) will read a Paper. REV. W. COPELAND BOWIE will open the Discussion.

5 p.m.—Reception by the President of the S.S.A. in the Council Room. Tea and Coffee.

8 p.m.—ESSEX HALL LECTURE by PROF. H. H. WENDT (University of Jena), "The Idea and Reality of Revelation." Admission by Ticket to be obtained at Essex Hall. Members of the Unitarian Association free; Non-Members, 1s.

Wednesday, May 25.

11.30 a.m.—RELIGIOUS SERVICE, Little Portland Street Chapel. SERMON by the REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A. (Wandsworth). Collection in aid of the Funds of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association.

4 p.m.—ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING at Essex Hall. The President, MR. W. ARTHUR SHARPE, in the Chair. Reports, Election of Officers, Welcome to Delegates, and other business.

6 p.m.—Tea and Coffee in the Council Room.

7.30 p.m.—PUBLIC MEETING at Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand.

SPEAKERS:

REV. J. E. CARPENTER, M.A.	....	"The Outlook for Liberal Religion."
REV. JOSEPH WOOD	....	"What I Saw of the Unitarian Churches in America."
M. ANDRÉ BOURRIER	....	"Liberal Religion among the Catholic Clergy of France."
REV. W. H. LYON, D.D.	....	"The American Unitarian Association and its Work."
REV. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A.	....	"Thoughts Gleaned from a Visitation of our Churches."
REV. J. WARSCHAUER, M.A.	....	"Popular Irreligion and Liberal Christianity."

Thursday, May 26.

10 a.m.—DEVOTIONAL SERVICE, Essex Hall; REV. J. WORSLEY AUSTIN, M.A. (Church of the Messiah, Birmingham).

10.30 a.m.—CONFERENCE at Essex Hall. The President in the Chair. PAPER by the REV. L. P. JACKS, M.A. (Editor of the Hibbert Journal), "The Drift of Present-Day Religious Thought." HON. ROLLO RUSSELL (Haslemere) will open the Discussion. PAPER by the REV. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B. (Sheffield), "The Supply of Ministers for our Churches." MR. FRED. MONKS, J.P. (Warrington), will open the Discussion.

8 p.m.—CONVERSAZIONE at the Portman Rooms, Baker Street, W. Reception by the President and Mrs. Sharpe. Music by the Royal Blue Band. Tea and Coffee 8 to 11 p.m. Ticket, 1s.; on and after May 25, 2s.

Early application should be made for Tickets for the LUNCHEON, the ESSEX HALL LECTURE, and the CONVERSAZIONE.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, London, April 26, 1904.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate-hill, London, E.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Sole Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 20 & 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale) JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate. Saturday, April 30, 1904.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3228. NEW SERIES, No. 332.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1904. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 289
ARTICLES—
The Passmore Edwards Settlement ... 293
In the Academy 294
Frances Power Cobbe 297
The Circuit System: Its Adaptability to Unitarian Needs 297
"John Pounds" Home for Girls, Portsmouth 297
LEADER—
At the Gates of the Summer 296
CORRESPONDENCE—
Houses and Homes 292
Unitarian Home Missionary College ... 292
Evil versus Divine Goodness 292
MEETINGS—
Two Political Resolutions 292
London District Unitarian Society ... 300
South East Wales Unitarian Society ... 301
OBITUARY—
The Late Richard Enfield 294
Jenkin Llewelyn 295
CHILDREN'S COLUMN 295
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 301
OUR CALENDAR 302
ADVERTISEMENTS 303

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

PERFECTLY beautiful May Day came this year over a great part, at least, of England. Amid the glory of the springtime we are tempted to escape from other thoughts, and give ourselves to its fresh delight. This week, at any rate, through the goodness of a friend, we can do so, even in our leading article, and be content simply to enjoy, and in that happy way grow wiser and more fit for any work we have to do.

> And hark! how blithe the throstle sings!
> He, too, is no mean preacher:
> Come forth into the light of things,
> Let Nature be your teacher.
>
> One impulse from a vernal wood
> May teach you more of man,
> Of moral evil and of good,
> Than all the sages can.

A poet's paradox, of course! about which we have no intention to begin to reason. But let all who can, be wise with that best wisdom of this happy month.

THE fourth summer session for Sunday School Teachers is to be held at Manchester College, Oxford, as has been already announced, from Friday, July 1, to Saturday, July 9. Teachers and others practically connected with our Sunday schools, or young people about to take up the work, are eligible, and also friends in Oxford interested in the scheme. The form of the programme will be similar to that of other years, two lectures being given each morning, and the afternoons being free for visits to colleges and enjoyment of the country. The first lecture each morning is on some matter connected with religion or theology, and the following lectures are already promised:—Dr. Drummond, on "The Early MSS. of the Bible"; Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter on "The Book of Revelation"; Rev. J. Edwin Odgers on "The Sacraments"; and the Rev. J. H. Weatherall on "The Period of Ezra." The second lectures deal with matters connected with practical Sunday school work, and it is hoped that Miss Marian Pritchard, Miss Mossel, of Amsterdam, and the Revs. T. Robinson and J. L. Haigh will be among the lecturers. The opening service will be conducted by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant.

THE Rev. Charles Hargrove and Mrs. Hargrove, on their voyage by the P. and O. s.s. India to Australia, touched at Colombo on Sunday, April 24, and should reach Fremantle, the port for Perth, at the end of this week. In a letter to his congregation, printed in this month's Mill Hill Chapel Record, writing amid obstructions in the Suez Canal (April 14), Mr. Hargrove says:—

> It is a superstition among sailors that a parson on board brings ill-luck, but they cannot accuse me this time, for as long as I was the only parson all went well. Our voyage from Marseilles to Port Said was simply perfect; clear skies, calm sea, and a pleasant wind were such as might have been ordered by special providence in approval of our purpose, such as Jonah might have looked for if he had been ordered to go to Tarshish instead of Nineveh and straightway found his ship. At Port Said, which we reached on Monday night, a bishop came on board returning to his diocese of North Queensland, and then truly our luck changed.

A sunken ship, and other vessels flying the yellow quarantine flag, delayed their progress, but Mr. Hargrove was able to post his letter at Suez in time for the May Record. His sermon in this month's Mill Hill Pulpit is on "The Might of Truth."

A SPLENDID act of devotion to a high ideal is that of Mr. W. R. Cremer, M.P., who has given the £7,000 awarded to him as the Nobel prize, for distinguished services to the cause of Peace, to furnish an endowment for the International Arbitration League, with the hope that other gifts and bequests may raise the endowment to £25,000, so as to secure a good working income for the League. Mr. Cremer handed over the deeds of his gift at a dinner given to him on Wednesday, when Mr. Thomas Burt, M.P., presided, and Mr. Carnegie and the Bishop of Hereford were among the speakers.

THE final meeting of the School Board for London, which took place last week, marks the completion of the campaign into which Mr. Balfour found himself hurried by his clerical friends, but which, after protracted operations, leaves an obvious misgiving on the part of those who have triumphed, and a keen sense of exasperation amongst those who have lost. The time has not come when the effect of thirty years of School Boards can be duly estimated. Those who have had little to do with the Board Schools may very easily under-estimate the good work they have accomplished; and as to the class of critics that charged all the defects of our growing youth to the old system, we neither expect repentance from them, nor a juster treatment of the new educational authorities. But when the verdict can be calmly given by observers competent to judge, that verdict will undoubtedly redound to the credit of public-spirited and faithful men and women who have found here their life-work. It will not be thought invidious if we say, not only for Londoners, but for friends of the schools all over the country, that Lord Stanley, better known as Mr. Lyulph Stanley, deserves special thanks for the zeal and intelligence brought by him during so many years to this important branch of the public service.

NOTHING could better illustrate the rush to extinguish the old system than the fact that though the School Board is dead its local managers are to carry on their old functions till July, by which time it is hoped the County Council and the Metropolitan boroughs will have formed the new committees of managers. Meanwhile a disturbed mind exists in Progressive circles owing to the decision to exclude the public and reporters from the Education Committee of the Council. This policy, which, it is true, keeps the new Committee in line with the other committees, is felt to be a serious step towards removing the subject of the schools from immediate popular attention. The recommendations of the Committee will, of course, have to be ratified at the public meetings of the Council, but the enormous amount of business to be got through at these meetings will, we fear, result in perfunctory treatment of all but a few salient points.

THE question of the attitude of Londoners to the payment of rates in aid of sectarian schools is now coming rapidly to the front, and in spite of the attempts made to cover "Passive Resisters" with ridicule their numbers will assuredly be largely augmented now the London Act comes into force. It is a nice point for a Unitarian to decide what he should do in this case. The ordinary Nonconformist has been satisfied with "Bible teaching," which, to say the least, has frequently taken on a colour entirely different from the Unitarian doctrine; and protests have not been wanting against the injustice of taking the Unitarian's money to teach evangelical Trinitarianism. The old difficulty has been increased, that is all, so far as this point is concerned. But there is another aspect of the case, and one that clearly calls for more than a mild disapprobation on our part. It is not a religious but a strictly political issue that is raised by the repudiation in the Education Acts of the principle that full popular control should go with popular maintenance. This is so flagrant a departure from the most wholesome traditions of the past that one would expect that many beside ourselves would have made it the chief ground of objection to the new policy. So long as this policy stands unrepealed it calls for something more than "passive" resistance.

CRITICISM of the Government Licensing Bill is rapidly crystallising on well-defined lines, and the grounds of opposition were well summarised in the resolution adopted at last week's meeting of the Central Temperance Legislation Board, presided over by Lord Peel. As was pointed out in these columns last Saturday, the objection to the creation of a vested interest in licences is not merely intrinsic, but is based on the conviction that such an interest will be fatally prejudicial to reform. The recognition of a vested interest is "entirely inconsistent with that exclusive public interest in which alone licences have hitherto been professedly issued." That is made abundantly clear by the fact, pointed out by Lord Peel, that under the Bill—

> You are not to reduce your licences in accordance with the public feeling and the inordinate supply over demand now, but you are only to take them away according to the amount of money which the localities have allotted to them.

And that amount of money "is so inadequate, that the number of licences which will be reduced under it will be infinitesimally small," and the net result is that such elements of popular control as now exist are practically abolished.

BUT it is not only with regard to the question of reduced drinking facilities that local magisterial control of the traffic is destroyed. It has been by the power they possess of refusing renewals whenever they consider such renewals prejudicial to public interests that magistrates have mainly been able to secure good management of public-houses. Under this Bill, however, licensing magistrates can only refuse a renewal on certain clearly defined grounds which they must state for submission to Quarter Sessions on appeal; and so long as the licensee keeps clear of these specific transgressions he can defy all the injunctions and recommendations which magistrates have made hitherto with so much advantage to the common weal.

ALMOST as fatal as the compensation scheme itself is the divided responsibility which the Bill establishes outside the county boroughs between the licensing justices and Quarter Sessions. The stimulus which has acted upon the local magistrates will, says Lord Peel, be withdrawn.

They will justly feel that Quarter Sessions, which in times past has chastised them with whips, will henceforth chastise them with scorpions. They will have no reason for looking into the state of affairs in their own localities, because they will feel that the matter will rest ultimately with a body of gentlemen who do not know the local circumstances, and who cannot take that keen interest in the welfare of their community which those do who live in their locality. . . . A body of gentlemen no doubt honest, able, but without that invigorating sense, that close touch with the public, which is, in this matter of licensing, an essential feature, because magistrates are there to adapt the trade to the requirements of the neighbourhood.

THE triennial Conference of the Liberation Society held this week under the presidency of Dr. Clifford, showed that recent educational experiences had infused new vigour into the campaign. The report of the executive declared that the Education Acts had demonstrated that the great obstacle to a really national system of education, and to political and social progress generally, was the existence of a Church Establishment. Recent religious statistics had demonstrated that the Established Church was no longer the Church of the nation; while the unfitness of Parliament to legislate on its behalf was constantly brought home to Churchmen themselves by the failure of Parliament to check current disorders, and by the difficulty in passing new Bishopric Bills and other ecclesiastical measures. All the signs of the times were hopeful. The dread of Disestablishment was fast decreasing, while it was becoming more and more evident that only in this way could the Anglican Church secure the precious gift of freedom, and attain that moral influence to which she was entitled as a living branch of the Church Universal.

THE Bishop of London, speaking at the Diocesan Conference, has repeated, this time with reasons given, his refusal to ordain men who do not believe in the Virgin Birth of Jesus. The refusal itself will secure the support of every Philalethian, but the Bishop's reasons are not really relevant. The real ground for insisting upon this belief in candidates for ordination is that they will be compelled, by Canon law and State law alike, to profess it in the public recitation of the Creeds. For the same reason no man ought to be accepted for ordination who does not believe that Jesus is now sitting at the right hand of God the Father. The reasons given by the Bishop, however, are that the belief is ancient, and that he himself holds it, to which any Broad Churchman might reply that his own belief is, in his opinion, more ancient still, and that he has as good a right to his own belief as Dr. Ingram to his. The remark of the rejected candidate, quoted by the Bishop, is undoubtedly accurate:—"My opinions do not differ materially from those held by many distinguished men now in Orders, but I might not conceal them so carefully as they mostly do."

THE Rev. C. E. Beeby, late vicar of Yardley Wood, Birmingham, writes to the Times that in view of the striking articles and pronouncement of eminent men of the Church of England, clerical and lay, contained in the April number of the Hibbert Journal, which, he says, directly support the cause which he has maintained, and for the sake of which he resigned his living, he wishes to emphasise at this juncture the grounds on which he tendered his resignation to the Bishop of Worcester:—

At the only interview I ever had with Bishop Gore he impressed upon me that it was inconsistent with honour that I should retain office in the Church of England. My reply was that I believed that the Church of England would never pronounce against the liberty I claimed, that I was most unwilling to remain in the Church of England against the judgment of the Church clearly ascertained, but that I was not willing to resign and then, as had so often happened in other instances, to find that in a few years the liberty I claimed should be generally conceded. The difficulty, admitted by both, was how to ascertain the voice of the Church. Whereupon the Bishop replied:—"If the liberty of interpretation which you claim in respect of two Articles of the Creed ever be conceded I myself shall resign my Episcopal office." The Bishop will not question that I have thus faithfully reported the substance of our interview. That was enough for me. Eventually I sent in my resignation on that understanding.

In view of the direct challenge now publicly made, amongst others by an eminent Canon of Westminster, to the Bishop of Worcester, surely the Bishop will no longer elect to remain silent. If there is any justice in Episcopal rule he is surely bound to bring the question at issue before the Episcopal Bench, and either tell the eminent men who have so directly challenged his judgment that it is inconsistent with public honour that they should remain in the Church of England, or, if the liberty I claim be now conceded by the Church, resign the office which he as yet retains on the distinct understanding, by which he morally compelled my resignation, that the liberty I claim should never be conceded by the Church of England while he remained a Bishop of the Church.

ACCORDING to returns published in the Methodist Recorder, Wesleyan Methodism will this year report an increase in membership and on trial of 6,700 souls; besides an increase of 3,000 juniors. Fifteen districts are named which have an increase of over 200; these include three London districts, Liverpool, Newcastle, Manchester, Birmingham, and Shrewsbury, &c. The West Riding of Yorkshire is unfortunate in that three of its districts, Halifax and Bradford, Leeds, and Sheffield show a decrease. But on the whole the figures will be considered very satisfactory. A remarkable increase in the number of candidates for the ministry is also reported.

IN a Sunday afternoon meeting at the Central Hall, Manchester, Dr. Moulton, of Didsbury College, questioned as to the necessity of certain beliefs for salvation, replied: "The virgin birth has just been referred to. That is only alluded to in a very few phrases in two chapters of the Gospels. I do not mean to say that that proves that it is not true. That is another question altogether, and we are going to discuss various questions of this kind next session, but I do say that it is very obvious that it is not an important doctrine in Christianity, as some people have tried to make it out to be. I quite agree that it was just as possible for God to produce a perfect man and a Divine Man with two human parents, as with one." He added that he regarded the deity of Christ as being "the very corner-stone of our belief," and that Resurrection and the Atonement were just parts of that.

ANY hearer or reader would perceive that the answers given by Dr. Moulton and Prof. A. S. Peake indicate a considerable advance towards a rational interpretation of Christianity, and away from the hard, inexorable doctrines of the older evangelicals. "We differ," said Prof. Peake, "from our predecessors in this respect, that they regarded the defence of Christianity very largely as a matter of credentials. They used miracles and prophecy to press the claims of Jesus. We, on the contrary, do not do anything of the kind. We throw our main stress, not on external guarantee, but upon intrinsic worth, and we say that unless Christianity in itself is worthy to be received, no amount of miracles would convince us of its truth. The more openly this view is acknowledged, the more deeply its importance is recognised, the better for all parties. For surely one of the great questions which this age has to settle, perhaps the question which begins earliest and will last the longest, is that of the intrinsic worth of Christianity in its very central message; the trustiness of Jesus as a human teacher, whose sayings are capable of being translated into concrete fact and made the foundation of personal, social, political conduct. A great work is before us, and those are aiding it who help to clear away the valueless material that hinders the work in its very preliminaries.

THE Torrey-Alexander Mission, of which, in one of its aspects, Dr. Warschauer wrote in these columns last week, concluded last Sunday. In his final address Dr. Torrey traversed an exposition of Unitarianism given by the Rev. A. N. Blatchford on the previous Sunday evening to a crowded congregation at Lewin's Mead. At the outset he paid some compliments to Mr. Blatchford, and said (as reported in the Bristol Mercury):—

He had the privilege of meeting him personally two weeks ago, and they had a most delightful conversation. He (Mr. Blatchford) was very kind, and said:—"My heart is with you here in this work; you are reaching a great many people in this city, and every person who has spoken to me about this mission has spoken in the highest terms."

This statement was naturally read by those who knew what had been going on with a good deal of astonishment and incredulity. In a subsequent issue of the Mercury, replying to a correspondent, Mr. Blatchford wrote:—

I hasten to respond to a Unitarian's letter in your issue of to-day. On the occasion in question, when Dr. Torrey met me in the street, and introduced himself to me, I spoke to him with that courtesy which a minister of religion owes even to his strongest opponent. But I regret to say that our brief conversation has been made to bear a signification quite unexpected on my part.

The vigorous correspondence in the Mercury on the subject of Unitarianism the Editor felt obliged on Thursday to bring to a summary close.

THE directors of the First Garden City Company have held a very interesting reception at the Rooms of the Royal Water Colour Society. The determining idea of the evening was revealed in a speech delivered by Mr. Ralph Neville, K.C., during an interval in the musical entertainment. The site for the city has been bought and surveyed. Even the question of a name has been under consideration. Is it to be New Letchworth or First Garden City? In any case, we would hope not "first." The number is correct, according to the chronology of the founders' hopes; but it certainly does not lend attractiveness to the name. The site has been paid for; to this end a large sum has been raised on mortgage, the interest on which is paid by the present rental of the estate. What is now wanted, and wanted immediately, is a further £20,000 of share capital for purposes of drainage, road making, and such preliminaries to building. Of this sum nearly a half was raised before, or promised during, the meeting. The proposals of Mr. Howard have had till now such wonderful success that it would be a pity if want of funds led to any impairment of the conception. An interesting plan and map of the estate and the proposed town have been prepared by the company. Among other details to be gathered from the accompanying letterpress, it may be mentioned that the site set apart for factories has been so chosen that all smoke, smell, or noise may be blown away from the town by the prevailing wind of the district. This strikes us as one of the good features that may be expected in a deliberately planned town as compared with one that springs up at haphazard. The roads are to be straight, perhaps too straight, except that in a few cases the contour of the land has made a pleasant curve necessary.

THE April number of the Abolitionist, "the journal of the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection" (14, St. James's Barton, Bristol), is a memorial to Miss Frances Power Cobbe, the founder of the Union. A striking portrait is included from a photograph taken in Rome in 1879, and the editor contributes not only a full memoir, dwelling especially on Miss Cobbe's work against the evils of vivisection, but a further article on the funeral at Hengwrt and Llanelltyd. Of the quiet churchyard at Llanelltyd, from which one looks across the tidal Mowddach, and sees Hengwrt, the fine old house "nestling in its great trees," with the noble form of Cader Idris as a background, he writes:—

The death of her friend, Miss Lloyd, who was buried in that spot, gave it a fresh consecration, for her friendship "has been," she said, "to my later life what my mother's affection was to my youth." On many occasions in recent years the present writer has accompanied Miss Cobbe to the little cemetery, and stood talking with her of the life beyond the veil, beside the grave of her friend, which she intended one day to share. On summer days she has more than once pointed to the beautiful roses which flourished luxuriantly above the grave, as symbols of her friend whose earthly remains rested within. The deep emotion with which she touched on the hope of a joyful meeting hereafter, and the unconquerable trust in the great Father Spirit which breathed through her words, the words of one who knew and felt to the full all the difficulties that arise from the increased knowledge of the Universe, and yet by direct communion with God had gained a spiritual vision which saw clear beyond them, gave a breath of inspiration on such occasions to all she said.

And having told of the service and Mr. Carpenter's address, and who was at the funeral, he adds:—

The grey headstone, to which Miss Cobbe referred in her autobiography, has now stood for years above the grave of Mary Lloyd, which has just become the grave of Frances Power Cobbe also—the friends once divided now re-united in death. The words on the headstone will be interesting to our readers, as they were placed there by Miss Cobbe herself:—

Take them, O grave, and let them lie
Folded upon thy narrow shelves,
As garments by the soul laid by,
And precious only to ourselves.

Take them, O great Eternity,
Our little life is but a gust
That bends the branches of thy tree
And trials its blossoms in the dust.

THIS number of the Abolitionist reprints the Times' memoir, and also the glowing tribute which appeared in the Star of April 6. The memoir by the editor of the Abolitionist, who knew Miss Cobbe and Miss Lloyd in London, as far back as 1878, and since the establishment of the British Union and its monthly organ, had been in constant and most intimate communication with Miss Cobbe, concludes as follows:—

Her mortal body rests in the quiet graveyard at Llanelltyd, but she has left another body, the British Union, built up by herself, in which it was her earnest wish that her spirit, her views, her methods, and her policy might survive after she was gone. She hoped for this; she hoped that her friends and followers would regard that body she had left with them as a sacred trust, that her memory and example would be preserved in that body as an influence making for union and fellowship in work, that the way the Federation of Societies had been conducted under her headship the last five years would be our guide for the future; that the Abolitionist, the organ of the Union, would continue its work exactly as it would have done had she continued to live. By loyal observance of these wishes of hers we may still have her leadership, and the British Union, the body she created and developed and provided for, may still go forward in its work for the abolition of vivisection, taking the word of command from the indwelling spirit of its old heroic leader.

COUNTRY HOLIDAY MOVEMENT.—Miss A. Lawrence, 23, Campden House Chambers, Campden Hill, London, W., begs to acknowledge with many thanks receipt for this fund of the following sums:—Mr. W. Spiller, £5; Mrs. Griffith, £2 2s.; Mrs. G. Du Vallon, 10s.; Mr. John Harrison, £2 2s.; Miss E. Garrett, £1 1s.; "Anon.," 5s.; Mrs. Collier, £1; Lady Durning Lawrence, £3 3s.; Mrs. Temple, £1 1s.; Mrs. Robinson, £5 5s.; Mr. Bond, 10s.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

HOUSES AND HOMES.

SIR,—I have read with much interest and pleasure Mr. Hardy's breezy article in this week's INQUIRER on "The Ingle Nook." But there are one or two points in it which I should like to—I will not say controvert—but supplement. I cordially sympathise with his love of a substantial house, built to last, with ground about it, and I wish such houses could be indefinitely multiplied; but, at the risk of seeming to take a casual expression too seriously, I should like, if I may, to comment on the passing reference to the nationalisation of the land. Mr. Hardy has been describing a house which has been the home of one family for 300 years, and appears to think that the nationalising of the land would put an end to such homes. But it would, on the contrary, tend to their vast increase in number. The community would not be the occupier of the land, but the ground landlord. The tenant would have security of tenure so long as he paid his ground rent, and would therefore have every facility and inducement to build a substantial house or cottage, and found a home of the sort Mr. Hardy's soul loves. Under the present land system, few have the means and opportunity to obtain a freehold site, and if they build on leasehold property their house belongs at the end of the lease to the ground landlord, so there is every inducement to build cheap houses that will not too long outlast the lease. But with a perpetual lease and security of tenure, any man whom circumstances allowed to settle permanently in one place, might build himself a home of his own.

Next I want to say a word for the poor town dwellers, who must needs, under present circumstances, live in jerry-built houses, and who "have moved, are moving, and will move." Household gods can be moved nowadays just as well as they could when Æneas left Troy; and when a family has taken a house—say No. 300—in a street where all the houses are alike, there they may set up their household gods and make a home.

When the jerry builder has "run up and knocked off" a row of houses a young couple takes one of them, and straightway clothes the bare shell with imagination and hope. Then they choose furnishings and decorations to their taste, impress their surroundings with their own character, mellow all with love, and thus they make a home.

Many a one has felt, when drawing near to a commonplace house in a commonplace street (or, worse still, in an "avenue" or "grove") a glow at heart, comparable to that felt by Horatius when he "saw on Palatinus the white porch of his home." That is the one spot on earth where he fain would be. It contains those he loves the best; there he knows await him rest and warmth, water to wash away the stains of the city, and, above all, that indescribable rest of the heart which we can only call feeling "at home." Within every house of stone or brick there is "a house not made with hands," and according to the atmosphere of this inner house, a man or woman may feel desolate in an old family house with an ingle nook, or at home even in a flat.

CLARA ARMSTRONG.

Liverpool, April 26.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

SIR,—I should not have commented upon the letter which appeared in your last issue from the Rev. Joseph Wood had I not learnt that the Chairman of the Manchester College Committee had in hand for signature a memorial expressing similar views. I must therefore take Mr. Wood's letter as partly expressing the views of the Manchester College authorities, and as such it calls for notice. I say "partly" because Mr. Wood concludes his letter by saying that what we have to consider "is the welfare of our churches and their needs generally, rather than the sentiments that gather round any particular Institution." I cordially agree with this statement, and it is because I agree with it, that I object to the proposals in the previous part of Mr. Wood's letter.

I was myself on the Committee of Manchester College for eight years—from 1893 to 1900—and whenever any proposal was objected to, as not in the interest of our churches, we were told that at that Committee they knew nothing of any churches. Constant iteration was laid on the duty of the Committee to regard nothing except the interests of free learning and free teaching. The ideal held up for the College has been the becoming a "free faculty of Theology at Oxford in connection with the University," an ideal which, however high, is inconsistent with devotion to the interests of any church or body of churches. I left Manchester College Committee because after eight years' experience on it I was convinced that it was yearly becoming less and less of a strength to Unitarianism.

Yes, Mr. Editor, I am not ashamed to avow my devotion to Unitarianism, as a concrete body of religious faith, varying in form, open to development, but at the present moment based on belief in the Unity of God and the Brotherhood of Man. Those Unitarians who hold similar views to myself, and I have reason to believe that they vastly preponderate in our churches, require one College at any rate which acknowledges its responsibilities to the Unitarian churches by bearing the Unitarian name and avowing its raison d'etre to be the preparation of men for their pulpits. I must protest against the Memorial of the Chairman of Manchester College and against such letters as Mr. Wood's, because, though they cannot affect the separate existence of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, they must inevitably injure the success of the Jubilee Memorial.

JAMES R. BEARD,
President of the Unitarian Home Missionary College.

EVIL VERSUS DIVINE GOODNESS.

WE have received another letter from Mr. G. F. Millin, in reply to Mr. Badland, and further insisting on his own position, but we must set a limit, for the present, at any rate, to this discussion. The case will be found stated with sufficient clearness in the letters which have already appeared, but neither side convinces the other.

TWO POLITICAL RESOLUTIONS.

At the annual meeting of the Presbyterian ministers in and about the cities of London and Westminster, held at Dr. Williams' Library on April 29, the following resolutions were passed unanimously:—

I.

That this meeting of Presbyterian ministers in and about the cities of London and Westminster solemnly protests against the importation of indentured Chinese labour into the Transvaal, under conditions which would not be tolerated in England or any of the free colonies for white labour, and would involve many of the most serious evils of slavery. This meeting regards the provisions of the Ordinance sanctioning such conditions as injurious to the progress of civilisation and contrary to the spirit of Christianity, and is of opinion that the introduction of a large number of Chinese labourers into the Colony at the present time would in any case be injurious to the interests of the Colony; and that the attempt to safeguard the Colony against such injury by degrading conditions such as those of the Ordinance will be largely ineffectual, and will leave a lasting stain on the reputation of the British Empire.

II.

That this meeting of Presbyterian ministers in and about the cities of London and Westminster protests against any legislation on the lines of the Bill now before Parliament with reference to the liquor traffic, or in any way tending to create for the persons engaged in that traffic any interest or security of tenure which the present law does not give; and is of opinion that, as the use of alcoholic drink is universally admitted to be a cause of a vast amount of crime, disease, poverty, and suffering, it is of the utmost importance that it should at all times be under the strictest control that is compatible with the liberty which the British Constitution gives its citizens, in general, and that no new vested interest should be created in regard to it, and that the powers of the civil magistrates and the people in dealing with it should be increased rather than diminished. Local conditions being of the greatest importance in regard to this trade, this meeting holds that it is especially undesirable to take away or curtail any power that the local magistrates now possess in controlling or restricting it, except by the substitution of local popular control.

Copies of these two resolutions were ordered to be sent to the Prime Minister, the Home Secretary, and Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, M.P.

The body of ministers above described, according to their ancient title, is, as many of our readers will be aware, now a body of Unitarian ministers connected with our older foundations, and others elected into their fellowship.

THE universe is judging us all the time as to whether we shall find and occupy the place that has been appointed for us in the purposes of God.

F. W. Farrar.

THE PASSMORE EDWARDS SETTLEMENT.

THE Passmore Edwards Settlement is already well known to the readers of THE INQUIRER, many of whom have given constant proof of their great and abiding interest in its welfare and progress. It is felt, however, that its work and aims are of such a nature that they would appeal to all those who desire to ameliorate the condition of the working classes, and to promote the good of the community.

In her address at the informal opening of the Settlement in October, 1897, Mrs. Humphry Ward reminded her hearers of the ideals of its promoters, "for in truth a settlement is nothing if it is not a place of ideals, a place of enthusiasms." "There are a hundred conquests and pleasures and opportunities that civilisation brings or develops that for a long time fall mainly to the rich, and yet if the State is to grow healthily they must in time be brought down into the market-place, and distributed far and wide. Education, social intercourse, and debate of the wider sort, music, books, pictures, travel—all the pleasure that mere refined ways and spacious rooms and wholesome amusement bring with them. . . . . It is these that make life rich and animated, that ease the burden of it, that stand perpetually between a man and woman and the darker, coarser temptations of our human road. And it is for the equalisation, for the distribution, of these that settlements are specially meant."

More than six years have passed since these words were spoken. How has the Settlement so far fulfilled these expectations?

The question can best be answered by looking at the work it is doing in the various clubs.

The largest and most important of these is the mixed men and women's club, of over 400 members, who form the associates of the Settlement, "Workmen and working women," we are told in the Rules of Associateship, "who are in sympathy with the aims of the Settlement and prepared actively to participate in the life of the place." The fees are 8d. a month for men and 6d. for women, and the Associates have free entrance to all the educational classes, and free use of the large hall, the dining-room, the drawing-room, and the library for frequent social gatherings. But that they are able and willing to do their share in promoting and extending the work and aims of the Settlement is proved by their presence on many of the committees and the excellent work which they do.

In addition to the Associates' another club, the "Denison," is carried on in a neighbouring street, in the hope of attracting the poorer and rougher workmen who could not be induced to come to the Settlement. Its success for a long time seemed very doubtful, but its membership of late has suddenly risen. It now includes about eighty men, and its prospects are most encouraging.

The club for boys has recently been invaded by a contingent of seventy or eighty lads of the very roughest type from a neighbouring slum. The original members—once rough and unruly themselves—find their work and meetings so seriously interrupted, that it has become necessary to form a second club for the regeneration of the new comers.

The Girls' Club falls, with the other work for women and children, under the management of the Women's Work Committee, of which Mrs. Humphry Ward is President. There are at present 270 girls—factory girls, dressmakers' apprentices, artificial-flower workers, &c., belonging to the club, and the numbers are steadily increasing.

For the benefit of these various clubs, there are classes in gymnastics, drilling, dancing, singing, a Shakespeare society, a literary society, debates, lectures, concerts, a cadet corps, a poor man's lawyer, &c.

The refining and softening effect of Settlement influences on those who come in contact with them becomes apparent to anyone who will visit the building, witness the behaviour of the club members, and notice the general tone and spirit that animates them.

A short time ago the writer was present at the weekly dance of the Girls' Club. About 140 members were in the room, all neatly and quietly dressed. Most of them were waltzing gracefully and well, a few late comers were taking tea in little groups near the refreshment tables, others were talking in twos and threes, some were paying in contributions to their "Bank," a few others were waiting their turn to see the lady-doctor who attends one evening each week and gives advice free, and medicine at a fee of 2d., but everything was being done as quietly and pleasantly as possible; there was no sign of stamping or shouting or rough, noisy manners. "Of course, it wasn't always like this," said the superintendent, herself an Associate of the Settlement and the wife of a working-man. "We began six years ago with six girls, and they were so rough I didn't know what to do with them. We have our troubles and our ups and downs even now, but they are dear girls, and I love them every one."

But to turn from this to the educational side of Settlement activity.

No less than four separate schools are carried on on the premises. The Invalid Children's School, the first public one of its kind in London, was opened here in conjunction with the London School Board five years ago. It now numbers 68 crippled and delicate children, the majority of whom have to be fetched and taken to their homes in ambulances. The School of Domestic Economy is also carried on, under the direction of the London School Board.

The Recreation School, from 5.30 to 6.30 every evening, interests the children of the Board School during an unoccupied hour with such subjects as drill, singing, lantern lectures, French history, brush-work, &c., and has had a weekly attendance during the winter months of about 2,000.

The Vacation School, started in August, 1902, and repeated last year with even greater success, had a total weekly attendance of very little below 3,000. The description of the school and of the work it has done, as given in the report, is of the very greatest interest, but must be entirely omitted here owing to want of space. There seems to be some reason to hope that the system may be taken up by the educational authorities and may spread to other parts of London, for the benefit of the poor children who can have no country holiday, and who would otherwise be playing and quarrelling in the streets.

The foregoing account—meagre and inadequate as it must necessarily be—is yet sufficient, perhaps, to show that really good and effective work is being done, and that the hopes and expectations of six years ago are being to a large extent actually fulfilled. It is sad, indeed, to think that such work is being handicapped and restricted, as it undoubtedly is, by want of workers and funds. There are several vacancies among the residents this summer, which it is earnestly hoped may be filled up, while the difficulties of the financial position are clearly expressed in the following extract from the Annual Report, with which this paper must conclude:—

Our Bank overdraft which is always a subject of great uneasiness to us, has been reduced this year from £475 6s. 11d. to £371 11s. 7d. . . . . Our financial position is, however, by no means satisfactory. We have a small body of about 100 friends, who devotedly support us year after year, but we have not been able up to the present to secure the financial help of any large section or body of outside supporters. Yet, there must be many to whom our aims and our point of view must strongly appeal, and who would sympathise with us and be ready to give us their help if they only realised our great need and the anxiety it entails on those who are responsible for the work of the Settlement. . . . . We urgently ask, therefore, all those who feel that the service of humanity is a vital part of their religion to come to our assistance. Many whose other claims might prevent them from giving a guinea, could perhaps, at any rate afford to send us 10s. or even 5s. a year; and if they could only witness some of the daily scenes at the Settlement, the crippled children as they are carried into school from the ambulance; the busy girls of the Domestic Economy School engaged in cookery or laundry work; the crowds of children, amounting to some 2,000 a week, who daily besiege the doors of the Settlement for entrance to the classes of the Recreation School; and, later, every room again occupied with the classes and societies of the Associates, the Boys' Club, and the Girls' Club; if they could only see the intense appreciation evinced by the large audiences at the Saturday and Sunday concerts and lectures, the keen interest shown in the fortnightly debates, and the enjoyment of the crowds that gather in the hall on the social evenings, they would indeed feel that their money was being put to good use.

Surely all who read this report are in a position to send us some small subscription, and thus help to relieve our anxiety and enable us to extend our work in new directions.

A report of the work of the Settlement and all particulars will be sent on application to the Warden, The Settlement, Tavistock-place, W.C., who will be glad also to receive subscriptions.

A MAN may be usually known by the books he reads, as well as by the company he keeps; for there is a companionship of books as well as of men; and one should always live in the best company, whether it be of books or men.

Samuel Smiles.

IN THE ACADEMY.

THIS year's exhibition, as we said last week, is by no means dull; but, as usual, it is not the most pretentious pictures which are the most beautiful. The spirit of allegory seems to be abroad, but without the insight of genius. The picture that will be most talked about is, perhaps, Mr. Sigismund Goetze's "Despised and rejected of men" (526). It is decidedly loud in its appeal, and offers a popular stage effect. Various figures typical of the heedless modern world, from the pleasure seekers of society and the sanctimonious ecclesiastic to the despised woman and the ragged urchin of the street, are grouped about a kind of altar to an "unknown God," to which is bound what we take to be a dead Christ. Only a hospital nurse catches a glimpse of this, the others are quite unconscious of what is in their midst, but she is horrified at what she sees. The picture fails, as it seems to us, because there is no majesty of suffering in the central figure, nothing to compel belief in the glory of self-sacrifice. Perhaps this was not intended, and the picture is a satire on the faith as well as the unfaith of the world. In either case it is unconvincing, but its separate figures will certainly attract attention.

Another puzzle is Mr. Solomon J. Solomon's "Allegory" (240). Here, also, is a dead Christ, borne aloft by two angels, but resting partly against two tables of stone, probably the tables of the Law, held by a venerable figure. Whether this is intended for Moses or for God the Father, of an earlier ecclesiastical art, we will not venture to say. If we could decipher the Hebrew on the stones perhaps we should know. Another allegory, bigger still, is Mr. R. Sauber's "Mammon" (540).

Very different in character is Mr. A. E. Abbey's "Central panel of a reredos for the Church of the Holy Trinity, Paris" (361). This is an avowedly ecclesiastical group, very strikingly portrayed. The figures stand out from a background of gold, the central figure on the cross, Mary the Mother and the Beloved Disciple on either side. The Christ is dark-haired, and has in death a sombre, almost a morose, expression; the disciple's face is curiously empty of expression, and his attitude is that of an officiating priest; the really beautiful thing in the picture is the Mother, with her clasped hands and face of resigned suffering.

Two distinguished artists this year contribute a "Joan of Arc." Mr. Frank Dicksee's ideal maid (75) surely carries the illumination of the eyes too far. Mr. James Sant's (229) is more human. It is interesting to compare the two. By far the most beautiful thing Mr. Dicksee has sent this year is his portrait of Mrs. Frank Shuttleworth (190), with its quiet wealth of colour.

If we had to name one picture out of the whole collection as greatest in achievement, within the limit of the artist's purpose, and most vivid in the impression it makes and the pleasure with which it is remembered, we should turn from many more ambitious efforts, and should be strongly inclined to choose that which bears the unexciting title of "Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Oliver" (500), by Mr. Chas. W. Furse. These are doubtless portraits, but what one sees is the strong, intent face of a fisherman, who has just made a cast into the mountain stream, while on the rock above, also looking down into the stream, his wife lies in an attitude of easy pleasure, watching her husband's skill. The man's face is the centre of the picture, and it has left with us the most vivid memory of the whole exhibition.

Of portraits pure and simple there is no lack. Here we may see the Archbishop of Canterbury in all his splendour, at close quarters (21), by A. S. Cope, and there is a presentation portrait of the Rev. C. Silvester Horne (287) by Hugh G. Riviere. One of the most striking is Herkomer's "Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, M.P." (194), a decided portrait. With these may be mentioned two of Mr. Hope Pinker's busts, that of Mr. Alfred Willett, F.R.C.S. (1740), in marble, and that of Sir George M. Humphrey, for the Humphrey Memorial Museum at Cambridge (1749), in bronze. In the central Sculpture Hall, Alfred Turner's "Labour" (1667) and "Maternity" (1670), parts of the Sheffield Queen Victoria Memorial, should be noted.

Of nature pictures, both of sea and mountain country, and of quieter inland scenes, there are many which it is a great pleasure to see. In marked contrast are MacWhirter's two pictures from Aviemore (102 and 310), the former a brilliant glimpse of Loch-an-Eilan, seen through the old Scotch firs, and two others of Lake Como (278 and 282). The same may be said of Alfred Parsons' "In the West Country" (18), with its old bridge over the quiet river, and his "Bonnie Scotland" (537), the sunny Loch and distant hills seen beyond a mass of different-coloured bloom. We have a feeling that we should like to see that mass of rhododendron and white hawthorn and the bluebells, but that if we wanted to enjoy the distant view we would have the flowers behind us and not ablaze in the foreground. Among other delightful landscapes are "Thorn Trees on a Breconshire Hill-side" (180) by H. W. B. Davis," "Solemn Solitude" (332) by Charles Stuart, "The Estuary of Aberdovey (145) by T. H. Liddell, and Leader's "Evening among the Surrey Pines" (184) and "A Welsh River" (559). Both Joseph and David Farquharson are represented by fine pictures (268 and 195), and there are two striking Indian scenes (178 and 227) by Edward Molyneux.

Of names familiar in our own immediate circle we do not find many this year, but there is Mrs. Forster Morley's "A Fresh Breeze" (657), a bit of wind-swept grass and white flowers on the edge of a grey sea, unfortunately hung too high for us to see what the flowers are, and among the water-colours is Miss Frances Drummond's "Cloisters and Entrance to the Chapter House, Christ Church, Oxford" (979). Miss R. Drummond (1,166), and Miss E. Worrall, of Liverpool (1,198), also contribute charming miniatures.

IT is rather by what we say, than by what we do, that we make enemies. The lesson for us all is the wisdom of keeping silence under provocation.—A. K. H. B.

OBITUARY.

THE LATE RICHARD ENFIELD.

IN the memorial notice of the late Richard Enfield, published last week, there were inaccuracies, which Mr. Ernest Enfield has been good enough to correct in the following note:—

"The first Richard Enfield, to whom you allude, was the eldest son of Dr. William Enfield, and was appointed Town Clerk of Nottingham in 1791, at the age of 21, dying unmarried in the same year. He was, therefore, uncle, not grandfather, of the late Mr. Richard Enfield, who (as well as his three elder brothers, William, Henry, and Edward) was a son of Henry, the second son of Dr. Enfield. Mr. Richard Enfield's mother was Frances Henfrey, of Worksop. It was his wife, who was the daughter of Henry Dowson, of Geldeston, Norfolk."

When we spoke of Mr. Enfield as the last of his generation, we were thinking only of his own family. Two cousins are still living — Miss Emma Kinder, and Mr. Charles Kinder — being also grandchildren of Dr. William Enfield (not great-grandchildren, as we had supposed).

The memorial service at the High Pavement Chapel, held at the same time as the funeral at Bramcote, on Thursday week, was very largely attended, among those present being the Mayor of Nottingham, as one of the representatives of University College, and the Town Clerk, and other members of the Law Society. Other public bodies were also represented. The service was conducted by the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, and the same hymns were sung as at the funeral, "For ever with the Lord," and "O God, our help in ages past." Mr. Thomas, in his address, spoke of Mr. Enfield's strenuous and beautiful life. In that service, he said, they were together in sympathy with those who stood by the grave at Bramcote: "The last tender rites are being observed in holiness and quietness, and we are permitted to share in the grief and join in the prayer of the bereaved. Space is for the moment annulled, as we feel the same Father of Pity enfolds us, the same consolation of Christ ministers to us, the same Holy Spirit breathes about us, while underneath and around all are the everlasting arms. In the stillness of our hearts we would beseech the strength and solace of the Eternal for those whose more intimate and sacred grief cannot be known to us." He then proceeded to speak of the manifold services of Mr. Enfield's long life, of what he had done for school and church and city, choosing quiet ways of service, "those spheres of patient and painstaking work that are least disturbed by the agitations and intrigues of partisanship"; and the address concluded:—"He leaves to his fellow-citizens the legacy of a great if gentle enthusiasm and the inheritance of a high and self-less ideal. We wait by his grave with much sorrow, but with greater thankfulness in our hearts. Shall we not now in vision see him looking at us also with his benignant eyes and hear his kindly voice say, 'Work, work, and be thankful.' God preserved him to his family, his friends, and his city to the autumn fulness of long years. He now wakes in God's immortal spring. His work is in our hands. To young and to old he speaks—speaks now from beyond the grave—'Life is going; Death is coming; work, work, and be thankful.' With reverence and with love let us stand in the presence of the Eternal. Into God's hands we resign his spirit. Amen."

JENKIN LLEWELYN.

THE story of the passing away of the faithful ones of our churches is always written with sorrow, but it has to be done week after week. The dear brother whose name heads these lines passed within the veil on Thursday, April 28, at the advanced age of 81, after a noble life of strenuous and loyal devotion to high ideals. His father and his grandfather had been identified with the Old Meeting House, Aberdare, so that he was himself, in a sense, born into it. In early life he became a member of its Sunday and singing school. For fifty years or more he had been deacon, and for nearly as long one of the trustees of the church, and there never was a more faithful one. During the forty years that have passed since the present minister entered on his pastorate, he proved one of those whose sympathy and help could always be depended upon. When, some thirty years ago, the minister's health broke down Mr. Llewelyn and two others gave their ready and efficient help, often taking the whole service, and conducting it to the general satisfaction of the congregation, and for many years longer they took the introductory evening service in turns, until they all disappeared, one after the other, from the present scene. Mr. Llewelyn was the last, and leaves the minister in his old age, for a short time longer, to discharge the whole duties himself.

Though living more than two miles away, Mr. Llewelyn seldom missed the service morning or evening. He was a man of peace, and his influence in the congregation was always of the most helpful kind.

On Monday, the day of the funeral, after a short service in the house, conducted by Mr. Jones, the funeral cortège, which was a large one, started for the public cemetery, where the few final words of comfort and exhortation were spoken by the minister and the Rev. J. Grawys Jones (Cong.), the Rev. D. J. Evans closing with prayer.

R. J. J.

THE true question for a man to ask of his soul is not, "Am I fit to die?" but, "Am I worthy to live?" . . . Do a strong, manly or womanly part; accept the mercies that come with a glad thankfulness; take hold of work and duty with a firm, hearty grip; in all life's intercourse, whether of home or of the world, fulfil a loving, helpful part. And then shall life go strengthening, greatening all the way; and there shall be no death, but only some day, just as the laws of being bring it, a change, a passing on, and the unspoken word "to come up higher" into the next and finer stage of this wonderful Life.—Brooke Herford.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

SHAKESPEARE'S "TEMPEST."

WHEN Prospero had been for twelve years with Miranda on the wonderful island, he learned by his magic art that his enemies, who had done him so much wrong, were in a ship at sea not far off. So he raises a great tempest, to drive their ship on to the island. He is ready to forgive. The difficulty will be to make them wish to be friends, to make them sorry for having been enemies. It is for this end that Prospero uses all the power of his magic art. They are to be punished not out of spite or revenge, but to make them repent. When once they are sorry it will be easy to make friends.

Punishment, repentance, forgiveness, re-union—that is Prospero's plan, and Ariel is his assistant in carrying it out.

The storm that breaks over the ship is so terrible that the King of Naples and his party, in despair, throw themselves into the sea. But it is Ariel who has done it all, and he brings them safely to land. They think their ship is wrecked, whilst Ariel sees that it is safely hidden away in a deep nook of the shore, to be ready when the time comes to take them home.

The King's son Ferdinand, who was innocent of any wrong, is separated from the others and landed by himself, thinking he is the only one saved, and mourning for his father's loss. As he sits sadly alone Ariel enters invisible, and with sweet music leads him gradually on and on to where Prospero and Miranda are sitting. Miranda has seen the wreck and heard the cries, and her heart is full of pity for the distress of the noble creatures on board the ship. Prospero assures her that there is no harm done, no one really hurt, and then proceeds to tell her for the first time their own past history. He concludes by announcing that fortune has now brought their enemies to their shore.

When Ferdinand appears in sight neither he nor Miranda has any idea who the other may be. She takes him for a spirit, and he takes her for a goddess—the goddess of the island whose magic music has brought him to her feet. Miranda is delighted to hear that this new-comer, young like herself, is also human like herself. Ferdinand is delighted to hear that she is no goddess, but a maiden, for he has fallen in love with her already.

This is part of Prospero's plan for reconciliation, and, as it is a fairy story, everything happens quickly. But Ferdinand must not win Miranda too easily, lest he value her lightly. So Prospero pretends to think him a spy and a traitor, disarms him by magic, threatens to treat him as a prisoner, to chain his neck and feet together, and give him only sea-water to drink and acorn-husks and withered roots to eat. Miranda pleads for him in vain, and Ferdinand is content to remain a prisoner if only he may behold this maiden once a day.

To test his courage and his willingness to serve Miranda, Prospero sets the young prince to carry logs for their fire, and Ferdinand, whose heart has flown to his lady's service, is for her sake a patient log-man. She would like to help him, but that he will not allow, for he is ready to bear any burden for her sake. So they quickly make friends over his work, and Miranda even promises to be his wife.

In the meantime the King is mourning for his son's loss. He is punished indeed. He had long ago committed Prospero and his child to the mercy of the waves, and now the sea has taken his own child from him.

Other dangers await him. There is a plot against his life, which Prospero, by his art, foresees and stops. Then he and his brother, the treacherous Antonio, are made to feel still further that the powers of heaven and earth are against them for their past sins. Some of Ariel's fellows appear in strange shapes, bringing in a banquet, and with gentle gestures inviting the king and his followers to eat. Then Ariel claps his wings, and the banquet disappears as mysteriously as it came, from before the eyes of the hungry men. Ariel delivers a solemn speech, accusing the three men of their wickedness, and telling them that if they had seemed to escape punishment it was for a time only. He reminds them of their wrong to Prospero, for which foul deed the seas and shores, yea, all the creatures, are incensed against their peace, and have bereft Alonzo of his son. He then tells them that lingering death awaits them on this lonely isle unless they sincerely repent and determine to sin no more.

Ariel gradually leads the distracted men to the lime grove behind Prospero's cell, and their remorse is so evident that even the sprite declares he would be sorry for them were he human. If Ariel is thus tender to them it is no wonder that Prospero is moved to compassion:

> They being penitent,
> The sole drift of my purpose doth extend
> Not a frown further. Go, release them, Ariel.
> My charm I'll break, their senses I'll restore,
> And they shall be themselves.

To complete the work of restoration and reconciliation Prospero uses no magic but that of Ariel's music. Do you notice that whilst Ariel, at Prospero's bidding, punishes in various ways the naughty folk to make them learn, he helps others on by sweet music. Now that the King and Antonio have learned their lesson through punishment they too may hear Ariel's music.

Prospero now drops his magic mantle, and puts on the hat and sword he had worn as Duke of Milan, that he may be the more easily recognised by those whom Ariel brings before him. He welcomes his old enemies as friends, forgives them all, and comforts the King by revealing Ferdinand and Miranda in the cave playing at chess. When the King discovers who Miranda is, he wants to ask forgiveness of her too. But Prospero will not let him dwell any more on the past:

> Let us not burden our remembrance
> With a heavine s that's gone

They shall all begin life anew, he says, as Ferdinand and Miranda are doing, together. On the morrow they shall sail for Naples, and when Ariel has arranged for favourable winds to bear their ship safely home, Prospero tells him, he shall be as free once more as the winds themselves. So the story ends in reconciliation and peace and happiness.

LILIAN HALL.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street Strand, London, W.C.

LONDON, MAY 7, 1904.

AT THE GATES OF THE SUMMER.

WE have reached the gates of the summer. The bowers and the gardens, the palace and the pleasaunce lie further on. There is nothing comparable, either earlier or later in the year, to the voicefulness of the spring. Not that nature is often silent even to our heavy ears. By the surge of the wind and rain, by the clink of the brook, and by the call of bird and beast she is ever uttering some word of wisdom or of joy—at times of pain. But there are periods of comparative silence. In the still days of grey-blue mist and the long nights of November, in the languid heat of August, with only its whisper-music of gauzy wings, but most of all when the snow lies deep, hiding life and sound together, is the earth still. Now we are in a round of song. April was able to drop into silent slumber during the mid hours of the night, with no fear of interruption save from the ghostly oo-hoo of an owl or the casual wail of the plover waking nervously from its dreams. But May has ordered otherwise. As in the Catholic brotherhood, whose members follow one another day and night forging the links in an endless chain of prayer about the feet of GOD, May bids her choristers keep alternate vigils, and pour into the ear of their Creator an undying stream of praise. For the nightingale is back with us now, and before merle and mavis have put up their scores she and her sisters start the plain-song of the night, which lasts until the watchman lark from his high tower sings the dawn. If every star were singing on its course, if every leaf were singing on the trees, there scarce could be a more melodious world than this in the time of the Maying.

Not that to the birds alone is entrusted the choristery of nature. The wind is a great singer. Its richest music is in duet with the trees. It has chants for the winter and odes for the summer, while its lyric to spring is different from either. Its voice is tearing and harsh through the bare branches of December, but soft and billowy in June, when every bough is muffled with leaves. And now there is a fine blend of these two musical registers. Oak and ash still sharpen the breath of the sou'-wester with their bony resistance, while beech and elm, wrapping themselves in thick foliage, help the pines to create the deep, soft dream-notes of the song, the wind's cave echoes, its memories of the sea.

This music of nature is not more actual that it is emblematic. The extremely interesting experiments of Mrs. WATT-HUGHES have gone far towards illustrating the inter-relation between sound and form. By the help of a simple instrument—a trumpet-like tube with an elastic membrane stretched over the mouth—it is found that every note has a corresponding form-character which it is capable of impressing on a layer of spores or fine sand. As the notes communicated to the instrument rise in quality and complexity, so does the design on the membrane. A stave, a melody, measures itself out by the lash of its vibrations in harmonious curves and organic patterns—the very patterns, some of them, into which nature has cast her handiwork in leaf and feather, in cloud and flower.

According to some such method, may we not surmise, that the creative breath of Nature, the Word which said "Let there be light!" "Let there be trees upon the face of the earth!" "Let man appear in our image!" imparts to the things which are seen and material the glorious harmonies of the unseen and the spiritual? This earth's architecture is the notation of the song of GOD. It ever "wears the colours of the Spirit."

The beauty of the earth at this season is singularly stimulant. The foam of blossom in the orchard, the translucent flush of gold and green upon the beech, the light which flashed upon the bank when violets were born, so evidently have some other meaning. "Wherever we look," says the tranquil-minded author of "The Beautiful GOD," "we see a bright loveliness surpassing expression." It is "a spray of the fountain," as he elsewhere puts it "of the Eternal loveliness."

By and by earth will throw herself into a more otiose attitude. Now she is aggressive, and defies us with her transcendent comeliness. There is a sting in her sentence, a rebuff in her look; for in beauty of mind and life we should rival all this, she would have us to know. It is the great mother's rally to her youngest and brightest, but most wayward child. She will condone our indolence in the tropics of the summer, she will forgive our surrender to the bribery of her own autumnal bounty, she will smile at our timidity when we retreat into our fortress of comfort and stand siege of winter, but in the spring-time she offers us no compromise, for none is needed. She comes without either terrors or inducement to lassitude. Brisk, yet tender, winsome, and ethereal, she is a little too serious to invite the jocular picnic party to offer her their compliments in orange-peel and beer-bottles, or even to quicken her pulse with popular ditties and roaring serenades. She gently reminds us that we of the town and market are the children of nature, and that it is at our peril that we ignore our relationship. The soul of all things flows towards us in this unearthly love and loveliness, and we remember that we too have the breath of the Eternal in us. Man is arraigned by the earth in springtime. Our nearness to GOD is measured by our intimacy with sea and sky; our alienation from Him by our estrangement from them. With eyes that haunt the shop and the street we may avoid the reproval of the constant stars which look down from afar in secret comment on this huge stage of pathetic errors and passing shows. We decline to prove ourselves against the serenity of the heavens. But nature invests us more closely. We cannot avert the challenge of the wood, or the preaching of that Pentecost of tongues in the clouds, or the chiding of every hedgerow and meadow. "I hear you talk of earthliness," says the great mother, "can you be as unearthly as I? You, with your quick mind, with your peculiar conscience, are called to an even deeper rootedness in the Divine love, and to a firmer friendship with the Perfect Beauty."

And so the spring calls us back from our small aims and wasteful wanderings and fickle ideas of possession, to realise something of the potency of our own hearts, and to recover something of nature's equipoise and greatness and obedience. And he who hears gives answer back, "In thee I see myself, thy peace, thy beauty, thy voice, thy love are mine."

Nature, indeed, as EMERSON says, is "the apparition of GOD"; but not the less is she the apparition of man. In her presence we slough our affectations and renounce our musty make-beliefs. We get back to our own reality. In these early dawns and long, late twilights, in the crimson tassel of the larch, and in the hedge-sparrow's egg of pure turquoise, something speaks which recalls us to the realms of truth and simplicity to which children and saints also belong. "The aspect of nature is devout. Like the figure of JESUS, she stands with bended head and hands folded upon her breast. The happiest man is he who learns from nature the lesson of worship."

But the secret of it all is this: nature is so human now. We needs must tell all our stories in the key of love. They are too dull to read otherwise. Every true poem is, either directly or by implication, a romance. Now is the romance of the earth. May is the love-month. Nature is teaching all her children in wood and field to love one another with a pure heart, fervently. This is what wins us. Love sets our hearts on fire. We share the very treasure of life with all the world about us. We cannot at all understand some of nature's ways. They are deep and dark and past finding out. Or her mood may be ambiguous and ironical. It is not so now. She opens her casket of gems at our feet. The child may know, the old man may know, the lover may know. Here is that which is dearest and best to us, and which we understand as we understand nothing else, with these high yet homely souls of ours; for alike in the glory of the flower which is the promise of the seed, and in the bird's song which is the prophecy of the brood, and in the love and self-denial of man and woman which is the bond of the home and the bed rock of the State. does the Benign Spirit renew to all the earth the pledge of His goodness and wisdom.

H. M. LIVENS.

FRANCES POWER COBBE.

SIR,—May I ask the hospitality of your columns for the following statement, kindly communicated by Miss F. Davenport-Hill, of Oxford, concerning the manner in which Miss Cobbe's recommendations on Poor Law methods were developed in the colonies of Australia and New Zealand? It supplies a most interesting illustration of the far-reaching and diffusive effects which may follow on the wisdom and faithfulness of a single worker in the great field of social reform. Let other workers, therefore be strong, and wait on the Lord!

J. ESTLIN CARPENTER.

Miss Cobbe's article on the "Philosophy of the Poor Laws" had some years previously attracted the attention of Miss Emily Clark, a lady long resident in South Australia, and the narrative it contains of "Boarding-out Pauper Children in Scotland" suggested to her to obtain the adoption of the plan in that colony, which she succeeded in doing. The simple form wherein she made her experiment, having won the approval of the South Australian Government, was gradually developed into the present important system (largely copied from Massachusetts) whereby all destitute, neglected, and criminal children are placed under the care of a "State Children's Council," created in 1887, an honorary board of ladies and gentlemen, of which Miss Clark is a member, nominated by Government.

A very large proportion of their wards are boarded-out in families, only those who need stricter correctional treatment or special medical care being grouped in small and otherwise suitable institutions.

Among the wise and comprehensive arrangements by which these young people are entirely removed from the pauper or criminal associations of their early life, a separate court of justice, long existent in Massachusetts, and now multiplying in the United States and Canada, and very recently adopted in Ireland, saves them from the evil associations and disastrous brand of the ordinary police-court.

In 1873, by invitation of the late Mr. Justice Winderger, Chairman of the Royal Commission mentioned in the text, Miss Clark gave evidence before it concerning the methods in operation in South Australia, thus emphasising in regard to children Miss Cobbe's recommendations, and doubtless promoting their subsequent adoption in New South Wales. They now prevail with more or less completeness throughout Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand.

FRANCES POWER COBBE.

Doth God care for oxen?—I COR. ix. 9.

No, said the great apostle; and along
The centuries how many saints that word
Have taken up, and blandly have concurred
That 'tis no crime to do the creatures wrong,
So that we profit, growing wise and strong
Through anguish of the tortured beast and bird!
But thou, Saint Frances, as if thou hadst heard
Their every cry, felt every knife and thong,
Mad'st thyself theirs, gav'st thyself utterly
For these dumb things—oh, never dumb for thee!—
Making thyself their voice, their plaint, their prayer,
The frenzy of their struggle and despair,
As if God had forgot them, even as we,
But for the sacred passion of thy care.

JOHN WHITE CHADWICK.

"JOHN POUNDS" HOME FOR GIRLS, PORTSMOUTH.

SIR,—Will you be good enough to allow me, through the medium of your paper, in the name of our Committee, to thank most heartily the friends who have enabled us during the last six years to carry on our work among the poor girls of Portsmouth? Fifty-seven girls have passed through the Home during that time, and have been given the opportunity of beginning life respectably, and of becoming useful and self-respecting women. The result of the effort has been such that the Committee would much regret to relinquish the work, and although it has been deemed advisable to close the Home in St. Thomas's-street, Portsmouth, they have opened a smaller one at 133, St. Augustine's-road, Southsea. The Committee will be most grateful if friends will kindly send subscriptions and donations early this year, as the debt on the old home of nearly £30 and the expenses of moving make them at present very short of funds. They beg earnestly also for clothing, both old and new. (Mrs.) M. ROGERS, Hon. Sec.

28, Osborne-road, Southsea.

SOME words are like rays of sunshine, others like barbed arrows, or the bite of a serpent. If hard words cut so deep, how much pleasure can kind ones give?

Lord Avebury.

THE CIRCUIT SYSTEM: ITS ADAPTABILITY TO UNITARIAN NEEDS.*

BY JOHN S. MACKIE.

WHILST Unitarians have happily maintained the open door in regard to all intellectual and emotional acquirements, not excluding the theological and spiritual, we have at the same time maintained a strictly conservative attitude with regard to church government. We do not fear innovations of doctrine; we dread any interference with, or suggestion of change in, our methods. We have adopted congregationalism in its most exaggerated form, and we cling to it as though it were a heaven-sent gift. Individuality is good in men and women, producing self-reliance, originality, the variety that gives zest to life; it may co-exist with the purest altruism. But individualism is not good; it has its roots in selfishness and greed; its fruits are strife, decay, and moral death. So it is with churches. To produce the best results we must preserve our individuality, we must have autonomy, freedom; but the gross individualism which so often characterises our churches brings about a complete absorption on the part of numberless otherwise admirable men and women in one particular church. This intense interest is good no doubt for the particular church which enjoys its fruits, but it is not good either for the denomination generally or for the individual himself that it should be entirely parochial in its scope. We need to think and feel imperially on these deep and vital questions, with the true cosmopolitanism which is quite in keeping with the local patriotism which requires our best devotion to the nearer duties and responsibilities of our daily round and common task. Local devotion and cosmopolitan sympathy must be combined if we are to lay hold effectively of the great opportunity the world now presents for the furtherance of the larger, sweeter gospel which we believe we have to offer.

Organisation of itself cannot do this, but it can help very much. The engine without the steam would be no good for the production of power; the steam without the engine would be equally useless, might even be a source of danger. But the two combined, guided by an intelligent will, and applied to a well defined purpose, can accomplish marvels in the way of production. So what we sorely need are individuality plus mutual help, producing order and progress; instead of individualism plus mutual distrust and indifference, producing chaos and stagnation.

Organisation of itself would be the engine without the steam; much of the latent enthusiasm in our churches is like the steam without the means of turning itself into power. We need to organise our energy. This has been said over and over again; it is no new discovery. In various ways we have attempted to do it. The British and Foreign Unitarian Association focusses in some measure the individual Unitarianism of the country, collecting subscriptions from well-to-do persons, and dispensing grants to needy congregations, doing excellent work in publishing and disseminating our literature. The International Conference of Free Religious Thinkers and Workers attempts to bring together for mutual encouragement and refreshment men and women of all nations interested in free religion and untrammelled theological thought. And our National Conference has for twenty-one years brought together representatives of all our churches from time to time to confer together on the highest themes. This is all to the good. But is it not beginning at the wrong end? The method of all creation and progress is evolutionary, from the molecule to the man. The unit always comes first—the earlier combinations are simple, growing more complex by degrees, until perfect organisation is attained, complete adaptability to circumstances and needs all along the line.

* From a Paper read at a meeting of the North-East Lancashire Lay-Workers' Fraternity, at Colne, on Saturday, March 19, 1904.

So it must surely be with any effective organisation for purposes of religious propaganda. This is admitted generally; but the fear of Unitarians has always been that the freedom of persons and congregations might be endangered by any attempts at a closer organisation, and hence we have been content to drift on with our exaggerated congregationalism, heedless whether we were heading for the rocks of disaster or not.

Let us look round upon contemporary churches, and see which of them has made most progress, and consider what causes have conduced to its success. Never in the history of the world has there been such a rapidly successful organisation as the great Wesleyan Church. It is only yet about 150 years old, and it already outnumbers by far any other Protestant church in Christendom. Its phenomenal growth owes much, no doubt, to the personality of its founder. John Wesley was an evangelist, a great and versatile preacher, a leader of men, a man of indomitable will, industry, and perseverance, a charming personality; but, above all, he was an organiser. He it was who conceived the circuit idea, groups of neighbouring churches banded together for encouragement and support; he it was who devised the district meetings, at which groups of circuits met to consider the larger affairs of the church; and, finally, the Conference, combining the whole into one compact body embracing the whole nation. He it was also who created the itinerant principle. It is to this elaborate system, I believe, that Methodism owes its remarkable progress. It might owe something to its founder's adoption of the comparatively "larger hope" of Arminianism; but Calvinism was dying in England in any case; and to-day the theology of the Methodist Church is much the same thing as the theology of the other Protestant communions. The difference to my mind is mainly one of superior organisation—the essential elements in Methodism are the class meeting (the unit), the society consisting of several classes, the circuit consisting of several societies, the district consisting of many circuits, the Conference consisting of all the circuits in the country; the itinerancy; and, finally, the development of lay-preaching as the most vital element in the whole scheme.

It need hardly be here said that the adoption of any such scheme in its entirety by our churches would be impracticable. In the first place, we are too fond of our freedom, and properly so, to permit ourselves to be dominated either theologically or ecclesiastically by any central body. Any scheme of organisation amongst us must respect first of all the autonomy of each church; and herein lies one of the chief difficulties.

It is one of our boasts, and not a vain boast, that we would rather be free than numerous, we would rather have the truth than any measure of material prosperity. But may we not, in our jealousy for freedom and truth, despise many means of legitimately attaining a measure of growth and prosperity? I think we may, and I think we do!

I am convinced that the only hope for any considerable development of organised Unitarianism in England lies in the adoption of some modified form of circuit, and in the wide extension of the principle of lay-preaching. We have imbibed an exaggerated notion of the value and need of the ordained minister. With all our devotion to rationalism and freedom in religion we are for the most part the rankest sacerdotalists in this matter of the ministry. No one doubts, none less than I, the value of a good, able, devoted minister; but his value lies not in his ordination, but in his call, which is a very different matter. And I hold that many men are called who have never been ordained. It is a reproach to us as a denomination that an able layman at a recent meeting should be able to say with truth that the difficulty a lay-preacher experienced amongst us was to get a Unitarian congregation willing to be experimented upon. We have carried our devotion to the idea of "one church one minister" to the extreme point, and I believe this to be one main cause of our comparative failure. I say comparative failure, because we have made some progress since Lindsay established the first Unitarian Church in England in Essex-street, London. I have been unable to obtain any statistics for 1800, but in 1850 there were 307 distinctively Unitarian congregations in England, which number had increased to 365 in 1900. But this is slow work, and with all our 365 congregations and 366 ministers (quoting the figures for 1900), there are hundreds of villages and scores of populous towns in the country in which the light of Unitarianism has never shone. Besides this, the churches that have had the exclusive service of ministers of mediocre powers have in many cases led a sort of anæmic existence, bordering on extinction, whilst others have undoubtedly been ministered to death by a succession of incompetent or unsuitable ministers. Nearly all our churches that have enjoyed the exclusive services of a minister have tried to live to themselves, especially if they happened also to enjoy a snug little endowment. And there is nothing more fatal to the spiritual life in either man or church than the attempt to live to one's self. To live for one another is the way to spiritual health and prosperity, and, I believe, the ideal of the circuit would more than any other thing tend to promote this consummation. It is possible to be selfish congregationally: we want altruism in our church life as well as in our individual life; we want to feel that as congregational units we are members one of another.

The circuit idea is inseparable from that of lay-preaching. The central principle of Methodism is the very idea recently advocated by the Rev. Charles Peach in his paper on "Our City Churches," at the recent autumnal meetings in Manchester. Let us frankly admit our indebtedness to Methodism for the idea. But why apply a good principle only as a palliative for the decay of "city churches"? The same principle applies all round. Many of our country churches are suffering from the same disease, inability to support a separate ministry; why not apply it to them, to the numerous mission stations up and down the country struggling with the same impossible task of maintaining a minister; and, above all, why not apply it to that greatest need of all, that greatest blot upon our denominational reputation—the need of our Gospel in every nook and corner of the land, and our failure to carry it into them? Always we ask, before deciding to do anything in any particular locality, what prospect is there of ultimately forming an independent, self-supporting congregation? This ought not to be the question at all. The only question should be, "Is our Gospel of light and peace needed there?" Can we do a few people good, can we satisfy the spiritual aspirations of some, meet the intellectual needs of others, help in the moral uplifting of a district? If so, it is our bounden duty to go, and we have no right to rest content with a system which imposes upon us the necessity of saying, "Will our financial resources permit us to do this obvious duty?" At present we have neither the men nor the money to embark upon the work which cries out so loudly to be done, if we persist in doing it only on the old lines.

The Methodists have shown us plainly how this can be done. They ask no questions about the possibility of maintaining a minister. If a district needs working, they tell off some of their people to open a room, and the circuit undertakes to provide the preachers. Let us take an example familiar to me: in the two circuits into which Burnley is now divided, there are no fewer than sixteen centres of Wesleyan influence, some of them small, but all of them keeping alive the religious fervour and the moral tone characteristic of Methodism, and creating and maintaining a devoted attachment to the mighty organisation of which they form a part. Let us look at the Burnley circuits in detail for a moment. As I said, there are sixteen centres of work, with only five ministers; and included in these centres are five large churches, four churches of secondary importance, three flourishing country churches, besides several mission chapels. Many of these places could not exist on the Unitarian plan; even if our minimum salary obtained, viz., £150 per annum, the sum spent in ministers' salaries would be £2,400, whereas on the more generous scale of the Wesleyans, averaging probably £250, the total expenditure is only £1,250. It is clear that if the continued existence of these smaller places depended upon the two circuits raising at least an additional £1,150 a year, most of them would have to go to the wall.

Throughout the whole of the Wesleyan Methodist Connexion in England and Wales there are 8,560 churches or centres of work; there are only about 2,500 ministers, averaging 3·42 churches for each ordained minister. But they have an army of 18,644 lay-preachers, averaging 2·47 preachers, lay and clerical, to each unit. In Burnley with five ministers and 43 lay-preachers, there are exactly three preachers to every centre of work, and 3·2 centres of work to every minister. If we could boast of this, how many districts of our big cities, how many of our populous towns, how many of our villages would have the larger Gospel preached to them, that never hear it now. In the United Kingdom, with our 372 ministers (quoting from the Year Book for 1903), we should have 1,190 churches and mission stations, instead of an insignificant 370. But we cannot do it if we are to expend even our modest average salary of £200 a year on each centre of influence. With the more generous scale of the Wesleyans, say £250 per minister, the average amount contributed to the salary fund per centre of influence is only about £76, being £124 per annum per centre in favour of the Wesleyan plan.

The coincidence in the figures of ministers and churches, 372 of the former, 370 of the latter, shows how devoted we are to the principle of one minister one pulpit, and the Wesleyan figures quoted tend to show to what a degree this devotion paralyses our efforts and circumscribes our influence. We have got into a rut and we may find it difficult to get out of it. But our salvation as a church depends on our getting out of it. I do not mean to say that the ultimate triumph of the principles of Unitarianism is in any danger. We believe that truth must prevail in the end. We believe in the power making for righteousness, but we are not therefore contented to fold our hands and do nothing to hasten the coming of the Kingdom of God. So our unquestioning faith in the triumph of truth can never justify us in thanking God for the large measure of it vouchsafed to us, and in folding our hands contentedly and waiting for other men and other agencies to do the work of spreading it. If we have a good thing we are less than men if we do not crave to share it with others. To do this we must give up our congregational isolation, which is by no means a splendid isolation. We must combine, use our ministers more, give them greater responsibilities, find them wider scope for their abilities, possibly pay them better salaries. We must also use our intelligent laymen more, give them a higher sense of their duty to the denomination and to humanity, we must stimulate them to work as well as to think, we must encourage them to minister to others and to one another in the highest of all matters. But in order to do this we have a great deal of prejudice to overcome, a great deal of lingering superstition to remove; we must educate our congregations to the point of willingness to be experimented upon occasionally by tyros in the work of preaching.

But my real business this afternoon is to inquire how far the Wesleyan circuit system is adapted to Unitarian needs. I have devoted more than enough of this paper to a consideration of those needs. How can they be met, and can the Methodist plan teach us anything? Wherein lies its phenomenal success? In the first place, I am inclined to think that the itinerary system has been a great help. It secures that change which, among all sects, seems desirable and even necessary for both ministers and churches; and it assures this with the minimum of friction; and some of us know with what maximum of friction changes are often effected amongst us. But itinerancy has its disadvantages also, which we do not want. In the less strict sects of Methodism there is a growing tendency to relax the severity of the itinerancy regulations; and I believe that the adoption of such a system amongst us would be impossible. But, fortunately, the circuit system does not depend upon that; the mutual help which a small group of churches conveniently situated geographically could generate amongst themselves by judicious co-operation is boundless. Let us suppose a case. Burnley, Padiham, Colne, Burnley Lane are all within easy reach of each other. They could work together without much expense of money or time, and with lay help there is no reason why the four churches and a fifth at Nelson should not be worked by at most three ministers. The older and stronger congregations would have to give up their present policy of ministering to their own needs alone, they would be called upon to share their strength and their resources with the weaker ones; but in so doing they would find, not weakness but power, not poverty but enduring riches, the seed they would scatter would yield abundantly, they would find the barrel of meal that wasted not. Difficulties would arise, of course; such as the manner of the appointment of the ministers, but with mutual forbearance these would be overcome; and the financial arrangements might cause some trouble, but a spirit of generosity would cause these to vanish. And what a discipline in these and other virtues! We should gradually learn to value our services for the sake of worship, and not merely for the sake of the man in the pulpit, or for the purpose of gratifying our desire for an intellectual treat. We cannot have too much intellect in the pulpit, but we may have, and I fear very often have, too little emotion. The latter quality is quite as likely to abound in the laymen as in the ministers.

With our present system, or want of system, wealth is accumulated in some churches, running to waste, whilst constant struggle against recurring deficits is the lot of others. Wealth can kill religious fervour; so can poverty, if either is excessive. We need some means of minimising both; and I hold that in the adoption of some form of circuit system gathering our scattered and ineffective units into centres of effective work and propagandism, forming, as they would, suitable bases for constructing county systems, and finally a national organisation, lies our only hope of rising to the greatness of our splendid and unique opportunity.

I know that we cannot adopt the Methodist organisation in its entirety. Theirs is a system the reverse of democratic. It is a gigantic hierarchy, and the executive is only partially representative. The rank and file of working Wesleyans have little or no control of the mighty engine which owns their property and sways their policy and dictates their theology. We could not do with this. We would rather be poor, and few, and insignificant than submit to such a yoke. But there is no need. Any organisation of ours must embody a frankly democratic ideal. Each church would own its own buildings, each church would control absolutely its own theological outlook, and every combination and combination of combinations would be made on a strictly representative basis.

I see no reason why Unitarians, whilst avoiding the defects of the Wesleyan system, should not copy some of the features of their circuit system with immense advantage to thousands of unchurched people throughout our land, who find themselves out of touch with the common theology, whose hearts yearn for religious communion, but who are at present denied the bread and water of life—the very thing that Unitarianism has to offer them—and for which they are unconsciously hungering and thirsting.

DR. JOHN HUNTER'S thoughtful and earnest utterances are always worthy of consideration, and we may find much food for thought in the following passage from a sermon preached recently at the opening of a new Congregational Church at Sunderland:—"We have been hearing much of late about the lowering of ideals in public life, but I am afraid that it is in the churches, which ought to be the home and school of the ideal, where ideals are being most lowered. It is evident, only too often, that our ecclesiastical and religious activities are more concerned with the production of an outward and striking success, than with work that has directly in view the quickening and deepening of the spiritual life of men and communities of men. The ideal of the church as a purely religious institution, the representative and organ of the spiritual life, existing primarily for spiritual ends, seems to be fading out altogether from the minds of many in our midst. Even our ministers are seeking to be known more as social reformers than as the priests and prophets of God. I dread more than I can tell what are called institutional churches. It is good, no doubt, to provide for young people and working people opportunities of recreation and amusement and political discussion, cricket clubs, football clubs, and the like; but these things, excellent in their place, can best be supplied by secular institutions. There is no need for the churches to give up much of their thought and interest and time to that kind of thing. Such dissipation of energy must be fatal to their spiritual influence."

A SINGLE bitter word may disquiet an entire family for a whole day; one surly glance cast a gloom over the household, while a smile of sunshine may light up the darkest and weariest hours.—Dresser.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

ANNUAL MEETING.

THE fifty-fourth annual meeting of this Society was held at Essex Hall on Wednesday evening, when there was an unusually large attendance of subscribers and friends, who were received by the President, Mr. W. Blake Odgers, K.C., and Mrs. Odgers, the first part of the evening being devoted to social intercourse.

The PRESIDENT took the chair at a quarter to eight, and in his opening address referred to the foundation of that Society in 1850, with which the Lawrences, Prestons, and Nettlefolds had been so closely identified. Its object was to foster and maintain new Unitarian chapels, and to make their principles and doctrines known in London. The work had always been fettered for want of funds, and he did not think Unitarians had quite done their duty during those years to that vast Metropolis. They had done a good deal. The Society had started, or shared in the starting of, fourteen Unitarian Chapels; but now he was anxious to see it take up a liberal forward movement, and in the next twenty years start not fourteen but forty chapels. There was a great work waiting to be done. People were inquiring, minds were opening, old beliefs were falling away. There was greater liberty of speech, and wider knowledge than formerly; working men were better educated. In every church there were people with minds open to advancing thought. The great success of the Hibbert Journal was a sign of the times. There was a great opportunity, and it would be a shame if they did not take advantage of it. He then referred to the chief points in the past year's work, and called on Mr. G. H. CLENNELL to read the annual report.

The report at the outset described the efforts that had been made to strengthen the weaker churches. A half-yearly conference with the ministers of the aided churches had been established, and members of the committee had been associated with the committees of the churches, so as to gain more intimate knowledge of the work, and be able to help more effectually. It then gave particulars of the successful popular theatre services held at Greenwich and Islington in the autumn at the instance of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and of the work done by the Rev. J. H. Wicksteed, the missionary minister, particularly at Acton, noting with special satisfaction the establishment of the Laymen's Club. Brief notes followed as to the eleven aided churches—Acton, Forest Gate, Kentish Town, Kilburn, Lewisham, Mansford-street, Plumstead, Stepney, Stratford, Limehouse, Peckham. Warm congratulations were offered to the Kilburn Church as having attained independence, and its church building fund was heartily commended to the Unitarian public. At Acton and Lewisham also building sites had been secured, while at Plumstead, which has its site, an effort was also being made to raise a building fund. The death of two vice-presidents, Mrs. Alfred Lawrence and Mr. J. T. Preston, and also of Dr. Brooke Herford, was recorded with a tribute of reverence and gratitude, and the report concluded in the following terms:—"Our objects as recorded in our rules are to make increased exertions on behalf of the faith we profess, to promote a closer bond of union among our congregations, and to promote a Wider and Truer knowledge of Unitarian Christianity. This is a purpose in which, however imperfect our methods, we can all heartily join, and on behalf of which the Committee feel the Society has a right to claim the help and sympathy of all who value our rational religious faith."

Mr. T. H. TERRY presented the accounts, which showed an adverse balance from 1902 of £48 19s. turned to a balance in hand at the end of the year of £86 17s. 7d., but only by the sale of £500 of Consols. Annual subscriptions amounted to £220 10s. 6d.; donations, £51; collections from eleven churches, £58 19s. 10d.; grants from B. and F.U.A., £261 15s.; income from Permanent Chapel Building Fund, £237 5s. 7d. Grants to ten churches amounting to £800 17s. 9d., and missionary minister (with expenses), £322 9s. 5d., were the chief items of expenditure, the total, with the remaining balance, being £1,358 8s. 10d. The Lewisham Building Fund, made up of £300 raised by the congregation and £700 from the Bazaar Fund, had gone towards the purchase of the new site. The cost of the theatre services, £129 13s., had been defrayed by the B. and F.U.A. The Treasurer made a strong appeal for more subscriptions: £220 a year from London Unitarians for such work was not creditable.

MR. WICKSTEED'S REPORT.

The Rev. J. H. WICKSTEED then read his report as Missionary Minister. He contrasted the work he had left eighteen months ago in a small Lancashire cotton town with what he had to face in that great and monstrous city, and then told of the efforts he had made to inaugurate some schemes of public value. Thus the Laymen's Club has been established, and he had tried to bring the ministers also into closer fellowship, for the strengthening of their common work. The work of organising the theatre services he had been obliged to leave largely to other most efficient hands, while he was absent in Germany recuperating, and afterwards obliged to husband his strength. At Greenwich the Rev. D. Amos and Mr. George Callow had thrown themselves into the work, and at Islington he rejoiced in the discovery of Mr. Eric Boult as an ideal organiser. Another effort he had made was in arranging, through the kindness of Mrs. Humphry Ward, for Mr. Carpenter to give a course of four afternoon lectures at her house, one result of which had been another effort, which he hoped would very shortly bear fruit in bringing together religious thinkers of various schools in the search for the common ground of religious inspiration and for a restatement of the fundamental truths of religion. He told, also, of a course of Sunday evening lantern lectures given at Acton on "Sources of Religious Inspiration," but noted that with the lantern the augmented attendance also disappeared; and also of the formation of the Choral Society.

One passage of Mr. Wicksteed's report, in view of the interest of the discussion which is proceeding in these columns, we will, in conclusion, give in full. Need of rest in the autumn, Mr. Wicksteed said, with its comparative confinement, had, amongst other causes, thrown him more seriously upon the great speculative questions that underlie all problems relative to religious work. And he went on:—

"During my German exile I made a very careful study of one of England's greatest religious books, George Fox's Journal, and I came back very full of a sense that there was something amiss with us that we failed to reach to-day those mighty sources of religious power which seemed to flow without failure in the veins of the great saints and soldiers of the Christian and other churches. My thoughts have been engaged almost continuously upon this great subject ever since, and when a letter from Mr. Tarrant in THE INQUIRER challenged an expression of opinion from me upon the question of our London church attendances, I felt obliged to enter upon those fundamental questions, affecting the very basis of our religious life, which you may have seen discussed in THE INQUIRER. My conclusions have, indeed, led me a considerable distance away from what are the generally accepted expressions of Unitarian belief from the pulpit and the pen. But I am not at all so certain that they have led me equally far from the real devotional basis of the worship of the pews. We are not, after all, so certain as we were what it really is that makes us want to pray or to hear prayer, and I think we feel more inclined to accept the position approved by St. Paul in his great sermon to the Athenians, the worship of the unknown God, in whom we live and move and have our being, who made of one every nation of men, that they might feel after God, if haply they might find Him, but of whom we can say little more than that to the pure in heart He is seen as Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him by efforts of the human spirit and the purest intellectual sincerity.

"But I have yet stronger reasons for believing that I have not wandered far astray from my spiritual brethren. For though I never hesitate to speak what is true to myself, and though I use every effort to avoid words with one meaning for myself and a different one for my hearers, yet I have received some singular proofs of having sown seed that is springing up, and scarcely anywhere have I found any lack of keen spiritual response and sympathy in the many Unitarian audiences I am so fortunate as to have opportunities of addressing. Yet even if I had done so, I find one more consolation. I have recently been privileged to carry my message into different camps beyond the borders of Unitarianism, and the warmth of sympathy and appreciation I have met with from audiences as widely separated as Quakers, Ethical societies, and orthodox Christians of a distinctly evangelical turn (all of which I have addressed within the last few months) leads me to an even stronger belief than ever that, if we could but find it, there is in the hearts of all good men some common core of truth by which their life, their happiness, and power for good is lighted and sustained."

The PRESIDENT moved the adoption of the reports.

The Rev. HENRY GOW, who seconded, said that it gave him great pleasure to do so, especially after hearing Mr. Wicksteed's report, so original, so strikingly religious and full of interest. It was a great thing to have a man of original mind for their missionary. He thought there was good ground for the cheery optimism of the Committee's report, in view of the progress made at Acton, Kilburn, and Lewisham. He was specially glad that Kilburn had achieved independence. He laid stress on the fact that in churches beautiful buildings and neighbourhood did tell on the possibilities of success, and he hoped in building their new churches they would have wisdom to attend to those outward things. The Hibbert Journal was a wonderful example of how with a high aim and great devotion great things could be achieved, and they would find it true in other directions also. Taking the intellectual and religious conditions as they were, he believed they might have 100 successful churches in London instead of thirty, if only they had the money and the men. If their rich men gave the money it would be proof of a great spiritual devotion and confidence in their work, and he believed the men would be found to do the work.

Sir EDWIN DURNING LAWRENCE, who had come in during the reading of Mr. Wicksteed's report, said that he had heard the most of it, and felt that it meant a great deal. He referred to the ancient Code of Hammurabi, which proved that at least 800 years before Moses was born those wonderful laws had been given, and were said to have been given by the God of the mountain. It was now proved that the old story of the giving of the Law and the Exodus was not true. The world had gained wider knowledge, and men understood that God was not the God of the Jews only, but of all the nations of the earth. It meant a wider faith and a deeper trust. The men and women of England, relieved from the compulsion of giving their adhesion to what science proved to be not true, would not be less faithful, less brave, less true followers of him who taught them to say, "Our Father who art in heaven." Under those circumstances he did not take less but more interest in that religion, freed from the creeds, which had more of pagan than of Christian in them, and he had great sympathy with Mr. Wicksteed. That was the age of Darwin, who had changed their outlook. They believed not in the fall, but in the progress of man. The faith which rested on Credo quia absurdum could not go on for ever. No one now believed in the fall, but in the rise of man, and there was a greater opportunity than ever for Unitarians.

The SECRETARY and other members of the Forest Gate congregation objected to the reference in the report to their work, and were assured that the new Committee would give anxious and sympathetic consideration to the position of their church:

Mr. W. ARTHUR SHARPE also supported the motion, and as President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, expressed warm sympathy with their work. He specially commended the idea of associating members of the Committee with the individual congregations they were helping.

The PRESIDENT, in putting the resolution, said that in Kilburn, Lewisham, and Plumstead they had three congregations which now must go ahead, or they would go back. They had every ground for encouragement, and he strongly urged that their society should make a big appeal, that they might be able to build three good churches before the year was out.

The reports were then adopted, and on the motion of the REV. F. W. STANLEY, seconded by Mr. ALEC BARNES, the officers were elected, with Mr. Howard Chatfeild Clarke as the new President: On the motion of Mr. DAVID MARTINEAU, seconded by Mr. F. WITHALL, the Committee was elected, with Mr. Howard Young as Chairman, and Messrs. Percy Preston and Mummery as new members.

Mr. H. CHATFEILD CLARKE, acknowledging his election as President, said that he accepted the honour gratefully, but with great diffidence. He was prepared to work hard, and should not be satisfied unless they succeeded in at least doubling their subscription list.

The PRESIDENT then moved, and the Rev. W. G. TARRANT seconded, the appointment of Mr. G. H. CLENNELL as representative of the Society at the B. & F.U.A. meetings in Whit-week, and a vote of thanks to the President, proposed by Mr. CLENNELL, and seconded by Mr. H. CHATFEILD CLARKE, brought the meeting to a close.

SOUTH-EAST WALES UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

ANNUAL MEETINGS:

THE annual meetings of this Society were held at the Highland Place Unitarian Church, Aberdare, on Monday, May 2, the President, Lieut.-Colonel Thomas Phillips, Aberdare, in the chair. There were also present Revs. W. J. Phillips, T. J. Jenkins, David Rees, W. Whitaker, D. R. Davies, E. Gwilym Evans, James Harwood (representing the B. and F.U.A.), and H. Fisher Short; Messrs. L. N. Williams, G. L. Thomas, G. C. Thompson, H. Woolcott Thompson, Lewis Lewis; Mr. John Lewis, and Rev. D. Williams, hon. secs., and others.

The meeting of delegates took place at 1.15 p.m., when the usual business was transacted. The reports from the churches indicated that the work in each and all is well maintained, although many of the ministers and friends are working under great disadvantages.

A religious service was held at three o'clock, when the Rev. D. R. Davies officiated, and the Rev. E. Gwilym Evans preached the annual sermon, which was much appreciated.

The annual meeting was held at four o'clock, the president, Lieut.-Col. Thomas Phillips, in the chair. The report of the committee, read by the Secretary, was adopted, and ordered to be printed and circulated. Mrs. John Lewis, secretary of the Postal Mission, presented a most interesting annual report, and made her annual financial statement. The report revealed the fact that there is much earnest inquiry into the principles of Unitarian Christianity taking place. The information that Miss Bennett, of St Asaph, is obliged to give up the Postal Mission work, which she has been carrying on so ably for many years, was received with regret.

The Rev. W. J. Phillips, of Nottage, the oldest minister in point of service on the roll of the Society, was unanimously elected President for the ensuing year.

A hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the B. and F.U.A. for financial aid and assistance in many forms granted to the Society, which has enabled it to carry on its work more successfully than it could possibly do otherwise, and to the Rev. James Harwood as the representative of the Association. Mr. Harwood, in an eloquent speech, responded.

A hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the retiring president, Lieut.-Col. Thomas Phillips, for the able and genial manner in which he has conducted the business and meetings of the Society during the past two years, and for his generosity in contributing towards many worthy objects which have engaged the attention of the committee from time to time.

At 7.30 a public meeting was held under the presidency of Lieut.-Col. Thos. Phillips. Addresses on "The Unitarian Message" were delivered by the Revs. R. J. Jones, W. Whitaker, D. J. Williams, James Harwood, and W. J. Phillips. The meeting was well attended. Votes of thanks to the speakers, the singing of a hymn, and the pronouncing of the benediction brought a series of interesting meetings to a close.

Luncheon was provided in the schoolroom at 12.30 noon, and tea at 5.30. The thanks of the Society are due to the Aberdare friends for their generous hospitality.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Wednesday, or Thursday Morning at latest.]

Accrington.—The annual school sermons were preached on May 1 by the Rev. Robert McGee, of Colne. In the afternoon a musical service was held, in which the choir was assisted by several singers from other churches in the town. Mr. McGee gave an address. The schoolroom has just been beautified in a simple but effective manner, and looks fresh and bright.

Ainsworth.—The Charity Commissioners have ratified the appointment of Mr. Walter Brooks as a trustee of the Ainsworth Chapel, in the place of the late Mr. John Greenhalgh, of Little Lever.

Belfast: Mountpottinger (Appointment).—Mr. Joseph Worthington, of the Unitarian Missionary College, has received and accepted a unanimous invitation to the pulpit of the Unitarian Church as from July 1. A welcome meeting is being arranged for July 16.

Birmingham: Newhall Hill (Welcome Meeting).—A very successful meeting was held in the church on Monday, April 25, to welcome the Rev. Thos. Paxton (formerly of South Shields) to the pastorate. There were not less than 250 present, including many old members who had not been seen at the church for a long time, and a number of representatives and prominent members from all the other churches in Birmingham. The meeting, presided over by Mr. A. Derrington (Chairman of Vestry Committee), was opened by hymn and prayer by Rev. J. Worsley Austin. Letters of regret at unavoidable absence and expressing heartiest good wishes were received from Alderman J. Baxter Ellis, J.P. (Newcastle-on-Tyne), Councillor R. Affleck, J.P. (Gateshead) Count and Countess Cecil Kearney, Dr. Drummond, and numerous other friends. A letter was also received from Rev. A. A. Charlesworth, who is in Italy, expressing his gladness that the congregation had united in such a vigorous effort to carry on the church and schools, and wishing the new minister every success in his arduous task. The chairman referred to the difficulties with which the congregation had had to contend financially caused by their diminished numbers, owing to death and removals, which at one time seemed to make it impossible to keep the church open any longer. Efforts had been made to enlist the financial assistance of a number of the old members and with little success, but at length by each member of the congregation, teacher, and elder scholar making a personal sacrifice, the officers felt justified in seeking someone willing to undertake the arduous task of endeavouring to revive the previous successful life of the church. In Mr. Paxton they had found one in whom they had every confidence. An address was then given by Mr. V. A. Sukhtankar (member of Prarthana Samaj, Poona), at present a student at Oxford, who referred to the connection with India Newhall Hill Church had in Rev. Fletcher Williams, a man who was beloved by all who had met him in that country. Mr. W. J. Cross (warden), welcoming Mr. Paxton on behalf of the congregation, spoke of the enthusiasm which had been aroused among the younger members, and said the call was perfectly unanimous. Mr. G. Lee extended a welcome on behalf of the Sunday-school. The Rev. Joseph Wood, speaking not as the representative but, on behalf of the ministers of the district, said Mr. Paxton could be assured of their warm welcome. His would be a difficult task, but he could rely upon the sympathy and assistance of his brethren. Mr. W. Byng Kenrick, on behalf of the Midland Christian Union, gave expression to some very encouraging and helpful remarks. The Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, in a very eloquent address, gave the charge, coupled with some excellent advice, to minister and congregation. Mr. Paxton then replied, thanking one and all for the very warm welcome extended to him, expressing his determination to do all in his power, if not to attain success, at least to deserve it. The hymn "Thou, Lord of Hosts, whose guiding hand," and the Benediction pronounced by Mr. Austin, brought one of the most enthusiastic meetings at Newhall Hill to a close.

Carlisle.—Mr. James Ridley has been appointed secretary of the Viaduct Unitarian Church. All communications must be addressed to him at 13, South Western-terrace.

Crewe.—Since the church was reopened in October last under the auspices of the East Cheshire Christian Union, a Sunday-evening service has been regularly conducted by ministerial supplies, and on April 17 the Rev. J. Harwood preached as a special representative from the B. and F.U. Association. Last Sunday evening the Rev. B. C. Constable, the hon. secretary of the Union, preached to a congregation of about forty-five persons. If funds can be raised to enable the Union to place a settled minister at Crewe, the attendance would be sure to improve, and it is believed that the church would prosper.

Failsworth: Dob-lane. — On Saturday, April 23, a re-union meeting of past and present members of the congregation, Sunday-school teachers, and scholars was held. The opportunity was taken of celebrating the publication of the history of Dob-lane Chapel, and of recognising the invaluable services of Principal Gordon, M.A., in connection therewith. The meeting was presided over by Mr. Hugh Dean, and amongst those present were Principal Gordon, the Rev. W. G. Cadman, the Rev. G. Knight, Mr. T. F. Robinson, and Mr. J. Partington. Mr. J. F. Allen, who had been associated with Dob-lane for a period of fifty-five years, on behalf of the committee, presented to Principal Gordon a silver inkstand, in recognition of his services in compiling the history of the chapel. On the following Sunday the re-union was continued. The Rev. W. G. Cadman (of Macclesfield), a former minister, preached morning and evening, and Mr. J. Partington (of Hull), a former superintendent of the Sunday-school, conducted the afternoon service.

Killinchy (Presentation). — On Monday evening a crowded meeting, at which over 600 were present, was held in the Remonstrant Presbyterian Church, on the occasion of the presentation of an address, together with a cheque for one hundred and forty-one guineas to the Rev. Joseph Geary, who has been minister of the church since 1897. Colonel Sharman Crawford, D.L., presided, and the presentation was made by Mr. H. H. McIlwrath. The address, which was illuminated, bore warm testimony to the value and success of Mr. Geary's devoted work. The gift was acknowledged by Mr. Geary in an eloquent address, and sympathetic speeches were subsequently made by the Rev. Richard Lyttle and others.

Leeds: United Schools' May Service.—Sunday last was truly a happy and eventful day for all connected with the three Unitarian Sunday-schools at Leeds—Mill Hill, Holbeck, and Hunslet. Mill Hill Church was profusely decorated with choice flowers, palms, &c. The weather being favourable, the church was crowded. Special hymns were sung by the children with exceptional precision and heartiness. The address—simple, interesting, and inspiring—was given by the Rev. L. P. Jacks on the love of flowers. Mr. Jacks said flowers were God's "extras," given to his children as emblems of what the sweetness and innocence of human life in this world may become.

London: Highgate. — On Wednesday, April 27, the Band of Hope held its annual business meeting, followed by a social. The members provided a good programme of music and recitations, which was thoroughly enjoyed by the audience. Light refreshments were provided, and the necessary business done. Mr. Withall presented medals to forty members who had attended regularly during the year, four of whom had not missed once since September. The presentation was followed by short addresses from Mr. Withall and Rev. R. H. Greaves, and the meeting closed with the singing of the hymn "If you cannot on the Ocean." The Band of Hope will meet weekly during the summer, and it is hoped that some of the meetings will take the form of rambles.

London: Kentish Town.—Last Sunday being the Sunday-school anniversary a very successful Flower Service was held in the afternoon. The Rev. Geo. Critchley gave a most interesting address to the children, his subject being "What would people of the present day say to Jesus." A large number of flowers were brought to the church by the scholars and friends, and they were taken in the evening to the North-West London Hospital. The subjects of the morning and evening discourses were: "Human Depravity and the Child Soul," and "Hereditary Religion."

London: Mansford Street (Resignation).—At the meeting of the committee on May 4, the following resolution was unanimously passed:—That this committee accept with very great regret the resignation of Rev. John Ellis, and express their sincere sympathy with him in the anxiety caused by his wife's illness, and their earnest hope that she may be speedily restored to health. They thank both Mr. and Mrs. Ellis most heartily for the splendid work they have done during the last two years, and greatly regret that Mrs. Ellis' health has rendered it impossible for Mr. Ellis to continue in charge of the church and mission.

Pontypridd.—The Rev. James Harwood paid a visit to Pontypridd as representative of the B. and F.U.A. on Sunday, May 1, and preached in the evening at the Vestry Hall to a large congregation. At the close of the service he addressed the congregation with words of encouragement, congratulating them on having obtained a suitable minister, also on their prospects of a church building.

Sheffield, Attercliffe.—The first anniversary of this Mission Sunday-school was held on Sunday, May 1, when services were conducted by the Rev. Halliwell Thomas, of Doncaster. In the afternoon the minister's address was to the children of the school, of whom about fifty were present with many of their parents. In the evening he spoke words of guidance to the parents in the spiritual training that it was their duty to commence and continue in the home life of those committed to their charge. The upper room of the Vestry Hall, the present temporary home of the Mission, was filled, many from the Upper Chapel and Upperthorpe being present to show their sympathy with the Mission. A choir of about forty scholars had been trained by Mr. J. Parker and Mr. J. Stead, the organist, and delighted all present with the admirable way in which they rendered the hymns selected for the occasion.

Stalybridge.—All communications for the Unitarian Church should be addressed to the secretary, William Thompson, 58, Melbourne-street.

Stannington.—The Rev. Iden Payne having on April 24 sent in his resignation as minister of the Underbank Chapel, a very pressing and unanimous request that he would reconsider the matter was forwarded to Mr. Payne on the following day, with the result that he withdrew his resignation.

Sunderland.—The congregation of the Unitarian Church have sustained a loss in the death of Mrs. Eliza Johnston, of Roker, wife of Alderman Johnston, J.P., which occurred on Monday, April 25. Mrs. Johnston belonged to a well-known and respected North of England Unitarian family. Her father, the late Mr. W. Fallows, of Middlesborough, was practically the founder of the church in that town, and her sisters, the Misses Fallows, are still identified with it. Mrs. Johnston had been for a large part of her life connected with the church at Sunderland, and in former years, when she had more strength and leisure than latterly, was a very active leader and worker. The funeral service, on April 28, was conducted at the house by the Rev. J. Channing Pollard, of Lancaster, and formerly of Sunderland, and at the cemetery by the Rev. Francis Wood, who, in a short address, paid an earnest tribute to the memory and virtues of the deceased.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

SUNDAY, May 8.

Acton, Central Auction Room, Market-place, High-street, 7, Rev. J. H. WICKSTEED, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Rev. EUSTACE THOMPSON.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Mr. E. CAPLETON.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. W. STANLEY.

Child's Hill, All Souls' Free Church, corner of Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. JUPP.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 and 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. PERRIS.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. GREAVES.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11, Rev. SILAS FARRINGTON; 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11.15 and 7, Rev. G. CRITCHLEY, B.A.

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. J. E. STRONGE.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. JOHN ELLIS.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.; 7, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.

Stepney Green, College Chapel, 11 and 7, Mr. C. A. GINEVER.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 and 7, Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.

Stratford, Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. J. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. McDOWELL.

BLACKPOOL, Dickson-road, North Shore, 10.45 and 6.30, PULPIT VACANT.

BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Church, The Hall, Lytham-road, 11 and 7, Mr. FRED DUXBURY, of Manchester. Mr. Duxbury will recite, 11, "The Prodigal Son," 6.30, "Recessional," Kipling.

BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 and 7, Rev. C. E. PIKE.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church, New-road, North-street, 11 and 7, Mr. HERBERT RIX, B.A.
BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 7, Rev. NOAH GREEN.
CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11, Mr. F. LAWSON DODD.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
GUILDFORD, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. RATTENBURY HODGES.
HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30,, Rev. J. J. MARTEN.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. L. P. JACKS, M.A.
LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. D. ROBERTS.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. COLLINS ODGERS, B.A.; Evening subject, "Modern Attempts to Remove Fundamental Difficulties in the Doctrine of the Atonement."
MAIDSTONE, Earl-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. SIDAWAY BRETTELL, M.A.
MANCHESTER, PLATT CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. T. POYNTING.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. E. PIKE.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. J, E. CARPENTER, M.A.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. W. F. TURLAND.
PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Mr. THOMAS BOND.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 7, Rev. OTTWELL BINNS.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 and 6.45, Rev. F. TEASDALE REED.
SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. AGAR.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FREDERICK B. MOTT.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TROWBRIDGE, Conigre Church, 11 and 6, Rev. J. WAIN.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 and 6.30, Mr. DELTA EVANS. Evening, "The Pulpit and the Working Classes."

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 7, Rev. G. H. VANCE, D.D.

WALES.

ABERYSTWITH, New Market Hall, 11.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY SOUTH PLACE, FINSBURY.—May 8, at 11.15, JOHN M. ROBERTSON, "The Sermon on the Mount."

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN SQ., W.—May 8, at 11.15, DR. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The Soul of the American Negro."

FRUITARIAN CAKES.

MADE ENTIRELY OF FRUIT AND NUTS,
Uncooked, Concentrated, Natural Food.
READY FOR USE WITHOUT PREPARATION.
For travelling they are ideal. A meal will go in the pocket.

PEAR and WALNUT	7d.	per 8 oz. packet.
APRICOT and NUT	7d.	" "
MUSCATEL and ALMOND ...	6d.	" "
FRUIT and NUTS	5d.	" "
DATE and GINGER	4d.	" "
DATE and LEMON	4d.	" "
DATE and ORANGE	4d.	" "
FIG and CITRON	4d.	" "
DATE and NUT	3d.	" "
FIG and NUT	3d.	" "

Sample Box containing 14 varieties Fruitarian Cakes, 8d.; or with 3 varieties of Nut Butters, post free, 1s.

HUGH MAPLETON, Nut Food Manufacturer,
ARDWICK GREEN, MANCHESTER.

Situations, VACANT AND WANTED.

WANTED EARLY, for Three Months, by an English Lady living in German Switzerland, a YOUNG MAN to coach her son in Mathematics. Board, Residence, and German lessons in return.—Apply in first instance to F. CLARKE, Esq., 17, Hornsey Rise Gardens, N.

WANTED—LADY HOUSEKEEPER, Experienced, well-educated, Unitarian, over 40.—Address, J. C., 121, Deane-road, Bolton.

WANTED.—LADY (Young) who would pay small sum towards board, and render light assistance in house.—DENMARK, Post Office, Tenterden.

GERMAN LADY desires Situation in June where comfortable home would be provided in return for German lessons or help in light household duties a certain number of hours daily.—Address, S. W., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, W.C.

THE HIGH PAVEMENT CONGREGATION and Sunday School (Nottingham) propose to appoint a DAY VISITOR (Lady) who will be required to devote her whole time to Chapel work. Salary £80 per annum.—Apply not later than 28th inst. to Miss H. GUILFORD, Lenton Avenue, The Park, Nottingham.

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A. Honours Lond. Preparation for London Matriculation, Trinity College, and Associated Board of Musicians. Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. Apply to the Head Mistress.
Next Term begins Friday, May 6th.

YORKSHIRE.— WESTBOURNE, (SHEFFIELD).
BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
Head Mistress: MISS F. GOODEY, B.A. LOND.
Preparation for Matric., Associated Board of R.A.M. and R.C.M. and Camb. Locals.
School "Recognised by Board of Education."
Splendid situation 600 ft. above sea level.
Hockey, tennis, swimming, Swedish Gymnasium attached to House.
Apply to PRINCIPAL, for prospectus.

LIDGETT PARK SCHOOL for GIRLS.
North Park Avenue, Roundhay, LEEDS.
Principals, Miss SHUTE, B.A., and Miss BLOK (Training College, Leyden).
House healthily situated. Boarders taken.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY, ADELAIDE PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.
Assets, £158,000.

DIRECTORS.
Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., J.P. 17, Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W
Miss CECIL GRADWELL, 7, Victoria-street, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st. S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham, S.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4 per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3 and 3½ per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

BORROWER'S INTEREST 4 per cent. Monthly Repayment, including Principal, Premium, and Interest for each £100.

10 years.	12 years.	15 years.	18 years.	21 years.
1 1 1	0 18 4	0 15 6	0 14 2	0 12 11

Compare the above rates with those of other Societies. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

The ELEVENTH MUSICAL FESTIVAL will be held at ESSEX HALL on Saturday, 14th May. CHOIR COMPETITION at 3.30 p.m.; Adjudicator, L. C. Venables, Esq. CONCERT at 6 p.m. Chair to be taken by the President, J. Harrison, Esq.

Tickets, Adults, 1s., to include tea, 1s. 6d.; Children (not in competing choirs), 6d. each, to include tea; may be had at Essex Hall, or from the Superintendents of the various Sunday Schools.

A. BARNES, Hon. Sec.

LONDON UNITARIAN CHORAL SOCIETY.

The First Practice will be held at Essex Hall on May 9th, at 8, conducted by H. W. LITTLE, Esq., Mus.Doc. (Oxon.). Friends wishing to become members are requested to be at Essex Hall at 7.30, when the Secretaries will receive names.

PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY OF LONDON & SOUTH-EASTERN COUNTIES.

ASSEMBLY SUNDAY, 1904.

COLLECTIONS in aid of the Assembly's Funds will be made to-morrow, SUNDAY, MAY 8TH, in the Churches on the Roll of the Assembly. The Officers and Members of the respective congregations are invited to make a note of this date.

FREDERIC ALLEN, Hon. Sec.

CHRIST CHURCH, PEAS HILL ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

BAZAAR, June 16th and 18th.

Funds urgently required. Donations will be received and thankfully acknowledged by Mrs. Hind, Edwalton, Nottingham, Mrs. J. Harrop White, Mansfield, Rev. Wm. Lindsay, Minister, 25, Waverley-street, Nottingham.

UNITARIAN CHRISTIAN CHURCH, LEWISHAM.

A BAZAAR

in Aid of the Building Fund is to be held at ESSEX HALL on June 8th and 9th.

Lady E. Durning-Lawrence will open the proceedings on the first day, and Mrs. W. Blake Odgers on the second day.

Gifts of money or goods are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope, Minister, or A. G. Warren, Esq., Hon. Sec., Kearsney, Berlin-road, Catford.

THE PRESBYTERIAN FUND.

The Managers desire to give notice of the following Scholarships which are open to Theological Students of all denominations:—

Two Graduate Scholarships of £40 for three years, with free instruction for the B.D. Degree of the University of Wales, tenable at the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen.

Applications must be in the hands of the Secretary before July 23rd, 1904.

For particulars and forms of application apply to G. HAROLD CLENNELL, Esq., Secretary to Presbyterian Fund, 6, Great James-street, Bedford Row, London, W.C.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS
Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

DEATH.

REID.—At Penang Straits Settlements, on April 9th, Sam Reid, aged 36, youngest son of Mrs. Reid, The Knoll, Swansea.

JOHN PAGE HOPPS' MONTHLY.

THE COMING DAY.

ENLARGED. PRICE THREEPENCE.

Contents for MAY.

The Spirit's Return to God.
Hindoo Influences on Judaism and Early Christianity.
Sensible Socialism or Social Sensibility.
An Object Lesson for us in America.
The Bishop of Worcester's Simplicity.
The Revised Athanasian Creed at Westminster Abbey.
Ebenezer Elliott's Free Trade Rhymes.
This Mad Government.
The House by the Side of the Road.
Give me not too much Finish.
Notes on Books, Notes by the Way, &c.

London, Edinburgh, and Oxford:
WILLIAMS and NORGATE, and all Booksellers.

By REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

UNITARIANISM RE-STATED.

FOUR POPULAR LECTURES.
1. THE BIBLE. 2. JESUS CHRIST. 3. GOD.
4. A WORKING RELIGION.
In neat Pamphlet, 48 pp. Sixpence.
PHILIP GREEN, 5, ESSEX STREET, W.C.

THE PEOPLE'S STRUGGLE AGAINST THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC. An Appeal by Lady Carlisle.

DRINK OR PROGRESS. By T. W. Russell, M.P.

DRINK TRAFFIC AND THE GOVERNMENT. By Mr. Augustine Birrell.

INSURANCES OF LICENSES. By Chas. Roberts, J.P.

Price 1s. 6d. per 100 sets of 8 collected leaflets.

NATIONAL BRITISH WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION,
47, Victoria-street, S.W.

THE SOUL'S JOURNEY TO PARADISE.

By Matilda Sharpe.
13th Edition. 9d. net; or by Post, 10d.
ALFRED HOLNES, 14, Paternoster Row, London.
R. L. ALLAN, 143, Sauchiehall Street, Glasgow.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKLETS.

By the REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

DAILY MEDITATIONS

(Fourth Edition Revised.)

NIGHT UNTO NIGHT.

Cloth, red edges, 6d.; roan gilt, 1s.
PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C.

LAYMEN'S CLUB.

A DANCE will be given at Portman Rooms, Baker-street, on Friday, May 27th, 8.15 p.m. to 2 a.m. Tickets, price 6s. 6d., of Mr. Stephen Jones, Dr. Williams's Library, Gordon-square, or Mr. W. Fitchett Wurtzburg, 3, Lawn-road, N.W. In applying for tickets please state whether for lady or gentleman.

W. FITCHETT WURTZBURG,
Hon. Sec.

Board and Residence.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH. — ARNEWOOD. Pension. Commanding position in the West Cliff-road; full South aspect; sea views and private grounds; close to Winter Gardens, Cliff Promenade, Square or Pier; moderate Tariff.—Apply, MANAGERESS.

CHELTENHAM.—Board and Residence in the best part of Sunny Cheltenham, sheltered from North and Easterly winds. Near the Spas and Gardens. Comfortable home. Moderate terms. Excellent cuisine.—A. G., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, W.C.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE; most comfortable throughout. Sea View, excellent cuisine. billiard and smoke room, sanitary certificate —Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

LANGLEY HOUSE, DAWLISH, DEVON.—A delightful HOLIDAY RESORT for Ladies and School-girls (Boys under 15). Beautiful country, bracing climate. Sea and Moorland. Prospectus from MISS N. JONES, Matron; or A. E. JONES, Esq., Proprietor.

FELIXSTOWE.—Comfortable HOME for Permanent BOARDERS, Adults or Scholars; also APARTMENTS on reasonable terms.—Apply, Mrs. ROBINSON, Kimberley, Ranelagh-road, Felixstowe.

LAKE DISTRICT.—Small House with good-sized Garden to be Let Furnished. Rural situation. Few minutes' walk from shops and Lake. Two sitting-rooms, four bedrooms.—Miss E. NEWLING, Windy How, Hawkshead, Lancashire.

BLACKPOOL.—Public or Private Apartments.—Mrs. ALLDRED, Atherton House, 28, Pleasant-street, North Shore.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea-level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort.

THE ABERYSTWYTH CONGREGATION will gladly assist Visitors to find Apartments.—Stamped envelope, A. JOINSON, Chairman, Pier-street.

ALDEBURGH-ON-SEA.—House to Let, close to and facing the Sea. Comfortably furnished for owner's own occupation. Three sitting-rooms, six bedrooms (9 beds). Good bathing, sea and river boating and fishing. Excellent golf links.—Address, Mrs. MITCHELL, 41, Upper Addison Gardens, Kensington.

SHERINGHAM, NORFOLK.—To Let, furnished, semi-detached House, by the month or longer. Three sitting, six bedrooms, bath. Good golfing and bathing. Near station.—U. M., 43, Newmarket-road, Norwich.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Enlarged, Remodelled, Refurnished.

PRONOUNCED BY THE PRESS TO BE THE BEST TEMPERANCE HOTEL IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Accommodation for about 250 Guests.

Highly commended by the Rev. Dr. Aked, Rev. Rowland Hill, Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. Alderman White, M.P., the Misses Cadbury and thousands of other guests.

Spacious Coffee, Reading & Drawing Rooms. Electric Light throughout.

Apartments, Service and Table d'Hote Breakfast from 5/- to 6/6 per day (with Dinner from 8/- to 9/6

77 & 101,
Southampton Row, London.
FREDERIC SMITH & SONS.

Near the British Museum.

KINGSLEY HOTEL

HART STREET, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, LONDON.

This well-appointed and commodious Temperance Hotel has passenger Lift; Electric Light in all Rooms; Bathrooms on every Floor; Spacious Dining, Drawing, Writing, Reading, Smoking and Billiard Rooms; All Floors Fireproof; Perfect Sanitation; Night Porter; Telephone.

Bedrooms from 3s. to 5s. per night.

Inclusive charge for Bedroom, Attendance, Table d'Hôte Breakfast and Dinner, from 8s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. per day. Full Tariff and Testimonials on application.

Telegraphic Address: "BOOKCRAFT," LONDON.

EATON'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL,

22, Guilford Street, Russell Square, LONDON.

Facing the Gardens of the Foundling Institution.

Central. Homelike. Beds from 1s. 6d. Breakfast and Tea from 1s. Patronized repeatedly by many visitors during the 30 years of its existence.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION SOCIETY.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at Rosslyn Hill Chapel Schools, Hampstead, on Monday, May 16th, at 8.15. Chairman: Mr. CHARLES BOOTH. Speakers: Mr Graham Wallas, Rev. F. K. Freeston, and others.

BLACKPOOL, NORTH SHORE UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.

It is intended to hold a Bazaar in December next to inaugurate a Fund to clear off the liabilities upon the Church property. Particulars later.

Terms for Advertisements.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF-PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6

Special Terms for a Series.

Calendar Notices, 10s. per year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted,
20 words, 1s. 3 insertions charged as 2.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex street, Strand, London, W.C. The entire remittance should accompany all orders to insert Advertisements.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Sole Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 20 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, May 7 1904.

ROBIN
The New
Starch
MAKES LINEN GLOSSY, STIFF & FLEXIBLE.
Is the Best for Hot or Cold Water.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3229. NEW SERIES, No. 333.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1904. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 305
ARTICLES—
Memorial 312
Our Two Colleges 313
The Green Lady Hostel 313
Old Paradise Street Chapel 314
Church Life in Denmark 314
The Basis of Religion 315
LEADER—
Our Two Colleges 312
CORRESPONDENCE—
"Doth God Care for Oxen" 310
The Unitarian Meetings 310
Sunday School Association 310
Ministers' Meeting in Whitsun Week ... 311
LITERATURE—
Christianity in Talmud and Midrash ... 307
The History of the Reformation ... 308
Sermons on the Old Testament in the Newer Light 308
Articles in the Reviews 309
Short Notices 310
CHILDREN'S COLUMN 311
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 317
OUR CALENDAR 317
ADVERTISEMENTS 318

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE programme of Anniversary Meetings for Whit-week is again fully advertised on our back page. During the same week our American brethren are to hold their anniversary meetings in Boston. On Tuesday evening, while Professor Wendt is giving the Essex Hall lecture, the Rev. J. W. Chadwick will be preaching the annual sermon of the American Unitarian Association in Arlington-street Church. It is a great pleasure to know that representatives of the American Association will be present at our meetings.

DR. GOODRICH, the Chairman of the Congregational Union, delivered a trenchant attack on the Government Licensing Bill at the Memorial Hall on Monday night. The speech was received with the greatest enthusiasm, and clearly reflects the invincible opposition of the Free Churches to the policy of endowing the drink traffic. The election of a new chairman is always one of the exciting events of the annual Assembly. The choice this year has fallen on Dr. Forsyth, Principal of Hackney College. Dr. Forsyth is one of the most strenuous thinkers in the denomination, well known for his insistance on the need for definite dogmatic instruction from the pulpit and his adherence to the evangelical tradition. The election, however, does not indicate so much that the Congregational churches are hungering for more doctrinal sermons as that they appreciate the personality of a strong man. This the Chairman-elect certainly is. And he comes of a sturdy stock, for, as he told the Assembly, his father had given him an education on an income of 12s. a week. The forceful character of the father has persisted in the son, and is evidence of much soundness remaining in the national stock.

THE favourable report as to Dr. Horton's health was naturally received with lively satisfaction, a satisfaction not confined to his co-religionists. It is now hoped that the sight of one eye will be entirely saved, and that of the other partially so. Dr. Horton, indeed, is looking forward to being in Hampstead by the end of June.

THE reports of the County Unions given in the Examiner show a wide range of religious interest. The proposed alterations in the Congregational Union are frequently discussed, political questions are pronounced on in no uncertain way. Consideration is given to questions of the inner life of the churches. Matters of history and antiquarian research receive a good deal of attention, and the Congregationalists of Cornwall are tackling in good earnest the responsibility of the church in social life.

A NOTABLE incident occurred at the May meeting of the Aberdeen Presbytery of the Established Church. Two students, one having the B.D., and the other the M.A. degree, presented themselves for licence. When the Moderator asked if they accepted and declared the Confession of the Church to be their faith, they replied that they did, with the reservation sanctioned by a recent Act of Assembly. The declaration was a surprise, and caused a bewildered consultation. The Clerk stated that he had received no notification of the modification of the Standards. It appeared, however, that at the last Assembly a motion was carried "that the Confession of Faith is to be regarded as an infallible rule of faith and worship only in so far as it accords with the Holy Scriptures interpreted by the Holy Spirit." One member, Dr. Smart, who characterised the motion as "vague and dubious," said they must have from the applicants a categorical "Yes" or "No," whatever verdict their private judgment might afterwards give. He had sympathy with the difficulties of the probationers, but the Presbytery had no power to alter the mode of admission to the ministry. After an amazed consideration of the situation, the Moderator read the preamble of the Confession, and the applicants avowed assent and were licensed.

THE incident has been the subject of much critical comment. In one leader the position in which the licentiates are put is described as "equivocal, if not Jesuitical." Another leader boldly declares that:—

> The whole position, to say the least, is inconsistent and absurd; it is even lacking in the elements of common honesty. The Confession has ceased to be the living faith of the Church; it is attacked in the Supreme Court, and is in many pulpits repudiated or undermined with impunity. Some of its dogmas are utterly unbelievable; as viewed in the light of science they are absolutely monstrous, especially as bearing on the character of the Almighty, &c

The situation would have been more dramatic and reformatory if the students had refused an unreserved assent to the Confession. Sixty years ago Peter Hately Waddell courageously refused to be licensed by swallowing the Confession as a whole, and more recently John Stuart Blackie publicly declared that his formal signing of the Confession was not to be held as his personal assent to its dogmas. We need students with a revolting temper who will bring the question of subscription to a reasonable bearing. Meanwhile the Confession is an admitted stumbling-block.

THE Bill of the Bishop of St. Asaph for sanctioning compromises over religious education in the schools was duly introduced on Monday. It is very far indeed from making any contribution to a settlement. Its aim is to legalise a kind of bargaining upon which certain eminent clerics have grown very keen of late, as a condition of the transference of denominational schools to the control of local education authorities. Reasonable machinery for such transferences is already provided by the law as it stands. But that law very properly requires that in schools so transferred, religious teaching distinctive of any particular denomination shall not be permitted. The Bishop's Bill gives authority for the breach of this rule on an agreed number of days in the week in the case of "the children of such parents as desire it," such distinctive teaching not to be given at the cost of the local authority.

WE can conceive of a possibility of some such arrangement being agreed to by educationists as part of a general settlement, and under strictly defined safeguards and limitations, but not in the loose, haphazard manner proposed in this Bill. The Bill, however, does not stop here. It sweeps the rate-provided schools into the bargain, and permits the introduction of distinctive denominational teaching there as well as in the voluntary schools on the same condition with regard to its cost. This demand is as presumptuous as it is intolerable. The sectarians will have made a very good bargain indeed, if they secure the liberty to teach their tenets in the schools they are surrendering, while casting upon the community the whole burden of their management and upkeep. They have no sort of right to demand the extension of this privilege to schools with which they have, and have had, no concern at all beyond that which they share with the rest of the ratepayers of the district. The Bill does not even give any security that the appointment of the teachers shall be given over to the local authority in the transferred schools, and it exposes the teachers not only in the transferred schools, but in the rate-provided schools as well, to the demand that they should add sectarian teaching to their duties. It is not on these lines that a compromise will be effected. It is, indeed, exceedingly unlikely that any compromise will be accepted at this stage of the controversy, or on this side of a general election.

A CONTROVERSY now raging in Northumberland, typical of many others up and down the country, illustrates one of the many ill effects of the Education Act in a particularly impressive form. The new County Education Authority found all the schools, particularly the denominational schools, deplorably ill-equipped for their work in almost every respect. The consequence has been a very great increase in the elementary education rate. The work of the Committee under this head deserves nothing but praise. But their courage has been exhausted with the demand for money to make elementary education efficient, and they have decided, as some supposed compensation to the ratepayer, to withdraw a number of the grants made to higher educational institutions. This is assuredly a short-sighted policy. The work of these institutions is of enormous value to the vast population which has Newcastle for its centre, and the ratepayers were certainly getting full value for their money on any computation other than the most sordid balancing of pence. The decision of the Committee was confirmed last week by a majority of one vote by the full council.

THE temptation to accept the decision must be admitted to have been very great, and the prime responsibility in the matter certainly rests with Parliament for leaving harassed county councillors exposed to it. It was repeatedly prophesied when the Bill was before Parliament that the throwing of the denominational elementary schools upon the rates would prejudice the work already being done by the county councils for higher education if that work were left optional instead of being made compulsory. Among the many points in which the Scotch Education Bill shows how the Government might have improved, instead of injuring, our English educational system in 1902, is the provision that the new education authority—in Scotland a School Board—must make a survey, in the first year of its existence, of the condition of its district with regard to higher (including technical) education. In England the education authority is at liberty to do this, but there is no compulsion in the matter. So far as higher education is concerned our system is mainly one of "go as you please."

ON Wednesday the House of Commons agreed to the second reading of the Licensing Bill by 353 votes to 196. Among the majority were many who will certainly vote against the Government on several crucial points in the Bill during the Committee stage. Nevertheless, it would be unwise to count on an actual defeat of the Government in the division lobbies on these points. The main hope of the opponents of the measure lies in the withdrawal of the Bill, either through the inability of the Government to keep their followers together during the summer months or through the pressure brought to bear upon them by Ministerialists who realise the unpopularity of the measure in the country. It is the task of the friends of Temperance Reform to put its unpopularity beyond question.

THE hollowness of the contention that the Bill will help reform has been made yet clearer than before by the second reading debate. The rigid limitations of the compensation fund, combined with the excessive value placed upon the licences, secure that the reduction of drinking facilities shall be so slow as to be almost inappreciable; while the division and restriction at every turn of the responsibility and discretion of the magistracy secures, quite apart from the compensation question, an immunity from control for the trade such as they do not even now enjoy.

SELF-CONTRADICTORY though the speeches of Ministers have been, it seems clear that their present intention is to refuse absolutely to place a time limit upon the period during which compensation will be allowed. The supreme importance of such a limit was demonstrated again and again during the debate. It is monstrous to require that the loss of what can, at best, be construed merely as a reasonable expectation of renewal should be compensated on terms only justifiable were that expectation an absolute certainty. A seven or ten years' time notice, with full compensation for the unexpired term whenever a licence might be withdrawn, would be doing far more than justice, and those who are hyper-sensitive to the interests of the trade might well content themselves with advocating the extension of the time notice some few years longer. But that a limit should be laid down is absolutely essential if temperance reform is not finally to be defeated.

ON Wednesday evening, while the House of Commons was endorsing the licensing proposals of the Government with a majority of 157, the Licensed Victuallers' National Defence League was banqueting at Oxford. There the announcement of the voting at Westminster was the signal for an enthusiastic demonstration which blessed the Government and incidentally banned the Bishops. At the same hour Exeter Hall was thronged with 3,000 opponents of the Bill. The United Kingdom Band of Hope Union was in fighting form. The venerable but vigorous chairman, Sir George Williams, thanked God that he was a total abstainer, and "liked it better as the years went on." "Temperance was the foe of ignorance."

EACH speaker was epigrammatic. The Rev. H. Russell Wakefield (rector of St. Mary's, Bryanston-square, and Mayor of Marylebone) looked on temperance as a matter of citizenship—the test of a man's ideals in daily practice. Temperance teaching in schools should be enforced, for temperance brightened the lives of children. His flash lights into the dark lives of slum children—these of the Band of Hope leading home drunken mothers—moved the audience. Throughout the great gathering was belligerently optimistic.

IN Monday's Morning Leader appeared a portrait of the venerable Algernon Sidney Field, "a direct descendant of Oliver Cromwell," who, at the age of 91, has just retired from the office of Clerk of the Peace for Warwickshire, in which he is succeeded by his son, Mr. Edward Field. Mr. Field is a son of the Rev. William Field (1768-1851), Unitarian minister at Warwick, a warm sympathiser with Dr. Priestley, who was present at the banquet which led to the Birmingham riots. He was articled to his brother, the late Edwin Wilkins Field, and at the time of his retirement was the oldest solicitor on the Rolls.

REFERRING to the strongly expressed wish that Sir H. M. Stanley, who "found Livingstone," should be buried beside him in Westminster Abbey, while recognising the sympathy which must be felt for his own wish, and that of his family, the Daily News on Thursday demurred:—

But we think that a precedent would be created which might lead to difficulties in the case of some much less distinguished man. We think, too, that Livingstone lies in Westminster Abbey, not because he was a great traveller, but because, being a great traveller, he never shed blood. He was a man who carried the Christian gospel of life and healing with him wherever he wandered. He would have abhorred the merely material view which condones and defends the administration carried on in the name of the Belgian monarch. David Livingstone was first, last, and all the time, an idealist. Therefore he sleeps with his peers.

NATIONAL UNITARIAN TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.—The eleventh annual meeting is to be held at Essex Hall on Friday, May 27. At the afternoon conference Mr. Judson Bonner, U.K.B.H.U., will give an address on "The Use of Literature and Illustrative Appliances in Band of Hope Work." At the evening public meeting the Right Hon. the Earl of Carlisle, President of the Association, will take the chair, and among the speakers announced are the Revs. R. A. Armstrong, J. Estlin Carpenter, and W. H. Lyon, D.D., of Brooklyn, Mass.

LITERATURE.

CHRISTIANITY IN TALMUD AND MIDRASH.*

THIS is a difficult book to review: at least the writer of these lines feels painfully the lack of such knowledge as would enable him to give an account of it in any way adequate to its merits. Manifestly it is the result of long and patient toil in the field of Rabbinical literature, and there are, we believe, very few Christian scholars who are at home here. Most of them must be content to sit at Mr. Herford's feet and take thankfully the information which he gives. Nevertheless, even those who are aware of their inability to criticise the work in detail will recognise at once its sterling value. We may with absolute confidence congratulate Mr. Herford on the success he has achieved. It reflects infinite credit not only on English but on European scholarship, and for a long time to come Mr. Herford's work will keep its place as the standard authority on the important subject with which it deals. It shows the hand of a master from the first page to the last. It exhibits a completeness of learning which far exceeds that of Weber's well-known manual on the "Theology of the Synagogue," not to speak of other writers like Schürer and Kein, who can scarcely claim to be experts in Talmudic literature. No doubt, there have been, especially in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, Christian scholars like the Buxtorfs, Vitringa, Hottinger, and others well equipped with Rabbinical learning, while the Jews, of course, have never ceased to study the theologians of their own race and religion. But Mr. Herford writes with an absolute impartiality, a complete superiority to prejudice, which is, so far as we know, peculiar to himself. Besides this he employs a method and a style which are all but perfect. He is never pedantic. In his familiarity with other tongues he has not forgotten how to write clear and nervous English. He leaves nothing out, yet never adds a word that could have been spared. The subject is necessarily somewhat dry and unattractive to the general reader; it is one in which the specialist has to spend laborious days and sacrifice himself for those who must accept his results without the time or ability for independent investigation. The task is done—done with skill, done with completeness. Spartam nactus est; hanc ornavit. We must not, however, leave our readers with the impression that all is arid and uninviting. On the contrary, Mr. Herford, as occasion occurs, has interspersed remarks of a general and philosophic nature which are of the highest interest and value for the history of religion.

Mr. Herford begins with a very clear and useful introduction, which describes the great sources of Rabbinical theology, although theology, to be sure, is rather a misleading word, since the discussions of the Rabbis turn on casuistry, exegesis, and legendary matter, rather than on points connected with articles of faith, and the more philosophic aspects of religion. Some of the salient features in Rabbinism are admirably portrayed. "A Rabbi, especially one who was skilful in Haggadah" (i.e., edifying and illustrative instruction as distinct from Halachah, i.e., positive and formal precept) "would permit himself any degree of exaggeration or invention, even in regard to historical persons and events, if thereby he could produce a greater impression." "Nothing is easier than to pick out from the Talmud and Midrash" (i.e., homiletic exegesis) "statements in regard to historical events, which are palpably and even monstrously false, and that, too, when the events referred to were not very far removed from the lifetime of the author of the statements." This is certainly anything rather than an exaggeration of the way in which the fancy of the Rabbins positively revels in the most extravagant, we are tempted to say insane extravagances. Still, as Mr. Herford justly reminds us, the Talmud does contain statements of a historical kind, sometimes confirmed by external testimony, and a certain harvest of historical fact may be gleaned from the incidental remarks of Rabbis contemporary with the events which they mention. Thus, though Rabbinical imagination runs riot in depicting the incredible and absurd horrors of the war which ended with the capture of Bethor in 135 A.D., after all we also meet with statements of facts which may have been known to those who make them, and which may be accepted with due caution as additions to knowledge drawn from other sources.

Here we would call special attention to an excellent summary of the radical difference between our Lord's teaching and that of the Rabbis, even at their best. "To compare Hillel with Jesus," says Mr. Herford, "on the ground of their gentleness, is to ignore the fact that Hillel did more than anyone else had done to organise that tradition of the elders which Jesus denounced. In their conception of the form of religion, Jesus and Hillel stood at opposite poles of thought." Further on Mr. Herford compares Rabbinism with that Catholic Christianity which substituted an elaborate creed for trust in a heavenly Father, which was the soul of our Lord's teaching, and which, in proportion as it diverged from the simplicity of the Gospel, presents points of contact with Rabbinical theology. Even here, and rightly, up to a certain point, Mr. Herford insists upon a characteristic difference. "A doctrinal creed," he says, "is foreign to Rabbinism, Maimonides notwithstanding. Historical Christianity prescribes what a man shall believe, and defines the true faith in precise creeds, while it leaves him perfectly unfettered in regard to what he shall do, unfettered, that is, except by his own conscience. Christianity never set up a moral creed: it did not make sin a heresy, but heresy a sin. To sum up this comparison in a single sentence, while historical Christianity is based on the conception of ortho*doxy*, Rabbinism rests on the conception of what I venture to call ortho*praxy*. The one insists on Faith, and gives liberty of Works: the other insists on Works, and gives liberty of Faith." Now this is a brilliant passage, and it contains important truth, as has been already said; but, like many brilliant passages, it is, as we cannot but think, a great deal too sweeping. Was the Talmudic Jew quite free to think as he pleased? Mr. Herford himself (p. 65) quotes a paragraph from the Mishnah which excludes from the privilege of the world to come "those who say the resurrection of the dead is not proved from the Torah." So great a Rabbi as Eben Ezra had to express his doubts as to the Mosaic authorship of a few phrases in the law after a very tentative and enigmatical style, and Mr. Herford (p. 366) gives "free-thinkers" as the equivalent of the Epiqurosim who are so severely censured in Talmudic literature. Be this as it may, it is most certain that Catholic Christianity has never dreamed of leaving a man to act simply according to the direction of his conscience, provided his creed is sound. Far from it. A Roman or Greek Catholic is bound to attend church service on Sundays and holidays, to fast in Lent, to rest from servile labour once a week at least, and often more, to abstain from celebrating marriage during certain seasons of the year, and not to marry at all within prohibited degrees, which have been to a large extent invented and imposed by the Church. Nor is this all. From comparatively early times the Church constructed an elaborate system of penitential discipline for the punishment of moral offences. Moreover, in the West at least, we find a whole library of casuistical writers who prescribe for the minutest details of daily life, and whose teaching is applied in the Confessional. The Papal authority has many a time decided cases of conscience, and laid down with the whole weight of its authority moral principles valid for all time. Usury, for example, is a subject which has caused as much debate and trouble in the Church as most questions of doctrine. On this question the appeal is partly, indeed, to natural conscience, but also to Scripture, tradition, and the judgment of later doctors, and any one who entered the Roman Church believing that he would be free to direct his conduct by his individual conscience would soon suffer a rude awakening. We have, perhaps, dwelt too long on this question, but a critic is supposed to find some fault, and it is very hard to find any fault with Mr. Herford's book, so that we are obliged to make the most of the one opportunity which presented itself.

The introduction is followed by a collection of passages in early Jewish literature relating to our Lord. To every Christian—and surely also to many modern Jews—the passages are painful reading. They contribute nothing to the real knowledge of Christ's life, and they show how utterly Judaism failed to recognise one who was, to dismiss for the moment all higher conceptions, the greatest of the seed of Abraham. Next we have the passages which speak of "Minim," a term which Mr. Herford takes to mean, or at least to include, Jewish Christians. Here his arguments against Friedländer, who believes the

* Christianity in Talmud and Midrash, by R. Travers Herford, B.A. London: Williams & Norgate. 1903. 18s. net.

Minim to have been Gnostics, is, as far as we can judge, satisfactory, though it is not clear why, if the Minim were Jewish Christians, they are frequently represented as making objection to the words of the Old Testament Scriptures. It is interesting to notice that there is no reference to our Lord as Messiah. His claims are put on a much higher level, for we are told that He called Himself God. Incidentally, we meet, in the selection made, with a good deal which is worthy of notice, apart from the main theme which Mr. Herford has elaborated with so much conscientious toil. We may refer, for example, to the intercourse of Rabbi Jehoshua with the Emperor Hadrian, which is apparently historical, to the tradition of friendly feeling between the Jews and Julian, the Apostate—to the curious case of a Jewess familiar with the Bible, and an authority on Rabbinical lore. In an appendix Mr. Herford has given us the original of the passages cited, and some whose acquaintance with Rabbinical Hebrew is small, will welcome this opportunity of adding to their knowledge.

The book which we have been reviewing appeals by the nature of the case to a limited audience. Yet even those who are in no way Hebrew scholars will find it profitable reading. We hope the theological public will give the book something of the welcome it deserves, and that Mr. Herford will have more to tell us, some day, on the subject which he has made so peculiarly his own.

WILLIAM ADDIS.

THE HISTORY OF THE REFORMATION.*

VOLUME II. of the Cambridge Modern History contains a survey of the Reformation movement, which in its exhaustive character has no competitor in English historical literature. It does not of course take the place of elaborate monographs on special aspects of the subject. Its aim is to deal with the Reformation as a whole, and the treatment is marked by a true sense of proportion. Neither Germany nor England is allowed to monopolise the stage. From the literary point of view the co-operative plan of authorship has disadvantages, which only become more apparent as the successive volumes appear. We have a number of detached essays rather than a single book. Luther, for instance, is the subject of an able and temperate chapter by Principal Lindsay up to the time of his seclusion in the Wartburg, but from that date he passes over into the hands of Professor A. F. Pollard, and the sense of his distinct personality is lost in the general history of Germany. Occasionally also it has struck us that the style of writing is too allusive, and presupposes considerable previous knowledge on the part of the reader, while the complete absence of footnotes is a little annoying to the serious student who believes in looking up his authorities. The elaborate bibliographies do not compensate for this omission, for they do not help us in any way to go straight to the documentary evidence in cases where doubt or a reserve of judgment is permissible. We have a growing feeling that this defect is likely to prove a serious drawback to the usefulness of the history in the future. It is too long and elaborate for the amateur, who reads history as he reads a good novel, while for the man who wants to weigh the evidence it has far too little of the necessary apparatus.

But to attack the volume before us. It is divided into nineteen chapters. It opens with a brilliant essay on "Medicean Rome," by the late Professor F. X. Kraus. Subsequently, Germany, France, Switzerland, the Catholic South, England, Scotland, and Scandinavia in their relation to the Reformation, are passed in review. The closing chapter, by Dr. Fairbairn, deals with the "Tendencies of European Thought in the Age of the Reformation." It is evident that over this wide field we can only touch upon a point or two here and there. Anyone who will take the trouble to glance at the map of Germany at the time of the Reformation in Droysen's "Historischer Handatlas," will receive a vivid idea of the intricate political panorama which has to be unfolded. Professor Pollard, who is responsible chiefly for this part of the work, has unravelled the tangle with considerable success. The national and semi-political aspect of the German Reformation is well brought out. Luther is also dealt with, neither from the point of view of panegyric nor of hatred. He had none of the practical genius of Calvin or Loyola, and he failed conspicuously, owing to some native defects in temperament, to guide the popular movement, and to withstand the forces of reaction. His attitude at the time of the Peasants' Revolt was largely responsible for the final subordination of religion to politics at the Diet of Augsburg. The decree, "Cujus regio ejus religio" exhibits the German Reformation on its weakest side, and it was due to the failure of strong leadership at a critical moment.

For many readers the chapter on Calvin will be one of the most attractive. The subject is still warm with controversy, and it has the interest which belongs to a strong and somewhat baffling personality. It is from the pen of Dr. Fairbairn, and it exhibits his well-known gifts of lucid exposition and vivid colouring. And yet it leaves us with the suspicion that it is brilliant apologetic rather than sober history. With much that Dr. Fairbairn says we are in cordial agreement. Calvin was a great man, and he has suffered unduly from his detractors. It will come almost with a shock of surprise to many readers to be told that in him "the historical sense of the humanist and the spiritual passion of the reformer are united"; that he was "affectionate and delicate, not in body, but in spirit"; and that he believed, "that a man who had all the virtues of citizenship ought not to be oppressed and treated as unfit for civil office or even as a criminal by the State." We do not wish to call these statements in question. It is only the absence of qualification which appears to us misleading. Dr. Fairbairn also passes over Calvin's theology too lightly. It would have added force to his treatment, if he had quoted passages in support of the statement that Calvin himself would have liked it to be more pitiful. Surely anything approaching to a real dislike of the harshness of his own theory would have led to some softening, or at least to larger room for the Christian spirit and affections. As it is, he is a conspicuous example of the influence of legal conceptions, and the narrow logic of the legal mind upon Christian theology. Dr. Fairbairn has some admirable remarks upon Calvin's services to the cause of education, his influence upon the growth of the French language, and his greatness as a student of the Bible. "He is the sanest of commentators, the most skilled of exegetes, the most reasonable of critics." We assent, except perhaps to the touch of exaggeration, for this is a side of Calvin's greatness which is not sufficiently familiar. But it is fair to suppress his treatment of Servetus altogether, and to give hardly a hint of the reverse side of the picture? We prefer the equally brilliant and far more judicial verdict in Dr. Beard's Hibbert Lectures, a book, by the way, which by some strange freak is not mentioned in any of the bibliographies.

We hope that this volume will help to rescue the Reformation from the controversial atmosphere of the religious partisan, and to exhibit it in its true guise as a many-sided movement of the human spirit. It allied itself with every strong human interest. It promoted the rising spirit of nationality. It hastened the advent of the middle classes. It emancipated knowledge and statesmanship from the control of the Church. Its influence has been felt throughout the whole range of secular life, and in no direction has it been more decisive than in political theory and practice. As Professor Pollard has put it with epigrammatic terseness: "To-day there is not a clerical Prime Minister in the world."

W. H. D.

* The Cambridge Modern History, Vol. II. At the University Press, pp. xxiv, 857. 16s. net.

SERMONS ON THE OLD TESTAMENT IN THE NEWER LIGHT.*

AGAIN and again preachers find themselves under the necessity of asking how they can present to their congregations the results of the difficult work which scholarship has accomplished. To do so with the slightest smell of the lamp hovering around one's deliverances is fatal. To do it, on the other hand, in a slip-shod way neither enlightens those whose reading is scant, nor commands the respect of those who have read widely. Mr. Stopford Brooke has shown, it is true, how to make the old stories of Hebrew beginnings a mine of rich value for the preacher. But the question is, how, in addition to this, to present the growth of the literature as a whole, in the light of criticism, so that it shall be both popular and a "means of grace." Then, again, there is the suggestion to be avoided that the preacher is dealing with musty, worn-out, antiquarian subjects which have no vital concern for the present problems of humanity. ("Why, those people must have been dead hundreds of years at least," was the surprised comment to me, recently, in such a connection.) To all who are in want of a clear, eloquent, simple, and yet impassioned statement of the gain we have reaped from the higher criticism, it can be said that in this book they actually have it. Mr. Balmforth's close attention to modern problems of industry and society, as it is seen in his "Social and Political Pioneers of the Nineteenth Century," has made him all the keener to seize the points of comparison and contrast between Old Testament struggles and those of the present day. Everybody has been reading lately in Mr. Bernard Shaw's "Man and Superman" of the vicar who preaches on Micah without the least suspicion of the prophet's being a Radical agitator of his day. There is no stupidity of that sort in Mr. Balmforth's book. A passage in Ecclesiastes makes Mr. Balmforth think of the sardonic unfaith of Tennyson's Merlin. The outburst of the prophetic genius in the eighth century is paralleled with well-known epochs in European history, both in order to remove the suggestion of a miraculous phenomenon, and also to show how those old ways of man's long travailing are linked up at every stage with our own struggles and hopes. At every point, indeed, the reader is simply forced into understanding the situation. On the late date of the alleged Mosaic writings "It is as though, say, 500 years hence, some one were reading an old book about South Africa, and he comes across a reference to Lord Milner's High Commissionership. He says at once, "Why, this book must have been written, at any rate, after the end of the nineteenth century, for it was then that Lord Milner was High Commissioner in South Africa." No trouble is spared: not even the reader who does not know why we say "Hexateuch" and "Jahweh" is forgotten. Sayce, George Adam Smith, Cheyne, Mr. Carpenter's "Bible in the Nineteenth Century," are all laid under contribution, as well as earlier writers. Not that he thinks it necessary, as he says, to "flog dead horses," for even the man in the street has moved on of late.

* "The Bible from the Standpoint of the Higher Criticism—the Old Testament," by Ramsden Balmforth. Sonnenschein. 2s. 6d.

The subjects of the addresses are such as "Why Study the Bible?" "How the Old Testament was Compiled," "The Early Life of Israel," "The Message of the Prophets," "The Psalms and their Theology." Sometimes the preacher turns aside from the more critical story to draw out the full beautiful meaning of what he calls a "Bible Saga," as, for example, the story of Jacob, thus relieving, as he says, "the tedium of criticism by introducing as much of the 'human' element as I can," for these "biographies are not over-pious, unctuous, as so many religious biographies of our day are." Perhaps one disappointing feature of the book is the interpretation given to the "solution" of the moral problem of Job. It is not really so negative as the writer concludes. The little edition of Job, by Moulton, has shown that there is much more to be said. It may be, however, there was not space to deal with that subject fully. There must be thousands of our countrymen to whom this bright and capable book would come as a welcome revelation. W. WHITAKER.

ARTICLES IN THE REVIEWS.

IN this month's Independent Review the opening article is headed "Towards a Civilisation." In this Mr. C. F. G. Masterman pleads for the establishment of a new "Yeoman" class of free men throughout the country, and among the steps suggested to relieve the tragedy of unemployment notes the value of labour colonies, and the extension of state and municipal activity in the employment of labour. Drastic reform of the city slum and extension of the years of education must also go to the bettering of the common lot; and among other means of obtaining the necessary funds, a judicious system of land taxation and further income tax graduation. Mr. John Burns contributes a vehement denunciation of "Slavery in South Africa," and Mr. Arnold Holt writes as an artisan on "The Lancashire Artisan," a cogent protest against Mr. Garrett Leigh's article on the same subject in the March number of this review. Mr. H. E. Seebohm offers a word of caution to Garden City idealists, and Mr. Lowes Dickinson has a somewhat meagre article on "Religion and Revelation," to be elaborated in a further article, which we hope will not be too long delayed.

The two most striking articles in the Contemporary are anonymous. "Viatrix," who published through John Heywood for 1d. "Five Days and Five Nights as a Tramp among Tramps," writes a very vivid account of a winter visit she and a companion paid to "The Tramp Ward" of a Northern town, describing the two nights and a day they spent there, how they slept, or did not sleep, how they were fed, the work they had to do, the companions they found, and the officials who were in charge. Poor law guardians especially should read this. The present system of the tramp ward is denounced as a national manufactory of tramps. It should be swept away, she argues, and in its place there should be municipal lodging-houses and shelters, sanitary and humane.

To meet destitution these should be supplemented by "relief stations" on the German plan, where supper, bed, and breakfast can be earned. Freedom need not be interfered with beyond demanding work sufficient to pay. Payment should be on the graduated ticket system. The tramp proper hates work. If once a national system sufficient for destitution were inaugurated, the man who would not work could be penalised. A labour colony is his natural destination. The classification of workhouses and their adaptation to various necessarily destitute classes, such as epileptic, feeble-minded, and the aged, might remove such destitution, placing it under humane conditions. But the immediate and crying need is for the abolition of an old, inhumane, and insufficient provision for the suppression of vagrancy in favour of adequate provision for the modern fluidity of labour, coupled with honourable relief of destitution, neither degrading nor charitable. The article by "Ivanovitch" is as vivid in its descriptions in a very different field of "Japan, Russia, France." The picture of the happy people of Japan is especially attractive. Mr. Weisse's article on "The Religion of the Schoolboy" from a somewhat gloomy point of view, should be noted by those who are engaged in religious teaching in schools. Mr. Churton Collins contributes a Eulogy of Mr. Gerald Massey, "The Nestor of Living English Poets"; there is a fragment on "Two Theories of Creation" by Emma Marie Caillard, and the Rev. C. J. Shebbeare contributes a suggestive article on "The 'Fioretti' and the Gospels" for the benefit of Gospel critics.

In the Nineteenth Century and After Sir Robert Anderson replies to a recent critic, "An Ex-Prisoner on Professional Criminals," and Bishop Welldon records his experiences of "The Church in the Colonies," gathered during his visit to Australia and New Zealand. All the churches, he finds, are uniting against the danger of "secular" education. Experience in the colonies confirms his belief that there is nothing to fear, though there may be to regret, in Disestablishment, if it comes. Two South African articles put the case for those who hold that Chinese labour for the mines is inevitable. A colonial writer in the Monthly maintains the same position, and holds that the time for self-government in the Transvaal has by no means come.

The illustrated article in the Monthly is by A. Cameron Taylor, on "Pictorial Relics of Third Century Christianity," the examples being the series of classic pictures in mosaic in S. Maria Maggiore at Rome, which are shown to belong not to the fifth but to the third century. The article is to be continued. Two other articles are word pictures, one on "Plague in India" by E. C. Cholmondeley, the other on "My Golden Sisters" by M. Edith Durham, who writes from Ochrida, describing the miserable peasantry of Macedonia, in their ignorance and squalor, the result of five centuries of Turkish oppression. "A Christian ruler under the supervision of the Powers and not of the Sultan is the only cure for existing evils, and even then progress will be effected but slowly." Writing on March 7, she concludes:—

> All hope of help is fast dying away, and the human shooting season has begun. The disease is only chronic at present, but the number of cases is increasing. Europe appears to demand another bath of blood before she is convinced that decided action is necessary; and there is, as far as I can see, no room for doubt that, should she elect to wait a little longer, her desire will be amply and fully satisfied. Europe still clings to the belief that the Sultan can be taught to govern justly, and, alas! it is almost as hard to drive a new idea into Europe as into my golden sisters.

In the World's Work Mr. Henry Norman represents the Russian view of the war with Japan, and gives pictures of the gold reserve. After a personal interview with the Tsar he declares that however long the war may last, it is impossible for Russia to accept defeat; but there are circumstances which may control even the will of that stupendous Empire. There is a fine full-page portrait of Dr. Edward Elgar, with an account of his career. Among other illustrated articles, special interest, in view of the Anglo-French Agreement, attaches to that on "The Codfishers of Newfoundland."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from G. J. A., H. B. B., N. E. C., W. H., W. C. H., L. A. J., E. K., H. M. L., G. M., H. N., A. E. O'C., C. P., P. P., M. R., J. H. T., L. T., C. B. U., J. W., M. E. B.

SHORT NOTICES.

Unitarianism Re-stated. Four Lectures by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A. These are lectures which Mr. Tarrant gave last autumn to his congregation at Wandsworth, noting the progress of religious thought during the twenty years of his ministry there, and re-affirming the central truths of religion as they appear to an earnest and reverent Unitarian. They will be welcome to a much wider circle of readers, and may be specially commended to Postal Mission workers. "A Unitarian View of the Bible," "A Unitarian's Attitude to Jesus Christ," "The Unitarian's Thought of God," "The Unitarian's Working Religion," are the titles of the four lectures. In the second lecture, showing how Gospel criticism brings us back to the personality of the great Teacher, Mr. Tarrant says: "The great question, after all, is not what you make of Christ, but what Christ makes of you," and further on he adds:—

When we see a great majority of his followers so extremely jealous of his honour that they will have as little as possible to do with us Unitarians, though I hope we love him as truly as they do, I turn back to Jesus—from his followers to himself. Surely, we may depend upon this—that he was less anxious to be championed, defined and adored, to be called "Lord, Lord," than to get people to trust the divine Power, and to obey the divine Will. If we do that, we are in his "Kingdom of Heaven" already; and we are his disciples, if we love one another.

Note also especially the plea for absolute sincerity as regards the thought of God (p. 26) if a true faith is to be built up, and the helpful word (pp. 32-3) for those who are staggered at the vastness of the thought, but may yet learn to be content, if only they are touched by "one ray divine" of the eternal Light. The "Working Religion" of which Mr. Tarrant speaks is certainly what the world wants. (Philip Green, 5, Essex-street, Strand. 6d.)

The Theists' Prayer Book by Keshub Chunder Sen (1838-1884) was first published in 1861, and is now re-issued in a fourth, a dainty little pocket edition, through the kindness of Dr. Courtney Kenny, of Cambridge. It is a small collection of only twelve prayers, but is of much more than merely historical value. Let anyone take the prayer of "self-consecration," and any member of a household the "Family Prayer," and any member of a worshipping society the "Congregational Prayer," and in a devout spirit seek to realise all that such aspiration implies, and the re-issue of this little book, both for the Indian Theist and the British Christian, will justify itself. (Philip Green, 5, Essex-street, Strand. 6d. net.)

The Problem of the Unfit: a New Holy War, by J. Morley Mills, is a sermon which was preached in the Bootle Free Church on the evening of March 6, on the occasion of a visit of an officer of the Salvation Army, to lay before the congregation the aims and needs of the Social work of the Army, and to take up a collection for the same. It was published in the Christian World Pulpit, and is now reprinted. Taking for text the story of the man with an unclean spirit, and the swine of Gadara, Mr. Mills refers to the efforts made by society to grapple with the evils associated with the lowest and most degraded of its members, chiefly by way of restraint, but then urges that the way which Jesus took is better.

It is a larger liberty, not a closer captivity, that Jesus perceives to be necessary. Jesus longs to save the man; he will do so, and he begins his saving work by getting rid of the devils that make the man what he is.

And chief among these Mr. Mills denounces greed in its many evil forms, as responsible for the city slums, the sweated worker, and "the gigantic monopoly known as the Drink Trade." Against these sinister forces the followers of Jesus must fight, to set free the people, that they may enter into life. (James Clarke & Co. 1d.)

WINIFRED HOUSE.—The annual "At home" was held at the Winifred House Convalescent Nursing Home for invalid children (Mrs. Hampson's Memorial Home), on Saturday last. The afternoon was too chilly and the weather too uncertain for the pleasant garden to be used, as had been hoped, but a warm welcome awaited the guests indoors, and even a casual visitor could be well assured that this is a happy home for the children who are received into it, to be nursed back to health, or to be delivered by wonderfully patient skill and tenderness from their pathetic inheritance of feebleness and affliction. There are nineteen beds in the Home (to many of our readers the "Young Days" cot is of special interest), and on Saturday seventeen children were there, an eighteenth having gone back to hospital for a few days. The guests were received by Miss Marian Pritchard, and the children sang a song of welcome. It was the fourteenth birthday of the Home that they were celebrating, Miss Pritchard said, and she then introduced each of the children in turn, telling a little about them, and she pointed to a charming water-colour picture on the wall, painted and sent as a gift by a boy who had formerly been in the Home. A recitation was then given by one of the girls, who is just going out, a picture of health, with another equally satisfactory witness to the benefits of the Home. Their places will at once be taken by two others. For the benefit of residents in South London, it may be worth recording that, thanks to the extension of the electric railway from Moorgate Street to Finsbury Park, the writer of this note got from a house not far from Balham Station, to the Home in Wray Crescent, Tollington Park, N., in an hour and ten minutes. The annual meeting of the Home is to be held on Monday, June 2.

COUNTRY HOLIDAY MOVEMENT.—Miss A. Lawrence, 23, Campden House Chambers, Campden Hill, London, W., begs to acknowledge, with many thanks, receipt for this fund of the following sums:—Mr. Gimson, £1; Mrs. Bayle Bernard, £1; Mr. Nettlefold, £10; Mrs. Hudson, 10s.; Miss Wood, 10s. 6d., Dr. Harris, £1 1s.; M. S. £1; Mr. Plumptre, 10s. 6d.; Miss Crowe, 5s.; also a parcel of clothing from Miss Wood.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

"DOTH GOD CARE FOR OXEN?"

I. COR. IX. 9.

SIR,—The writer of the lines under the above title, in your issue of last week, falls into the old blunder of supposing that the Apostle meant the answer to his question to be "No," whereas it is rather a necessary part of his argument that the answer should be "Yes." St. Paul may not always be very happy in his attempts to spiritualise the literal sense of Scripture, but his readers were too familiar with the Rabbinic use of the Old Testament to think for a moment that the literal sense was altered when it was made to yield a spiritual meaning. The prohibition to muzzle the labouring ox is here applied to the duty of maintaining toiling ministers—is even regarded as involving such further application. That the primary intention was to mark God's care for oxen, was not likely to be forgotten by any Jew whose mind was stored with such passages as Exod. xx. 10; Deut. xxii. 10; Psalms xxxvi. 6; cxlv. 9; cxlvii. 9; cxlviii. 10. Indifference to the sufferings of animals can as little be inferred from the question, "Doth God care for oxen?" as from the question, "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing?"

May 9, 1904. E. P. BARROW.

THE UNITARIAN MEETINGS.

SIR,—Perhaps you will allow me to say that an invitation was forwarded to the secretary of each of the congregations in the "Essex Hall Year Book," inviting the minister and a representative to attend the Anniversary Meetings in London in Whit-week. Programmes and tickets have now been forwarded to all who have intimated their intention of being present.

Hospitality was offered to ministers of congregations making personal application not later than May 10. I am now in communication with hostesses in and near London, and I hope to complete the necessary arrangements within the next few days. Ministers will be informed of the arrangements made by May 18.

The Meetings promise to be full of interest: the Committee will be pleased to welcome visitors from near and from far. A complete programme of proceedings will be forwarded to any address on application to Essex Hall.

W. COPELAND BOWIE,
Secretary.

Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING ON TUESDAY, MAY 24.

SIR,—Will you allow me space to call the attention of Sunday-school teachers and friends of the Association to our Anniversary Meetings at Whitsuntide. The business and conference on "Religious Education" will be preceded by a luncheon at the King's Hall, Holborn, to take the place of the time-honoured breakfast. The Committee are sending out invitations to all delegates appointed to represent their Sunday-school, and as replies in many instances have not been received they desire to remind teachers that application for tickets, if not already received, should be made at once. Will superintendents and teachers show their appreciation of the Association by ensuring that their schools are represented at these meetings, and I would especially make this appeal to our London schools.

Tickets to the luncheon, 2s. 6d., may be obtained from Mr. B. C. Hare.

ION PRITCHARD, Hon. Sec.

MINISTERS' MEETING IN WHITSUN WEEK.

SIR,—May we, through your columns, on behalf of the London ministers, offer to the ministers from the country who intend to be in London during Whitsun week, a cordial invitation to the "Ministers' meeting," to be held at Essex Hall on the Thursday afternoon at half-past three o'clock, when the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson will introduce the subject of "Our Colleges."

We are all of us thinking, talking, and writing to one another about the Colleges just at present; and it should be helpful to have a friendly conference amongst ourselves when so many are met together, not from any one town or province, but from the whole country: most helpful when the subject is introduced by one whom all must wish to hear, and whose experience, wide sympathies, and other personal qualifications we will not dwell upon lest we be accused of flattery.

FRANCIS H. JONES, Chairman.
W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE, Hon. Sec.

NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM UNITARIAN CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—At a well attended meeting of the spring conference of this association, held at Stockton, May 10, the following resolutions were unanimously passed:—

That this Conference of the Northumberland and Durham Unitarian Christian Association protests against the Government Licensing Bill for the following reasons:—

(1) Because it would deprive the local justices of that salutary power of refusing the renewal of licences which they may consider undesirable.

(2) Because it would utterly fail to promote such a large reduction of licences as both the majority and minority reports of the Royal Commission have declared to be essential.

(3) That the method of compensation is calculated to create and recognise a vested interest in licences which are now granted for one year only.

Regarding these and other features of the Bill as objectionable and dangerous to the moral and social welfare of the people, this Conference most earnestly urges the withdrawal of the Bill.

That this meeting of Unitarians deeply deplores the adoption of the Ordinance by His Majesty's Government sanctioning the importation of Chinese labourers into South Africa, under servile conditions, fraught with the gravest danger to the moral and physical condition, not only of the Chinese themselves, but of the people of South Africa. This meeting further records its sense of indignation and shame that the British nation should be involved in such an ignoble and retrogressive policy, and calls upon all to whom civil liberty is dear to unite their efforts to secure the speedy repeal of an Ordinance so obnoxious to the better judgment and feeling of the people of this country.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

WILLING SERVICE.

Do you remember the difference between Ariel and Caliban as servants to Prospero? Caliban was a grumbler. He obeyed only when obliged, and only worked when urged on by pricks, pinches, or the fear of some other torment. Ariel was grateful, and served obediently and willingly. He was generally contented and happy in his work and in Prospero's affection.

Among the many willing servants in Shakespeare's plays are two boys, very different in many ways, but alike in the willingness and cheerfulness with which they discharged their duties.

Lucius.

Lucius is a Roman boy, and belongs to the times of the famous Julius Cæsar, whom Brutus and other Romans killed because they feared that he was trying to make himself king of Rome.

Lucius is servant-boy to Brutus, waits upon him, runs messages, shows in visitors, and plays music on his lute when his master is tired.

Roused from his sleep after midnight on the day fixed for Cæsar's death, Lucius is sent to put a light in his master's study. He brings back slips of paper which he finds there concerning the plot against Cæsar. He is sent to refer to the almanac for the date. He shows in visitors who come to plot with Brutus. But whilst he is thus connected through Brutus with the plotters and the plotting, Lucius himself knows nothing of any plot.

Later on, in Brutus's tent on the field of battle, Lucius is again in attendance. He shows no knowledge of the war, no fear of the coming battle. He is simply intent on his duties in serving his master.

Lucius does not understand what is troubling Brutus, but he is ready to do anything he can, and plays to him on his lute. As it is late, however, and he is sleepy, he falls asleep over his playing. Brutus, who is a kind master, instead of disturbing the boy again, just removes the lute lest it fall and be broken, and lets him go on sleeping.

Afterwards, when Brutus sees the spirit of the murdered Cæsar, he rouses Lucius and asks him whether he has seen anything. But Lucius has not wronged Cæsar, and he sees no ghost.

As it happens that we twice see Lucius on duty very late at night, the first thing we notice is his sleepiness. We notice, secondly, that, however sleepy he may be, he is always willing. He cannot hide his sleepiness, and speaks drowsily, but there is no grumbling. He jumps up promptly, and grudges no service for his master.

Compared to the great events and the great men moving around him, Lucius and his duties are alike unimportant. Unimportant as he is, however, Shakespeare makes us like the boy, and respect him for his faithfulness in the discharge of his duties.

Like Ariel in serving Prospero, Lucius is obedient and willing. Like Ariel, he makes no mistakes, serves without grudge or grumbling. His work is not so interesting or so important as Ariel's, but Lucius finds it worth while to do it well, and is content—the one contented person in discontented, distracted Rome.

Robin.

Our next servant-boy is the cheery little Robin, who was teased for being so small, and who found out that even a small boy may be manly.

It takes him a long time to learn what real manliness is, for he has no one to help him. Whilst Lucius seems as if he came from a good home, where he had been brought up to do his duty and be gentle, Robin seems to have no home at all. He is a little London waif, with no one to teach him, no one to take a pride in his growing up well.

Robin is so cheery that he meets with kindness wherever he goes. But he is so small that every one treats him rather as a joke. He takes the jesting with good humour, but this constant joking about his small size makes him wish to grow up into a man.

Like many another London boy, Robin is quick of wit as well as small in size, and he gradually learns, even without anyone to teach him, that he has to do more than grow bigger to become a man.

When his master dies Robin goes to the wars with those who have been his fellow-servants. They would have him serve them now. But as he begins to think for himself he discovers that these men are poor fellows as companions, and would make but poor masters, for they are not really men at all. They are boasters, cowards, liars, and thieves, and would teach him to be a pickpocket.

Robin is ready to work but he wants honest work. Such boastful, cowardly, lying, thieving ways go against his manhood. He must leave these fellows, who are not men, and seek better service.

It is no easy thing to leave familiar companions because we disapprove of their ways. "Follow my leader" may be a very good game. It depends upon whom we follow and how we follow. And it is the same in real life. Sometimes we follow foolishly, as the silly sheep do, without knowing why. Sometimes we follow even when we do not approve of what is done or said, and this is worse than silly, it is cowardly.

Robin, however, had the courage to leave his unmanly companions and to go off alone in search of better service in honest work.

Two of Robin's old companions were put to death during the war for thieving, and Robin himself was slain on the battle-field. His place was with the lackeys, the servant-boys left in charge of the baggage of the camp, and these boys were killed by some cowardly rascals, who ran from the battle and went in search of plunder.

Robin's place was with the boys, and it was his lot to fall with the boys. He did not grow up to be a man. But he had proved his honesty and his courage Boy as he was, he had proved his manhood.

May we each be as ready to work, as willing to serve, as were Shakespeare's boys Lucius and Robin. May we each prove as brave as our friend Robin in giving up unworthy ways and seeking "better service."

LILIAN HALL.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street Strand, London, W.C.

LONDON, MAY 14, 1904.

OUR TWO COLLEGES.

WE have been asked to publish the following Memorial to the Committees of Manchester College and the Unitarian Home Missionary College, which, we understand, has this week been forwarded to the Secretaries of the two colleges for presentation to their respective Committees. We are glad to comply with this request, for, especially after Mr. JAMES BEARD'S letter of last week, it seems eminently desirable that our readers should at once have the opportunity of judging for themselves as to the true character and purpose of the Memorial. Mr. ENFIELD DOWSON'S letter, which we also publish this week, further elucidates the matter.

The Memorial has been promoted by loyal friends of both colleges, and though it may seem an ungracious thing, in this year of Jubilee of the Home Missionary College, to intervene with any different suggestions, when the old students of the College are pleading and working with so much enthusiasm for that form of commemoration on which their heart is set, it must be apparent to anyone who will consider the following list of signatures that this is a weighty appeal, made by those who have the best interests of our whole community most seriously at heart—many of them among the most generous supporters of both colleges—and an appeal which cannot be lightly set aside. Of the 106 signatures attached to the Memorial we note that not less than 49 are those of subscribers to the Home Missionary College, ten of whom are also Vice-Presidents:

We have already expressed our views as to the unwisdom of a permanent duplication of our theological colleges, and will only repeat here the earnest hope that this opportunity may not be lost of making a real and most salutary step of progress towards the perfecting of our means for the culture and training of ministers. What we want is not two rival institutions, attempting with imperfect equipment to do the same thing, but a union of forces so organised as to obtain the best results both of intellectual and spiritual culture, of moral discipline, and of experience in practical work.

The object of this memorial is to ask that no irrevocable step may be taken in Manchester before an earnest attempt at least has been made to work out such a scheme, and to demonstrate not only that the supporters and administrators of the two colleges are at one in the object they have in view, but that they can best attain that object by working together along lines and with resources more ample than either has hitherto been able to command.

MEMORIAL

TO THE COMMITTEES OF MANCHESTER COLLEGE AND THE UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

GENTLEMEN,—In view of the proposal which is being made to celebrate the Jubilee of the Unitarian Home Missionary College by its establishment in a permanent building of its own, we, the undersigned, desire to lay before you the following considerations. With the most friendly sympathy with the college in its successful efforts to raise the standard of its curriculum, we deprecate the step now contemplated. Its training of students for the ministry has changed considerably from that which obtained in the early days of the Unitarian Home Missionary Board. Its original raison d'être was to introduce into the work of the ministry, especially as missionaries, men possessing aptitude for the ministerial office, but deficient in educational preparation for such an academical course as that provided by Manchester New College. Now, the standard for admission to the Unitarian Home Missionary College has been raised, till its requirements have reached what is, to all intents and purposes, the same intellectual level as those of Manchester College, Oxford. Both colleges aim at the graduation of their students before entry on their theological course; in fact, the relations of the Unitarian Home Missionary College to Owens College and the Victoria University of Manchester is practically the same as that which used to subsist between Manchester New College and University College and the University of London. Those who have been undergraduates in connection with each have attained what is practically the same educational standard. It appears to us that the time has arrived when there is nothing to stand in the way of an amalgamation of the two colleges, as regards the intellectual ability of their students to enter on the same theological course. In consideration of the fact that the great body of the students from each enter the ministry of the same churches, dedicated to the same religious principles, and making the same demands upon their ministers, it is, we submit, a great waste of resources to needlessly duplicate the working expenses, the college buildings, and the teaching faculties for their instruction. We are impressed with this consideration even more with regard to the teaching power than to the expenditure and the buildings. We are convinced that a conference between representatives of the committees of the two colleges might lead to the construction of a scheme of amalgamation under which the aims of both might be faithfully fulfilled; and, with this conviction, we most strongly deprecate the establishment of the Unitarian Home Missionary College in its own building in Manchester, rendering permanent the duplication which we now lament, before an earnest attempt has been made to bring about some form of arrangement between the colleges.

We are, Gentlemen,
Yours faithfully,

David Ainsworth	Henry Jevons
J. S. Ainsworth	T. Fielding Johnson
A. R. Andreae	C. Sydney Jones
Elizabeth Ashton	Francis Hy. Jones
Susan M. Aspland	W. J. Jupp
Richard A. Armstrong	J. A. Kenrick
Alfred Booth	Chas. Kempson
Walter Baily	William Kenrick
Helen Buckton	W. Byng Kenrick
B. P. Burroughs	James Kitson
Wm. Wallace Bruce	Annie J. Lawrence
W. B. Bowring	G. H. Leigh
James Brierley	Lydia S. Leigh
Hester Emily Booth	Percy H. Leigh
Jas. Howard Brooks	Edward Lummis
John T. Brunner	David Martineau
A. N. Blatchford	C. H. Morton
T. A. Colfox	William Mellor
Gordon Cooper	Richd. R. Meade-King
E. Clephan	Francis Nicholson
E. Franklin Cooper	J. Collins Odgers
Geo. H. Crook	W. Blake Odgers
H. Enfield Dowson	T. Smith Osler
V. D. Davis	Henry F. Osler
J. Dendy	Marian Pritchard
W. H. Drummond	A. H. Paget
Lucy Dowson	Stanton Wm. Preston
B. Dowson	J. H. Poynting
W. C. Dunkerley	C. T. Poynting
Harriet Enfield	O. H. Rathbone
E. W. Enfield	Herbert R. Rathbone
Frank K. Freeston	W. Raven
Henry Gow	Herbert Rix
Holbrook Gaskell, jun.	S. A. Steinthal
Henry P. Greg	W. Arthur Sharpe
R. Harris	Russell Scott
W. Haslam	Edwd. Burnard Squire
Alfred Holt	A. Ernest Steinthal
Philip H. Holt	C. E. Schwann
Richard D. Holt	Edwin Tate
Robert D. Holt	Stephen S. Tayler
Elizabeth Holt	Elisa Tolmé
Emma G. Holt	Arthur S. Thew
Robert Harrop	Charles Thomas
James Harwood	John Edward Taylor
Chas. Harding	Philip H. Wicksteed
Walter Holland	Joseph Wood
C. E. Hudson	Richard Worsley
John Harwood	S. B. Worthington
R. Travers Herford	J. Warschauer
P. M. Higginson	A. H. Worthington
Charles W. Jones	Philip J. Worsley
Ronald P. Jones	A. W. Worthington

SIR,—I beg to hand you enclosed a copy of a Memorial that is being presented to the Committees of the Home Missionary College and the Manchester College.

I think you will admit that the matter is of the gravest importance, and deserves the most serious consideration of all those who take an interest in the training of our ministers. CHARLES W. JONES.

Liverpool, May 9, 1904.

OUR TWO COLLEGES.

SIR,—I cannot allow Mr. Beard's letter in your last issue to pass without reply. The Memorial to which he refers is in its initiation entirely unknown to the Committee of Manchester College; and, in joining with a few friends interested in our two Colleges in circulating it for signatures, I have not been acting in my capacity of Chairman of the Manchester College Committee. The Memorial represents the views of those who sign it, and not of that Committee, as they have never been consulted. The essence of the Memorial lies in its being addressed equally to the Committees of the two Colleges, while emanating from neither. Its occasion was the issue by alumni of the Unitarian Home Missionary College of a circular appealing for sympathy and help in a project for keeping the Jubilee of the College by placing it in possession of a permanent collegiate building. Much as I sympathised with the fine band of brother ministers in their wish to do honour to their Alma Mater, and glad as I should have been to have expressed my fraternal goodwill in the way they desired, I felt obliged to decline; nor could I be satisfied with "passive resistance" to a proposal that seemed to me to close the door to that co-operation between the two Colleges which has always been my earnest desire. Once establish the Unitarian Home Missionary College in a collegiate building, and a bar not now existing would be raised to any arrangement between them for united work. There was accordingly no time to be lost, and with a few others impressed with the same sense of the urgency of the occasion, I took part in the private circulation of the Memorial.

Although nothing is more repugnant to my feelings than to enter into a newspaper controversy with a friend whom I esteem so highly as I do Mr. Beard, yet, in my position as Chairman of the Manchester College Committee, to which he alludes, I cannot allow his statement that the College recognises no obligations to the churches from whose members it draws practically the whole of its subscriptions to pass without emphatic protest. So far from its loyalty to its foundation principle of free teaching and free learning of theology being a hindrance to the fulfilment of these obligations, it serves the churches, to whom also that principle is dearer than life itself, none the less but all the more faithfully for being true to it. These churches are to-day largely under the guidance and inspirations of ministers who have sat in the college class rooms at the feet of Tayler, Martineau, Drummond, Upton, Carpenter, and Odgers. Of the leaders in that very Unitarian thought and life which Mr. Beard so truly loves and so devotedly serves by hereditary right and filial duty, how many have been alumni of Manchester College! The same service had been rendered by the many students of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, who have been their brothers in the work of the ministry, honoured and beloved. The spirit of both is the same. The work done by both is the same. The churches served by both are the same. Of the funds administered by the Committee of Manchester College, far and away the main application, all through my long connection with it, has been to the education of the ministry of these churches. The most laborious, yet most congenial, work which I, as secretary for 24 years, have had to do, has been to conduct correspondence with many generations of students who have been admitted to the College and who, as the result of their three years' training within its walls, have, with the rarest exceptions, left them to do faithful service in that ministry. The College is not merely airing an abstract principle, however dear to it, but is fulfilling its duty to its subscribers of supplying the pulpits of their churches with ministers inspired with devotion to that free search for the truth of God out of which, and out of which alone, the Unitarianism, which Mr. Beard prizes no more highly than I, has been born. H. ENFIELD DOWSON.

May 9th.

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to say in reply to Mr. Beard that the Manchester College authorities had nothing whatever to do with my letter, but that it was written and despatched entirely on my own responsibility. At the same time, I know that I express the feelings of a good many of the friends and supporters of both institutions when I urge that the time has come for a reconsideration of their relations to each other. Of course, if anyone takes up the position that our Colleges as they stand are perfectly adapted to the needs of our churches, and that no changes or reforms or improvements are needed, no more is to be said, so far as he is concerned. But our churches generally are not of that mind. If one college turns out scholars and the other preachers, our churches want to know why they cannot so co-operate as to combine both advantages in the same person. In the judgment of many there is something wanted in both colleges. Could not that something be supplied by uniting our forces? When the great Protestant Nonconformist Churches, like the Congregational and Presbyterian, are seriously discussing college reform, especially with two things in view, i.e., (1) the better adaptation of the colleges to the actual and present-day wants of our churches, and (2) the prevention of the waste and dissipation of resources by seeking a closer affiliation, it is curious that we, the Progressives, should be warned off the question, as if it were something sacrosanct. Surely the discussion of so important and pressing a matter is not a thing to get angry about. I write in perfect friendliness towards both institutions. I have as keen an appreciation of the good work done by the one as by the other. As to the Unitarian name, &c., it is a pity we cannot keep King Charles's head out of the matter. I submit that in the present condition of affairs it is perfectly reasonable and eminently desirable that representatives of the two bodies should come together at some sort of round table conference to discuss the college problem, and this without any suspicion of ill-will. Is it not possible to largely increase the usefulness of both colleges by some carefully thought-out scheme of co-operation? JOSEPH WOOD.

THE GREEN LADY HOSTEL.

"AIN'T the Green Lady saying good morning to you somethink lovely?" It was a child's voice that greeted me, a hoarse little voice and a pronounced cockney accent. I knew just what she meant. The old story of the return of Persephone had been told her with new words and with new names, and on this sunny morning the child was rejoicing in the reappearance of "The Green Lady," the fair daughter of Mother Earth, the symbol to her of the joy and beauty of the coming summer.

The echo of that greeting lingered in my mind for many a day, and the little maiden who gave it is "a big girl" now. On days of perfect beauty, when the scent of flowers is in the air, a memory and a vision whispers in my heart, "Ain't the Green Lady saying good morning somethink lovely?"

Last summer there was one such day. The sky was blue with great white clouds which made one think of the South Downs. They called, and the sea beyond them called irresistibly. My motor-car was also in the right mood, and by the afternoon I found myself in Littlehampton. The first smell and sight of the sea were beyond the expectations that had brought me there. The place was covered with summer visitors and holiday-makers. Presently I turned from the shore, and in a few minutes found myself outside the door of a walled garden. The door bore the superscription, "The Green Lady Hostel." It opened, and I saw a green lawn with old shady trees, and the lawn and garden were full of young girls. Some were in little groups laughing and talking. One or two had found a quiet corner, and were reading; others playing games. Happy voices, happy faces, happy laughter. It was indeed a sight to do good to the hearts of all lovers of youth and joy. These young girls, some of them only fourteen and fifteen years old, where had they come from? They looked like happy school-girls. But I happened to know that every one of them was a toiler in some London factory or workshop, and that upon those young shoulders rested a burden of responsibilities and cares of daily life that no gently nurtured girl of that age could know anything about.

Soon they were round me, and a few questions brought eager and excited descriptions of all they had been doing yesterday and to-day. They had been bathing in the morning, and had come back to the shady garden for the hot afternoon, and after tea they were all going up the river in a launch. Yesterday they had spent the whole day out of doors amongst the South Downs. There had been a prize offered to the girl who could collect the greatest variety of flowers. "Nellie" had won it. She had found seventy-two different flowers, but several of the others had come very near. To-morrow evening there was going to be a concert in the Dining Hall, and the "bathing woman" and the captain of the Tit-lark and other friends made during the week had been invited, and they were going to do the cantata they learnt at the club last Christmas.

In the midst of this delightful chatter the President-Hostess came across the lawn to greet me, and the bell rang for tea. I managed to get a little talk with the club leaders later; they gave me a glimpse into the life of more than one bright young face that had won my heart.

"They forget everything here; they are quite like children for this fortnight; it is difficult even for us to remember that the slum home and the daily struggle against poverty and sickness in the family make the background of this picture. They look forward to this all the year, and save up for it at the club. Every year we expect them to be able to pay a few shillings more themselves, until after a few years they really pay the whole cost of their holiday. You have no idea how much they get out of it, and the difference it makes in them all through the next year.

The whistle sounded, which meant that the party was now ready to set out for the excursion on the river. The club leaders had to go, but I still sat on and talked with the Resident Lady Superintendent, who is hostess of "The Green Lady Hostel" all the year round.

She told me how for many years the need had been greatly felt by large girls' clubs in London for such a country home as this. Year by year, as the club movement spread, and the idea of taking all the girls away together for a holiday became part of the club programme, the difficulty of getting accommodation at the seaside during the most crowded and expensive season of the year had increased. At last a small executive committee was formed, of which Miss Lily Montagu (12, Kensington Palace-gardens) and Miss Mary Neal (20, Somerset-terrace) were joint presidents, and this old country house had been taken, and for three years, during which time the scheme was in a frankly experimental stage, have brought happiness into the lives of hundreds of girls and boys—for boys' clubs had also been there for Easter and Whitsuntide parties. But now a purchase scheme was on foot. It was absolutely necessary to make sanitary improvements and to add a third story to the house if such large parties were to find room in it.

I heartily agreed that it was indeed my conception of an ideal holiday, and I thought the scheme a most excellent one. But what about the money? The hostess shook her head. "We have a most energetic committee, and one of our trustees is Mr. F. W. Pethick Lawrence, whose name will be well known to you, and if ever a scheme deserved public support, this one does. We are open to all who want to come, without regard to race or creed." The summer holiday idea is just one that appeals to everybody when they are making their own plans for going away. It is such a very human, universal appeal. Surely we shall get the money.

I came away with a new sense of gladness, a new hope, a new knowledge of what is being done to make the world a happier place for human beings to live in.

Since then, I hear that the purchase has been made, and the building has been added, and that the Green Lady Hostel hopes to receive more guests than ever this summer. The committee has raised most of the sum which will pay or the building. But there is absolutely nothing left for furnishing the new rooms. Must they go vacant all the summer, when a few hundred pounds is all that is now required to put the Hostel on a thoroughly satisfactory basis, and fit it for its happy mission? The roof of the Green Lady Hostel covers more happiness, I verily believe, than any other roof in England.

It is said of Captain Cook, the great circumnavigator, that he always carried about with him the seeds of his favourite flowers, and sowed them wherever he could on foreign or on virgin soil, to make a belt round the world of the bloom he loved the best. Joy is the flower of our life. Shall we not sow it freely in this little plot of ground in Littlehampton? The members of the committee, and many others, have sown freely. They want more seed now. Will you send it to them? Either of the presidents of the executive committee (whose addresses are given) or the Lady Superintendent, Green Lady Hostel, Littlehampton, will be most happy to give fuller information and to answer all further inquiries.

OLD PARADISE STREET CHAPEL.

THE recent reminders of the birth of Dr. Martineau, and of what religion owes to him, bring back to memory also the scene of his earliest ministry in England, Paradise-street Chapel, Liverpool.

When the beautiful Gothic church in Hope-street was opened the old chapel passed into other hands, and eventually, but not directly, was purchased for theatrical purposes.

With a large frontage, built up to the street, and with the school behind as a stage, the main building became the auditorium of a theatre, which for many years bore none too good a reputation, being the resort of bad characters of various kinds, preying upon the sailors who frequented it. Of late it has been better conducted, and the present writer attended a representation of The Ticket of Leave Man not long ago, to see an old Unitarian friend in the title rôle, when all was as respectable and orderly as possible. Ninepence commanded a velvet cushioned seat in the dress circle, the pit being sixpence.

Just at present great structural alterations are being carried out; hence these reminiscences. Stripped of roof, floor, gallery, and, indeed, of all internals, the skeleton now shows what the old chapel was like; a handsome octagon of noble proportions—one of the few octagonal chapels of which Norwich boasts a fine example. High up on the vacant walls runs the line of the old gallery, and there, covered of late years by more appropriate garb, still lingers a line of the old panelling—a strange survival of its sacred uses. In startling contrast, exposed to the open sky, stands the gilded arch of the proscenium, with its fireproof curtain half dropped.

What varying accents have echoed from these unsightly walls! The grave, venerable voices of a line of cultured ministers of the old Unitarian school of thought; the mellifluous tones of that young preacher from Ireland, who, though so young, had the gravity, the solidity, the piety of the old, coupled with a poetic eloquence, a chastened fire, a widening theological outlook, which proclaimed him the harbinger of a new era of religious thought. Those walls also heard the triumphant defence of the three Unitarian stalwarts against the attacks of the thirteen Church clergymen in the historical controversy: a defence which was so learned, so philosophical, so Christian in tone, that it won over to its side many whose descendants are still with us and for us.

All this; preaching of the highest; prayers of the profoundest piety and helpfulness; worship and praise, and then. . . . Oh, the pity of it! then . . . the dregs of the theatre; the mire of the music-hall; the stench of the bar and the drunkenness and profanity of the lowest of mobs.

Oh, for the days when Drama shall be the uplifter of the people; when preacher and actor shall alike appeal to the Angel in man; when the week-night recreation shall be a fit sequel to the Sunday inspiration, and give pure food to that side of human nature, which has always demanded a recreation after monotonous toil and daily anxiety.

The old chapel is being converted into a safer, a loftier, a more wholesome home of drama. Can the Christian churches do nothing to convert the drama itself into something sweeter and purer than it now is, so that the gulf between a Martineau in the pulpit and the actor on the stage may be less startling?

H. W. H.

CHURCH LIFE IN DENMARK.

SIR,—You ask for news from my country. You want to know how we Danish Unitarians fare, how we work in the common cause of religious truthfulness and sincerity. I am most anxious to comply with your wishes, for I feel how much strength and comfort flows to us through our English brethren's sympathy, and anything I can do to keep it alive and warm I am sincerely desirous of doing.

I have made several honest attempts to tell you what you want to know, to explain the present church-political situation here, and the views and position we hold therein. The sorry conclusion I have come to is, that I cannot do it in the space which THE INQUIRER might allot to such a topic. I cannot in one or two short articles make intelligible to non-Danish readers what it is that is going on in our church life. Therefore I shall aim at nothing like it. I shall attempt no explanations, no detailed description, I shall simply and shortly give you a few facts as I see them.

First of all, then, it must be known that these are very eventful times in Danish church life, more so, perhaps, than any we have known for generations past. A great question is on the verge of being settled, settled at least for years, maybe for generations to come. Shall the Danish Church, as has hitherto been the case, be governed and administered by the Rigsdag and Government, or shall it in future have its own constitution, be an independent national institution? A committee of 37 members has been elected by different bodies of electors to prepare a draft constitution for the Church. In six, or less than six, years this draft is to be ready and laid before the Rigsdag, with whom the final power of deciding all questions rests.

Now, will the Church get a constitution, and if so will this Constitution be of a nature to make it possible for Unitarians to form Unitarian congregations within our people's church? On the answer to this question the aspect of our future depends. May it be that Unitarian Christianity shall come to be preached side by side with orthodoxy from the pulpits of the people's church, and reach and help thousands of suffering and labouring men and women, or shall its adherents be called upon in the name of honesty and sincerity to leave the church, and, as with you, form a small guard of freedom, truthfulness, and earnestness in the spiritual life? In a few years this question will have been answered. Meanwhile we cannot but feel that it is our duty to struggle bravely that the Christianity which is in truth the religion of a very great part of our people should find its home and be preached in the People's Church.

And what are our chances? Most men would tell you that they are but few and small. And it is true that the composition of the committee is of such a nature that it would seem to leave but scanty room for hope. Precautions have been taken that it should be as strictly orthodox as possible, but I honestly believe that this was not the intention of the Rigsdag when it gave the law by which the committee was called into existence. I am firmly convinced that the Rigsdag never realised what was being done. Accustomed as men are in our days to make light of religious confessions and declarations of every kind, it never for one moment entered the Rigsdag's mind that the different declarations and vows which this law demands from men and women who wish for church-political suffrage could become insurmountable hindrances for any man who was not a declared Dissenter, however unorthodox he might be in his heart. Not for one moment did it contemplate excluding the unorthodox members of the Church from any of their rights as members and supporters of it.

It, the Rigsdag, never reckoned with the kind of conscience that will make a man as particular with his words and declarations in spiritual as in secular matters; it may even be that at this present moment most of its members are disposed to regard such a disposition as a sign of morbidness rather than of health; it is next to impossible that any Danish Rigsdag knowingly should consent to any measure proposed by the Committee by which the government and administration of the Church should through a spiritual census be passed from the hands of the people into those of the clergy and orthodox laity: To strive by every means that the Church shall not develop into a missionary stronghold of the old-fashioned orthodox Lutheranism, but more and more be what its name indicates, our people's church, a place of worship for every God-fearing Christian man and woman: this is the all-important task that lies before us at this moment.

But how are the Rigsdag and the people to be roused to consciousness of the great issues now at stake? Who shall put them on their guard against any threatening danger?

There are honest, earnest men of every shade of religious thought in the people's Church, from the freest thinkers up to the most orthodox of the orthodox, clergymen amongst them who love and value spiritual freedom infinitely above any form of church and church organisation, however dear and venerated. Many of them are staunchly and perseveringly doing what they can to stir the people up to wakefulness and comprehension. Some of the strongest, most urgent calls have come from Unitarians, and Del fri Kirkesamfund has not held back, but has gone forth to do what may be within its power to do.

And how do we fare? I am afraid I am not the right person to tell you. I am continually told that I am too sanguine, too hopeful, too easily satisfied. How can I help it? Seeing how few and weak we are compared to the mighty organisation we are opposing, my marvel at our being able to stand up and fight is so great that it leaves absolutely no room for depression and disappointment even at repeated defeat.

It seems to me self-evident and natural that toil and labour should be required, it seems to me almost miraculous that we should be making any progress; so that when I consider how men of all parties have come to believe in our sincerity and strength of purpose when I feel how we have made our voice heard so that good men, men of influence and importance, have listened to what we have to say, and have come forward to answer us, I cannot but hope and trust that God is with us.

And therefore, though I do not deceive myself, though I know we have only just begun, that all the hard work, all the wearisome toil, the real troubles and bitter disappointment are still before us, I cannot but feel, that hitherto we have fared and are faring well.

And how are we working? Like feeble, faulty, stumbling men and women, but, I humbly trust, not seeking our own, but a higher will, and therefore, please God, not unworthy of the kind sympathy and good will of our brethren from other lands. Of whom I would ask this favour, that their good wishes and prayers go forth, asking for us that whether vanquished or victorious we may, at all times, be found standing faithfully and fearlessly by the cause of truth and sincerity in spiritual life.

MARY B. WESTENHOLZ.

April, 1904.

As it is our duty to aim at perfection, or to endeavour the attainment of integrity in heart and life, so we should especially labour to govern our tongue and guard it from offence.

Isaac Barrow.

THE BASIS OF RELIGION.

SIR,—It is with no small sense of responsibility that I again break silence after the earnest and thought-inspiring criticisms of Mr. Armstrong, Professor Upton, and Dr. Mellone. But to hold back from discussion while still unconvinced would seem to be an act of infidelity to the service of truth, in which we are all joined.

In the spirit of inquiry and confession, therefore, I submit certain points which seem still to require consideration. Professor Upton says that if we have any knowledge of God at all it is immediate, in the conscience, the reason and the heart. And I understand him to argue that we may therefore know God as He is—that is, as righteousness, reason, love, and so forth. Now I do not wish for a moment to dispute (what indeed the coldest scientific system must admit) the sublime and inspiring fact that the Cosmic Power becomes personal, loving, human in us. But I do not understand how this affords any presumption that it is equally or more personal in the "not-ourselves." And as Religion must always include, for me, a relation with the "not-ourselves" and no mere relation to that which exists only in ourselves, I am obliged either to seek other arguments for the existence of personality in it, or to see how without personality it may yet be the goal of reverence and adoration.

This brings me to Dr. Mellone's suggestion "that the source of any form of life cannot contain less (though it may contain infinitely more) than is contained by that which issues from it." While provisionally accepting this statement I feel at the same time that we must examine it very carefully if we are to be saved from making a false deduction. What, for instance, is the possible meaning of such words as "growth," "evolution," "development," if the completed result was all there in the beginning, as much as in the end? Surely the only sense in which the statement appears indisputable, is that we are obliged to conceive of the completed thing as potentially present in the source; but there is surely no possibility of establishing a personal relation with a "potentially" personal power.

And this brings me to what is, perhaps, the crucial point in the discussion, raised by Dr. Mellone's question, why choose so imperfect an analogy as that between light and eye rather than that of "the uttered thoughts of our fellow-creatures"? And, in the first place, I must plead that I am not "casting about for an analogy" where none was hitherto required, because there is already an analogy in the field, and God is customarily spoken of as our Father. I therefore suggest as a possible alternative an analogy which I have to confess is for myself much more truly illustrative of my own personal experience. I am aware that this is not the case with many great, and, perhaps, the greatest, souls. But there are so many to-day of essentially religious mind who have no sense of an inter-self-conscious relation with the Infinite that any metaphor which serves to elucidate and confirm religious aspirations of another type may claim a special value of its own. Further, I am strengthened by indications I cannot ignore that such mighty and diverse religious spirits as those of Confucius and Buddha, Shakespeare and Wordsworth (of whom more immediately), to mention four only, teach their deepest lessons and have awakened undying inspiration without any certain word of self-consciousness in the Absolute.

In the second place, the analogy of light and eye is to me a higher one than that of soul and soul. For even if it be true, as Professor Upton says, that personality itself is not essentially finite, yet to me no personality is realised in its highest reality until it has been seen as existing in, and reaching me through, that mysterious Presence in which alone "being" can "be." Bernard did not regard it as a derogation to describe God as the "place" of souls, and to me there could be no higher laud than to describe God as the soul's light. For though Dr. Mellone may call light "ethereal vibrations," we none of us know what it is, whereas to the eye it is environment, revealer, creator, and essence of all that is.*

And now lest it be supposed that for those of us who know no inter-personal relation with the Infinite, the loss is all on our side, I will indicate how great a measure of relief we get from the problem of evil, and also in a single word what I hope may be a possible light on the mystery of mind and matter. If Mind is an exclusively organic entity, being reached only in animal bodies and supremely in human society, then we may have hope that it is the power destined in its highest development to triumph over all evil, converting it to good. (For whether or no the nature of things is ultimately akin to it, it is most certainly favourable to it.) But if we have to believe that Mind is already supremely enthroned in creation, where is our hope? In that case evil is not a mere impartial incident in the cosmic state of things, destined to endure only until that which it militates against prove strong enough to subdue it, but it is intentional and deliberate. Or in the more aggravated form supposed by Mr. Millin it has by pure accident established itself for an indefinite period against the supreme Mind of creation. But if infinite Mind is so incompetent to manage its own creation as he would have us believe, alas then for the efforts of human genius, heroism, and solidarity.

If, on the other hand, we conceive of self-conscious mind as a mighty new force in the universe, evolving in an environment always and everywhere fitted to it, but which has in no sense anticipated it, then there is scarce any limit to what we may hope from it. And under such a system even evil will be seen to have its function. For the main difficulty of the problem of evil is not so much to discover its beneficence as to conceive it as supremely benevolent. If we are not obliged to conceive of it as the work of something akin to the best in ourselves, then we can admit that, as the sternest of stimuli to the latent powers in life, it has been the origin of all the best things we have. In this case its function is not unlike that of great tragedy in art, which benefits us by provoking vitality from its sleeping deeps, and awaking to reaction those unworn passions and profounder sensations of life's ultimate worth and greatness which the lighter things of life have no strength to call forth. Even the cruelty of man calls forth in opposition the worthiest and mightiest forces that live in good minds. But this method of evoking them is inhuman in the highest sense.

So long, indeed, as this was believed true, and there seemed no alternative system but one which left man a deserted and capricious accident in nature, I admit that many significant and beautiful thoughts were wrung from it. But how much do these weigh after all against the relief which a more purely naturalistic system offers? Man is no caprice, but the true child of nature, the inevitable outcome of the clash of existent forces, and pain itself, even of soul, is the outward stimulant and origin of the development of our noblest and most triumphant powers.

On the widely different but not disconnected mystery of the relation between mind and matter, one word must serve, and that merely in the form of a cursory suggestion. Amongst human beings there is, perhaps no such thing as a purely mental or a purely physical impression. Nevertheless, the two poles of experience are widely separated. The mental element in the first sensations consequent on a violent blow is a minimum, whereas the sense element in certain abstract mathematical conceptions is likewise small. Is it possible, I ask, to regard the "material world" as our attempt to see the outside universe from the sensory pole of experience while the mind-world of the metaphysician is the attempt to see it from the thought-pole of experience? For example, the mind and the brain are extraordinarily closely related. Is it possible that they are really the same thing, perceived through different faculties? Perhaps the chief significance of this (very inadequately presented) suggestion would be seen in the mystic consciousness, in which sight, sound, thought, and emotion are of, and towards, not many things, but One.

Two questions of great importance remain. Professor Upton thinks "that the very essence of Wordsworth's poetry would evaporate and disappear, if we came to believe that the personal sympathy between the poet's spirit and the spirit of nature was . . . no objective reality." I may be wrong, but I cannot think this is so. Indeed, all the greatest passages in Wordsworth, where he is really most himself, seem to me to be entirely independent of the thought that the relation between himself and Nature—or the Power revealed in Nature—is reciprocally self-conscious. The conception indeed that the "external world" is "fitted to the mind" and the mind to the external world is truly essential—but this does not necessarily imply that Nature is consciously sympathetic. To illustrate this, we may take a very different case which is, nevertheless, in some respects similar. Do we not read the works of masters long since dead, whom we think of as in no way affected by our emotions, with delight no less keen, nay often keener and deeper than (though so different from) that we enjoy in intercourse with living souls, with whom the self-conscious relation is reciprocal? Surely the essence of Wordsworth's poetry is "the Mind of man—my haunt and the main region of my song." And so long as this Mind of man is strong enough to find food in its human or natural environment, will there not always be poetry and religion in life, whatever our theory as to the nature of the relation between "the discerning intellect" and "this goodly universe," may be? The other point of vital importance, perhaps the most vital of all, is raised by Mr. Armstrong's searching question as to how we can conduct our public and our private devotions if we are to be without the conception of a personal Deity. To this difficulty I do not wish to pretend to have anything more than a personal solution. There will be many for whom nothing can ever take the place of this intimately personal relation, and to whom devotion will ever seem unreal and hollow without it. But Mr. Armstrong will agree with me that ultimately and essentially life itself must be our prayer, and that purity and sincerity of self-expression in act and attitude are of profounder worth than any verbal or mental utterances dependent on a belief or conception. Yet I have hope that an entirely truthful and vital place will be found for prayer or uttered meditation, in that form which has been beautifully described as embodying "our modern lyrical conception of prayer." The highest purpose of prayer in any form is, I suppose, to lift us above the temporal things into touch with the Eternal. The direct address of a sermon is too personal even in its most impersonal form, and about every inherited utterance, as hymns or scriptures, there can scarce fail to be in more or less degree, some marks of local phases of past thought. But as the present is the most like of anything we know to eternity, so the burning present in which past experiences and future aspirations are fused must have its immediate and unconfined utterance, for which the solemn and exalted form of utterance we associate with prayer has prepared so perfect a vehicle. Did not Anselm speak of prayer in some such words as these: The yearning to be what we were meant to be; grief that we had not been what we were meant to be; fear lest we might never become what we were meant to be?

JOSEPH H. WICKSTEED.

* It may appear to some a fanciful case when we speak of the relation of light and eye as though this could exist apart from the mind. But it appears that the lowest vertibrate (amphioxus) has no organic sense, except vision, and its single eye is in the place occupied in higher vertebrates by the brain. (Its body being transparent it sees through.) So that as we think of a man as essentially a mind it does not seem irrational to think of this creature as essentially a vision. If we now ask ourselves what light must be to it, and then, so to speak, raise the relation to a higher power by substituting the term man for amphioxus, we get a conception in no sense vapoury or confused, yet one sufficiently great for all our needs, even without the perfectly legitimate addition that (as everything would lead us to believe) "God still remains in infinite excess."

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Wednesday, or Thursday Morning at latest.]

Acton.—The last meeting of the Literary Guild before the summer recess was held on Thursday, April 28, when a paper was read by Mr. J. A. Wilkes on "Thoreau," which dealt sympathetically with Thoreau's protest against the artificiality of modern life, and contended that the problem of the relation of the individual to society was more difficult at the present time than in Thoreau's day. An interesting discussion followed. It is proposed to commence in October a study of the great writers of the Nineteenth Century. A rambling club is being organised to keep the members together during the summer months.

Dover.—On May 1 the Rev. S. Burrows preached the sermons for the 261st anniversary of the Adrian-street Church, speaking in the morning on "Unity of the Spirit," and in the evening on "Reasons for our Faith." On the following evening a congregational tea was held, followed by the annual meeting. Satisfactory reports were given by the treasurer and secretary of the Church and the superintendents of the Young People's Societies. Several resolutions were submitted to the meeting relating to future work, and carried unanimously. The proceedings closed with a hearty vote of thanks to the superintendent of the Sunday-school, Miss Martindale, and the minister, the Rev. S. Burrows, for their work during the past year.

Halifax—The Sunday-school anniversary services on Sunday, May 8, were conducted at Northgate-end Chapel by the Rev. Ottwell Binns, of Scarborough. In the afternoon a service of song, "The Christian Work in Halifax Parish of John Wesley," was given, Mr. S. G. Foster being the reader. On Monday Mr. Binns lectured on "William the Silent." The collections in aid of the school funds amounted to £25 14s. 5d.

Heywood.—On Sunday, May 8, the Sunday-school sermons were preached by the Rev. James E. Stead, of Park-lane. Under the leadership of Mr. John Holt, special hymns and anthems, &c., were given by the choir, largely augmented by the more musical of the scholars, numbering over a hundred singers. Although the day was so unfavourable large congregations crowded the chapel, and the offertories amounted to £52.

Horwich.—The annual school sermons were preached on Sunday last. At the morning service an address to scholars and friends was given by Mr. J. E. Jones, M.A., of the Grammar School, Bolton. The preacher, afternoon and evening, was the Rev. C. C. Coe, of Bournemouth, whose presence in the pulpit was greatly appreciated. There were large congregations—many friends being in attendance from Bolton. The collections amounted to nearly £19.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—An informal meeting of the congregation was held at the Church of the Divine Unity after morning service last Sunday, Alderman J. Baxter Ellis presiding, when a numerously signed requisition was presented to the Rev. Frank Walters, asking him to reconsider his resignation, and assuring him of the love and sympathy of the congregation. The requisition was presented by Alderman Barker Ellis and supported by Councillors R. Elliott and R. Affleck, and several others. Mr. Walters, in accepting the requisition, read a carefully prepared statement as to the reasons for his resignation, and promising his reply to the requisition on Sunday, May 22.

North Lancashire and Westmoreland Unitarian Association.—The quarterly conference was held at Chorley on Saturday, April 30, when the choirs of the congregations composing the Association, held their annual musical festival. Each choir rendered several items, and the choirs combined in rendering Sullivan's "O Gladsome Light." The whole of the music was well and carefully rendered, Mr. C. W. Stewart, of Preston, conducting. The festival is a great incentive to the choirs in the Association. The president, the Rev. H. V. Mills, of Kendal, presided.

Northampton.—The services at Kettering-road Church last Sunday were devoted to the memory of the late Frances Power Cobbe. The readings and prayers throughout the day were taken from her writings; the morning sermon was one which she had composed; her portrait was displayed in the vestibule, and the highest of tributes was paid by the Rev. Arthur Harvie in his sermon in the evening, when he dealt with Miss Cobbe's work for religion.

Northumberland and Durham.—The spring conference of the Northumberland and Durham Unitarian Christian Association was held in the Unitarian Church at Stockton on Monday afternoon, May 10, when representatives were present from most of the churches on the roll. The Rev. W. H. Lambelle occupied the chair in the unavoidable absence of the president, Mr. W. J. Watson, of Thornaby-on-Tees. An interesting paper was read by Mr. Charles Bell, of Redcar, on "The Unitarian Church, its Message and its Mission," which provoked considerable discussion, at the close of which resolutions condemning the Chinese Ordinance and the Licensing Bills of the Government were submitted and agreed to unanimously, as also a resolution of sympathy to the Rev. James C. Street, of Shrewsbury, who was to have taken part in the proceedings, but who, owing to the breakdown in his health, has been compelled to cancel all his engagements. Tea was provided in the school-room by the ladies of the Stockton congregation. A well-attended public meeting was held in the evening, the chair being taken by Mr. E. Cox-Walker, of Darlington. Addresses were delivered by the Revs. Herbert V. Mills, of Kendal, W. H. Lambelle, Middlesborough, Geo. A. Ferguson, Gateshead, and Hy. Cross, Stockton.

Norwich.—In connection with the Junior Guild of Service, Mr. E. L. King lectured at the Octagon Institute on April 26, showing a number of Nature photographs, with a lantern, inspired by Kearton's "Wild Life at Home." The Rev. Alfred Hall presided, and the hope was expressed that the extremely interesting series of photographs of plant and animal life might on some future occasion be exhibited to a larger audience.

Parkstone.—On Sunday afternoon a very successful temperance service was held at the Emerson Hall. Mr. W. T. Bushrod led the meeting, and was assisted by Mr. Councillor Hunt and Mr. Warland, both of whom gave most earnest addresses. It was decided that the chairman should sign a petition to the House of Commons on behalf of the meeting against the Government's licensing proposals. The service was well attended and most enthusiastic. In the evening Mr. Bushrod discoursed to a fair congregation, the subject being "Jacob's Dream."

Rawtenstall.—The Sunday-school anniversary services were held last Sunday, the Rev. R. McGee, of Colne, officiating. The morning opened with a thin coating of snow on the hill sides, and sleet and rain fell at intervals during the day. The state of the weather and the depression in the cotton trade, which is especially marked in the Rossendale Valley, militated against the success of the services. Nevertheless the congregations were good, and seats had to be placed in the aisles in the evening. The collection amounted to £47 2s. 7½d., being the record in the history of the congregation, and an advance of £5 12s. 1½d. on last year's effort.

Ringwood.—The Rev. A. Chalmers, of Wakefield, conducted special services on Sunday last, preaching in the morning on "Small Results from Great Efforts," and in the evening on "The Nicene Creed," giving a vivid description of the tumultuous scenes at the Council of Nicæa, and the part taken in the proceedings and the subsequent promulgation of the doctrine of the deity of Christ by the Emperor Constantine. The attendance was very gratifying.

Scarborough.—On Friday week a social gathering was held at the Unitarian Church to make a farewell presentation to Mr. A. C. Williams, who for sixteen years had been active in church and school, and was leaving for Reading. Mr. Arthur Bailey, who presided, made the presentation on behalf of the congregation, and Mr. Thomas Kettle, hon. sec., read a letter of sympathy and appreciation from the Rev. E. L. H. Thomas, formerly minister of the congregation.

No man can quite keep his dignity and self-respect while complaining that he has been ill-used; but words may be uttered which, though repented of next day in dust and ashes, can never be forgot.

A. K. H. B.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

SUNDAY, May 15.

Acton, Central Auction Room, Market-place High-street, 7, Mr. T. J. HARDY, B.A.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Rev. EUSTACE THOMPSON.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Mr. A. J. CLARKE.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. W. STANLEY.

Child's Hill, All Souls' Free Church, corner of Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. JUPP.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 and 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON. Half-yearly Collections for Church Expenses.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. PERRIS.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 and 7, Rev. DAVID AMOS.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. GREAVES.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11.15 and 7, Rev. G. CRITCHLEY, B.A.

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. J. E. STRONGE.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. JOHN ELLIS.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11, Rev. J. H. WICKSTEED, M.A., and 6.30, Rev. SYDNEY H. STREET.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.

Stepney Green, College Chapel, 11 and 7, Mr. C. A. GINEVER.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 and 7, Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.

Stratford, Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Mr. G. WARD.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, Eastfhill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. J. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J McDOWELL.

BLACKPOOL, Dickson-road, North Shore, 10.45 and 6.30, PULPIT VACANT.

BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Church, The Hall, Lytham-road, 11 and 7,

BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 and 7, Rev. J. HARWOOD, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Christ Church, New-road, North-street, 11 and 7, Mr. HERBERT RIX, B.A.

BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 7, Rev. NOAH GREEN.

CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11, Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.

GUILDFORD, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. RATTENBURY HODGES.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30,, Rev. J. J. MARTEN.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. L. P. JACKS, M.A.

LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. D. ROBERTS.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11 and 6.30 Rev. J. COLLINS ODGERS, B.A.; Evening subject, "The Rediscovery of Truths which have been Buried beneath the Ancient Doctrine."
MAIDSTONE, Earl-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. SIDAWAY BRETTELL, M.A.
MANCHESTER, PLATT CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. T. POYNTING.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. E. PIKE.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Mr. F. HANKINSON.
PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Mr. THOMAS BOND.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 7, Rev. OTTWELL BINNS.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 and 6.45, Rev. F. TEASDALE REED.
SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. AGAR.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FREDERICK B. MOTT.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TROWBRIDGE, Conigre Church, 11 and 6, Rev. J. WAIN.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 and 6.30,

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 7, Rev. G. H. VANCE, D.D.

WALES.

ABERYSTWITH, New Market Hall, 11, Mr. E. G. MILES, U.C.W.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY SOUTH PLACE, FINSBURY.—May 15, at 11.15, JOHN A. HOBSON, M.A., "The Driving Force in History."

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN SQ. W.—May 15, at 11.15, DR. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The Sense of Tears in Human Things."

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY, ADELAIDE PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Assets, £158,000.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., J.P. 17, Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W
Miss CECIL GRADWELL, 7, Victoria-street, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st. S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham, S.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4 per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3 and 3½ per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

BORROWER'S INTEREST 4 per cent. Monthly Repayment, including Principal, Premium, and Interest for each £100.

10 years.	12 years.	15 years.	18 years.	21 years.
1 1 1	0 18 4	0 15 6	0 14 2	0 12 11

Compare the above rates with those of other Societies. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

MARRIAGE.

ROGERS—SHEPPARD.—On May 10th, at St. Thomas's Chapel, Ringwood, by the Rev. Andrew Chalmers, of Wakefield, James Chamberlain Rogers to Sarah Elsie Sheppard.

SUSTENTATION FUND.

For the Augmentation of Ministers' Stipends.

THE Board of Managers beg to acknowledge the undermentioned generous contributions promised in reply to their appeal for an additional income of £200 a year to meet the numerous and urgent applications for their aid. It will, however, be noticed that half the amount asked for has hardly as yet been received, and they therefore trust that many other friends will send contributions to the treasurer, Edgar Chatfeild-Clarke, Esq., 63, Bishopsgate-street Within, London, E.C.

S. A. STEINTHAL, President.
A. W. WORTHINGTON, FRANK PRESTON } Secretaries.

	Donations. £	s.	d.	Annual Subscriptions. £	s.	d.
Mrs. Aspland, London	5	5	0
Mr. Walter Baily, London, increased to				4	4	0
Mrs. Berry, Wrotham ...	5	0	0
Mr. E. J. Blake, Crewkerne, increased to ...				2	2	0
Mr. T. B. Bowring, London	2	2	0
Mr. Joseph Broome, Llandudno				10	10	0
Miss Annie Leigh Browne, London				1	1	0
Mr. Geo. W. Brown, London				2	2	0
Mr. E. Chatfeild-Clarke, London	5	0	0
Mrs. Cobb, Reading ...	1	1	0
Mr. T. A. Colfox, Bridport				1	1	0
Mr. J. Cogan Conway, Ringwood	1	1	0
Mrs. James Cooper, London				1	1	0
Rev. H. Enfield Dowson, Gee Cross				2	0	0
A Friend, Bath	0	10	6
Mr. H. W. Gair, Liverpool	5	0	0
Mr. C. Harding, Birmingham	5	0	0
Mr. C. Harding, B'ham. (additional if required)	5	0	0
Mr. John Harrison, London (increased to) ...				4	4	0
Rev. James Harwood, London				1	1	0
Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Herford, Paignton				2	0	0
Mr. C. M. Holland, Wrexham				2	2	0
Mr. Wm. Hollins, Mansfield				5	0	0
Mrs. and Miss Holt, Liverpool	100	0	0	10	0	0
Mr. Alfred Holt, Liverpool	10	0	0
Mr. C. Isaacs, Bournemouth				2	2	0
Mr. W. Byng Kenrick, Birmingham				1	1	0
Mrs. Kirke, Sheffield ...	5	0	0
Mr. F. J. Kitson, Leeds...	5	0	0
Miss C. A. Lawrence, London				1	1	0
Mr. F. W. Pethick Lawrence, London	1	1	0
Mr. E. H. Lee, Birmingham				2	2	0
Miss Lydia S. Leigh, Manchester				2	2	0
Mr. I. S. Lister, London	2	2	0
Miss Alice A. Lucas, Darlington	3	3	0
Mr. J. Ellis Mace, Tenterden				1	0	0
Mrs. Marriott, Wakefield	2	2	0
Miss Mayjor, Tavistock...	5	0	0
Mr. F. Nettlefold, London				5	0	0
Mr. G. J. Notcutt, Ipswich				1	1	0
Mr. Richard Peyton, Birmingham	5	0	0
Miss Philips, Manchester	10	0	0
Miss Preston, London, increased subscription to	5	0	0	4	4	0
Mr. Frank Preston, London	2	2	0
Mrs. Price, Chepstow ...	100	0	0
A. M. R.	5	0	0
Mrs. Rawson, Manchester	4	0	0	1	0	0
Miss F. A. Short, Bristol				1	1	0
Rev. S. A. Steinthal, Manchester	3	0	0
Miss Swaine, Guildford	10	0	0	2	0	0
Mr. Arthur S. Thew, Southport				1	1	0
Rev. Thos. Thomas, Llandyssul, increased to ...				1	10	0
Mr. John P. Thomasson, Bolton	100	0	0
Lt.-Col. W. R. Trevelyan, Penzance...				1	1	0
Mr. John Waddingham, Cheltenham	25	0	0
Rev. Joseph Wain, Trowbridge				0	5	0
Miss Warren, London ...				2	2	0
Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, Wantage, increased to...				2	2	0
Mr. G. N. Williams, Aberdare				0	10	6
Mr. Geo. S. Woolley, Manchester	5	0	0
Mr. Hermann Woolley, Manchester	5	0	0
Mr. P. J. Worsley, Bristol	10	0	0
Mrs. James Worthington, Manchester	100	0	0
Mr. A. W. Worthington, Stourbridge	5	0	0
Mr. W. B. Worthington, Manchester				1	1	0
Miss Wrigley, Windermere	3	0	0
Mrs. Yeoman, Limpsfield				2	2	0

OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS FOR THE NONCONFORMIST MINISTRY.

DR. WILLIAMS'S TRUSTEES offer, for open competition, Undergraduate Scholarships, tenable in the University of Glasgow only; and Divinity Scholarships for Graduates, tenable in any approved School of Theology or University. The Scholarships are open to students of all Denominations preparing for the Nonconformist Ministry. For particulars apply to the SECRETARY, DR. WILLIAMS'S LIBRARY, Gordon-square, London, W.C.

FRUITARIAN CAKES.

MADE ENTIRELY OF FRUIT AND NUTS,

Uncooked, Concentrated, Natural Food.

READY FOR USE WITHOUT PREPARATION.

For travelling they are ideal. A meal will go in the pocket.

PEAR and WALNUT	7d.	per 8 oz. packet.
APRICOT and NUT	7d.	" "
MUSCATEL and ALMOND ...	6d.	" "
FRUIT and NUTS	5d.	" "
DATE and GINGER	4d.	" "
DATE and LEMON	4d.	" "
DATE and ORANGE	4d.	" "
FIG and CITRON	4d.	" "
DATE and NUT	3d.	" "
FIG and NUT	3d.	" "

Sample Box containing 14 varieties Fruitarian Cakes, 8d.; or with 3 varieties of Nut Butters, post free, 1s.

HUGH MAPLETON, Nut Food Manufacturer, ARDWICK GREEN, MANCHESTER.

Women, Beware

of worthless imitations of the "Dalli" Box Iron. No other Box Iron can retain the heat and do its work like the "Dalli." Smaller irons will not answer. No Gas, no Fire, no Smell. Hot in a few minutes and retains the heat. No changing of Irons. Double the work in half the time, therefore the most economical Iron.

FANCY! 2 HOURS' IRONING FOR ONE PENNY!

Price of the "Dalli" is 6/-. Price of the "Dalli" Fuel is 1/9 per box of 128 blocks. To be had of all Ironmongers. If any difficulty apply to the DALLI SMOKELESS FUEL CO., 27, Milton St., London, E.C.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

By REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

UNITARIANISM RE-STATED.

FOUR POPULAR LECTURES.

1. THE BIBLE. 2. JESUS CHRIST. 3. GOD. 4. A WORKING RELIGION.

In neat Pamphlet, 48 pp. Sixpence.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, ESSEX STREET, W.C.

THE SOUL'S JOURNEY TO PARADISE.

By Matilda Sharpe.

13th Edition. 9d. net; or by Post, 10d.

ALFRED HOLNES, 11, Paternoster Row, London.
R. L. ALLAN 143, Sauchiehall Street, Glasgow.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKLETS.

By the REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

DAILY MEDITATIONS

(Fourth Edition Revised.)

NIGHT UNTO NIGHT.

Cloth, red edges, 6d.; roan gilt, 1s.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C

CENTRAL POSTAL MISSION AND UNITARIAN WORKERS' UNION.

ANNUAL PUBLIC MEETING

ESSEX HALL,

THURSDAY, MAY 26, at Half-past Two o'clock.

MISS TAGART in the Chair.

Tea at Four o'clock. All heartily welcome.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

The ELEVENTH MUSICAL FESTIVAL will be held at ESSEX HALL on Saturday, 14th May. CHOIR COMPETITION at 3.30 p.m.; Adjudicator, L. C. Venables, Esq. CONCERT at 6 p.m. Chair to be taken by the President, J. Harrison, Esq.

Tickets, Adults, 1s., to include tea, 1s 6d.; Children (not in competing choirs), 6d. each, to include tea; may be had at Essex Hall, or from the Superintendents of the various Sunday Schools.

A. BARNES, Hon. Sec.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION SOCIETY.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at Rosslyn Hill Chapel Schools, Hampstead, on Monday, May 16th, at 8 15. Chairman: Mr. CHARLES BOOTH. Speakers: Mr Graham Wallas, Rev. F. K. Freeston, and others.

LAYMEN'S CLUB.

A DANCE will be given at Portman Rooms, Baker-street, on Friday, May 27th, 8.15 p.m. to 2 a.m. Tickets, price 6s. 6d., of Mr. Stephen Jones, Dr. Williams's Library, Gordon-square, or Mr. W. Fitchett Wurtzburg, 3, Lawn-road, N.W. In applying for tickets please state whether for lady or gentleman.

W. FITCHETT WURTZBURG,
Hon. Sec.

UNITARIAN CHRISTIAN CHURCH, LEWISHAM.

A BAZAAR

in Aid of the Building Fund is to be held at ESSEX HALL on June 8th and 9th.

Lady E. Durning-Lawrence will open the proceedings on the first day, and Mrs. W. Blake Odgers on the second day.

Gifts of money or goods are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope, Minister, or A. G. Warren, Esq., Hon. Sec., Kearsney, Berlin-road, Catford.

SAMUEL JONES' FUND.

THE MANAGERS meet Annually in October for the purpose of making Grants.

Applications must, however, be in hand not later than June 15th, and must be made on a form to be obtained from

EDWIN W. MARSHALL,
Secretary,
38, Barton-arcade, Manchester

Board and Residence.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH. — ARNEWOOD. Pension. Commanding position in the West Cliff-road; full South aspect; sea views and private grounds; close to Winter Gardens, Cliff Promenade, Square or Pier; moderate Tariff.—Apply, MANAGERESS.

CHELTENHAM.—Board and Residence in the best part of Sunny Cheltenham, sheltered from North and Easterly winds. Near the Spas and Gardens. Comfortable home. Moderate terms. Excellent cuisine.—A. G., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, W.C.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—"Cranbrook," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE; most comfortable throughout. Sea View, excellent cuisine. billiard and smoke room, sanitary certificate —Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

LANGLEY HOUSE, DAWLISH, DEVON.—A delightful HOLIDAY RESORT for Ladies and School-girls (Boys under 15). Beautiful country, bracing climate. Sea and Moorland. Prospectus from MISS N. JONES, Matron; or A. E. JONES, Esq, Proprietor.

FELIXSTOWE.—Comfortable HOME for Permanent BOARDERS, Adults or Scholars; also APARTMENTS on reasonable terms.—Apply, Mrs. ROBINSON, Kimberley, Ranelagh-road, Felixstowe.

LAKE DISTRICT.—Small House with good-sized Garden to be Let Furnished. Rural situation. Few minutes' walk from shops and Lake. Two sitting-rooms, four bedrooms.—Miss E. NEWLING, Windy How, Hawkshead, Lancashire.

BLACKPOOL.—Public or Private Apartments.—Mrs. ALLDRED, Atherton House, 28, Pleasant-street, North Shore.

SHERINGHAM, NORFOLK.—To Let, furnished, semi-detached House, by the month or longer. Three sitting, six bedrooms, bath. Good golfing and bathing. Near station.—U. M., 43, Newmarket-road, Norwich.

ALDEBURGH-ON-SEA.—House to Let, close to and facing the Sea. Comfortably furnished for owner's own occupation. Three sitting-rooms, six bedrooms (9 beds). Good bathing, sea and river boating and fishing. Excellent golf links.—Address, Mrs. MITCHELL, 41, Upper Addison Gardens, Kensington.

TO BE LET FURNISHED.—Old-fashioned COUNTRY HOUSE, between Reading and Windsor (14 rooms), for one year. Rent nominal to congenial tenant. Owner wishing to travel.—Kingscote, Wokingham.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Enlarged, Remodelled, Refurnished.

PRONOUNCED BY THE PRESS TO BE THE BEST TEMPERANCE HOTEL IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Accommodation for about 250 Guests.

Highly commended by the Rev. Dr. Aked, Rev. Rowland Hill, Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. Alderman White, M.P., the Misses Cadbury and thousands of other guests.

Spacious Coffee, Reading & Drawing Rooms. Electric Light throughout.

Apartments, Service and Table d'Hote Breakfast from 5/- to 6/6 per day (with Dinner from 8/- to 9/6

77 & 101,

Southampton Row, London.

FREDERIC SMITH & SONS.

Opposite the British Museum.

THACKERAY HOTEL,

GREAT RUSSELL STREET,

LONDON.

This large and well-appointed Temperance Hotel has Passenger Lift; Bathrooms on every Floor; Electric Light throughout; Spacious Dining, Drawing, Writing, Reading, and Smoking Rooms; Fireproof Floors; Perfect Sanitation; Telephone; Night Porter.

Bedrooms from 2s. 6d. to 5s. 6d.

Inclusive charge for Bedroom, Attendance, Table d'Hôte Breakfast and Dinner, from 8s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. per day. Full Tariff and Testimonials on application.

Telegraphic Address: "THACKERAY, LONDON."

EATON'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL,

22, Guilford Street, Russell Square,

LONDON.

Facing the Gardens of the Foundling Institution.

Central. Homelike. Beds from 1s. 6d. Breakfast and Tea from 1s. Patronized repeatedly by many visitors during the 30 years of its existence.

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A. Honours Lond. Preparation for London Matriculation, Trinity College, and Associated Board of Musicians. Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. Apply to the Head Mistress.

YORKSHIRE.— WESTBOURNE, (SHEFFIELD).

BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

Head Mistress: MISS F. GOODEY, B.A. LOND.

Preparation for Matric., Associated Board of R.A.M. and R.C.M. and Camb. Locals.

School "Recognised by Board of Education."

Splendid situation 600 ft. above sea level.

Hockey, tennis, swimming, Swedish Gymnasium attached to House.

Apply to PRINCIPAL, for prospectus.

WAVERLEY SCHOOL, 24, HAMILTON ROAD, SHERWOOD RISE, NOTTINGHAM.

PREPARATORY TO THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

HEAD MASTER, Mr. H. T. FACON, B.A.(Lond.).

Prospectus on application. BOARDERS received. Reference kindly permitted to the Rev. Frank K. Freeston Essex House, Campden-hill, W.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, 14 & 15, SOUTH MARINE TERRACE, ABERYSTWYTH.

PRINCIPAL ... MISS MARLES-THOMAS.

This School is splendidly situated in one of the healthiest parts of Wales, overlooking Cardigan Bay, and close to excellent golf links. Pupils have passed the London and Welsh Matriculation; Cambridge Higher Local; Senior and Junior Cambridge Locals, besides the usual Theoretical and Practical Music Examinations. Scholarships have also been obtained at the Welsh University Colleges.

Gymnasium, Swimming, and excellent Hockey Club.

Situations, VACANT AND WANTED.

WANTED EARLY, for Three Months, by an English Lady living in German Switzerland, a YOUNG MAN to coach her son in Mathematics. Board, Residence, and German lessons in return.—Apply in first instance to F. CLARKE, Esq., 17, Hornsey Rise Gardens, N.

THE HIGH PAVEMENT CONGREGATION and Sunday School (Nottingham) propose to appoint a LAY VISITOR (Lady) who will be required to devote her whole time to Chapel work. Salary £80 per annum.—Apply not later than 28th inst. to Miss H. GUILFORD, Lenton Avenue, The Park, Nottingham.

ANNIVERSARY MEETINGS, 1904.

The British & Foreign Unitarian Association

AND THE

SUNDAY-SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

Tuesday, May 24.

11.30 a.m.—Meeting of Delegates of Sunday School Societies and Unions at Essex Hall.

1.15 p.m.—LUNCHEON at the Holborn Restaurant, High Holborn, W.C. Tickets 2s. 6d.

2.45 p.m.—ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING at Essex Hall, when The President, MISS MARIAN PRITCHARD, will take the Chair.

3.45 p.m.—CONFERENCE on "Religious Education." MISS CLEPHAN (Leicester) will read a Paper. REV. W. COPELAND BOWIE will open the Discussion.

5 p.m.—Reception by the President of the S.S.A. in the Council Room. Tea and Coffee.

8 p.m.—ESSEX HALL LECTURE by PROF. H. H. WENDT (University of Jena), "The Idea and Reality of Revelation." Admission by Ticket to be obtained at Essex Hall. Members of the Unitarian Association free; Non-Members, 1s.

Wednesday, May 25.

11.30 a.m.—RELIGIOUS SERVICE, Little Portland Street Chapel. SERMON by the REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A. (Wandsworth). Collection in aid of the Funds of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association.

4 p.m.—ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING at Essex Hall. The President, MR. W. ARTHUR SHARPE, in the Chair. Reports, Election of Officers, Welcome to Delegates, and other business.

6 p.m.—Tea and Coffee in the Council Room.

7.30 p.m.—PUBLIC MEETING at Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand.

SPEAKERS:

REV. J. E. CARPENTER, M.A.	....	"The Outlook for Liberal Religion."
REV. JOSEPH WOOD	....	"What I Saw of the Unitarian Churches in America."
M. ANDRÉ BOURRIER	....	"Liberal Religion among the Catholic Clergy of France."
REV. W. H. LYON, D.D.	....	"The American Unitarian Association and its Work."
REV. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A.	....	"Thoughts Gleaned from a Visitation of our Churches."
REV. J. WARSCHAUER, M.A.	....	"Popular Irreligion and Liberal Christianity."

Thursday, May 26.

10 a.m.—DEVOTIONAL SERVICE, Essex Hall; REV. J. WORSLEY AUSTIN, M.A. (Church of the Messiah, Birmingham).

10.30 a.m.—CONFERENCE at Essex Hall. The President in the Chair. PAPER by the REV. L. P. JACKS, M.A. (Editor of the Hibbert Journal), "The Drift of Present-Day Religious Thought." HON. ROLLO RUSSELL (Haslemere) will open the Discussion. PAPER by the REV. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B. (Sheffield), "The Supply of Ministers for our Churches." MR. FRED. MONKS, J.P. (Warrington), will open the Discussion.

8 p.m.—CONVERSAZIONE at the Portman Rooms, Baker Street, W. Reception by the President and Mrs. Sharpe. Music by the Royal Blue Band. Tea and Coffee 8 to 11 p.m. Ticket, 1s.; on and after May 25, 2s.

Early application should be made for Tickets for the LUNCHEON, the ESSEX HALL LECTURE, and the CONVERSAZIONE.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, London, April 26, 1904.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate-hill, London, E.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office 3, Essex-street Strand, London, W.C. Sole Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 20 & 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale) JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, May 14, 1904.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3230. NEW SERIES, No. 334.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1904. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 321
ARTICLES—
A Visit to the Scandinavian Unitarians 323
The Rev. A. Altherr of Basel 324
LEADER—
Religion and Liberty 328
MEETINGS—
London Sunday School Society... ... 325
Laymen's Club 327
London Domestic Mission 331
Western Union 332
Liverpool Domestic Mission Society ... 333
LITERATURE—Short Notices 325
CORRESPONDENCE—
Martineau Memorial Hall and Sunday School 322
Special Welsh Service 323
"Doth God care for Oxen" 329
Unitarian Home Missionary College ... 329
The Basis of Religion 330
OBITUARY—
John Pennington Thomasson 326
Mrs. Elam 326
CHILDREN'S COLUMN 327
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 333
OUR CALENDAR 334
ADVERTISEMENTS 335

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

WHITSUNTIDE promises this year an anniversary week of unusual interest. Our report of the meetings will extend over the next two numbers of the INQUIRER, next week's issue including the Association sermon by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, and a report of Professor Wendt's Essex Hall lecture on "The Idea of Reality and Revelation," as well as of the annual meetings of the Sunday School Association and the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. On Friday afternoon Professor Wendt is to lecture also at Manchester College, Oxford (at five o'clock), his subject being "Types of Christianity."

THE Rev. W. H. Lyon, D.D., who will represent the American Unitarian Association at our meetings, has been minister since 1896 at Brookline, Mass., and was ordained to the ministry in 1873. Other honoured guests from abroad, besides Professor Wendt and M. André Bourrier, will be M. le Pasteur Arnaud, of Sevres, Mr. Theo Berg, of Copenhagen, and the Rev. J. Hocart, of Brussels. There is some hope that Mr. Jochumsson, from Iceland, who is at present in Denmark, may also be present.

VISITORS to Essex Hall next week will find abundant attraction in the Book Room of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and also of the Sunday School Association. Of two new books published by the former Association, we had hoped to publish reviews this week, but pressure of other matter has prevented it. In the series of handbooks published by the Unitarian Association, of which Dr. Mellone's "Converging Lines of Religious Thought" is one, a new book by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, on "The Trinity and the Incarnation," is just issued. It first sketches the growth of the doctrine of the Deity of Christ, and then examines a number of modern pleas for that doctrine and the consequent doctrine of the Trinity, and in conclusion deals with "the Heart of the Argument," to show what permanent spiritual truth underlies those doctrines.

ANOTHER book in the same series, under the title, "The Place of Christianity among the Religions of the World," by the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, contains a revised reprint of the articles contributed by him to the INQUIRER in 1900 (not 1901 as stated in the Preface), tracing the progress of the comparative study of religions, in the series on the "Achievements of the Century." These articles have often been asked for since, and it is a great satisfaction to have them now in book form, together with Mr. Carpenter's address at the International Council meeting at Amsterdam, the subject of which gives the title to the book. This address also has been revised by the expansion of some passages on Hindu thought.

THE second reading of the Finance Bill was carried at midnight on Tuesday after a two days' debate, the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition being defeated by 297 votes to 213. That amendment asked the House of Commons, > having regard to the heavy burden of taxation proposed by this Bill in a time of peace, . . . to declare its condemnation of the large and continuous increase of the national expenditure in recent years.

The indifference with which the significant facts advanced in support of this declaration are regarded is one of the most disturbing features of these disturbing times. In ten years, while the population has grown by 10 per cent., the normal annual expenditure has increased by over 50 per cent., and no serious attempt is made to check its growth. Taxation stands in a time of peace virtually in the same position as it stood in the height of the war, our national credit has not recovered, and what would happen were a new and sudden call made upon our resources it is not very easy to see.

THE secret of the apparent indifference of those in power to the continued increase in our expenditure is probably in large measure contained in the fact pointed out by Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, that they have all the time at the back of their minds a cherished alternative to economy in a return to those Protective Tariffs which they suppose will provide us with unlimited funds at the cost of the foreigner. Protection has always brought and will always bring extravagance in its train. Taxation for revenue purposes only is the only possible motto for an economical administration. When the imposition of taxation becomes an end in itself, apart from its use in meeting expenditure, the motive for keeping that expenditure down disappears. The present Government has promised not to impose Protection during the present Parliament. But its readiness to do so at some future date saves it from the apprehension of inability to meet further demands upon our taxable capacity which haunts economists of sounder views. Were a Government now in power convinced of the injury and injustice of Protection, but ready to find money for national purposes by the taxation of land values, high liquor licences and similar expedients, the present indifference to the claims of economy would very rapidly disappear.

OF the 50 per cent. increase in our expenditure during the decade no less than 40 per cent. has gone on the Army and Navy. Whether or not money value in ships and guns has been obtained for this expenditure does not concern us here. But it does concern us that the impression should have grown that a 40 per cent., or even a 100 per cent., increase in this class of expenditure will bring us safety from foreign hostility. Such safety is to be attained only by a just and consistent foreign and colonial policy. With that, a yet smaller expenditure on armaments than that of ten years ago would quickly seem superfluous: without it, our sleep will be uneasy, however large our fleets and however mobile our armies. If we rely solely on force, force will be our undoing. If we seek to build up the goodwill of our subjects and our neighbours by following justice and mercy, we shall come to depend less and less, instead of more and more, upon force to protect our rights.

WE greatly fear that this week's announcements finally assure what the Prime Minister only last month characterised in advance as "one of the greatest misfortunes that could possibly happen to the Indian Government or to this country"—the annexation of Thibet. On Monday night Mr. Brodrick stated that the further advance on Lhassa from Gyantse had been actually ordered "unless, within a period to be fixed by the Indian Government, the Chinese Amban arrives at Gyantse accompanied by a competent Thibetan negotiator." What that period was to be, he said, the Home Government had not yet been informed, and he added that the despatch had been sanctioned of any reinforcements which the Indian Government might consider necessary for the safety of the Mission or for the lines of communication.

ON Monday morning the Times published a telegram from its correspondent in Thibet, declaring that "diplomacy had been finally rejected," that no communication with the Amban was possible, and that the enemy was "daily gaining strength, superior weapons, and arrogance."

Our position now [he added] is such, under the fire of the guns of the Jong, that no equal or honourable conference would be possible, even were the Thibetans willing to negotiate. The only possible course now to take is to secure, with an adequate military force and without delay, a final, honourable, and respected treaty with this country.

Pressed by Lord Spencer in the House of Lords on Tuesday for more adequate information, Lord Hardwicke, Under-Secretary for India, docilely followed the Times correspondent's lead:—

We are no longer in Thibet on a peaceful mission. We are at present at war with Thibet, and until we have, by force of arms, vindicated our position, and shown that we are not to be trifled with, I do not think we ought to be called upon by noble Lords opposite to give any definite pledge as to what precise form of settlement shall take place when hostilities are at an end.

And Lord Lansdowne added that "we must reserve to ourselves a certain amount of discretion to carry these [operations] to a conclusion honourable and satisfactory to ourselves."

ALAS! it is already too late for that. We have put ourselves irretrievably in the wrong at the outset by our armed invasion of a state against which we professed no casus belli—by our persistent penetration of a country at peace with us against the will of its inhabitants—and by our wholesale slaughter of the wretched creatures whom the sentiment of patriotism impelled to make a feeble resistance to our advance. An adventure with such a beginning can, in the nature of things, have a conclusion neither honourable nor satisfactory to ourselves. And now we are going to make a bad business worse. The settlement we are aiming at is not to be defined till we have brought the Thibetans to their senses, to use the well-worn formula. It may be that for a time our Government will avoid declaring for annexation, but obviously the Thibetans will fight on the assumption that that is our aim. And who can doubt that their resistance will ultimately be pleaded as the justification for annexation, just as it is now pleaded as the justification for the occupation of Lhassa, which was before declared to be entirely foreign to our aims?

LET not the law of thy country be the non ultra of thy honesty, nor think that always good enough, which the law will make good. Narrow not the law of charity, equity, mercy. Join gospel righteousness with legal right.

Sir Thomas Browne.

MARTINEAU MEMORIAL HALL AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

SIR,—Many of your readers will be aware that it has been for some time past in contemplation to make an effort to provide the Octagon Chapel at Norwich with new Sunday-school buildings as a memorial to the late Dr. Martineau in connection with the centenary of his birth at Norwich, which falls next year. But as no public appeal has yet been made, we shall be grateful if you will kindly allow us space to state briefly the circumstances which have given rise to this movement.

The day-school buildings, in which the girls' and infants' Sunday-schools have hitherto been carried on, were never the property of the congregation, and have now passed into other hands. Similar circumstances await the day-school buildings, used by the boys' Sunday-school. The many societies connected with the church, such as the Young People's Guild of Service, the Junior Guild, Mothers' Meeting, Girls' Friendly Circle, Literary Class, and others, to the number of over a dozen, have outgrown the accommodation afforded by the small city house known as the Octagon Institute, in which they have hitherto found an inadequate home.

This combination of circumstances (especially the pressing need to provide housing for the Girls' and Infants' Sunday-schools) and their coincidence with the widely-felt desire for a fitting memorial to Dr. Martineau (which may also include other honoured names connected with the Octagon, such as those of J. Withers Dowson, Travers Madge, I. M. Wade, and others) is, we venture to think, sufficient to justify the efforts which the friends of the movement and the Octagon congregation are making to raise such buildings as shall secure, so far as adequate accommodation can do it, the future of those Sunday-schools in the inauguration of which Dr. Martineau as a young man personally interested himself, and the social side of the life of that church to which he referred (in a letter to one of the present writers) not long before his death as "the shrine of his early devotion."

The total cost of site and buildings is estimated at £6,000. Our immediate appeal is for a sum of £2,250 to enable us to purchase the site at once. We rejoice to be able to state that the Committee of the B. and F.U.A. have approved of our scheme, and have just made us a grant of £250, of which £100 is for the site, conditional on the whole amount for the purchase of the site being raised without delay. They add that they have made this unusually large grant to the congregation at Norwich "on account of the exceptional circumstances connected with the centenary of the birth of Dr. Martineau, and the desire of the committee to take part in promoting such excellent work as the members of the congregation and the Sunday-school at Norwich are intent on carrying out." For reasons which it is obviously impolitic to go into, the securing of the site is a matter of great anxiety to us, and as our total of promises and payments only reaches at the present moment about £1,550, we are still £700 short of the sum required to make the congregation feel justified in accomplishing the actual purchase. Our most heartfelt thanks are renewed to those whose generous help has brought us thus far on our way. Our contributors include many of the most prominent members of our body, and many representatives of the families of well-known name and fame above referred to. We desire to publish a full list of these as soon as the £2,250 now asked for has been subscribed. Is it too much to hope that some generous donor or donors will be moved to relieve us of further anxiety as to the site by sending us the £700 still necessary within the next few days? The advertisement in another column will state to whom cheques, &c., may be made payable. Mrs. Mottram will be at the Whit-week meetings from Tuesday to Thursday noon, inclusive, and will gladly give further information to any who desire it, and will kindly seek her at the office, Essex Hall.

F. A. MOTTRAM (Mrs.)
The Birches,
Bracondale, Norwich.
W. N. LADELL,
69, Grove Road,
Lakenham, Norwich.
} Hon. Secs.

THE editorial notes in the May number of Yr Ymofynydd, the Welsh Unitarian magazine, comment, among other things, on the position of the Congregationalists and the Unitarians in America. There is an appreciation of the late Miss F. P. Cobbe, and an interesting article on Lewis Loyd, the banker, and a minister at one time of Dob-lane, Manchester. The "Crow" from her "Nest," in a second article, writes racily and readably on Immanuel Kant and his Philosophy.

AT the annual Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England, held recently in Manchester, members had an experience similar to our own. A resolution was moved protesting against the Licensing Bill, when a London elder objected to the introduction of questions of a political complexion as beyond the sphere of a court of a Christian Church. The resolution was passed by an overwhelming majority, two or three members entering their protest. Under a similar protest a further resolution was passed expressing apprehension and disapproval of the introduction of Chinese labour into the Transvaal.

THE action of the Brahmo Committees in protesting against a certain public theatrical performance in aid of the Bhowanipore Theistic Church, and which Dr. P. K. Ray objected in a letter which we published on April 23, has found strenuous defenders in subsequent issues of the Indian Messenger. On April 3 Mr. Lalit Mohan Das, writing from Calcutta, said that no objection had been made in Brahmo circles to private theatricals, it was the appearance of their friends on a public stage, and the indiscriminate public sale of tickets, which had caused the scandal. On April 10 two Dacca correspondents also justified the protest of the committees.

A VISIT TO THE SCANDINAVIAN UNITARIANS.

THE readers of the INQUIRER may perhaps feel interest in a less formal account of my visit to our Unitarian friends in Denmark and Norway than I have officially presented to the Committee of our Association. My visit to Copenhagen and its neighbourhood, indeed, was one of private friendship, and it was my happiness to be a guest in a sweet and beautiful Danish home, round which the beechwoods were just bursting into delicious foliage, while the ground was carpeted with myriads of snowy anemones interspersed with lordly cowslips of palest primrose tint. From Miss Westenholz I heard much which she has explained in the columns of the INQUIRER, and was enabled fully to understand how different are the problems set to our friends there to our own, and with what wisdom, courage, and largeness of heart they are being met in the crucial conditions of ecclesiastical politics. The fundamental task of religious liberalism in Denmark is not to set up a group of congregations severed from the national life, but to hold the national church to its historical breadth, and infuse the breath of liberal sympathies into its being. Mr. Berg, the very earnest, but all too modest, secretary of the Society and indefatigable editor of Lys over Landet (Light over the Land), promised to come to London for our meetings, and it will be a pleasure to welcome him. Pastor Birkedal I found full of life and brightness, though his exceeding deafness still cruelly handicaps him in the work which he continues with so gallant a courage.

From Copenhagen I sailed on May 5 by the fine Danish steamer Koch for Kristiania (permit me the pure Norwegian spelling). I was met next day at the quay by Pastor Haugerud, who at once carried me off to his charming wooden cottage—not, indeed, as yet quite finished—in the suburb of Bœkkelaget, among the pine forests, overlooking the fiord from a height of some five hundred feet. Pastor Haugerud has a great pull over his English brethren. He can sit and write his sermons in a balcony which overlooks the blue fiord, studded with fir-clad islets, and the long line of snow mountains in the distance. Who could not dream dreams in so enchanted a spot, and carry thence a sure message of spiritual things to the busy folk of the neighbouring capital on Sunday mornings? But one cannot grudge Pastor Haugerud and his gentle help-meet their retreat. He has done years of hard and rough pioneer work in America for Unitarianism and for temperance, often carrying his life in his hand; and when his heart turned again to his native land and he felt that he had a message in his soul from God for Kristiania, his boyhood's home, with her graceful beauty, her rich culture, her growing scepticism, and, alas! her taint of that decadent spirit which some of Norway's younger authors have fanned, it was good that he should come—good for him, and good for the city into whose service in the higher things he entered.

On Saturday morning, May 7, we woke to find the ground white with snow, and it lay heavy on the branches of the firs and spruces, and all the long day through it fell relentlessly. And on Sunday morning it was falling still; but before the hour of assembling of the congregation we had blue skies and rapidly drying streets. The service is held in a large public hall, seating about three hundred persons. By the time the simple service began it was packed from end to end, many people standing at the back. Mr. Haugerud conducted a short religious service of hymn and prayer and lesson, and then introduced me in a few kindly words. I preached on the nature and the spirit of our common movement, and he translated the sermon section by section, though it was evident that a very large proportion of the cultivated and thoughtful congregation were well able to follow the English version. The service closed with one of Kristopher Janson's hymns, sung to the tune of "Nearer, my God, to Thee" (the real tune), and the Benediction. Mr. Haugerud afterwards gathered together a little group of children in Sunday School, and gave them a simple talk on the sowing and the growing of the seed.

In the afternoon I had the great pleasure of visiting Fru Thams Lyche, the widow of the brilliant young Norwegian, to whom Brooke Herford in his old Chicago days first showed the way from Agnosticism to a free and happy faith. Lyche came to Kristiania and for a little while preached his new-found gospel, but presently accepted the editorship of a new literary magazine which became a great power for all things liberal and good. His memory is deeply loved and honoured. In his English wife he found a fit helper in all things of the understanding and the spirit.

In the evening I was the guest of Hr. Otto Harsem, the young and enthusiastic president of "den Unitariske Samfund." A party of a dozen sat round his dinner-table—men and women of high culture, most of them well able to help out my halting Norwegian with smooth and fluent English. The men at the head of the Norwegian Unitarian movement are not the sort of men to fail, and this delightful evening crowned the pleasure of the day.

On the Monday night a soirée or conversazione was held in a suite of public rooms which, considering the rather high price of the tickets, was well attended. Mr. Harsem presided over the more formal proceedings, and spoke warmly of the obligations of their Society to our Unitarian Association. Presently I was called upon; and this time I ventured on the perils of Norwegian. By Pastor Haugerud's good help in previous preparation, I hope that I steered my course not amiss, and I was rewarded with the superlative grade of Norwegian plaudits in "three times three"—short, sharp "hurrahs," given lustily and with generous unison. Then we had addresses by Pastor Haugerud, Kristopher Janson, and others. Mr. Janson still holds religious meetings on Sunday mornings, and he and Mr. Haugerud work, each on his own lines, in friendly relations. The former now holds, with the great masters of Norwegian letters, the State pension for literary service.

But the supreme treat of the evening was a recital from Peer Gynt by Hr. Christensen, the most distinguished interpreter of that unique character in Scandinavia. It was a marvellous performance, and full of illumination for a student of the great drama, with alternate play of rude hilarity and unexpected strains of infinite tenderness. The reading included also the celebrated "funeral oration" on the man with the maimed right hand.

On Tuesday I dined with the treasurer, a "working-man," once a Lofoten fisherman and now a painter, and his accomplished wife, one of the six female members of the City Council—an enthusiastic social democrat. From these and many others I received kindness which will long live in my heart.

Of my further adventures I may not tell, my visit to an old friend at Brevik, my long night at Kristiansand, waiting from 10 p.m. to 7 a.m., sallying forth every hour or so from comfortless hotel to rain-soaked quay wistfully inquiring whether the good ship Angelo had yet made her way through the fog that covered the rock-strewn fiord as a shroud. But by seven in the morning she was there; and then it was two bright and sunny days on the dancing sea, and then on Sunday night—the charms of Hull!

RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG

Liverpool, May 18.

SPECIAL WELSH SERVICE.

SIR,—May I draw attention to the special Welsh service advertised in your columns, which will be held on the Sunday afternoon of May 29? The Rev. Ceredig Jones will be the preacher.

I earnestly hope that all the Welsh Unitarians within reach of Essex Hall will make an effort to meet together on this occasion to join in a united service to sing those hymns so dear to the hearts of Welshmen which bring echoes of home and native land, and to listen to the words of such an eloquent preacher.

I trust that all who see this notice will make this Welsh service known to their friends and urge them to come.

M. L. TAGART.
(Hon. Secretary Welsh Unitarian Services.)

Manor Lodge, Frognal, Hampstead, N.W.

ON Thursday evening next, Dr. John Hunter is to lecture in the King's Weigh House Church on "James Martineau." This is the last lecture for the present in this course given on Thursday evenings on "Religious Leaders of the Nineteenth Century." The lecture begins at 8.30.

COUNTRY HOLIDAY MOVEMENT.—Miss Lawrence, 23, Campden House Chambers, Campden-hill, London, W., acknowledges with thanks receipt for this fund of the following sums:—B. X., £2; Miss Saint, 5s.; Mrs. Crompton, £1; Miss Eiloart, £1 1s.; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Preston, £1 1s.; The Misses Meyer, £3 3s.; Miss Preston, £1 1s.; Mr. Blake, £1 1s.; Mrs. Evans, 10s.; Miss Wrigley, £1 1s.; Mrs. Rutt, £1 1s.; Rev. R. B. Drummond, £1; Mrs. Aspland, £2 2s.; Mrs. Davies, £5.

THE REV. A. ALTHERR OF BASEL.

THE Rev. Alfred Altherr of Basel, who last year attended the anniversary meetings of the American Unitarian Association at Boston, was also appointed Foreign Correspondent of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and in response to an invitation to this year's meetings in London, has sent the following "Open Letter," the German original of which was published in the Schweizerisches Protestantenblatt of May 7, of which he is one of the editors.

It was in 1874 that Mr. Altherr was appointed minister of a Protestant church in Basel, and in that strong hold of orthodoxy he had a long uphill fight for liberal principles. "To-day," he said last year in Boston, "we are eight Unitarian preachers in the town on the banks of the majestic Rhine. And now we live in peace with the best of the orthodox party." As a young man, through disbelief in the miraculous, Mr. Altherr for a time lost his hold on the verities of Christian faith, but then coming to Zürich to study, he gained a fresh insight from the liberal preachers of that city. Thus he told of the new conviction that came to him:—

> True Christianity was being thrilled with the spirit of God and of His paternal love, and of Christ, in whom His love was made manifest in the flesh. It was love to God and to man, in the imitation of Jesus, believing as he believed, loving as he loved, suffering as he suffered—glorifying God in our mortal life. That was what I heard preached, and I said to myself: If it is like that, then you can believe again! This is the Christianity you would choose! Such a Christian is what you would wish to become!

He determined then, at the age of twenty, to devote himself to the Christian ministry, and four years later was ordained, subsequently, in 1874, receiving the appointment at Basel which he still holds, being now the senior pastor of St. Leonhardt's. During the early years of his work there a friend advised him to read Channing, and "the inward light of that eminently pious and broad-thinking man, who preached the truth in love, was a real benefit to me, like a sunny autumn day on which the earth in its fruitful attire calls to us, "Taste and see how gracious the Lord is!" "From Channing" [we are still quoting from Mr. Altherr's address at Boston last year] "I came to Theodore Parker."

> He was more like a spring storm and avalanche than a sunny autumn day; but under the influence of storms and sunshine the meadows blossom with grass and flowers, the cornfields wave, and sweet fruits ripen. In the attitude of battle, which we were obliged for many years to maintain, Parker was ever more to me than Channing. All that he went through in great Boston found its parallel in small Basel. He was to me all that a great spirit can be to a lesser one—teacher and guide, father and consoler.

I read the biographies by Albert Réville, the two volumes of John Weiss, then Frothingham, and, only within the latter days, Chadwick. Sometimes it seemed to me quite incredible that the ocean rolled between us, being one heart and soul with him. How could I help writing a book about him?—telling to the growing German world what a prophet this man was, how he spoke, fought, suffered, prayed, how he was overthrown, and how he conquered through defeat, how brave and how tender—a hero and a child!

Mr. Altherr's "Life of Theodore Parker" was published at St. Gallen in 1894, and Mr. Wendte wrote of it last year in the Christian Register with warm appreciation. A more recent book, "Beckenfridli," is to some extent autobiographical, and a little story, "The Fatal Alms," dealing with the problem of modern charity administration, has been dramatised.

Mr. Altherr, as will be gathered from these notes, is an enthusiast for liberty. He went to Boston as representative of the Swiss "Verein für freies Christentum." We only wish that it had been possible for him to be with us in London next week.

OPEN LETTER.

TO THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION IN LONDON.

DEAR FRIENDS,—As my official duties make it impossible for me to attend the anniversary meetings of your Association, I desire at least—having been appointed correspondent—to send a short letter as a sign of my sincere interest. From your programme I gather that, in addition to religious education and temperance, the main subject of your discussions will be the present position of liberal religious life in England and other countries, and it therefore appears appropriate to send you some information on the state of things in Switzerland.

I can only repeat what I had the honour of saying last year to the American Unitarian Association at Boston, namely, that the liberal religious tendency is quietly becoming more familiar to our people, and more firmly established among them. It is worthy of notice that a free scientific study of the Bible, and consequently a non-orthodox proclamation of the Gospel, is spreading more and more in the ranks of those who, twenty or thirty years ago, combated our school of thought. Instead of many examples, I will only point to one book which, in the spirit of true piety, takes the scientific conception of the Bible seriously. I mean "The Beginnings of our Religion" ("Die Anfänge unsrer Religion"), by Paul Wernle, a second edition of which has just appeared. The first edition, as you are aware, has been translated into English (see Christian Register, January 7, 1904).* Those whose concern is for God and the truth, rather than for any personal honour due to themselves, will rejoice that views, on account of which the Liberals were for many years so vehemently attacked, are now more and more forcing themselves upon the orthodox, although Wernle and the ministers who are influenced by him have no idea of coming over to our party. We, on our side, do not ask for that, but are content to see that an inward approximation is taking place. The outward one will come too, in its own time.

As a second gratifying phenomenon I may mention the fact that the orthodox and liberal parties in our churches avail themselves more and more of the opportunity to meet the common enemy together. Under the leadership of the young pastor W. Kambli, the Los von Rom movement in Austria is supported to the best of our ability by united collections; and the two parties also unite in promoting the building of Protestant churches in Catholic districts of Switzerland. For several years in all Reformed Churches a collection has been made on the first Sunday in November ("Reformation Sunday") which on an average produces about 65,000 francs. Thus year by year little churches are built for isolated groups of Protestants.

A third phenomenon is not welcome to everyone, the fact, namely, that social questions are more and more forcing themselves upon the Church. But it was to be foreseen that a return to Jesus and to his Gospel would open men's eyes and show them how different his life was from that of all present-day Christians, and that this life calls men to war against every sin and injustice in a very different manner from the orthodox dogma which allowed Christians to repose on the "Atonement through the precious blood of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ," and allowed the world to remain the world. Now the theologians are beginning, in Switzerland also, to believe that the kingdom of God which Jesus brought is no kingdom above the clouds, but a kingdom of God on earth, in which men do the will of God, and the will of God is love to God in love to our brethren. Here especially the old barrier between Orthodox and Liberals is breaking down, for on both sides there is a growing number of theologians who, in spite of the hostility shown by most Socialists to the Church, recognise in Socialism genuine Christian and evangelic forces. Within the last few weeks two books by two orthodox Swiss pastors have appeared, in which the Church is vehemently accused of Mammonism and of a complete abandonment of and entire defection from the Gospel of Jesus; and the most remarkable thing is that these two writers, with hardly a protest, continue to officiate in our church. This may give you an idea of the far-reaching liberty of personal conviction that is enjoyed in our church, and show you in what direction we are tending. The only danger now arising is that "disciples of Jesus" may degenerate into State-paid political agitators, forgetful of the great central question of the Gospel: "What doth it profit a man to gain the whole world, and forfeit his soul?"

But as my letter is already longer than I intended, I will conclude with the avowal that the great days which I was permitted to spend beyond the ocean last year confirmed me mightily in the conviction that Unitarianism is the religion of the future. Happy are they whose religion, already in the present, is joy and peace. I heartily wish your anniversary meeting all the success that is promised to the upright. And in spirit I lay a wreath on the grave of Miss Cobbe, less because she fought against vivisection than because she edited the works of Theodore Parker and remained his friend, faithful until death.

In fellowship of spirit and thankful love,
Your friend,

Basel, May 2, 1904. A. ALTHERR.

* A review of this book, by the Rev. J. E. Carpenter, appeared in THE INQUIRER of January 2.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

ELEVENTH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

TEN schools entered for the Choral Competition at Essex Hall last Saturday afternoon, and the whole proceedings went off as happily as possible. The sunny spring day added to the pleasure of the gathering, and all the arrangements had been most admirably made. Each of the school choirs was, according to regulation, of at least sixteen and not more than twenty voices, at least two-thirds of the singers being under the age of sixteen. Each choir sang the test piece, Pinsuti's "I sing because I love to sing," and another piece of their own selection. The following is the list of the competing choirs, with their conductors and their own selected pieces, arranged in the order in which they sang:—

1. George's Row, conductor, Miss Amy Withall, "The Lark," Thos. Hutchinson.
2. Islington (Unity Church), conductor, Miss Harris, "No seas again shall sever," H. Smart.
3. Stratford, conductor, Mr. H. D. Welford, "A Lullaby Song," H. D. Welford.
4. Newington Green, conductor, Miss Maud E. Turner, "Pluck ye Roses," Schumann.
5. Essex Church, conductor, Mrs. R. Oakeshott, "The Maybells and the Flowers," Mendelssohn.
6. Brixton (Effra-road), conductor, Mr. P. Harrison, "Sabbath Morn," Mendelssohn.
7. Highgate Hill, conductor, Miss Amy Withall, "The Angel," Rubinstein.
8. Stamford-street and Blackfriars Mission, conductor, Mr. W. H. Ballautyne, "Fairy's Lullaby," Florence A. Marshall.
9. Limehouse, conductor, Rev. J. Toye, "Sleep, Pretty Songster," Roland Rogers.
10. Stepney, conductor, Miss Harris, "Boatman's Song," Franz Abt.

After the competition, tea was provided for the choirs in the council-room, and for other friends in the library and committee-room, &c. The flower-decked tables and long rows of happy faces were very pleasant to see. In the evening a concert was given, in which the united choirs took part. Mr. John Harrison, who as President of the London District Sunday School Society, presided over the whole proceedings, acted also as conductor of the concert, and played the organ for the hymns. At the beginning of the evening concert, after the singing of the opening hymn, "The Wise may bring their learning," he called upon Mr. L. C. Venables to make his award in the competition.

Mr. VENABLES began by congratulating the choirs on the general improvement in the quality and style of their singing as a whole, which he noted after some years' interval. He also spoke warmly of the good organisation of the meeting. Referring to the choirs by their numbers in the programme, he said that 3, 4, 8, and 10 lost marks in some respects for quality of voice and imperfect blending of the voices in the separate parts, and for faults of intonation. Only one went flat in the test piece (which was sung without accompaniment), the others sharpened, which no doubt was due to the excitement of the occasion. Thus they took a lower place than the evidence of skill in their training would otherwise have given. 1, 2, and 7 did better in those respects and mostly sang with more expression; 9 he specially commended for the rendering of their own piece; 6 was not exceptionally good in quality of tone, but showed very good training. The best quality of voice was shown by 5, and as to their training he was going to use a strong word—it was perfect. His award, therefore, gave the first place to 5 (Essex Church), and the second to 6 (Brixton), while 9 (Limehouse) was highly commended. The award was received with loud applause, and the President subsequently handed certificates to the two conductors, with words of cordial congratulation. At the conclusion of the concert, the banner, which was won by Highgate last year, was handed to Essex Church, in the person of the two smallest members of their choir. Last year Essex Church won the second place, but now for the first time holds the banner.

The programme of the concert included three part songs by the united choirs, violin, 'cello, and oboe solos by Messrs. Ammon-Hering, Hugo Hunerfurst, and Howard Farrow respectively, and songs by Mr. and Mrs. Hudson, which were enthusiastically applauded. The whole concert was eminently successful and greatly enjoyed. As in the opening so in the closing hymn, 'Softly the silent night," the audience joined, and with the presentation of the banner the meeting was brought to a close.

SHORT NOTICES.

The Sunday School Association Hymn and Tune Book is now issued in a revised fourth edition. It was formerly known as the "Essex Hall Tune Book," which led to confusion with the "Essex Hall Hymnal," with which it had nothing to do. It is the tune-book for the Sunday-school Hymn-Book, and as such is already widely known and popular. In this new edition tunes are added, so that it now serves for the other children's book—"Hymns for Heart and Voice," edited by Mrs. Farrington. It is now simply a hymn and tune book, and a most admirable one, the special services in a former edition being omitted to make room for the new tunes. With this book and the "Hymns and Choral Songs" of the Manchester District Sunday School Association, our children and our schools are well supplied indeed. (Sunday School Association, Essex Hall. 2s. 6d. net.)

Poems for Recitation at Bands of Hope and Children's Evenings is a capital selection of pieces for recitation, both grave and gay, in six graded parts, for children of various ages. They have been issued in separate penny parts, and in this complete form should find a very warm welcome in school and home. (Sunday School Association, Essex Hall, 6d. net.)

Home Pages: Twelve Talks on Practical Religion.—We called attention some time ago to this new issue of "Home Pages," edited by Miss Helen Brooke Herford, reviving memories of the extremely popular tracts issued long ago for some years by her father. Twelve numbers in the new series have been issued, and they are now to be had together in a tastefully-bound little volume, but we trust that they will also continue to be widely used in their separate form for home reading. They are specially to be commended to provident society visitors and other workers in poor districts who may be glad to have something good and helpful to hand to thoughtful readers. The first part of Mr. Gannett's "Blessed be Drudgery" forms one of these numbers, and there is a "Chat with Boys: Yes or No," by J. J. Wright. The last two, "Where is Thy God?" and "Nicodemus," as well as three others which we mentioned in a former notice, are by Dr. Brooke Herford. If friends wish for more of these "Home Pages" they must see to it that there is an adequate demand for these twelve. (Philip Green, 5, Essex-street, Strand, W.C. 1s. net.)

Les Evangiles d'après la Critique Moderne. Deux Conférences par J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A. Traduites de l'anglais par James Hocart. These are the two lectures, on on "The First Three Gospels," and "The Fourth Gospel" recently given in French by Mr. Carpenter at Brussels. A strong desire for their publication was expressed at the time, and M. Hocart has now edited them, with a brief biographical note as to the author. It will be of great interest for English readers also to see with what skill and power of expression Mr. Carpenter was able to expound to a foreign audience the results of modern scholarship in the study of the Gospels, which he has done so much to make known in this country. (Paris: Librairie Fischbacher, 33, Rue de Seine. To be had also at Essex Hall. 1s. net.)

The Literary Year-Book and Bookman's Directory, 1904, edited by Henry Gilbert. This Year-book, now issued for the eighth time, has an assured place of usefulness as an admirable and handy companion for all who are practically engaged in literary work. It will be found of much interest also for people of literary sympathies, with its directory of authors, artists, publishers, &c., list of periodical publications, information as to copyright, royalties, &c.; its "Survey of Bookland," and the introductory chapter on English Literature in 1903. In the section on biography Morley's "Gladstone" of course holds the first place; in Economics Mr. Charles Booth's concluding volumes of "Life and Labour in London"; in Fiction Mrs. Humphry Ward's "Lady Rose's Daughter." The obituary section contains notices of Miss Constance Bache, "Edna Lyall," Farrar, Lecky, Mommsen, Spencer, and a number of other distinguished and less known writers. (George Allen, 156, Charing Cross-road. 5s. net.)

The Lecture Agency Date Book will be of use to workers who have to look far ahead in making their engagements. It has a line for every day from July, 1904, to June, 1906, and a table to show the dates of Easter and other festivals up to 1910. (The Lecture Agency, Outer Temple, Strand. 1s.; by post 1s. 1d.)

A complete popular edition in one volume of Professor Villari's standard work on the Life and Times of Savonarola, with all the illustrations of the two-volume library edition of 1888, is marked "fourteenth thousand," a welcome sign of the wide distribution in its English translation of a work full of stimulus for the religious reformer, and of profoundest interest for the student of history. The volume stands well side by side with the one-volume popular edition of George Eliot's "Romola." (Fisher Unwin. 2s. 6d. net.)

OBITUARY.

JOHN PENNINGTON THOMASSON.

BY the death of Mr. J. P. Thomasson, which occurred at his residence, Woodside, Bolton, on Monday afternoon last, after a sharp attack of pleurisy and pneumonia, one of the finest and most remarkable of men has been removed, to the great loss, not only of his family and friends, nor even of the community of Bolton, but of the kingdom and the civilised world.

Born on the 9th May, 1841, Mr. Thomasson had just passed his 63rd year. His father, Mr. Thomas Thomasson, the close friend of John Bright, was an advocate of the People's Charter and a supporter of every good cause which aimed at the elevation of the people's life. Like father like son, Mr. J. P. Thomasson soon showed that his sympathies ran in the same channels. Inheriting considerable wealth, and carrying on his father's business as a cotton spinner, he became the ideal employer of labour, was beloved by all who worked for him, and was speedily recognised as the friend of the poor. Sturdy in his own independence, he encouraged the same spirit in others, helping them to help themselves, but desiring them above all to feel their own responsibility and be their own saviours. Generous to a degree which few attain, he was most careful and painstaking in the selection of the objects of his help, and when he gave, he preferred to give liberally and adequately, and follow up his gifts with personal attention to ensure the best results.

As a philanthropist, it is impossible to follow the ramifications of his service and support. Education always commanded his strong sympathies. When the Bolton School Board with a clerical majority declined to erect a public unsectarian school in a crowded district, Mr. Thomasson built one himself at a cost of £10,000 and handed it over as a gift to the Board, subsequently making considerable additions to it at his own expense. Since 1876 he has maintained a series of scholarships and exhibitions, enabling the children from the Elementary Schools of the town to pass on to higher grades of education; and several of the Thomasson scholars have distinguished themselves at the Universities and in professional and public life. It has been estimated that his gifts to education alone were represented by a sum of £30,000. A museum and recreation ground, a picture gallery, a co-operative reading-room, a gymnasium—these, in addition, are some of his many gifts to the borough.

An advanced Liberal in politics, he was returned as member for the borough at the 1880 election, but lost his seat in 1885. At the time of the Home Rule split Mr. Thomasson joined the Unionist ranks, but his views on all questions but Home Rule were too divergent from those prevailing in Unionism to permit of his remaining in that party. With but a short interval, therefore, he was a strong and staunch supporter of the Liberal cause. A friend of all oppressed nationalities and a foe to tyranny, his voice was ever raised on behalf of personal freedom and national liberty. He was ever a lover and advocate of peace. The South African war particularly and the causes leading thereto met with his abhorrence, as did also the unjust treatment of native races in many parts of the world, both within and without the Empire, and the recent decision to introduce a system of something like slavery by the importation of Chinese labour. Strong in allegiance to the great principle of Free Trade, he looked with surprise and alarm on the recrudescence of Protection in these latter days.

Mr. Thomasson was the type of the ideal citizen, for everything that concerned the welfare of the community enlisted his interest. He was instrumental in forming the Bolton Citizens' Committee on Licensing Administration (now the Citizens' Association), for which from the outset he has acted as treasurer. In the licensing question he took the deepest interest, and his efforts to quicken the public conscience as to its responsibilities in this matter were unflagging. The present attempt to remove the discretionary authority from the local justices met with his strong disapproval, his desire being rather to increase than to diminish their powers. The freedom of the borough was conferred upon him in 1902 in recognition of his public services. This act, as he said, gave him more pleasure than would have done the conferring of a knighthood, a baronetcy, or a peerage.

To Bank Street Chapel, Bolton, of which he was a member, and to its Mission at Halliwell Road, Mr. Thomasson has been a good friend. One of his latest actions was to purchase the set of buildings adjacent to the mission premises, and hand them over in trust as a free gift for the extension of the educational work carried on there. He was an occasional teacher of the men's class, both at Bank Street and Halliwell Road. The Unitarian denomination generally has participated largely in his generous gifts, especially in recent years. The newly-established minister's pension fund received £1,000, and his very last promised gift, made on what proved to be his death-bed, was one of £500 to the Jubilee scheme of the Unitarian Home Missionary College.

Mr. Thomasson married, in 1867, a niece of John Bright, the daughter of the late Mr. Samuel Lucas. Mrs. Thomasson, with one son, Mr. Franklin Thomasson, J.P., Liberal candidate for the Accrington division of Lancashire, and one daughter, Mrs. Arthur Coe, who married the son of the Rev. C. C. Coe, survive Mr. Thomasson, and we trust will long be spared to cherish his memory, and see the good fruits of his faithful labours.

SADHARAN BRAHMO SAMAJ.—At a meeting of the executive committee held at Calcutta, after the receipt of the news of Miss Cobbe's death, the following resolution was unanimously passed:—

Resolved, that the executive committee of the Sadharan Brahmo Samaj learn with deepest regret the news of the death of Miss Frances Power Cobbe, who, by her life and writings, rendered great service to the cause of Theism and humanity, and was in close sympathy with the Brahmo movement.

Resolved also, that a public meeting be organised in commemoration of her death after the summer vacation.

MRS. ELAM.

SEVEN AND A HALF years ago we recorded the death of Mr. William Elam, of Liscard, and formerly of Liverpool, a man of "an undemonstrative but ardent piety, a whole-hearted loyalty, a truly modest and genuine liberality." Three years later, the anniversary of his death, September 30, 1899, saw the opening of the beautiful new church in Manor Road, built and given to the Liscard congregation by Mrs. Elam, in memory of her husband. They had been from the first zealous and most loyal members of the congregation. The new church, it was said at the opening, was a gift "given in all simplicity, from a heart filled with earnest religious feeling and grateful memories, a worthy memorial of a good man." It is now also the memorial of his wife.

Mrs. Elam passed away on Thursday morning, May 12, at her residence, Sunny Bank, Liscard, being in her eighty-third year. Her interest in the church and constant helpfulness had filled a great part of her widowed years. In the continued well-being and progress of the congregation she found one of the chief sources of her happiness.

The funeral service last Saturday was conducted by the Rev. A. E. Parry, minister of the church, who, on Sunday morning, also conducted a memorial service. In the course of his address, he said:—

"I almost wish it had been granted me to take merely a passive part in these sad offices of memory, but the difficulty of speaking to you is somewhat diminished when I remember that only absolute simplicity will meet your sense of what is fitting, aware as you are how severely plain and simple my words would be could she have the ordering of them.

"The name of Martha Elam, as well as that of her loved husband, will be imperishably associated with this beautiful building, an enduring monument to the enthusiasm and affection they both entertained for the cause we all love. But even more than for this church and her other generous gifts do we owe her our gratitude for an example of sane and cheery optimism, which made light of all difficulties, would brook no murmurings of despondency, and often shamed the doubts and fears of those much younger. She was, I think, one of the happiest of women, so pleasant that it was delightful to be brought into association with her in any personal way. Yet her cheerfulness was not more marked than her sturdy strength of character. Within the past few weeks she has spoken to me of death more than once with humble, quiet serenity, and in the spirit of peaceful resignation. She loved those lines of Whittier's:—

> "I know not where His islands
> Lift their fronded palms in air;
> I only know I cannot drift
> Beyond His love and care.

"And once I quoted the beautiful concluding lines of Bryant's 'Thanatopsis,' and she said she would like to keep the thought of them in her mind.

"But, having fought the good fight she has now entered into her rest. Let us be thankful that end was peaceful. She will be often in our thoughts. And in the things about us here we see the visible tokens of her love for us and for the cause this church represents. Let us also try to catch the inspiration of her unmeasured enthusiasm, and, with the memory of her example, mark the future years with greater earnestness and deeper consecration."

At the evening service a memorial resolution, proposed by the minister and passed in reverent silence by the large congregation, recorded their deep sense of the loss sustained in Mrs. Elam's death, and profound sympathy with the members of her family.

Mrs. Elam was twice married, and children and grandchildren of her first marriage sustained her closing years. It was her own express desire that the utmost simplicity should mark all that was said and done after her death. Her memory, with that of her husband, will be held in honour by the congregation of the Memorial Church, and by a yet wider circle of friends.

THE LAYMEN'S CLUB.—The first annual meeting of this club, the object of which is "to promote social intercourse among men connected with the Unitarian and Free Christian Churches of London, and to further the interests of liberal religious thought," was held on Friday evening, May 13, after the club dinner, at the Inns of Court Hotel. There were forty members present, Dr. C. Herbert Smith, the President, being in the chair. The report was read by Mr. W. Fitchett Wurtzburg, hon. sec., and Mr. Harold Wade presented the treasurer's accounts, both of which were adopted. The report referred to the inauguration of the club, through the initiative of the Rev. J. H. Wicksteed, at a dinner given on the invitation of Sir Edwin Durning-Lawrence. At the outset 59 members joined, and the number had since risen to 98, the rules limiting the membership to 100, ten of whom may be ministers. In the autumn of 1903, the club entertained a number of leading Unitarians as guests, and after dinner had the privilege of hearing an eloquent address on church organisation by the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter. Other events of the year were an adjourned debate on Mr. Carpenter's address, a smoking concert, and an "at home," given at Essex Hall to the Unitarian Sunday School teachers and helpers of London, at which some 300 members and guests were present. Coming events mentioned were the Whit-week dance at the Portman Rooms, on May 27, and a concert in aid of the Southend Home and the Children's Country Holiday Fund, at Essex Hall, on June 15. Mention was also made of the "Laymen's Book," to be kept for the use of ministers and others, at Essex Hall, with a record of what members of the club were prepared to do in the way of help at meetings and entertainments, &c. Dr. Herbert Smith was re-elected president, Mr. H. B. Lawford vice-president, Mr. Harold Wade treasurer, and Mr. W. Fitchett Wurtzburg, 3, Lawn Road, Hampstead, N.W., hon. secretary.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

ARTHUR IN "KING JOHN."

SHAKESPEARE was called "gentle" by more than one other poet in his own time, and gentle are the people in his plays whom he makes us love most.

One of the gentlest of these is the boy Arthur in the play of "King John."

You may have read in English history of this young prince, who was King John's nephew. He was born and brought up in Brittany, of which he was duke, and he was not known in England. John, who was well known, had been chosen King of England, according to the law and custom of the land. But the King of France claimed both Normandy and England for the boy Arthur, so there was war between the two Kings, about the rights of young Arthur of Brittany. It is difficult to know now whether either party was in the right in this war. Perhaps Arthur had a right to claim Normandy and John a right to keep England. If so, the one side claimed too much and the other tried to keep too much. But however uncertain we may be as to the rights of the case, Shakespeare, in his play, makes three things clear:—

1. That John cared nothing about right or wrong, but meant to keep what he had got.

2. That Arthur's friends claimed his rights, not, as they said, for his sake, but for their own advantage.

3. That Arthur himself was not eager to claim his rights.

The play begins in England, with the French King's claim on Arthur's behalf to all John's possessions. The English King refuses the demand, and war is declared. The next scene is in France, outside the walls of a town claimed by both kings. Arthur welcomes the French King, the Dauphin, and others who have come to fight for him, and they give him promises of help. The arrival of the English King and his party leads to renewed promises to Arthur, and to threats and abuse between the French and English parties. After a double making and breaking of promises there is at last actual fighting, and Arthur is taken prisoner by King John.

Arthur himself takes but little part in all this. When his relations and supporters are abusing each other and quarrelling he begs in a few words for peace.

When first he hears that his supporters have forsaken his cause for their own advantage, he only says to his mother,

> I do beseech you, madam, be content.

When he is taken prisoner his first thought is for his mother:—

> O, this will make my mother die of grief.

For himself Arthur has no word of fear or complaint.

He is sent off to England in charge of Hubert, who has secret instructions from King John to get him out of the way, if need be, by death.

The latter part of the play is in England again, and we see Arthur at Northampton Castle with Hubert. Hubert has promised the King to take Arthur's life, but the little prisoner's bright, loving ways have quite won the keeper's heart, and how is the promise to be fulfilled?

Arthur greets Hubert with a cheery "Good morrow," and then notices that his friend is "sad." He thinks that no one who is free should have cause for sadness.

> So I were out of prison and kept sheep,
> I should be merry as the day is long;
> And so I would be here, but that I doubt
> My uncle practises more harm to me.
> He is afraid of me, and I of him.

One day when Hubert had but a headache, Arthur had waited on him, had wound a handkerchief about his brows, and had not asked for it again, though it was the best he had, worked by a princess. And now that Hubert looks sad and pale, Arthur fears he has a headache again, and even wishes it were so, that he might tend him and help to make him better. Arthur would be so happy to do some service for him, and would even give him a son's affection if Hubert would but love him too.

It is no wonder that Hubert finds it difficult to tell the boy why he is sad. At first Hubert means to keep his promise to the King, and at last shows Arthur his written instructions. But he cannot resist the boy's pleadings. He could not really have carried out such instructions. It was a bad promise, and to keep it would be worse than to break it.

Arthur saves Hubert from such a crime, but he cannot altogether save his own life. History does not tell us how Arthur died, though it was said that it was his uncle's doing. Shakespeare makes Arthur lose his life in trying to escape.

As a prisoner Shakespeare's Arthur had longed to be free and tend sheep, and now he seeks freedom in the disguise of a sheep-boy (surely sheep, not ship, as the books print it). He jumps from the walls, but the stones below are as hard as his uncle's heart, and crush out his young life.

It is sad to think of Arthur's life cut short by death. But it is sadder still to think of the selfishness and cruelty of the King who wished for Arthur's death. The saddest part of the story is that the kings of France and England are so unlike Arthur.

He wants affection and a quiet life. They want land and power. He wants peace for their sake as well as his own. They seek their own interests, and will go to war for their own gain. He trusts and loves others, and is glad to serve. They suspect others, and injure them by secret means or open violence.

Arthur's ways are those of gentleness and love, and he makes us feel that his ways are the best. He has no wish to be king, no wish that other people should quarrel or fight to make him king. He would be content with very little, and is happiest when he can give service and affection. He is a gentle boy, and makes us love gentleness, and wish to be gentle too.

This is the last of these columns about Shakespeare. I hope that when you are older, and read his plays for yourselves, you will feel that Miranda, Lucius, Robin, Arthur, and some of the other story-children are like old friends. Perhaps then you will find out for yourselves, in the different plays, how Shakespeare loved gentleness.

LILIAN HALL.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C.

LONDON, MAY 21, 1904.

RELIGION AND LIBERTY.

UNDER this title the proceedings of the second meeting of the International Council of Unitarian and other Liberal Religious Thinkers and Workers, held last year at Amsterdam, have recently been published;* and at this season, when the Christian Church celebrates the coming of the Spirit, for the enlightenment and quickening to new life of all the nations of the earth, there is peculiar appropriateness in turning to this volume, which so happily bears witness to a unity of spirit underlying many forms of thought and nationality in those who have the faith of freedom, and are ever seekers of the truth and light divine.

We are indebted to the Netherlands Committee and specially to the Rev. P. H. HUGENHOLTZ for the editing and publication of this volume, which is not only a most welcome permanent record of the delightful meetings at Amsterdam, but also a valuable landmark in the progress of religious thought. The Rev. C. W. WENDTE in a brief introduction to the record of the proceedings, having told of the inception of the Council at Boston in May, 1900, and of the first meeting in London, in 1901, says of the Amsterdam meeting:—"As most of those in attendance, especially from the nations of Continental Europe, were masters of several languages, the Congress, instead of proving a Babel of tongues, as some had feared, turned out to be a Twentieth Century Pentecost, inspired with a common understanding and purpose." And he adds:—

"In conclusion it should be said that the success attending these international gatherings of religious liberals justifies and confirms the faith of those who called them into being. They prove conclusively that the formation of this Council was timely and needed, and that we have inaugurated a movement of far-reaching importance to the cause of liberal religion and international amity. Our experience proves also that nativity and language form no insurmountable barrier to an international union of hearts and hands for the religious emancipation of mankind. We are convinced that all who unite with us will feel themselves encouraged and strengthened in their individual endeavours, and will grow in influence through the consciousness of larger and fraternal relations with the great liberal movements of the twentieth century.

In this volume we find the several languages, English, Dutch, German, and French, English serving also for the representatives of Hungary, India, and Japan, German for Sweden and Switzerland; while of the Dutch Sermon, the President's Address, and two of the papers an English translation is given in the Appendix, and a German translation of one of those papers and another. This last is the paper on "The Evangelical Awakening in the Netherlands in the Second Quarter of the Nineteenth Century, and American Unitarianism," by Professor GOOSZEN, of Leiden, which was not read at Amsterdam for lack of time. The volume also contains Professor LINDBERG'S account of "Religious Conditions in Sweden," and the Rev. G. SCHÖNHOLZER'S paper on "The Development of Liberal Christianity in German Switzerland," which similarly were not read; and a letter from Mr. P. C. MOZOOMDAR on "The Message of Liberal Thought." American and British Unitarianism, French and Belgian Liberal Protestantism, the scholarship of Germany, various phases of liberal religious thought and life in Holland, as well as in Switzerland, Sweden, Hungary, India, and Japan, are all here represented, and the study of the volume will be found of the greatest interest. Several of the principal papers were published in THE INQUIRER last autumn, but here the whole is gathered together, and we may be confident that the volume will do not a little to fulfil the aspirations of its editor, and "promote the cause of religious freedom and fellowship."

As an earnest of what will be found in it, and as witness to the fundamental unity of spirit in these various upholders of the Liberal Faith, we will quote here a few passages from the papers. And first some very suggestive passages from the paper on "Religion and Personality" by Professor CANNEGIETER, of Utrecht:—

"The Protestant optimism of faith rediscovered the nobility of human nature.

. . . . .

"Religion is the self-conscious life of human personality in full bloom.

. . . . .

"Man cannot be completely and finally robbed of himself. 'Coming to himself,' he finds himself again, and in his deepest soul the experience of God's life and work in him awakes. Then does his personality grow and flourish. This exultation in the higher work of religion runs through the whole history of the religious consciousness. This glorious optimism of faith is the kernel and the great power of Christendom, of Protestantism, and therefore also of true free thought.

. . . . .

"The religion which streams through Christendom is itself the outcome of a human personality. It, above all others (since it first truly reveals the nature and the worth of religion), is the revelation of life, the natura humana in its essential divinity. Human personality, apprehending its humanity in its divinity, is the mystery of Christendom, of the true human heart itself, of religion. The life-content of personality is 'the Gospel.'

. . . . .

"All religious truth must have been lived in the life within, must be the evolution of personality. What does not spring up out of personality is neither religion nor truth. It is only life of the soul, tuned in harmony with it, that can understand what life of the soul in its deepest essence really is.

. . . . .

"The outer world is only to be understood by the light of the inner world. The inner world alone is the word of GOD, unwritten and unwriteable, the word of GOD and therefore the word of the human heart. This life-content of a human personality is that holy spirit which has already come and has broken its way through history.

. . . . .

"It is not the words of JESUS that have abiding significance, it is not his deeds that constitute Christendom. His personality alone, his experience of faith, his inner possession of life is the Gospel. That Gospel shall give rise to other words, shall create other deeds, than those that are set down as his in the ancient Scripture. It shall lay down fresh lines right on through history, shall lead mankind along fresh paths of thought, experience, and action. And there shall always be fresh gospels to write concerning the one divinely rich Gospel. And, in truth, history brings them to us in every period of great spiritual activity, though under ever-changing titles. But the one true Gospel abides."

From a different standpoint is Professor PFLEIDERER'S paper on the "Primitive Christian Conception of Christ in the Light of the History of Religion." His radical criticism sweeps away a great deal of what has been regarded as historical in the Gospel records, and then concludes:—

"Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, he is risen! But go ye to your brethren, there shall ye see him. It is the living CHRIST-spirit that we shall see, that divine principle ever dwelling in humanity, wherever the spirit of man is open to the recognition of all truth, wherever hearts are aglow for all that is good, and love makes the daily sacrifice of self for the well-being of the whole, wherever there is striving and

* "Religion and Liberty." Addresses and Papers at the Second International Council of Unitarian and other Liberal Religious Thinkers and Workers, held in Amsterdam, September, 1903. Edited by P. H. Hugenholtz, jr. Leiden: Late E. J. Brill, Publishers and Printers. London: British and Foreign Unitarian Association, Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand. 2s. net.

suffering for righteousness and justice in society, and faith in the continual coming of the Kingdom of GOD in our midst, and in this faith the world is overcome."

In a similar spirit Professor CARPENTER concludes his paper on "The Place of Christianity among the Religions of the World," which is to be found not only in this volume but in a somewhat enlarged form in a little book with the title of this paper, just published by the British and Foreign Unitarian Association :—

"The movement which has carried Christianity round the globe, which has brought philosophy, art, poetry, culture of every kind, into some sort of connection with it, if not into formal alliance, will gather strength as the ideas of JESUS are more clearly understood. But similar movements will by degrees affect the other higher religions. They will in their turn be touched with the modern spirit; and what cannot bear the new quickening will droop and die. When the great doctrine of the Fatherhood of GOD is applied to the nations, it immediately suggests the presence of a purpose in the long sequences of history, working out that high end to which we give the name of the education of the race. To this mighty process we must conceive the religions of the world as all in turn contributing with varied potencies. Foremost among them, at least in this stage of our development, is the Christianity we love. It summons us to be fellow-workers with GOD. In this high partnership let us go forwards. The realm of ideas is for ever open to us. There we, too, can take our part in the spiritual making of the world; there we may humbly share in the Creator's gladness, and in 'the joy of the LORD' find our weakness transfigured into strength."

To these utterances of Christian scholars we may add a voice from the Far East, from the letter sent to the Council by Mr. MOZOOMDAR, of the Brahmo Samaj of India :—

"When freedom of thought and the reasonableness of man's religious sentiment has asserted itself against the wrong and falsehood current, it has done its work; there is very much more that is left unaccomplished, and that will have to be completed by some other force. That is the work of the Spirit of the Living GOD. Distinguishable from the understanding, from the exercise of lofty thought and pious sentiment, the Spirit comes as it lists, and no man can tell its whence or whither. Neither upward meditation, nor inward emotion, nor even the scrupulous activity of the faithful conscience, all of which help so much the unfolding of the spiritual consciousness, is just the same thing as the apostolic descent of the Spirit. He is what He is, different from all else, the container of the devoutest contents in the soul, but unique, incomparable, ineffable, the object of faith, and soul-perception. This self-revealed Spirit of GOD imparts to His worshipper the sum of all revelations. Do we possess the consciousness of that marvellous self-revelation? If we do, then we possess the secrets of all religions, and nothing can withstand our utterances. If we do not, we must revise our course and modify our culture; or our influence will not spread.

. . . . . .

"It is faith that kindles faith; it is enthusiasm that begets enthusiasm; it is the prophetic spirit that visualises and interprets the things of GOD.

. . . . . .

"To me, brethren, the message of liberal thought is the message of inward soul-religion, which emancipates and spiritualises all things it touches. Spiritualised science, spiritualised civilisation, spiritualised worship and doctrine, spiritualised relations between man and man, between race and race, is the ideal I look up to. However long it may take to give it an objective reality, the subjective conception is like a revelation of GOD. Its historical vitality has been again and again proved by succeeding dispensations of religion in various lands and ages. We gather the spirit of them all in our search for GOD and His august purposes. But we appeal to His Spirit to teach and guide, inspire and comfort us in our perplexities, to take us by the hand, that we, too, like others who have gone before, may serve and be of use in the establishment of His Kingdom."

"DOTH GOD CARE FOR OXEN?"

1 COR. ix. 9.

SIR,—Two or three letters which I have received seem to ask for clearer explanation of the Apostle's argument. Let it be remembered, then, that in à fortiori argument the weaker case, far from being denied, is conceded, and used as support for the stronger case which is to follow. In the Apostle's mind there are really two questions: Doth God care fo oxen?—Yes. Is it for oxen only that He cares?—No. Then comes the conclusion: "We ministers have our threshing work to do; give us like freedom; by all means (πάντως) on our account (δι' ἡμᾶς) was the prohibition given, 'Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn.'" The original intention of the passage is treated as nothing in comparison with the new allegorical interpretation.

May 17, 1904. E. P. BARROW.

THE Peace Society held its 88th annual meeting on Tuesday. In the evening the body of the City Temple was nearly full, the balconies nearly empty. The Rev. Canon Benham, D.D., who presided, was able to announce the Archbishop of Canterbury's sympathy; the French and American Ambassadors apologised for being unable to attend. Dr. Spence Watson has succeeded Mr. Joseph Pease as President, the latter having held office for twenty-one years. The resolutions welcomed the recent agreement between this country and France; expressed profound sorrow that a sanguinary war was being waged between two great nations in the Far East, both of them signatories to an Agreement which binds them to pacific settlement of differences; and further deprecated the proceedings in Thibet.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

THE following is the reply of the Committee of the Home Missionary College to the Memorial which we published last week :—

DEAR SIR,—Your letter of the 9th inst., and the enclosed Memorial, were brought before the Committee of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, at a special meeting held on the 18th inst.

The Committee have carefully considered the Memorial, and desire us to call the attention of the memorialists to the following considerations :—

The Memorial is so framed as to place the Committee of the Unitarian Home Missionary College in a difficult position, since it appears to assume the desirability of an amalgamation of this Institution with Manchester College, Oxford, as a foregone conclusion. The Committee of the Unitarian Home Missionary College are unable to concur in this view. They feel that this institution, with the foundation of which honoured names are associated, has, by its work during the past fifty years, amply justified its existence and the suitability of its environment; and they have already been encouraged by signs of sympathy and appreciation, even from those who do not help to carry on its work.

It was in response to the attachment and enthusiasm of the past and present students of the College, expressed in another memorial, a print of which is enclosed, that steps were taken to purchase residential buildings. The Committee are at a loss to understand why this action, which affects neither the aims of our College nor its position with regard to any other institution, should have given rise to a memorial which assumes that its continued existence is unnecessary, and therefore by waste of resources detrimental to the interests of the churches which it serves. The Committee feel that they cannot, and ought not to be asked, at this juncture, to entertain proposals for a conference on the basis of amalgamation. At the same time, the Committee desire us to say that they will at all times be ready to give a sympathetic consideration to any suggestions which may be made as to special methods of co-operation between this institution and Manchester College, Oxford.

In conclusion, the Committee think it only just to themselves to say that before your Memorial came before them, decisive action was taken to give effect to the Students' Memorial, in the belief (which they hold) that they were acting in the best interests of their institution, and of the churches it has served for the past fifty years.—We are, yours faithfully,

JESSE PILCHER (Chairman).
EDWARD TALBOT, E. L. H. THOMAS } Hon. Secs.
Charles W. Jones, Esq., Liverpool.

IN deliberations and debates of great importance the simple manner of speaking to the point is the proper, easy, clear, and compendious way. Facetious speech there serves only to obstruct and entangle business, to lose time, and protract the result.

Isaac Barrow.

THE BASIS OF RELIGION.

SIR,—It is evident from Mr. Wicksteed's letter in your last issue that I have not succeeded in making quite clear to my friend all that I meant when I said that God, to be known at all adequately, must be known immediately. As I am convinced that the idea which these words are intended to convey is of supreme importance in the philosophy of religion, I will attempt a further elucidation of this statement. The point on which I insist, and which constitutes the pivot on which all my theological conceptions turn, is that the self-revelations of the immanent God which are made to us in our ideas of infinity and eternity, and in our ideals of beauty, truth, and love, though they are directly felt to be in us, are also just as directly felt to be not of us, are felt, indeed, to be self-existent or eternal; and hence when they manifest themselves in our consciousness, they bring with them an inherent right to our reverence and our allegiance. If the artist's, or poet's, ideal of beauty, the saint's consciousness of communion with divine love, or the voice of conscience which forbids us to gratify a sensual or selfish craving: if these, and such as these, were merely felt to be in our individual minds, and were not also believed to be in the minds of all men and to have their root in God's eternity, they could not carry with them their absolute authority, their infinite power to support and satisfy the soul. This is what I meant when I said that all finite and created things are known mediately and inferentially, but God alone is known immediately and intuitively. And I may add that it is only through the divine light which we derive from these rational intuitions or self-revelations of God, that we are enabled to draw inferences about the nature of external things and persons, and also to criticise and correct these inferences till we bring them into nearer accord with the reality.

Hence I heartily agree with Mr. Wicksteed that "no human personality" [and indeed no finite existence at all] "is realised in its highest reality until it has been seen as existing in, and reaching me through, that mysterious Presence in which alone 'being' can 'be.'" Were the Eternal God not immanent in, and self-revealing to, our reason, our conscience and heart, neither human personality nor human rationality could possibly exist. I am not sure that Mr. Wicksteed really dissents from my contention that in our immediate rational, ethical, and spiritual intuitions we have imperfect, but yet most real and inspiring, glimpses of the essential nature of the self-existent God. As Emerson puts it, "We lie open on one side to the deeps of spiritual nature, to the attributes of God. Justice we see and know, Love, Freedom, Power. These natures no man ever got above, but they tower over us, and most in the moments when our interests tempt us to wound them."

If I mistake not, Mr. Wicksteed, in his laudable desire to do full justice to man considered as a product of evolution, "an organic entity," has somewhat overlooked the "other side" of our being; and it is just to this other side that both philosophy and religion must have recourse for a satisfactory answer to their ultimate questions.

It is possible, however, that Mr. Wicksteed or some other of your readers may say that, even if it be allowed that in our intuitions and ideals we have some insight into God's essential nature, this does not prove that the "mysterious presence" who illumines our inner life is a self-conscious Presence with whom the individual soul can enjoy a measure of personal communion. To this I should reply, firstly, that it seems to me inconceivable that the highest prerogative in dependent minds should be lacking in that Being who is the eternal Source as well as the eternal Place, of all finite souls; and, secondly, that in actual experience, whenever conscience puts to shame our personal unworthiness, whenever new revelations of beauty and truth inspire and uplift us, and more especially in those choicer hours when fresh faith and consolation dawn in response to true prayer and self-surrender, we instinctively and inevitably address nature or God as a personal Presence, and feel that though all conceptions of personality such as we can form are necessarily inadequate to comprehend the transcendent reality, it is nevertheless true this transcendency or supra-personality of God does not exclude, but rather includes and transfigures, those sympathetic personal relations which make intercourse between individual souls so exquisitely sweet and precious.

Mr. Wicksteed does not agree with me in my view that the elimination of self-consciousness from the idea of God would involve the elimination also of much that is highest and most inspiring in poetry. I am quite unable to follow my friend when he says that Wordsworth and others "have awakened undying inspiration without any certain word of self-consciousness in the Absolute." Wordsworth's language appears to me to clearly show that, however little he may distinctly refer to this self-consciousness as an attribute of God's being, the implicit recognition of it was never wholly absent from his higher thinking. It is easy to understand why poets prefer to treat of the inner life of God by implication rather than by direct description; for any attempt to describe this inner life in terms of human psychology would necessarily be so inadequate and incorrect, that they would awaken repugnance in all cultured readers.

But that the poet's idea of God includes all the essential features of personality without the limitations and conditions with which these features are necessarily associated in the case of finite minds, is evident, I think, from the constant use which poets make of the word "spirit;" for if there be one word which more than any other implies both self-consciousness and inter-communion, it is, I believe, this very one. Mr. Wicksteed has already told us how Wordsworth speaks of "a spirit which impels all thinking things, all objects of all thought." Elsewhere the poet addresses God as

> Wisdom and spirit of the universe!
> Thou soul, that art the eternity of thought!

And after describing how this "Soul of the universe" "purifies for man the elements of feeling and of thought," he continues:—

> Nor was this fellowship vouchsafed to me
> With stinted kindness.

Surely this felt "fellowship" with the "Spirit and Soul of the universe" only becomes intelligible on the supposition that the Eternal both knows and sympathises with the inner life and efforts of His rational offspring. And again, when Wordsworth apostrophises "Duty" as:—

> Stern daughter of the voice of God!

it is hardly possible, I think, to believe that self-consciousness was not involved in the poet's conception of the Deity.

One long section of Mr. Wicksteed's letter perplexes me greatly; that section, namely, in which he appears to contend that the non-ascription of self-consciousness to the Eternal relieves the difficulty called the problem of Evil. He admits that evil "as the sternest of stimuli to the latent powers in life, has been the origin of all the best things we have," and he further holds that "man is no caprice, but the true child of nature, the inevitable outcome of the clash of existent forces, and pain itself, even of soul, is the outward stimulant and origin of the development of our noblest and most triumphant powers." It appears, then, that Mr. Wicksteed feels assured, with Tennyson and John Fiske, that "through the ages an increasing purpose runs," but, if I understand him aright, he would say, with Von Hartmann, that this apparent purpose doesn't become self-conscious till a part of nature evolves into man; and that then man, as his knowledge increases, sets to work at times to lessen the evil which he perceives in the world. But it is hardly possible for us to worship unconscious nature, and so it would seem that we are driven by this scheme of thought into the Positivist camp, into the worship, that is, of the Grand Être, Humanity. But in saying this I am probably doing Mr. Wicksteed some injustice, for he, unlike the Positivists, appears to see a moral aim dominating the whole process of cosmical development. Although he speaks of Nature as non-personal he would, perhaps, say, as Von Hartmann does, that in this connection unbewusst is meant to be equivalent to überbewusst, or super-personal, and that, therefore, on this ground, Nature is a legitimate object of reverence and adoration. It would be interesting to have from Mr. Wicksteed a more explicit statement of his views on this matter; but, so far as I can see at present, in his last letter he leaves the problem of evil very much where he found it, except, indeed, that his words seem to lend some support to the position usually taken by Theists, viz., that the existence of some so-called physical evil and of the possibility of moral evil is an indispensable condition in the evolution of the highest form of moral and spiritual character.

CHARLES B. UPTON.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:—Letters, &c., received from W. H. B.; J. C., J. H., R. M. K.; H. M. L., S. H. M., J. R. O., M. R., M. A. S.; J. W.; J. H. W., W. F. W.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

THE sixty-ninth annual meeting of the Mission was held in the Rosslyn Hill Chapel Schools, Hampstead, on Monday evening, when there was a large attendance of subscribers and friends. The chair was taken by Mr. CHARLES BOOTH, author of the great work on "Life and Labour in London."

Mr. PHILIP ROSCOE, the Treasurer, presented the accounts, which showed an expenditure of £1,169 16s. 10d., and a deficit of £113 0s. 3d., less the balance of £46 13s. 6d. from 1902.

The Rev. HENRY GOW, who has succeeded Dr. G. D. Hicks as Secretary, read the Committee's report. This, and the reports of the Missionaries, the Rev. F. Summers, of George's-row, St. Luke's, Dr. Read, of Rhyl-street, Kentish Town, and the Rev. S. H. Street, of Bell-street, Marylebone, had been previously printed, and were in the hands of subscribers.

The report acknowledged with gratitude Dr. Hicks's services as secretary for five years, and congratulated him on his appointment to the chair of moral philosophy in University College, London; it also recorded with regret the resignation through ill-health of the Rev. W. Wilson at Rhyl-street, who had since benefited greatly by a voyage to the Cape, and hoped to be able to resume his ministry with a country congregation. A gift of £197 had been made to him from friends of the Mission, as a mark of sympathy and appreciation of his work. At Rhyl-street Dr. Read, who, with Mrs. Read, had been associated with the work from its inception, had undertaken temporary charge on Mr. Wilson's departure, and was now appointed missionary. Mr. Summers had been working for twenty-five years at George's-row, and the committee acknowledged their debt of gratitude to him and Mrs. Summers for their faithful performance of a long and arduous task. At Bell-street, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Street had also a very difficult task, and a steady increase in the Sunday-school was noted. Special mention was made of the able lectures to women on health and home duties given at Rhyl-street by Mrs. Cash, and the report continued:—

"In all the missions excellent work is done by many voluntary teachers and helpers, often involving the sacrifice of hard-earned and scanty leisure. Without such voluntary work it would hardly be possible for the missions to be carried on at all. The committee feel that there is much room for expansion in all the missions. They are for the most part well-equipped, they are situated in districts where there is every opportunity of large and useful work, and where the need of their influence is great. We want more workers in the Sunday-school, in managing clubs for boys and girls, in provident collecting, and in other ways. There is practically no limit to the work which needs doing and which could be done. In addition to the definitely religious work of the Missionaries, we should like our Missions to be in some sense social settlements bringing rich and poor together, showing those who have knowledge and sympathy a way of giving help, awakening the comfortable to a sense of the painful problems of our large cities, and teaching those who think themselves superior to see something of the self-sacrifice and heroism and patience which are to be found among the poor. Meanwhile, we are glad to know that much quiet, good work is being done, and we heartily thank the missionaries and all voluntary helpers for their faithful service."

The Treasurer reported a falling off of nearly £26 in subscriptions, and the loss of old subscribers through the death of Mr. James Cooper, Mrs. H. Fordham, Mrs. Hollins, Mrs. Alfred Lawrence, and Miss Rowland. The legacy of £200 from the late Mrs. E. B. Squire, mentioned in the last report, had been received and invested in Consols.

The CHAIRMAN, in moving the adoption of the report and accounts, remarked on the fact that it was their sixty-ninth annual report. It took them a long way back, and he believed that society was the first, or one of the first, efforts of its kind made before the general and wider efforts to reach the poor in that way, which they had seen in their own time. He remembered the establishment, about the same time, of the Liverpool Domestic Mission, and as a boy saw the interest his father and mother took in the work. Those were pioneer efforts, and they set a great example. The effort had been one of learning as well as teaching. Those conducting the missions had been all the time feeling their way, learning what could be successfully done and what not. The name, Domestic Mission, was a very happy one, the idea being to approach the homes, to get doors opened to you: and the spirit in which that had been done, especially by the Unitarian Missions, had been exceedingly good. There had been so little effort at propagandism, so much desire to act in the way best designed to improve home life. That was the root object of the Missions, and it deserved great credit for the spirit in which it had been carried out. In the study he had made of various forms of religious effort in London he had been struck by the enormous volume of those efforts, the zeal and enthusiasm thrown into work of that kind. The report they were now receiving represented small efforts compared with the great missions that had sprung up, based on the Christian faith, which had done a remarkable work in London. To gauge the full value of such work they had to consider also its reflex action on the workers, and often it appeared that those really benefited by such work were those who went about trying to do those things. But that was not the true aim, which was to benefit the people, spiritually and in other ways. If the only result was to benefit the workers, it would partake too much of the position of the nun, who desired by the work to save her own soul. That was particularly the case where missionary work was definitely connected with religious propagandism, where the reflex action was on the religious faith of the worker. But the Unitarian spirit had also behind it a true faith, perhaps the highest faith of all, because they did not enter the homes of the people to impress certain religious dogmas on them, they did not seek to make Unitarians, but to make them better men and women.

Mr. Booth then referred to each of the Missions in turn, and the impressions he had received of their work and surroundings, as recorded in the volumes on "Religious Influences" in his work on "Life and Labour in London." He spoke of the difficulties of the Rhyl-street neighbourhood, and specially commended the children's services in connection with the large Sunday-school and the huge Band of Hope, where the work had seemed to him of the highest kind. Referring to Dr. Read's appointment as missionary, he said that the experience of a doctor was one of the best any man could have for undertaking such work. As to George's-row, he noted that "improve and go" was a great difficulty, but he did not think it ought to be a discouragement to the workers. They had a high standard there, indicated by their classes for the violin, shorthand, French, and elocution. If those who shared such benefits passed on to better neighbourhoods, they must feel like the schoolmaster through whose hands one set of scholars after another passed. In the Bell-street neighbourhood the close proximity of the very rich and the very poor was a special difficulty in their work. He then spoke with very warm commendation of the free library and reading-room maintained by the Highgate Unitarian Church, and the University Extension Lectures held there. He thought that a number of such libraries maintained by private enthusiasm would do really more good than the great public rate-provided libraries. Another specially admirable piece of work he wished to mention, and that was the systematic visiting for the collection of savings in the Provident Bank. There was a great mass of visiting for other purposes; but in this work the visitors went not to give but to receive, and the people did not feel they were being patronised. So the visitors came into natural contact with the people, and found many opportunities of helpfulness. It was one of those indirect methods of doing good often better than the direct. The report said there was no limit to the work which might be done. He believed that was true. The £100 deficit he was confident would be made up, but the most urgent need was of more helpers to give themselves to that great work.

Mr. GRAHAM WALLAS, who seconded the resolution, said there was a certain uplifting of spirit in getting among a religious audience largely composed of Unitarians. At the present time many forms of change, intellectual and moral, were going on, and one associated with any organised gathering of religious people a certain feeling of terror at change; but among Unitarians there was no sign of such feeling. If change was to come it was felt that it would be for a deeper understanding of the truth, and however different from the old, it would come as a source of joy and strength. The changes that were going on influenced their religious work as all other forms of intellectual activity, and made them consider, not only the impulse of the worker, but the effects produced, the actual thing done by the worker for those outside himself. They were in the presence of an enormous accumulation of knowledge about the world, due to the dominance of the methods of physical science, and there was a great strengthening of imagination as to the effects of our actions. Great nations realised it in thinking of what war with one another would mean, and they in England had a growing feeling of the importance of the effect of actions as compared with their motives, since they had come to live almost entirely in great cities. The typical Englishman was no longer the squire or the countryman, but the dweller in some huge centre of activity—a highly organised democratic society, in which they were compelled to think of the effect of what they did upon their neighbours. Almost in the exact year in which that Mission was started Tennyson wrote the poem on "Lady Clara Vere de Vere," with its concluding verse:—

Clara, Clara Vere de Vere,
If time be heavy on your hands,
Are there no beggars at your gate,
Nor any poor about your lands?
Oh! teach the orphan boy to read,
Or teach the orphan girl to sew,
Pray Heaven for a human heart,
And let the foolish yeoman go.

The feeling with which they now read that verse marked what would formerly have meant the change of two or three centuries from the past age to which the poem belonged. Now, they thought not of the result for the lady herself, but of the effect of her charities upon the poor; and there was the same change of feeling also in reading the Bible. When they read the story of the rich young man, their first thought was of what effect the sudden giving of his wealth to the people of a Syrian town would have upon them. That was far more important than any question as to himself. Their new sense of the vast complexity of life might act as a discouragement to effort, but, on the other hand, for anyone who realised what could be done with proper training and adequate knowledge by taking an active part in the great order, it might be a tremendous power urging to action. Anyone who felt that fully, was bound to such service for the rest of his life. In a modern city there was a huge machinery of public life and administration. The first thing a worker must do was to find out what were the actual agencies and forces at work, and to try and realise the conditions under which, given those forces, he could be most effective. For through those agencies in the end the greater part of social work was bound to be done. With difficulty they collected for that mission a few hundreds of pounds, but with or against their will some twelve millions were collected and spent for good or ill on London purposes. In the midst of that enormous administration they had to learn how to work with the greatest effect, and the first lesson was of humility. The best thing to begin with was to learn the use of one's voice, to learn the forms of committee, and fit oneself for work in that vast machinery, and above all to cultivate imagination and a sense of proportion. That way of looking at things had its dangers. It might easily be said that there was real moral and ultimately social danger in the barren worship of efficiency, that the essential part of what was said to the young man was not "Go, and sell," but "Follow me," and that nothing could be done without the true human impulse. But they had many of them learnt that there was no great opposition between working for the individual and for humanity, because by study of the individual they learnt the conditions of the problem to be faced by the community. Such missions as theirs offered the best opportunity of individual help, provided they realised that the work did not end with the individual. What they found helpful in one individual street they must make widely known. Thus the example of one cripple school in the East-end spread over London, and he hoped the same for Mrs. Humphry Ward's Vacation School at the Passmore Edwards Settlement. The Kyrle Society had had a similar beneficent result. Their sense of the overpowering importance of the effect of their actions would grow more and more with the growth of science and the changes of thought; but he did not think it would be a forbidding influence, to make their hearts cold, but a strong energising influence, as they learnt to be the servants and interpreters of nature. A new sense of power and hope would come to them as they learnt to forget themselves and to work in accordance with the eternal law of things, and the will of whatever that Force might be by which the hopes of the world are sustained.

The resolution was unanimously passed.

The Rev. F. K. FREESTON moved a resolution of continued confidence in the principles of the Mission, and of appreciation of the labours of the missionaries. It was, he said, to pass that resolution, not formally, but in all sincerity, that they were come together. He always felt that the work of their missions was consecrated by the entire life-long support of some of the best men they had known, of Thom and Martineau, and of Tuckerman in America, and by the devoted labours of such missionaries as John Johns in Liverpool and Charles Corkran in London. He assured Mr. Graham Wallas that he need not feel in the least as an outsider among them that night, for their missions were not in theory only but in spirit entirely unsectarian. He spoke with warm sympathy and appreciation of the work of the missionaries, referring to Mr. Summers' twenty-five years of service, and their regret that illness prevented Mr. Street from being present. As to Dr. Read's entrance upon that ministry, he recalled the fact that Dr. Tuckerman had himself begun by taking medical help to the people, and that when Dr. Southwood Smith went to Yeovil it was both as minister of a congregation and as medical man. The very pivot of that work was the personal note. Their missionaries were not bound down to any social theories or any mechanical scheme of philanthropy, they were asked simply to give themselves to the people, and to work in their own way through the power of personal influence. "I want the soul of that man" was a saying of Dr. Tuckerman's, and because he had that enthusiasm of humanity, and thought of the highest things in the highest way, he became the friend of those he went to help; and out of that came their wiser ways of giving, based on knowledge, in the Christ spirit, the Good Samaritan always. Their missionaries were loyal to those principles, and in face of all sorts of set backs, they had the splendid courage of going on.

Miss HELEN BROOKE HERFORD, seconding the motion, spoke of the work of the missionaries as more like women's work than that of any other men, because it was never done. That made it a hard kind of work, and they were the more in need of sympathy. There were practical ways of showing sympathy. Subscribers could get others to subscribe, and workers could get others to go down and help. They ought also to bring up their children to take their own share in the work.

The resolution having been very cordially passed, the Rev. F. SUMMERS responded, and said he was not at all discouraged by his experience of "improve and go" at George's Row; he thought it a proof that they were succeeding in their real work; which was not to gather a self-supporting church, but to keep on looking for the helpless, and to help them on to something better. He spoke of his sad experience of the people's lack of work, the sufferings especially of the women and children, and wished some scheme would be organised by which they could insure against the slack times.

Dr. READ also responded, and told how forty years ago, at Falmouth, when he was preparing to come up to London as a medical student, he had been secretary of a Sunday-school, and had gone out to preach, and such religious and social work had ever since been a great interest in his life. He felt that his medical experience was the best preparation for such work among the poor as that to which he was now devoted. In the Sunday-school at Rhyl-street, he said, they were sadly in want of more teachers.

Mr. E. F. GRUNDY proposed, and Mr. RONALD JONES seconded, the appointment of the committee, Mr. Grundy making a special appeal to the Hampstead congregation to make the Rhyl-street Mission their special care.

A vote of thanks to the Chairman and to Mr. Graham Wallas, proposed by Mr. P. M. MARTINEAU, and carried by acclamation, brought the meeting to a close.

WESTERN UNION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

THE annual assembly of the Western Union of Unitarian and Free Christian Churches was held at Conigre Chapel, Trowbridge, on Wednesday, May 11, under the presidency of the Rev. Walter Lloyd, of Gloucester.

At luncheon in the school-room Mr. W. WALKER took the chair, and afterwards gave the loyal toasts and that of "Religious Liberty." To this Mr. PHILIP J. WORSLEY responded, remarking that in England they had religious liberty, but they had not as yet got religious equality: yet, he thought, they might hope even to possess that by degrees, for there were signs of the times pointing very much in that direction already. They had many friends who were members of other religious bodies whose opinions were very similar to their own, and these were growing at an increasingly rapid rate. He thought they might congratulate themselves upon the work which was being effected upon the foundations which their forefathers had laid.

The Rev. WALTER LLOYD (President of the Union) proposed the health of the "Trowbridge Church and Congregation," speaking in high terms of the kindly and hospitable reception which had been accorded to the Union representatives that day. As to the Union itself, he would remind them of the fact that that day formed an interesting epoch in their history, inasmuch as it was on May 11, 1792, that the Western Union was formed at a meeting held at Exeter, the first Assembly being held at Crediton in September of the same year. The first Assembly held at Trowbridge was in 1807 and the next in 1825.

Mr. E. TAYLOR briefly replied.

BUSINESS MEETING.

After lunch the Annual Assembly was held in the chapel, the President in the chair.

In his opening address the PRESIDENT said that people spoke of the slow progress of religious thought in the world, and asked if their numbers were increasing. There were large numbers of people who professed to be of the same way of thinking as they were; but the churches were not coming as bodies in their direction in any sense which would lead them to suppose that before long the world was going to become Unitarian. One of the most impressive signs, he believed, was the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the state of discipline in the Church of England, which was being pervaded with a spirit of extreme ritualism and sacerdotalism. He did not recognise that there was any liberal movement in the Church of England, the only movement was the sacerdotal movement which was carrying the Church along with it. Outside the Church of England there were the great Nonconformist bodies, preaching the doctrines which were popular. Popularity was a thing of which Unitarians were free, and from which he hoped they would be delivered. Their church was first for the maintenance of their own religious liberty, for fellowship, for sympathy, and help. They would rather worship with a congregation, however small, holding true to their convictions, than abandon those convictions for the sake of following the crowd whose opinions they did not share.

The Rev. A. N. BLATCHFORD presented the annual report.

The report recorded with deep regret the losses in the ranks of friends and fellow workers sustained during the past year. First among these was the death of the Rev. T. B. Broadrick, of Bridgwater, whose post had not as yet been filled. The Committee desired to express their grateful acknowledgment to Mrs. Broadrick for the helpful and timely services she had been so admirably rendering to the Union in editing the Chronicle, and arranging for the supply of vacant pulpits. Regret was also expressed at the death of Mr. Herbert Thomas, J.P., of Bristol, and Mr. W. C. Jolly, of Bath. The Sunday School report for the year showed that there were 21 schools with 191 teachers, and an average attendance of 48 morning and 136 afternoon. The total number of scholars was 1,374, there being 750 boys and 604 girls.

The treasurer's report was presented by Mr. P. J. Worsley, who regretted having to report an adverse balance of £14 17s. 9d. As he was resigning the office of treasurer, he announced that he should have pleasure in handing the books over to his successor with a clear balance.

The reports were adopted on the motion of Mr. PHILPOTT, seconded by Mr. CHAMPION.

Officers and committee were then elected, Mr. Worsley being appointed president, Mr. J. Kenrick Champion treasurer, and the Revs. A. N. Blatchford and J. McDowell were re-elected secretaries.

In feeling and touching terms Mr. WORSLEY paid a tribute to the memory of the late Rev. T. B. Broadrick, and moved a resolution of regret at the loss which the Union had sustained by his death, and conveying the sympathy and condolence of the Assembly with Mrs. Broadrick and family in their bereavement. The motion was seconded by the Rev. J. WORTHINGTON and carried in silence, the Assembly standing.

The Assembly closed after according hearty votes of thanks to the chairman and the special preacher.

After tea the religious service was conducted by the Rev. F. A. Homer, of Taunton, and the Rev. J. Worsley Austin, of Birmingham, preached the annual sermon, taking for his subject "Religious Indifference."

The Rev. J. Wain and Mrs. Wain afterwards held a reception, when addresses were given by the Revs. Dr. Warschauer (on the Religious Outlook), J. Worthington, J. Barron, and G. L. Phelps, and Mr. G. Philpott.

LIVERPOOL DOMESTIC MISSION SOCIETY.

THE sixty-seventh annual meeting of the subscribers and friends was held at the Mission on Tuesday evening.

By invitation of the President, Mr. Richard D. Holt, and Mrs. Holt, a reception was held from 7.30 to 8, giving an opportunity to view the chapel, which has recently been re-opened after carrying out an extensive scheme of decoration. The treasurer of the Mission, Mr. Walter Holland, has generously presented a very fine series of Della Robbia plaques illustrating scriptural texts, also other decorations, and, the whole scheme of colouring being worked out in harmony, the effect is very striking and uncommon.

After the reception the President took the chair in the large hall upstairs, being supported on the platform by the Revs. R. A. Armstrong, J. Collins Odgers, C. Craddock, T. Lloyd Jones, Alderman W. B. Bowring, Messrs. P. H. Holt, Charles W. Jones, Herbert R. Rathbone, C.C., Robert D. Holt, Hugh R. Rathbone, Richard Robinson, Forwood Heyn (deputy treasurer), and Harold Coventry (hon. sec.)

Mr. Walter Holland wrote, expressing his regret that, owing to being unwell, he was unable to be present at the meeting.

The meeting was larger than the average, and included Mrs. George Holt, Miss Florence Melly, Mr. Joseph Anderton, Revs. H. W. Hawkes, J. Morley Mills, H. D. Roberts, and Mrs. Roberts, Mrs. Burroughs, Mr. A. Cooper, Mr. A. W. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Robinson, &c.

The Committee's report, read by the hon. secretary, mentioned that the Sunday-schools and, in fact, the institutions generally, were in a very satisfactory condition. It alluded to the generous gift from the treasurer mentioned above, following on so many other instances of the real practical interest felt by him in the welfare of the Mission; it recorded the regret of the Committee at the removal of the Rev. W. J. Jupp, and welcomed as colleagues the Revs. C. Craddock, J. Collins Odgers, and H. D. Roberts; it entered an energetic protest against the Government Licensing Bill, and concluded by assuring the missionaries of the deep sympathy extended to them in their unselfish efforts among the poor.

The Treasurer's statement of accounts showed a deficit of some £460, an increase on the year of more than £100.

The report and statement of accounts were received and adopted, on the motion of the CHAIRMAN, seconded by Mr. HUGH R. RATHBONE.

The usual vote of sympathy with the missionaries was moved by the Rev. J. COLLINS ODGERS, who alluded to his own missionary experiences in London and Bury. After being seconded by Mr. PHILIP HOLT and supported by Mr. CHARLES W. JONES, who pleaded for less theology and Old Testament history and more religion, the vote was carried with acclamation, and was responded to by Mr. LLOYD JONES and Mr. ANDERTON. The resolution alluded to the fact that both missionaries had been serving the poor of Toxteth for upwards of twenty years.

After the election of the committee a special resolution of protest against the Government Licensing Bill was moved by Alderman BOWRING in a forcible and telling speech. He was afraid that the Bill, if passed, would throw back temperance reform fifty years or more. Miss JOHNSON seconded, and the resolution, which authorised the President to sign a petition against the Bill, on behalf of the meeting, was unanimously carried.

A vote of thanks to the Chairman concluded the meeting, which was bright and cheery in tone, and must have been an encouragement to the missionaries and the large number of voluntary workers, many of whom were present.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Wednesday, or Thursday Morning at latest.]

Birmingham: Newhall Hill. — The seventieth anniversary of the Sunday-schools was held last Sunday, when the Rev. J. Worsley Austin, of the Church of the Messiah, preached to exceptionally large congregations. At the evening service the church was crowded with an earnest congregation. Special hymns and anthems were beautifully rendered by the children. The collections, in aid of the school funds, amounted to £29 13s. 6d. On Monday evening a meeting was held in the school-room, when there was again a large attendance. The chair was occupied by Mr. G. Lee, president of the Teachers' Society, and among those present were the Revs. J. W. Austin and Thos. Paxton, Messrs. H. Payton, J.P., and W. J. B. Traxter. The reports of the schools presented by the superintendents showed that while there had been some difficulty in maintaining the numbers of pupils, the average attendance had increased from 61 to 64 per cent. The teachers had given an average attendance of 96 per cent. Votes of thanks were given to Mr. Austin for preaching the sermons, the teachers for their services, the children for their beautiful singing, and the chairman.

Bolton (Bank Street).—On Saturday afternoon last the members of the Men's Class arranged to have a ramble in Rivington. Invitations to others outside the class were freely given and accepted. The weather was beautifully fine, and a large party gathered together—some eighty from Bolton and thirty from Horwich. Led by the Rev. R. C. Moore, the ramblers visited Noon Hill, through the kind permission of Mr. W. H. Lever. Noon Hill is a bleak spot on the moors, and about midway between Rivington Pike and Winter Hill, where, according to an unvarying tradition, our Nonconformist forefathers, in the old grey days prior to the passing of the Toleration Act, used to meet for the worship of Almighty God. Here a halt was made, and a short commemorative service held. The hymns "Our Fathers' Faith" and "Gone are those great and good" were sung, the leader of the party giving a short address and closing with prayer. Rivington Hall was then visited, and the party had tea in the chapel, afterwards proceeding to Dean Wood and Anderton Hall. The Rev. J. H. Weatherall was only able to join the party at Rivington.

Chester.—The annual meeting of the congregation of Matthew Henry's Chapel was held on May 16, under the presidency of the Rev. H. E. Haycock, who was able to record a satisfactory increase in average attendance for Sunday worship and in the membership, although losses have been sustained by removals and by the lamented death of two staunch supporters and trustees—viz., Sir Thomas Frost and Major Bryan Johnson. To the memory of the last-named the congregation erected a brass tablet in the chapel. For over sixty years they both rendered faithful service to the chapel, and their passing caused the members deep regret. The various activities of the chapel have been maintained, and the cause of Unitarianism continues to make progress even in this stronghold of orthodoxy. The minister has recently been elected a member of the Board of Guardians. Encouraging reports were given of the schools and various social and recreative activities, and it was agreed that it would be desirable as an experiment for a year to institute regular Sunday offertories. The matter is to be finally decided at a special meeting of the congregation.

Colne.—The church anniversary services were held last Sunday, the Rev. Thos. Leyland, of Blackpool, formerly of Colne, being the preacher, this being the first time Mr. Leyland has occupied his old pulpit since his very serious breakdown two years ago. The vigour and freshness of his utterances were as surprising as they were gratifying to the members of the congregation, who came up in goodly numbers to hear and welcome him.

Liverpool Sunday-School Society.—The annual soirée was held on Thursday, May 12, in the Hope-street Church Hall, when Mrs. H. D. Roberts, the visitor for the year, gave her report of the thirteen schools affiliated to the Society. The Rev. T. Lloyd Jones (president) was in the chair, and there was a large attendance of teachers and friends. At the beginning of her report, Mrs. Roberts said that it was not easy to bear in mind the real purpose of a Sunday-school. Curious ideas were abroad on this subject, in the minds of the scholars, the parents, and even in the minds of the teachers. Our primary object, the real ultimate object we have in bringing the children together, is to endeavour so to bring them into touch, spiritually, with the Unseen Realities, that they shall be led to do what is right, and be animated by noble motives in doing it. The material is there to be manipulated, the energies are there to be directed, the young conscience is there to be touched and awakened. Probably, in many cases, the Sunday-school is the unique occasion in life when such directly religious influence can be brought to bear upon it. It is the one place and the one time in very many lives when the religious consciousness can be directly touched, whether done by formal lessons or not. We need to remember, Sunday by Sunday, as we look at the children before us, that it is our high task to strive to reach their conscience, to arouse their reverence, to show them how these things are connected with conduct and life, to point out the glorious possibilities of life itself, Mrs. Roberts then referred to the valuable help given during the year by Mr. and Mrs. Cooper, who, with self-denying interest in the efficiency of our Sunday-schools, had given such an admirable course of model lessons, with practical illustrations, which she felt sure had resulted in worthier work being done in the schools. An interval for social intercourse and refreshments was followed by a discussion, in which the Revs. J. Crowther Hirst, C. Harvey-Cook, H. D. Roberts, J. Morley Mills, and J. Collins Odgers, Miss O. M. Rawlins, Mr. W. H. Thomas, and Miss E. Melly took part. A cordial vote of thanks was given to Mrs. Roberts for her very encouraging and sympathetic report, moved by the Rev. J. L. Haigh, and seconded by Mr. B. P. Burroughs.

Lye.—The Rev. I. Wrigley has been recommended by the Midland Counties' Association of British and Other Voluntary Day Schools as their representative on the Worcestershire Education Committee for the next three years.

London: Forest Gate.—The newly constituted Dramatic Society gave a capital performance the other day, the hall being filled and the plays "Sunset" and "Ici on parle Français." Another "Jumble Sale" has been held, and many garments dispersed at very cheap rates among the poor. Apropos of the recent celebrations, the Rev. H. W. Perris has been discoursing on "Shakespeare—the Meeting-point of Mediæval and Modern"; "Shakespeare's Debt to the Bible"; "Bible and Shakespeare Parallels." The Stratford Express has given summaries from week to week.

Manchester.—The monthly visit of the governing body was paid on Saturday, May 7, to Gorton. Rev. James Ruddle (Chorlton) conducted the service, and the Rev. A. C. Smith (Lower Mosley-street) preached. After service and tea a public meeting was held, under the presidency of Mr. Arthur E. Piggott, whose address was based on the assertion that "the price of freedom is eternal vigilance." Mr. George Cocks spoke of "The Relation of the Congregation to the Sunday-school." Mr. Fletcher Robinson pleaded for greater sympathy in the larger life of our churches, for less content with isolation. Mr. George Daniels made some very practical observations which roused the applause of his hearers; and the Rev. Dendy Agate, in a cheery speech, brought the series of admirable addresses to a close. During the evening glees were rendered most acceptably by the Brookfield Vocal Society. The attendances were 150 and 140, and the proceedings were marked throughout by earnestness and zeal.

Manchester: Moss Side.—The annual meeting of church members has recently been held, and a report presented for the year ending March 31, 1904. The past year has been a most active and prosperous one. All the allied institutions are in a healthy condition. During the year the Revised Essex Hall Hymnal and Chant Book were introduced, a new organ costing £650 was placed in the church, and the electric light installed. Twenty-eight new members have been enrolled, and the membership is higher than it has ever been before. The Provincial Assembly of Lancashire and Cheshire is holding its annual meetings here in June, when friends from a distance will have an opportunity of seeing something of this congregation, which has been built up within the last seventeen years.

Mottram.—The Sunday-school anniversary sermons were preached on Sunday, May 8, by the Rev. B. C. Constable, of Stockport, afternoon and evening. The weather was very bad all day, raining without intermission, affecting attendances and collections. £17 10s. was the total received including subscriptions—about £3 less than last year. At night the chapel was full but not crowded.

Pantdefaid.—The annual "Gymanfa" of Llandyssul Sunday School Union was held at Pantdefaid on Sunday last. The Union consists of Bwlchyfadfa, Llwynrhydowen, Pantdefaid, and Llandyssul schools. Each of these recited selected portions of the Scriptures, and were catechised respectively by the Revs. W. James, T. Arthur Thomas, E. O. Jenkins, and Mr. T. G. Thomas. In the evening preaching services were held, when the Rev. E. O. Jenkins and Mr. T. G. Thomas, the recently appointed lay preacher, delivered thoughtful sermons to very large congregations. Excellent arrangements had been made by the friends at Pantdefaid for providing all the schools tea.

Walmsley.—A cake and apron sale was held on May 14, opened by Mrs. Gass of Burnley-cross, Turton. The proceeds were in aid of the forthcoming bazaar to be held in October, and amounted to upwards of £12.

Whitchurch: Salop.—On Friday evening, May 13, the Rev. C. D. Badland held an open-air meeting which was largely attended, and gave an address on Unitarianism.

Yorkshire Unitarian Union (Appointment).—The Rev. John Ellis has accepted the appointment as first District Minister of this Union. The British and Foreign Unitarian Association have approved of the appointment, and have promised a grant in aid. It is expected that Mr. Ellis will take up his new work about the beginning of September.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

SUNDAY, May 22.

Acton, Central Auction Room, Market-place, High-street, 7; Mr. T. J. HARDY, B.A.
Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. E. RATTENBURY HODGES.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. W. STANLEY.
Child's Hill, All Souls' Free Church, corner of Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 7; Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. JUPP.
Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 and 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. PERRIS.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. EDGAR FRIPP, B.A.
Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. GREAVES.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11.15 and 7, Rev. G. CRITCHLEY, B.A.
Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. J. E. STRONGE.
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.
Little Portland-street. Chapel, 11.15, Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS, and 7, Rev. F. H. JONES, B.A.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. JOHN ELLIS.
Peckham, Avondale-road, 11, Rev. J. H. WICKSTEED, M.A., and 6.30, Rev. EUSTACE THOMPSON.
Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.
Stepney Green, College Chapel, 11 and 7, Mr. C. A. GINEVER.
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 and 7, Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
Stratford, Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. W. J. HAWKINS, and 6.30, Mr. W. H. SHRUBSOLE, F.G.S.
Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. J. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. McDOWELL.
BLACKPOOL, Dickson-road, North Shore, 10.45 and 6.30, PULPIT VACANT.
BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Church, The Hall, Lytham-road, 11 and 7,
BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 and 7, Rev. C. C. COE.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church, New-road, North-street, 11 and 7, Mr. HERBERT RIX, B.A.
BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 7, Rev. GEORGE STREET.
CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11, Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
GUILDFORD, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30.
HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 131st Whit-Sunday Anniversary, 11, followed by Communion, and 6.15, Rev. H. GOW, B.A. Public Meeting at 3.15, Miss E. KENSETT on "Our Old Chapel and its History." Collections for B. and F.U.A. and Provincial Assembly. Lunch at 1, 1s. each. Tea at 5, 6d. each.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. L. P. JACKS, M.A.

LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11 and 6.30 Rev. J. COLLINS ODGERS, B.A.; Evening subject, "Is the Holy Spirit a Person separate from the Father, the Infinite Spirit?"
MAIDSTONE, Earl-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. SIDAWAY BRETTELL, M.A.
MANCHESTER, PLATT CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. T. POYNTING.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. E. PIKE.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. J. E. ODGERS, M.A.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. LANSDOWNE.
PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Mr. THOMAS BOND.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 7, Rev. OTTWELL BINNS.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 and 6.45, Rev. F. TEASDALE REED.
SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. AGAR.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FREDERICK B. MOTT.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TROWBRIDGE, Conigre Church, 11 and 6, Rev. J. WAIN.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 and 6.30,

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 7, Rev. G. H. VANCE, D.D.

WALES.

ABERYSTWITH, New Market Hall, 11, Rev. T. ARTHUR THOMAS.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY SOUTH PLACE, FINSBURY.—May 22, at 11.15, HERBERT BURROWS, "Orthodox May Meetings."

WELSH UNITARIAN SERVICES.

A Special WELSH SERVICE, conducted by the Rev. CEREDIG JONES, will be held at ESSEX HALL, Essex-street, Strand, Sunday afternoon, May 29th, at 3 o'clock, with appropriate Welsh Hymns and Music.

RIVINGTON CHAPEL.—The ANNIVERSARY SERMONS will be preached on SUNDAY, JUNE 5th, 1904, at 3 o'clock and 6.30 P.M. by the Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A., of London. Tea between the Services, 6d. each.

BIRTHS.

ERITH.—On the 14th inst., the wife of H. A. Erith, 150, Kyverdale-road, London, N.E., of a son.

GRUNDY.—On the 18th May, at 14, Thurlow-road, Hampstead, to Edmund Fordham and Emily Susan Grundy, a daughter.

MARRIAGE.

BLYTH—PESEL.—On the 19th inst., at the Unitarian Chapel, Bradford, by the Rev. Henry Gow, B.A., assisted by the Rev. E. Ceredig Jones, M.A., Thomas Tolmé, youngest son of Edmund Kell Blyth, Esq., of Rosslyn Hill, Hampstead, to Mary Carbutt, fourth daughter of Frederick Robert Pesel, J.P., of Oak House, Bradford.

DEATH.

ELAM.—May 12th, at Sunny Bank, Liscard, in her 83rd year, Martha, widow of the late William Elam.

NATIONAL UNITARIAN TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

The 11th ANNUAL MEETING will be held at Essex Hall, on Friday, May 27th. Conference at 4.30 P.M., Paper on "Use of Literature in Band of Hope Work," by Mr. JUDSON BONNER (U.K.B.H.U.). Tea and Coffee at 6 P.M. Public Meeting at 7 P.M. Chairman:—The EARL OF CARLISLE. Speakers:—Revs. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., W. H. LYON, D.D. (of Brooklyn, Mass.), C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B., J. H. WICKSTEED, M.A., JENKINS JONES (Mayor of Woolwich), J. B. HIGHAM, B.A., E. O. JENKINS, CHAS. READ, M.D., and others.

LAYMEN'S CLUB.

CONCERT IN AID OF
SOUTHEND HOME AND CHILDREN'S COUNTRY HOLIDAY FUND.
ESSEX HALL, Wednesday, June 15th, 8.15 P.M.

The following are kindly assisting:—Mrs. Curtis (Miss H. Fisher), Miss Galton, Messrs. W. Savage Cooper, Albert Norcroft, Ivor James, H. B. Lawford, and the Pompadour Pierrot Troupe.

Tickets, numbered and reserved, 5s.; sides of Hall and Balcony, 2s. 6d.; rest of Hall, 1s. These can be obtained from Mr. H. B. Lawford, 12, New-court, Carey-street; and Mr. W. Fitchett Wurtzburg, 3, Lawn-road, N.W., and at Essex Hall.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION SOCIETY.

At the ANNUAL MEETING, held on Monday, May 16th, 1904, at Rosslyn Hill Schools, CHARLES BOOTH, Esq., in the Chair, the following resolutions were passed:—

"1. Moved by the CHAIRMAN, and seconded by Mr. GRAHAM WALLAS,—That the Report of the Committee and the Statement of Accounts, together with the Reports of the Missionaries, be received and adopted.

"2. Moved by Rev. F. K. FREESTON, and seconded by Miss H. BROOKE-HERFORD,—That this Meeting desires to express its continued confidence in the principles of the London Domestic Mission Society, and to record its appreciation of the earnest and faithful labours of the Missionaries, the Revs. F. Summers, Sydney Street, and Dr. Read, during the past year.

"3. Moved by Mr. E. F. GRUNDY, seconded by Mr. RONALD JONES,—That the best thanks of this Meeting be given to the Committee and Officers for their services during the past year, and that the following be elected for the year 1904-5:—Hon. Treasurer, Mr. Philip Roscoe; Committee, Mr. P. M. Martineau (Chairman), Mr. Howard C. Clarke, Mrs. Enfield, Mrs. Evelegh, Mr. J. Harrison, Miss C. Holland, Mr. A. Jolly, Rev. F. H. Jones, B.A., Mrs. I. S. Lister, Mr. Oswald Nettlefold, and Miss A. Sharpe; Hon. Sec., Rev. Henry Gow.

"4. Moved by Mr. MARTINEAU,—That the best thanks of this Meeting be given to Charles Booth, Esq., for his valuable services in the Chair, and to Mr. Graham Wallas for his speech.

MARTINEAU MEMORIAL HALL AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

—o—

The Committee and Congregation of the Octagon Chapel, Norwich, earnestly appeal for help towards PURCHASE OF SITE for above. Amongst those who commend and support the scheme are the Committee of the B. and F.U.A., the Revs. J. Estlin Carpenter, H. Enfield Dowson, and Alexander Gordon; Dr. James Drummond, Dr. Blake Odgers, K.C., the Revs. J. Edwin Odgers, P. M. Higginson, Dendy Agate, H. Gow, V. D. Davis; Mrs. and Miss Holt, Mrs. J. Worthington, Mrs. Buckton, Miss M. C. Martineau, Mr. David Martineau, and other members of their family, Miss Dowson, Miss Taylor, Mr. and Miss Norton, Mr. and Mrs. Worsley, Mr. Wade and Mrs. I. M. Wade, Miss Higginson, Mr. Henry and Mr. F. Martineau Lupton, Mr. S. S. Tayler, Mr. Colfox, Mr. and Miss Lister, Mr. W. Long, Mr. E. B. Squire, Miss Valentine, Mr. J. Broome, and others; and the Octagon Congregation and Sunday Schools have pledged themselves to raise not less than £500, about half of which is already promised. Cheques, &c., may be made payable to Mrs. MOTTRAM, The Birches, Bracondale, Norwich, or Mr. W. N. LADELL, 69, Grove-road, Lakenham, Norwich.

THE PRESBYTERIAN FUND.

The Managers desire to give notice of the following Scholarships which are open to Theological Students of all denominations:—

Two Graduate Scholarships of £40 for three years, with free instruction for the B.D. Degree of the University of Wales, tenable at the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen.

Applications must be in the hands of the Secretary before July 23rd, 1904.

For particulars and forms of application apply to G. HAROLD CLENNELL, Esq., Secretary to Presbyterian Fund, 6, Great James-street, Bedford Row, London, W.C.

Situations,
VACANT AND WANTED.

LADY, Cultivated, Musical, fairly good Linguist, requires position as COMPANION to a Lady of means. Neighbourhood of Cheltenham preferred. Reference if required.—Reply to L. S. K., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, W.C.

THE HIGH PAVEMENT CONGREGATION and Sunday School (Nottingham) propose to appoint a LAY VISITOR (Lady) who will be required to devote her whole time to Chapel work. Salary £80 per annum.—Apply not later than 28th inst. to Miss H. GUILFORD, Lenton Avenue, The Park, Nottingham.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
ADELAIDE PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Assets, £158,000.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., J.P., 17, Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W
Miss CECIL GRADWELL, 7, Victoria-street, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st. S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham, S.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4 per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3 and 3½ per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

BORROWER'S INTEREST 4 per cent. Monthly Repayment, including Principal, Premium, and Interest for each £100.

10 years.	12 years.	15 years.	18 years.	21 years.
1 1 1	0 18 4	0 15 6	0 14 2	0 12 11

Compare the above rates with those of other Societies. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

FRUITARIAN CAKES.
MADE ENTIRELY OF FRUIT AND NUTS,
Uncooked, Concentrated, Natural Food.
READY FOR USE WITHOUT PREPARATION.
For travelling they are ideal. A meal will go in pocket.

PEAR and WALNUT	7d.	per 8 oz. packet.
APRICOT and NUT	7d.	" "
MUSCATEL and ALMOND	6d.	" "
FRUIT and NUTS	5d.	" "
DATE and GINGER	4d.	" "
DATE and LEMON	4d.	" "
DATE and ORANGE	4d.	" "
FIG and CITRON	4d.	" "
DATE and NUT	3d.	" "
FIG and NUT	3d.	" "

Sample Box containing 14 varieties Fruitarian Cakes, 8d.; or with 3 varieties of Nut Butters, post free, 1s.

HUGH MAPLETON, Nut Food Manufacturer,
ARDWICK GREEN, MANCHESTER.

FREDK. LONG & SON,
AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS
Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

ALLENSON'S SIXPENNY APOLOGETICS, No. 2.

AN ENTIRELY NEW WORK PUBLISHED AT SIXPENCE. (By Post 8d.)

A Strikingly Fair Reply to Blatchford.

6D. ANTI-NUNQUAM, 6D.

AN EXAMINATION OF "GOD AND MY NEIGHBOUR."

BY J. WARSCHAUER, M.A., Ph.D.

With Introduction by PROF. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.

CONTENTS: I. Of "Infidels" and the "Sin of Unbelief." II. "Nunquam's" Estimate of the Bible. III. "Nunquam's" Agnosticism. Part I. The Intellectual Basis of Scepticism. IV. "Nunquam's" Agnosticism. Part II. Evil v. Divine Goodness. V. "Nunquam's" Denial of Sin and Freedom. VI. "Nunquam's" Criticism of Christ. VII. "Nunquam's" Indictment of Christianity. VIII. The Real "Parting of the Ways."

Also an Edition on superior paper, cloth, gilt lettered, 1/6 net.

NUMBER ONE IN THIS SIXPENNY SERIES WAS

IN RELIEF OF DOUBT. 29,000 NOW SOLD.

NUMBER THREE WILL BE MOMERIE'S "IMMORTALITY," NEVER BEFORE ISSUED AT LESS THAN 5s.

[Ready in about 14 days.

H. R. ALLENSON, 1 & 2, Ivy Lane, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

By REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

UNITARIANISM RE-STATED.

FOUR POPULAR LECTURES.

1. THE BIBLE. 2. JESUS CHRIST. 3. GOD. 4. A WORKING RELIGION.

In neat Pamphlet, 48 pp. Sixpence.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, ESSEX STREET, W.C.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKLETS.

By the REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

DAILY MEDITATIONS

(Fourth Edition Revised.)

NIGHT UNTO NIGHT.

Cloth, red edges, 6d.; roan gilt, 1s.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C.

AMONG THE DUTCHMEN.

BY THE

Rev. LUCKING TAVENER.

Nine Discourses suggested by the visit of the National Conference to Amsterdam.

CONTENTS:—The Dykes and Dams. The Dutch Painters and the Italian. The Holy Land of Europe. Erasmus. William the Silent. Spinosa. Rembrandt.

2s. 6d. net.

ARTHUR STOCKWELL, Creed-lane & Essex Hall.

CENTRAL POSTAL MISSION AND UNITARIAN WORKERS' UNION.

ANNUAL PUBLIC MEETING

ESSEX HALL,

THURSDAY, MAY 26, at Half-past Two o'clock.

MISS TAGART in the Chair.

Supported by Miss Van Eck, Mrs. Tudor Jones, Revs. F. Summers, L. Tavener, V. Suktarkar (Bombay), Theo Berg (Copenhagen).

Tea at Four o'clock. All heartily welcome.

UNITARIAN CHRISTIAN CHURCH, LEWISHAM.

A BAZAAR

in Aid of the Building Fund is to be held a ESSEX HALL on June 8th and 9th.

Lady E. Durning-Lawrence will open the proceedings on the first day, and Mrs. W. Blake Odgers on the second day.

Gifts of money or goods are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope, Minister, or A. G. Warren, Esq., Hon. Sec., Kearsney, Berlin-road, Catford.

SAMUEL JONES' FUND.

THE MANAGERS meet Annually in October for the purpose of making Grants.

Applications must, however, be in hand not later than June 15th, and must be made on a form to be obtained from

EDWIN W. MARSHALL,
Secretary,
38, Barton-arcade, Manchester.

Board and Residence.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH. — ARNEWOOD. Pension. Commanding position in the West Cliff-road; full South aspect; sea views and private grounds; close to Winter Gardens, Cliff Promenade, Square or Pier; moderate Tariff.—Apply, MANAGERESS.

CHELTENHAM.—Board and Residence in the best part of Sunny Cheltenham, sheltered from North and Easterly winds. Near the Spas and Gardens. Comfortable home. Moderate terms. Excellent cuisine.—A. G., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, W.C.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—"Cranstock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE; most comfortable throughout. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard and smoke room, sanitary certificate —Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

LANGLEY HOUSE, DAWLISH, DEVON.—A delightful HOLIDAY RESORT for Ladies and School-girls (Boys under 15) Beautiful country, bracing climate. Sea and Moorland. Prospectus from MISS N. JONES, Matron; or A. E. JONES, Esq., Proprietor.

FELIXSTOWE.—Comfortable HOME for Permanent BOARDERS, Adults or Scholars; also APARTMENTS on reasonable terms.—Apply, Mrs. ROBINSON, Kimberley, Runelagh-road, Felixstowe.

LAKE DISTRICT.—Small House with good-sized Garden to be Let Furnished. Rural situation. Few minutes' walk from shops and Lake. Two sitting-rooms, four bedrooms.—Miss E. NEWLING, Windy How, Hawkshead, Lancashire.

SHERINGHAM, NORFOLK.—To Let, furnished, semi-detached House, by the month or longer. Three sitting, six bedrooms, bath. Good golfing and bathing. Near station.—U. M., 43, Newmarket-road, Norwich.

EASTBOURNE.—Comfortable private BOARDING HOUSE, close to sea and Devonshire Park. Terms moderate.—Mrs. FRANK HARRIS, Falconhurst, Jevington-gardens.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea-level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort.

THE ABERYSTWYTH CONGREGATION will gladly assist Visitors to find Apartments.—Stamped envelope, A. JOINSON, Chairman, Pier-street.

SOUTHEND HOLIDAY HOME.—Open all the year round.—Accommodation provided for Six Visitors, elder scholars, teachers, or members connected with our Missions and Schools. Present bookings, July and part of August. June and September are now vacant. For particulars and application form, apply to the Local Hon. Sec., Mr. J. MURROW, Bellevue-road, Southend.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Enlarged, Remodelled, Refurnished.

PRONOUNCED BY THE PRESS TO BE THE BEST TEMPERANCE HOTEL IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Accommodation for about 250 Guests.

Highly commended by the Rev. Dr. Aked, Rev. Rowland Hill, Rev J. H Jowett, M.A., Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. Alderman White, M.P., the Misses Cadbury and thousands of other guests.

Spacious Coffee, Reading & Drawing Rooms. Electric Light throughout.

Apartments, Service and Table d'Hote Breakfast from 5/- to 6/6 per day (with Dinner from 8/- to 9/6

77 & 101,

Southampton Row, London.

FREDERIC SMITH & SONS.

Near the British Museum.

KINGSLEY HOTEL

HART STREET, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, LONDON.

This well-appointed and commodious Temperance Hotel has passenger Lift; Electric Light in all Rooms: Bathrooms on every Floor; Spacious Dining, Drawing, Writing, Reading, Smoking and Billiard Rooms; All Floors Fireproof; Perfect Sanitation; Night Porter; Telephone.

Bedrooms from 3s. to 5s. per night.

Inclusive charge for Bedroom, Attendance, Table d'Hôte Breakfast and Dinner, from 8s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. per day. Full Tariff and Testimonials on application.

Telegraphic Address: "BOOKCRAFT," LONDON.

EATON'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL,

22, Guilford Street, Russell Square, LONDON.

Facing the Gardens of the Foundling Institution.

Central. Homelike. Beds from 1s. 6d. Breakfast and Tea from 1s. Patronized repeatedly by many visitors during the 30 years of its existence.

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A. Honours Lond. Preparation for London Matriculation, Trinity College, and Associated Board of Musicians. Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. Apply to the Head Mistress.

Terms for Advertisements.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF-PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6

Special Terms for a Series.

Calendar Notices, 10s. per year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted,

20 words, 1s. 3 insertions charged as 2.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Sole Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 20 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, May 21, 1904.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3231. NEW SERIES, No. 335.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1904. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

WHIT-WEEK ANNIVERSARY MEETINGS—
SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION 337
ESSEX HALL LECTURE 339
ASSOCIATION SERMON 341
BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION ANNUAL MEETING... ... 344
OBITUARY—
The late J. P. Thomasson 347
NOTES OF THE WEEK 348
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 349
OUR CALENDAR 349
ADVERTISEMENTS 350

WHIT-WEEK ANNIVERSARY MEETINGS.

THE meetings of the week are still in progress as we write, and our present issue can furnish only a part of the record. Of the numbers in attendance, as compared with other years, it is not easy to judge; but of the stimulus of a great gathering, and the cordial spirit that prevailed, there can be no mistake. The College question, we find, has been the occasion of a good deal of feeling, not entirely at one, but we must hope that the week's meetings and discussions, in private even more than in public, may have led to the clearing up of some misunderstandings and a more complete mutual sympathy between those who hold opposite opinions. If that proves to be the case the result can only be for good.

It was a great disappointment that Miss MARIAN PRITCHARD, President of the Sunday School Association, was prevented by illness from being present, but the warm expressions of regard and gratitude for her work in the good cause, for which her absence gave occasion, should furnish a tonic that will materially hasten her recovery. And as one speaker very naturally suggested, another year may find for Miss Pritchard the opportunity which she now has missed.

The Essex Hall Lecture this year was a notable utterance, and a large and most appreciative audience had the privilege of welcoming Professor WENDT. When the lecture is published, as it will be immediately, readers will be able to appreciate even more fully than at a first hearing how wide its range of thought, how helpful its spiritual insight, and how far-reaching and significant for the progress of liberal religion its results. It was a special pleasure to see Dr. CLIFFORD on the platform, and hear his cordial words, joining in the vote of thanks to the lecturer. Of Professor WENDT'S lecture at Oxford on Friday afternoon we hope next week to have a report.

Little Portland-street Chapel was well filled for the religious service on Wednesday morning. There could be no better opening hymn for such a service than that of SAMUEL LONGFELLOW, beginning,

O Life that makest all things new,
The blooming earth, the thoughts of men!
Our pilgrim feet, wet with thy dew,
In gladness hither turn again!

The Rev. W. G. TARRANT, who was the preacher, also conducted the service, reading as lessons, Isaiah lv. and parts of Romans xi. and xii. The sermon (published here in full), as the PRESIDENT afterwards said, in his word of grateful acknowledgment, was helpful and uplifting. It was a strong and timely appeal for new courage and the quickening of faith, in a great and sacred cause. Mr. JOHN HARRISON'S presence at the organ helped, as always, towards the true spirit of devotion which pervaded the whole service.

After the service, as in former years, came the President's luncheon for the official representatives of other Associations, with toasts eloquent of good feeling and loyalty to great principles, of which we are not permitted to publish any report; and then the business meeting of the Association. Of the evening meeting and Thursday morning Conference we must reserve our report.

On Thursday morning the Rev. J. WORSLEY AUSTIN first conducted a brief devotional service, and papers were then read by the Rev. L. P. JACKS and the Rev. C. J. STREET, of which the titles were:—"The Drift of Present Day Religious Thought," and "The Supply of Ministers for our Churches" respectively.

The Conversazione on Thursday evening, held this year at the Portman Rooms, where the guests were received by the President, Mr. W. ARTHUR SHARPE, and Mrs. SHARPE, brought the meetings of the Association to a very pleasant close.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

THE annual meeting of the Association was held on Tuesday afternoon at Essex Hall. The President, Miss Marian Pritchard, to the great regret of all, was unable to be present, as she was only just recovering from an attack of influenza and was forbidden to come out. The Rev. James Harwood, the ex-President, therefore presided, both at the meeting and at the previous luncheon, which was held at the Holborn Restaurant. In the morning there had been a meeting of the delegates of the District Societies for Conference.

The meeting opened with the singing of a hymn, written for the occasion by the President, of which this is the first verse:—

From far and near we gather,
From north, south, east and west,
To seek fresh inspiration
To guide us in our quest.
We fain would help our children
Prepare for coming strife,
And teach them how to conquer
In the Battlefield of Life.

The CHAIRMAN expressed their great regret that Miss Pritchard, who had rendered more service to the Association than any one living, was unable to be present. She had served in every other office, and it was almost tragical that on this one occasion, when they had hoped to show her the honour and affection in which she was held, they had to be disappointed. They would, he was sure, desire to send to Miss Pritchard affectionate greetings, and best wishes for her speedy recovery. He then read a letter from the President, in which she said how strange it was that after having been present at every annual meeting for forty years she should have to miss just that one, when she was to have had the honour of presiding. It would have been an added pleasure to her to be there, because the meeting would mark her "silver wedding" to the Committee, as it was twenty-five years since she had been elected a member.

Mr. ION PRITCHARD, hon. sec., then presented the report of the committee, and the treasurer's accounts, as Dr. Blake Odgers was unfortunately obliged to be down at Plymouth, holding a court. The accounts showed a small balance in hand, but a falling off both of subscriptions and receipts for sale of publications. In presenting the report, he called special attention to Miss Lawford's book on the Early Italian Masters, published that day, and to the Lesson Notes, which were taken by from 90 to 100 of the schools. He said that the Oxford Summer Session seemed to him one of the most important pieces of work they did. He had seen lukewarm teachers turned into enthusiasts by taking part in one of those sessions, and he urged the schools to send a representative, if necessary paying the expenses, so that they might receive a report and share in the stimulus of the meetings.

THE REPORT.

The Report opened with a reference to the new Education Acts and their bearing on religious education, recording the widespread opposition on this ground. Typical resolutions, urging systematic moral instruction, e.g., "That the fundamental truths of kindness, of mutual help, of religious reverence, and of active service should be systematically taught to children," were quoted; and it was added: "In these resolutions and in their opposition to denominational religious teaching in our national schools, the committee recognise the signs of a time not far distant when, in order to meet differences of opinion so strongly defined, it will be found advisable to dissociate theological instruction altogether from State-supported schools. When this serious change takes place, increased responsibilities will be laid on parents and Sunday-schools; and the question naturally arises whether the schools as at present constituted and carried on, will be equal to the demand made upon them. This vital question will have to be earnestly considered and answered by the individual schools. The committee can do little beyond calling the attention of superintendents and teachers to what may be termed an approaching crisis in the history of the Sunday-school system, and offering such assistance as they may be able to render.

"The character and efficiency of the teachers are the foundation on which the Sunday-school is built, and here the Committee can help by providing suitable literature, by the institution of the Oxford Summer Session, and by advice on the organisation and conduct of a school. Their year's work has followed these lines."

Particulars were then given of meetings at which the Association had been represented, including the International Council meeting at Amsterdam, in connection with which a complete set of the Association's publications had been presented to the Rev. P. H. Hugenholtz's Free Congregation. The hope was expressed that at the coming Summer Session at Oxford Miss Mossel would attend and give a lecture on religious education in the State schools in Holland. The formation of a new District Union, "The Newcastle District S.S.A.," was welcomed. Among the friends of the Association lost by death, special mention was made of Dr. Brooke Herford, whose well-known "Story of Religion in England" had had the widest circulation of any book published by the Association; Mr. Harry Rawson, a former President and for many years the Manchester publisher of the Association; Mrs. Alfred Lawrence, and Mr. J. T. Preston, and the Rev. Joseph Freeston, so closely identified with the schools of the North.

As to publications the report said:—"The sale returns show that our publications are not so freely bought by our own schools as in past years, in spite of the increased catalogue, and this appears to apply more especially to class books. If the reason for this is that teachers prepare themselves more than formerly, reading up and thinking out their subjects, so as to enable them to give their lessons in class without the use of a book, the Committee would not regret the diminished sale of their literature. It is, however, very often the case that the volumes which would help the teacher in his work are unknown to him; and, as a remedy for this, the Committee decided in January last to send a visitor to the schools, who should act as a publication agent, bringing to the notice of teachers the books of the Association. This mission was entrusted to the Rev. Frederic Allen, who has, during the past few months, visited the Midlands, the Northern Counties, and the Manchester District for the purpose of carrying out the object in view. It is too soon to say how far this effort has been successful, but the Committee are glad to say that their representative has disposed of a large number of volumes."

The year's publications included Young Days, Monthly Notes for Sunday Classes, the new edition of the Hymn and Tune Book, "Come to Me, O ye Children," Pulpit talks to boys and girls by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, and "Stories of the Early Italian Masters," by Miss K. F. Lawford.

Forthcoming publications included a volume of "Bible Stories," by the late Dr. Brooke Herford, "Stories and Scenes from the Life of Jesus," by the Rev. T. P. Spedding, a book on "New Testament Literature," by the Rev. J. H. Weatherall, and a new book on "Unitarian Faith," by Miss Marian Pritchard.

Particulars were also given of the Fourth Summer Session for S.S. Teachers, to be held at Manchester College, Oxford, July 1–9, and of lantern slides to be had on loan; also of the consulting correspondents.

The CHAIRMAN, in moving the adoption of the report and accounts, endorsed what Mr. Pritchard had said as to the inspiration of the Oxford Summer Session, and said that if they were to carry out all the suggestions made at their morning conference their income must be doubled.

The Rev. J. COLLINS ODGERS seconded the motion, and noted with satisfaction that in several districts there was an increase in the number of their scholars. He also had seen the great benefit derived from the Oxford Summer Session, and hoped this year to be there. He spoke of the great value of the Association's publications, and the joy with which they should welcome the promised book by Miss Pritchard on the faith they all held dear.

The motion was unanimously adopted.

The Rev. ALEXANDER WEBSTER moved a resolution of thanks to the officers and committee for their services in the past year, and their election for the new year, with the Rev. W. G. Tarrant as President. When he looked at the publications of that Association, he said, and remembered the kind of literature the boys and girls had when he was a boy, he felt deeply how much they needed such an Association as that in Scotland. They were supplying the very books that were needed. Referring to a recent article by Professor Adeney in the Christian World on the function of a Sunday School, he said they had solved the difficulty as to whether the school was to provide an atmosphere for the sake of spiritual character or to give instruction, for they did both. That idea of a religious atmosphere permeated all their literature, and their books gave just the instruction that was needed. He wished they could get those books into the hands of te achers in Scotland.

The resolution was seconded by the Rev. T. LLOYD JONES and unanimously carried.

The PRESIDENT then moved:—

That the hearty welcome of this meeting be given to the following representatives of Sunday School Societies:—American Sunday School Society, Rev. W. H. Lyon, D.D.; Irish Non-Subscribing Association, Rev. T. Dunkerley, B.A.; Scottish Sunday School Union, Mr. W. H. Ballantyne; South Wales Association, Rev. E. O. Jenkins; South-East Wales Society, Rev. W. J. Phillips; Bolton District Union, Rev. R. C. Moore; Liverpool Sunday School Society, Rev. T. Lloyd Jones; London Sunday School Society, Miss V. Preston; Manchester District Association, Rev. T. P. Spedding; Midland Association, Miss Cross; North Cheshire Union, Rev. W. Harrison, North-East Lancashire Union, Mr. J. T. Bibby; North-Midland Association, Mr. William Jones; Sheffield and District Union, Rev. C. J. Street, M.A.; Southern Union, Rev. Clement E. Pike; South Cheshire Union, Rev. James C. Street; South-Eastern Union, Rev. Frederic Allen; Western Union, Rev. John McDowell; Yorkshire Union, Rev. John Ellis.

To this a representative of the schools of America, England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales each in turn replied.

The Rev. W. H. LYON, D.D., of Brookline, Mass., said that he had no official right to speak for their American Sunday School Society, but he had been President, and knew the work, and he could say the Society was in a very flourishing condition, with more scholars than ever, and a treasury full, though not over-full. When he was a small boy their Sunday Schools were all full, and the best men and women taught in them. Then came a time when the schools fell into disrepute, and the best families withdrew their children, and the schools were disorderly, ill-taught, and inefficient. But now the schools were coming up again, and in every church that was alive more attention than ever was given to the school. In the wealthier churches superintendents and teachers were, as far as possible, paid, and they secured the best capacity for the work. In his own church they had, as superintendent, a salaried official, who was a day schoo teacher, and brought all his special training to bear on the Sunday School; and they had also a paid Kindergarten teacher. Under the lead of their enthusiasm they got men and women of the better class to take up the work, not less earnest and better instructed than those who had previously been the teachers. People were again sending their children to the school, and they found that while the work cost a good deal, it drew the parents also to the church, and so their income was correspondingly increased and their treasurer was satisfied. They wanted to redeem the Sunday School from the disrepute into which it had fallen and to show that it had as great a work as the day school to do and must be as highly honoured.

The Rev. T. P. SPEDDING, President of the Manchester District Association, responded for the English schools, and pointed out that he spoke on behalf of 2,911 teachers and 31,983 scholars. He regretted the separation of the Liverpool Association from the Manchester District Association, and said that what they wanted was not more societies but more schools.

The Rev. T. DUNKERLEY responded for the Irish schools, Mr. W. H. BALLANTYNE for Scotland, and the Rev. W. J. PHILLIPS for Wales.

On the motion of the Rev. F. H. JONES it was then agreed:—

That this meeting of teachers and supporters of Sunday Schools strongly condemns the Licensing Bill, now before Parliament, because—

(a) It takes away the power of refusing licences from the local magistrates, who have special knowledge of the localities.

(b) It endows the holders or owners of licensed houses, the effect of which will be to retard national sobriety, upon which the virtue, and happiness of parents and children so largely depend.

The chair was then taken by the newly-elected President, the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, who called on Miss Clephan, of Leicester, to read her paper on "Religious Education."

This paper we are anxious to publish in full, and regret that it cannot find a place in our present issue.

The Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE opened a discussion on the paper, and said they must all agree with its religious implications, but he was not so sure that he could agree with its political implication. If they could have all the world brought to the beautiful state of thought and feeling pictured by Miss Clephan, none of them would wish for anything different, but outside were an enormous number of men and women to whom that picture of a national religion would be utterly unsatisfactory. To a large number the church and the sacraments were essential, and on the other side were the great bodies of orthodox Nonconformists, but neither their idea of religion nor the Anglican could be accepted by the nation as a whole, and he did not think there could be any settlement of the Education question till the people of England got outside both, and came more and more to look at the question of national education on the political side from the point of view of citizenship, and fell back on what is called secular education. But in the religious education of the children they had a field the most important possible. After looking at a good many documents and examination papers in Board and denominational schools he could not help feeling that at the present time a great deal was taught as religion to the children which no intelligent man or woman could accept as true. The teachers were bound by authority and tradition, and did not teach, as in all other subjects, with a single eye to truth. Outside the State and State schools there was a great field for them to unite with lovers of truth everywhere that the children might be taught simple truths, which they would not have to cast off as they grew up, but things that would inspire their thought and life.

Mr. E. WILKES SMITH, of Richmond, expressed his regret that they seemed to be drifting into a system of secular education, which would not allow the teaching of the Bible to the children.

The Rev. H. ENFIELD DOWSON noted the three alternative courses possible in the matter of religious education. Miss Clephan's beautiful ideal they all would like, if only it could be attained. What was called the right of entry they could not tolerate. He was convinced that their only course was to take religious education outside the citizen schools, yet that did not mean taking practical religion out of the school. The religious man made its power felt, whatever he was teaching, as he himself had known full well when, at school at Norwich, he came under the influence of John Withers Dowson and Travers Madge. In the matter of education they must fight the battle of the people against the churches and the priests. As Unitarians they must use all their powers as friends of the true influence of religion, both in and out of the schools. It was one of the shames and scandals of their country that they allowed religion to bar the way to the good of the children of the people.

The Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER confessed to a special heresy on that subject, and offered a fourth alternative. He thought that if proper care were taken in the appointment of teachers they ought to be trusted, and left free to give what religious instruction they judged to be best and most suited to the capacity of the children. The general good sense of the body of teachers would, he held, work out a result satisfactory on the whole. Nothing could be more unsatisfactory than the present arrangement.

The time available for discussion having elapsed, the Rev. J. C. STREET proposed a vote of thanks to Miss Pritchard for her services as President during the year, to Mr. Harwood for presiding at that meeting, and to Miss Clephan for her paper. Miss Pritchard, he said, had long been a singular inspiration to many of them in their work. Of Miss Clephan's paper also he spoke with grateful appreciation, as setting before them a beautiful religious ideal.

The Rev. ALFRED HALL, who seconded, asked leave, as that would probably be his only opportunity of speaking during the week, to make a special reference. He thought there was no chapel in the country to which that Association was so much indebted as to the Octagon Chapel at Norwich. The Octagon had given them James Martineau, to whose early enthusiasm for Sunday School work he referred. It had given them John Withers Dowson, and Travers Madge, and I. M. Wade. Yet the Octagon was in danger of being left without a Sunday-school. He trusted that friends throughout the country would come to their aid in the appeal they were making to secure adequate school buildings, which would be also a centenary memorial to Dr. Martineau.

The PRESIDENT enforced Mr. Hall's appeal, though he said he believed he was out of order; but that was a matter of the most vital consequence to the Octagon, and he might add, to the Eastern Union. The vote of thanks was very cordially passed, and the meeting terminated. A reception was afterwards held, tea being served in the Council Room.

THE fourth part of the "Oxyrhynchus Papyri," which will be issued by the Græco-Roman Branch of the Egypt Exploration Fund, early in June, is likely to surpass in interest all the previous publications of Drs. Grenfell and Hunt. The place of honour is naturally assigned to the new "Sayings of Jesus," and a fragment of a lost Gospel, a few details with regard to which were announced last autumn. A cheap popular edition of the new "Sayings," and the Gospel fragment, together with the "Logia" discovered in 1897, will be issued by Mr. Henry Frowde on behalf of the Egypt Exploration Fund.

ESSEX HALL LECTURE.

THE IDEA AND REALITY OF REVELATION.

BY PROFESSOR H. H. WENDT, OF JENA.

CHRISTIANS from the earliest days, Professor Wendt said at the beginning of his lecture, by asserting that Christianity is founded on revelation, have expressed their conviction of the highest value of their religion and its superiority to all other religious and philosophical systems. Christianity, in their view, is not a mere human product, but the work of God Himself; God is not merely the object of Christian faith, but its author. When they speak of Jesus Christ as the revelation of God they mean more than if they should call him the highest teacher and pattern of piety, a religious genius or hero; they mean that he is really the ambassador and organ of God, that his work is a divine work, and his words are divine words. Those who are not Christians might speak of him as a religious genius; he can be named a revealer of God only by those who are his disciples, and convinced of the truth of his preaching.

To show how far that is a true conception, and how the reality of such revelation must now be understood, was the purpose of the lecture.

Old and New Idea of Revelation.

In ecclesiastical tradition revelation was something miraculous. Christian dogmatics indeed admitted that the whole world as created by God and dependent on Him, was a divine revelation, which mankind was capable of apprehending by reason; but beyond that general revelation there was a special revelation, miraculously given by God, through the instrumentality of angels, visions, dreams, and inspirations. That special revelation, embodied in the religion of Israel and Christianity, rested essentially on miracle; but now it was just those miraculous occurrences which had become problematical to wide circles of Christians.

Scientific study of the Bible had destroyed the old idea of miraculous inspiration; historical investigation of the life of Jesus and literary criticism of the Gospels had led to essential modification of the old dogmatic Christology; progress in the investigation of the history of religions had shown that the Israelite and Christian religions could no longer be sharply separated from all other religions as alone of divine origin. Some elements of truth and inspiration were to be found in all.

From such results of criticism arose the modern problem as to revelation. When they gave free scope to investigation proceeding upon historical critical, and religious historical lines, could they still maintain the old idea, that Christianity was founded on real revelation, and that Jesus Christ was the agent of a complete revelation of God? What is the right idea of revelation? Is the miraculous origin of religious knowledge essential to that idea? Where can we recognise the reality of revelation?

Revelation in the Facts of Life.

According to the modern idea of revelation, the lecturer proceeded, it did not consist of a mere communication to the intellect, the direct bestowal of thoughts and tenets; it consists, above all, in facts, facts in which God shows Himself active, and in which man wins practical experience of His gracious will. Where historical facts were so understood as to carry religious conviction, there was revelation. It was a result not of pure reason, but of intuition. The light suddenly dawned upon a man. He laid hold of the thought of the unseen world behind and above the visible world; or, rather, he was laid hold of by that thought. All at once he saw worldly things in the illumination which they received through their connection with the higher world. He saw how that illumination solved his difficulties and removed his weight of troubles. If he had already possessed the treasure of religious knowledge, a new and special element in the nature and will of God suddenly dawned upon him, difficulties and obscurities which had hitherto beset him were elucidated; new tasks and new aims are presented to him,

Immediate Vision.

Such religious intuition was most clearly to be observed when prophetic personalities acquired new religious insight in moments of ecstasy; yet even where there was no ecstatic vision, the origin of new religious insight was essentially the same in its psychology. Even when religious knowlege was first acquired by way of training and tradition, such intuition was necessary in order that truth and the value of what was learnt might become clear to the learner. Where that enlightenment did not find entrance of itself, it could not be constrained by any demonstration or authority.

A Divine Mystery.

That intuitive religious perception was a mysterious thing. Analogies were to be found in the creative work of the poet and artist, and even of the scientific discoverer and inventive genius. There came flashes of insight, not to be accounted for by any necessary sequence of logic, flashes of insight none the less mysterious because there had been psychological preparation. In the language of religious history it was especially those moments of the dawning and flashing of new religious insight that constituted revelation—immediate communications of God to man. Such revelation, the dawning of the knowledge of God, remained mysterious. It could not be made or constrained, it must be given. It was due to the working of divine power in man.

The Test of Truth.

It must, of course, be recognised that illusions might be given in prophetic ecstasy, just as worthless fancies were suggested to the scientific investigator, and religious ideas acquired by intuition were revelation only in so far as they were true. Of that truth experience alone could be the test, experience in relation to the established facts of life. On the one hand were facts in the world, in which God was operative; on the other hand was the ability of man to behold the supramundane. "The facts constitute real revelation only in so far as in moments of intuitive illumination we perceive God as working in them. The intuitive view of God again is revelation only so far as it finds support in the facts."

The Reality of Revelation.

So Professor Wendt passed to the second main division of his lecture and asked, Where do we meet the reality of revelation? And the answer was, In the teaching and the life of Christ, as its culmination, though not its end. "Whoever is vividly impressed with the fact that the preaching of Jesus, so transcendental in content and tendency, is confirmed by the facts of the world, by the facts of our inner life, by the demands of our conscience, and who feels that it alone affords the proper key to the understanding of the natural world and human history, he will perceive that it was a real revelation of God which Jesus obtained in his religious intuition." His calm vision of God, the heavenly Father, his life of filial piety and brotherly sympathy and helpfulness, faithful unto death, carried conviction, as belonging to the realities of the divine life. It was not in him alone that we beheld the higher and divine life, but nowhere else in such strength and purity, such all-prevailing greatness. So he was himself the great fact of divine revelation, seen amid the divine order of the world; standing in immediate relation to the saving purpose of God. In him was recognised the special means which God had chosen to establish His kingdom, the kingdom of true children of God.

The True Humanity of Christ.

Such an acknowledgment did not mean any break with the acknowledgment of his human nature. "The power of intuitive religious perception which we attribute to him in the highest degree is possessed also by others, and is in no kind of opposition to the ordinary development of human mental life." Nor was the moral power of Jesus foreign to the nature of man. Thus no barriers were set to historical investigation and explanation of the life of Jesus. The fact that he used the forms of thought of his own time and worked over traditional material did not alter the fact that he was the highest revelation of God. And, at the same time, they had a standard to test other religious ideas.

Progressive Revelation.

Both in the Old Testament and in other ancient religions they found divine elements, some feeling after God and perception of the divine realities of life, even though wrapt up in mythologies. There were gleams of truth in the other religions, and a richer development in Israel, where they saw the early henotheism advance to ethical monotheism. Then, when the revelation reached its culminating point in Jesus Christ, even that was not the end, but they had within the Christian Church a continually widening revelation, a further interpretation of what had been given them in Christ. "The highest knowledge of God, which was first received and preached by Jesus, can be apprehended by others only in moments of intuition, when the truth and value of this knowledge become illuminating for them. This light must be given to them. The Christian faith is, in this respect, a gift of God." But, the lecturer added, for living faith, not only knowledge, but will is needed. Christian faith is a living trust in the grace of the heavenly Father, and striving after the blessedness of God's children.

Conclusion.

And this was his final word:—

"So we may form, at last, our conclusion as to the purpose of revelation in its whole historical development. Revelation wherever it exists creating in mankind a knowledge of God, is a means for the loving purpose of God, which aims at educating men to become His free children, participating in His moral attributes and supramundane life. All God's workings have this education of mankind as their final end. This end is served by the whole natural world; it is furthered by the mental equipment of man with reason, conscience, and freedom; and it is served, also, by the religious knowledge which God has granted to man, in a gradual historical revelation, finding its fullest expression in Jesus Christ. "Of God and through him and unto him are all things; to him be glory for ever. Amen."

Professor Wendt's lecture was delivered in Essex Hall on Tuesday evening, before a very large audience, Mr. W. ARTHUR SHARPE, President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, being in the chair.

In introducing the lecturer, the Chairman said that Professor Wendt came to them from a theological platform as free as anything they could find there. The lecture would be at once printed and published.

At the conclusion he called upon Professor Carpenter to express their great indebtedness to Dr. Wendt.

The Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER said it was a rare privilege to listen to the discourse of one who belonged to a different religious communion to their own, but who nevertheless had been led by the freedom of religious study to conclusions and sentiments analogous to those which were dear to themselves. No one could have listened to Dr. Wendt without having his own faith strengthened, his own religious sentiments quickened by the clear and fervent prophetic spirit with which he had spoken to them. Especially interesting must it be to those who could retrace the phases of their own religious life, to have listened to that subtle and discriminating analysis of the psychological process by which new truth was borne into the mind. Specially valuable, too, the plea that the different insights of different ages, lands, and times had, if not equal value, yet equal validity as part of the process of the Divine education of the race. The results of the last century's study of the religions of the world were of incalculable value, full of inspiration and hope. Those results Dr. Wendt had emphasised, with all the fulness of his learning and the discrimination of his religious insight. They had received from him confirmation of that word of Emerson's,

> One accent of the Holy Ghost
> The heedless world has never lost.

The Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG said it was a privilege to be allowed to add one word of gratitude to Dr. Wendt for his address, and the wonderfully beautiful spirit of it. They sometimes thought of criticism as hard, dry, and soulless. They could never think of it so while they remembered the accents of Dr. Wendt. When a man who was a masterly wielder of the tools of criticism, combined with that faculty a deep, religious life, which they could feel glowing and throbbing in him as he spoke, they learnt to know how vain was that anxiety many had, lest too active a criticism should lead to too slack a religion. Coming up, he had been reading the wonderful chapters of another great critic, Auguste Sabatier, on the Religion of the Holy Spirit, and he coupled in his mind the French name and the German name, and some English names he might recall, as revealing the deep-down, enduring unity which really lay between all truly scientific criticism and the living spirit of religion.

Dr. CLIFFORD, who was very warmly received, when called upon by the President, as a member of another community, said he was very happy to be there. For many years he had been greatly indebted to Dr. Wendt, whose works had instructed, inspired, and guided him. The people to whom he ministered were greatly indebted to Dr. Wendt. One characteristic of his lecture impressed him more than any other. It recalled his stay at Tübingen, where one got criticism in its most austere development, yet among teachers and students he discovered the most beautiful, entrancing blending of genuine piety with what he might call remorseless criticism. He congratulated Dr. Wendt both on the richness of thought of his lecture and his wonderful use of our language, and concluded with a word of personal thanks.

The vote of thanks was carried by acclamation.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.—The secretaries have received from the secretaries of the "North and East Lancashire Unitarian Mission" the following unanimous resolution of their Committee:—

That the North and East Lancashire Unitarian Mission, recognising the services of the Unitarian Home Missionary College to the cause of religion during the past fifty years, desires to congratulate it upon the attainment of its Jubilee, and expresses its good wishes for its continued success in future years.

AT the recent Annual Meeting of the Band of Hope Union, particulars were given as to the progress of the work. The 29,189 Bands of Hope and other juvenile temperance societies, with an estimated membership of 3,363,973, represent an increase of 682 societies and 33,743 members on the returns of last year; 340 county, town, and district unions were said to be rapidly progressing. In London alone 2,191 ordinary and many special meetings had been addressed; in 940 cities, towns, and villages 3,892 addresses in schools and institutions had been attended by 398,721 scholars and 12,869 teachers. From the Trading Department 896,359 copies of the Society's publications were issued. The young people collected over £1.000 for the Temperance Hospital and Band of Hope movement. The total income for the year's work in its many branches amounted to £4,021 14s. 4d.

THE ASSOCIATION SERMON.

"THE DAY IS AT HAND."

BY THE REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

"The night is far spent and the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness and let us put on the armour of light.'—Rom. xiii. 12.

Is "the day" really at hand? Let us re-assure ourselves. An onward movement does exist, an unmistakable advance in the world's life. In spite of all our fears and despairs it is there—perhaps, to our shame, in spite of our indifference and indolence; certainly in spite of our exaggerations and errors of reckoning. The tide moves and bears us on.

The apostle who wrote these words was probably mistaken as to the precise nature of the world-birth the throes of which marked the first century of Christendom. But Christendom itself stands as the full and sufficient justification of his trust, his deep conviction of coming change.

Wordsworth tells us that when the Bastille fell in 1789 "prophetic harps in every grove were ringing." Similar, if less excited, prophecies arose from time to time through that part of the Victorian age when Liberty, Commerce, and Peace were the watchwords of Great Britain's greatest statesmen. Indeed, if a modern satirist wished to emulate Juvenal and Johnson there is matter enough in last century's record to fill a new page on "The Vanity of Human Wishes."

But is the story of these high hopes and their frustration wholly mournful? We must needs grieve, indeed, when the experience of maturity chills the glowing poetry of youth. We must regret when any man's "Locksley Hall Sixty Years After" has lost the hopeful spirit of his earlier "Locksley Hall," and when the chief occupation left is the enumeration of life's unfulfilled prophecies. But while the old leaves wither new buds are forming, and the impulse to hope is reborn in the very hour when good men disappointed go about the streets mournful. Let good men try to be wise men. Doubtless there are times of reaction. Decadence seems triumphant—only where there are no young hearts. Reaction, at worst, can only be temporary in a current so deep and broad as that which sweeps on in the continuous evolution of the world. The fact that each generation expects the dawn of brighter hours and a better world is an element that, like a true prayer, itself tends to fulfilment. It is well for mankind that the young men see visions; let the old men return to the spirit of their earlier dreams. There are manifold signs to encourage both. What matter a cloud here or there—the stars in their courses fight for us. Never in the ages has there been an age like this, so rich in gathered experience, so skilled in method, so full of discovery. Men are coming into their kingdom. The light of the day that is at hand streams through every adaptation and invention that enables them to become less the slaves of their physical wants and more the free tenants of a world of beautiful thoughts and creative purposes. Each new glimpse of the Mind within matter, each unveiling of the Will divine in ascertained "law," each fresh perception of the wonder and majesty of the universe, is one ray the more breaking in upon that darkness where men stumble and fall.

Knowledge and Social Reform.

Everyone must admit that "knowledge comes," even though he may add that "wisdom lingers." The first fiat of creation is "Let there be light"; and knowledge is the light in which alone wisdom can grow. Knowledge comes; that day at least is dawning more decidedly every year; and if there are regions of human experience that still lie in deep shadow, we see so much already that not to walk in faith as to the rest would be unreasonable if not absolutely sinful. The fact that many things about us are still gloomy is due less to our want of knowledge than to our want of diligence in practising what we know. In our large cities and in many a rural district the physical condition of the people is anything but satisfactory; but this is not due to the absence of good laws but of goodwill to obey them. It is this defect that is most to be deplored. The spectacle of the moral condition of many, not of the poor alone but of the well-to-do and rich. as it is illustrated by daily evidence of vice, drunkenness, gambling, industrial oppression and commercial dishonesty, forms a very dark background to any picture of society that we can truthfully paint. Looking such things straight in the face as we ought to do, what is there that we still can say by way of reassurance?

I think the best thing that can be said is that the number of those who are deeply dissatisfied with things as they are is increasing. Men and women, true-hearted and unselfish, do feel the degradation of their fellows with a poignant keenness. Smile if you will at the vagaries of the "Nonconformist conscience"; satirise as they deserve the fusses of philanthropists, amateur and professional; lament, as you must if sensible, the flaccidity and nervelessness of bodies of religious men when questions arise which seem to threaten that modern "Ark of the Lord"—party interests; yet, after all due abatement has been made from the apparent forces of reform, there remains, let us be sure, a permanent and unswerving current of right feeling and resolution which must tell at last upon the national life. The worst is worst when it does not know its badness. The day dawns wherever men only so much as begin to see that things ought to be otherwise. This profound dismay, this exasperation that men feel at the wrongs industrial, commercial, and political, which so obstinately refuse to be remedied, and which in some directions seem rather to be permanently entrenching their position, this horror created in us by the apathy visible in many quarters while the terrible story of violence and dishonour goes on in the world from day to day, shall be to us a token for good. All is not lost till men acquiesce in sin, and God is on our side till we make treaty with the devil. The advancing movement is slow, very slow, and we whose years are few chafe at the little progress made in a life-time. But progress there is, and the kingdom is coming. The student of nature, the social reformer, the pioneer of political liberty and peace national and international, the dreamer of greater things to come may still dream on and labour to fulfil his dreams; he may make mistakes in his forecasts and failures in his practical efforts; he may do anything but despair.

Theology Advancing.

In the midst of this complex scene of modern life, how does the case stand with theology, the earnest discriminating thought that like a casket encloses the jewel of religion? Here, who can doubt, even though judgment be suspended elsewhere? Advancing thought—not merely changing thought, but thought more in accord with the truth, there can be no other true progress in thought—is it not a necessity in these days? We live on a new earth, beneath new heavens; and all creatures, the races beside us and our own race with them, nay, all things inanimate as well as animate stand together in a new relationship. Humanity's story stretches for us into a past which dwarfs the "ancient history" of the schools into a tale of yesterday. Our life bespeaks vitality in what men once called dead; and, to the instructed mind, so far from the soul cleaving unto the dust, the dust itself speaks with the tones of spirit. Christianity as a world-movement finds itself correlated to the other ethnic systems. Even those who hold it as a religion superior to all others as the genus homo rises above the other genera of terrestrial creatures must in our day admit that the sweep of evolution includes religious systems as well as biological forms.

All this must very seriously affect the theology of intelligent persons. Men simply cannot speak of God, and the soul, and human destiny, as once they did. All language that lives grows, and the language of our religion with it. The words we use, familiar from childhood, mean to us now other than they did—certainly other than they meant to the fathers. We read the Scriptures with a knowledge that makes them for us very different from what they seemed to be of old. The new learning has already greatly changed the emphasis where it has not overtly altered the principal themes of religious teaching. This is evident, I believe, in all the greater churches, especially, of course, in those that are freest to move. But that no church can escape the forces that make for change is rendered quite clear by the example of the Roman Catholic church.

Among the Catholics.

Pius IX., it is true, by his Syllabus of 1864, denounced rationalism in all its forms. We may take the denunciation as the first step towards coming to terms. Let him who thinks this too sanguine remember the story of the Church's dealings with Copernicanism. And how instructive is the case of Pius IX.'s venerable successor, the late Leo XIII., who, being less a dogmatist than a diplomatist, and one willing, so far as in him lay, to be at peace with all men, found himself obliged to recognise the force of the onward movement. The recognition was twofold. First he opposed; secondly, he decided to consider it. In 1893 he issued his letter "Providentissimus" on the subject of the Bible. It is, I hope, not too hard a thing to say that in this document the Vatican authorities defied daylight, so blank was its refusal to treat with Biblical science. But last year, shortly before his death, Leo and his advisers decided not to defy daylight any more. They instituted a commission to inquire into this new learning on the Bible, what it implies, and how best the faithful should deal with it. So far even the cumbrous and slow-moving machinery of the Roman Church has been forced to yield.

Meanwhile, the alerter spirits of that Church, with leaders like Loisy at their head, have pressed on for themselves into this field of inquiry; and the last decade has been, as all the world knows, an agitated and, I would add, a strangely hopeful period for Catholicism, especially French Catholicism. All the world knows the outer event—that five of Loisy's books have been formally condemned by the Sacred Congregation of the Index; but only those in intimate connection with Catholics know how profoundly the minds of the religious and the laity alike have been stirred by the appeal to recognise Biblical science. As for the official rebuke, that is quite normal, and follows the established precedents. Remember Galileo again; and also remember that the world has moved so effectually since his day that the repressive powers of authority are very far from being what they were. The final upshot remains to be seen; but obviously there is no more real power to prevent the spread of the new learning in that Church itself, despite all that may be involved, than there was of old to keep the rolling globe from circling round the sun.

Among the Protestants.

If this be done in the green tree, what of the dry? If even that Church which, to the dismay of all her more enlightened sons, thus persistently tries to justify the futile boast, semper eadem, is showing evidence of advancing thought, what of Protestantism? Here the night is, indeed, far spent; the dawn broadens apace. Who is ignorant of the widespread and significant change that has come over German theology since the days of Albrecht Ritschl? If orthodox French Protestantism has less in bulk to show for itself the writings of Auguste Sabatier are a brilliant proof that vigorous life is stirring there. Note the progress reported from time to time in Scotland and the United States; the welcome given to the cardinal idea of evolution not only in things natural but also in things spiritual; the zeal and ability displayed in gathering the results of criticism and the growing tendency to readjust doctrine to these results; note also the audacity, it is nothing else, with which not a few openly repudiate the language of the old standards of faith. And still further note, what is perhaps most noteworthy of all. To the credit of Christendom let it be said, it has never quite lacked pioneers into the realm of truth, faithful often at cost. But in our days there is evidently a slackening not only of the fires of persecution but also of the spirit that refused to permit question and inquiry. The width of latitude extends year by year. By and by, some one will make a sort of flower-clock out of the doctrines that have successively been taken out of the list of the essential. Some have already folded their petals to sleep, others are closing. Biblical infallibility, where is its champion? Who, besides the travelling Dr. Torrey, considers an everlasting hell fire necessary to the glory of God the Father? In the Church of England to-day it is the question how thinly attenuated one's belief may be in the Virgin Birth to allow him still to recite the creeds in a "triumphant voice." To-morrow the physical resurrection will be at stake—and so dissolves what Matthew Arnold called the "Aberglaube."

Christian Simplicity v. Authority.

But, in the process of this dissolution, what else may go? When men, who are not profound scholars or practised philosophers, but just simple citizens immersed in daily duties and cares, ask for guidance towards a religion that shall satisfy the needs of the heart while not revolting their intelligence, what answers are possible? Various answers have been given already, one of them in Abbé Loisy's bold and clever petit livre, as he calls it, L'Evangile et L'Eglise, and this answer of his is, in fact, devised to counteract the force of another recently supplied by that learned, devout, and eloquent divine, Professor Adolf Harnack. The subject is of so great importance that I shall beg your close and patient attention to the substance of these two utterances, typical of the modern spirit in religion. Dr. Harnack, in his popular lectures addressed to the students at Berlin and published afterwards in the volume translated into English as "What is Christianity?" took the position familiar to many here present, that since a great part of what was once considered binding upon Christian credence is now known to rest on the slightest of foundations or on none, our true wisdom as friends of faith and virtue is to betake ourselves to the heart of the citadel, to find if we can the pith and centre of Christ's teaching, and to direct effort chiefly to the diffusion and embodiment in our own lives of what we discover to be the "essence of Christianity." This "essence," it will be remembered, Dr. Harnack defined as "Faith in God the Father, who is revealed by Jesus Christ"—a definition certainly simple enough and different enough from traditional statements of orthodox Protestantism to justify Loisy's wonder at what Luther would have thought of it. We know what we think of it. The hearts of Unitarians leap for joy to see Protestant theology, after so many weary years of controversy on minor points, returning, as it seems to us, to "the simplicity of Christ."

But, naturally, so simple a presentation of essential Christianity is not congenial to a son of the Catholic Church, who, notwithstanding the severe, nay harsh treatment accorded to him by the Church, has ever manifested a loyal attachment to it. The very book which has brought the sternest censure upon him was written to save Catholicism from the effects of Harnack's assault upon all elaborate systems of theology whatsoever. But Loisy sees that the Roman system can only be saved from annihilation in the sight of all intelligent men by frankly abandoning the insecure basis of Biblical authority. Himself not only a student but an original critic, he grants, without reserve, the composite character of the Synoptics. He assigns the Fourth Gospel to a position below which, as regards its authority, its severest critic can hardly wish to place it. So far the protagonists seem to be evenly matched; but when they come to close quarters, the champion of Romanism, after dealing a shrewd blow or two against the historical genius of his opponent, recedes into a haze of theory respecting the claims of the Church which suggest the Homeric cloud that descended to the salvation of Aphrodite's favourite. It is, however, not Loisy's way to deny the notorious. No critic could show more fearlessly than he does the mingled elements that combined in primitive Christianity; no one could more candidly point to the changing views and changing practices that have resulted at last in the amazing contrast which we see between the men and the thought of the upper chamber in Jerusalem, and the priests, dogmas, and ritual of Rome. But, taking the line which characterises the opposite tendency to that espoused by Harnack, Loisy finds the essence of Christianity, not in simple heartfelt faith in a heavenly Father who has been revealed by Jesus Christ, but in the life, thought, and practice of an institution, a corporation of faithful people, with whom Christ dwells as the Father dwells in him.

That this is no novel doctrine we all know; but its significance is greatly increased when we observe the absolute way in which this latest defender of the faith commits himself to it. Hitherto, though the emphasis in Catholic circles has always been placed on the authority of the Church as the investigator and teacher of truth, there has been ready to hand for simple souls a body of revelation in the gospel story. But now the legends and discourses upon which Christian art and devotion have dwelt this many generations, are not merely put aside, but are first submitted to unsparing dissection; and it is left for the Renans and Strausses of a new age to build up the disjecta membra into whatever lives of Christ they may. Meanwhile, the Scriptures having thus been analysed into a heterogeneous literature, there before the inquirer after religious truth stands mere traditional authority, naked and not ashamed, claiming the homage of the minds of men substantially by virtue of having managed, by a variety of means, some of them singularly undivine in appearance, to secure the suffrages of the majority. Something is due, no doubt, by way of respect to so successful a career of policy. Loisy and other apologists maintain with some show of reason that those very changes which render it difficult to identify the Church to-day with that of St. Peter and St. Paul, would not have come about if there had not been abundant vitality in the Church. Christianity is not what it was, they say, because, like the mustard-seed, it has grown, and this growth is itself a guarantee of divine grace. But if the parable is good for this case, why not for others? Apply it to things political. The French monarchy under Louis XV. was not what it was under Hugh Capet, and all its changes may be fairly described in the modern way as the evolution of an organism under the influences of a varying environment. But though, like the Roman Church, it also lived and grew, it was none the less fit at last to be cut down. More than survival is necessary to justify claims so stupendous as those made by this representative of ecclesiastical authority over the mind and conscience of men.

Unitarian Contribution: Faith and Service:

I have dwelt at this length upon these interesting facts in the present stage of religious development, in order that, if such grace be given us, we may consider our own aims in no petty mood, and with no narrowly bounded vision. While others all round us are looking forward, and striving to find the new way, the questions that press upon us specially cannot be evaded. What part has the Unitarian fellowship to play in this greater Reformation, which is big with fate not only for Christendom but for mankind? To that fellowship we belong; we are here to promote its word and work. What is its dominant word—what its special work? Is our duty done when we have applauded new truth, whencesoever it comes? When we have hailed the signs of coming dawn, are we to sing "Nunc Dimittis," fold our hands, and pray to depart in peace? Or have we, the lowly pupils and heirs of Priestley, Channing, Tayler, Beard, and Martineau, and many another worthy to cluster with them, no significant share in the conflict with sin and ignorance? I am convinced that as between the tendencies, on the one hand, to a simpler, more direct, and personal religion, and, on the other, to submission to ecclesiastical authority, there cannot be any difference of opinion among us. But in what way can we best help the one to conquer and lessen the harmfulness of the other? In what way can we overcome the lifelessness of those who care for none of these things?

Surely, our appointed ministry is to proclaim, in the Church and in the world, the Living God. I have said the terms of theology connote now otherwise than they did—the change is not to less but to more. The God revealed to us in this mighty world-life is not less than "the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob." "The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" could not be more than the Father of all prophets of truth and holiness, all lovers of goodness, "all souls that struggle and aspire." The work of Unitarians is to aid the redemption of the creation by lifting up all things, all duties, all sufferings and beings, into association with that Life Divine which is the secret of the Universe. We, too, of this little but goodly fellowship have had our "development"—for good or ill the fruits alone must determine. But whether we have been faithful to our heritage or not this is true—whenever our fathers made protest against any doctrine, it was, we believe and must maintain, in the interests always of a larger good, a fuller life, a wider truth, and a more completely encompassing divineness. Men had practically limited the God in man. There alone, they thought, in Jesus of Nazareth deity dwelt with humankind; and the time is not far distant when in Jesus alone men saw the pity, the goodness, and the love of God. We protested against the limitation. We preached the indwelling God whose temple is the human soul, and who gives witness of himself in every impulse to goodness. Men had bound the spirit of worship by the dictates and customs of antiquity, they had limited the saving grace of heaven to priestly channels, they had set barriers to thought by the decisions of men who may have been more saintly, perhaps, but who certainly were in many pertinent ways more ignorant than the men who succeeded them. We protested against the yoke of bondage, declaring for freedom to worship, to seek divine influences, to think and to speak. Men had shut in to one book the attributes of revelation; our plea was for the wider Scriptures.

It is in accord with all this that we take up the marvellous inspirations of to-day and proclaim the Living God—the Life and Law, the Energy and Love, that flow for ever in all places to all souls. We proclaim Him not in a definition; for all we can define of God is, not God himself, but the amount of God that our little hearts and minds can hold; yet even so we proclaim what we have felt and do know—God the Vivifier, the Corrector, the inescapable Righteousness, the Lover and Saviour of souls, the Inspirer of wisdom, the Giver of beauty, the Uniter of the sundered, the Friend not of the prophet and saint alone, but of the unselfish patriot, the upright citizen, the willing servant of the rest. It is as servants as well as sons that we seek his friendship and help; for our proclamation, if indeed we have a real word to utter, is not by word alone, but by every deed of loveliness and good report. Into our ministry is summed up all that is great in human utterance and fair in human conduct. The range of its scope is the variety of human needs. If at any time the Martha element in us cumbers itself with too much serving, it is a fault—if fault it be—it is a failing venial by comparison with that of the Mary element when it sits longer than it ought dreaming at the feet of the Master. Let us serve in manly simplicity. Is there not some danger that the fashionable philosophy will drain the practical energies of unwary thinkers? Three ways present themselves in which men may behave towards the evils we see. They may ignore them as much as possible, and idly busy themselves in more or less refined compliance with the maxim—"let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." They may ingeniously refine evil into a thin ghost of good, and so trifle with distinctions as to see good and bad alike as a kind of interesting ripples on the deeps of the divine entity. Or they may simply and manfully take it as their duty to set right the things that are wrong. There is a fourth way, impossible for us—to sit down hopeless.

Let us therefore to our service. And how can we better serve our age than by proclaiming the Divine presence? How shall politics be purged of its baseness, how shall sins that are fashionable be shown in their shame, how shall abominations that are temptingly lucrative be exposed in their hideousness, if not by letting this light fall upon them? This holy entrancing light—here is the power that will not only banish evil, but create good; art, literature, commerce, home life, human friendship, the inner world of the soul, all alike will bud and blossom anew as men come consciously into the companionship of God.

Personal Religion.

"Such things are good to say, but, finally, let us always remember that our Gospel will fail in ourselves and in our hearers unless it help men at last to think and feel independently of our saying or anyone's. Of hearsay faith the churches are sick nigh unto death. Men tremble as the old props and traditions are removed. Not till "every man shall know the Lord" for himself shall the great day come. It is to emphasise this that we go forth, not expecting to compel the multitudes to come in, though desiring still to gather around us in ever greater numbers those to whom our simple types of worship and culture are adequate. But while our immediate tasks are thus confined by circumstances to a comparatively little circle the very fact that all organised orthodoxy unites in isolating us from its borders, gives us, may we not say, a special freedom to meditate what we can do really to benefit not one form of church but all. Free Evangelical Churchmen, Presbyterians, Anglicans, Romanists—who would wish that their institutions and corporate life should disappear rather than develop in newness of life? Let it be our concurrent, yes and in some regards our paramount aim, while attending to the needs of our own household, to penetrate with many a living germ of true spiritual life, in poetry, philosophy, fresh truth and living example, into those enclosures which, however rigorously meant, are in these days more open, happily, than ever before to influences from without. God forbid that to Unitarianise Christianity in such degree as may be open to us, and as we are in duty bound to try, should mean any drying up of the springs of tender and devout feeling, or checking of those gentle pieties and gracious imaginings that have made the Christian Church so beloved a spiritual home in bygone generations. We shall be saved from that appalling destiny if, learning betimes from some tendencies that way but too visible among ourselves, we renew our best life with God. There, and there alone is salvation for us and our work. Freedom to worship we often claim, freedom to think; but freedom to think has not always led to thought; and freedom to worship never yet built up a church, and never will. That can only be the work of a felt compulsion to adore.

We speak, then, not as they who boast, taking their armour off after the fight has been won; but with lowly, aspiring, hopeful, resolute mind. Let us cast off all the works of darkness—all self-satisfaction, all empty optimism, all shallow thought, all easy-going barren intellectualism, all mean views of man, all doubting thoughts of the Eternal Love that has made us and our world, and that gave us with the breath of life a share in its own power to love and, during our little day, to make cosmos out of chaos. Humbly confessing our sins past, let us press on toward the mark of our high calling in Christ Jesus. The night is departing. The day is approaching. Let us gird on the armour of light!

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING.

THE Annual Meeting of the Association was held at Essex Hall, on Wednesday afternoon, the President, Mr. W. ARTHUR SHARPE, in the chair.

Greetings from Foreign Correspondents.

Letters expressing interest, sympathy, and goodwill in connection with the anniversary meetings were submitted from the following:—

Rev. A. Altherr, of Basle, whose letter appeared in the Schweizersche Protestantenblatt, and in the INQUIRER of May 21.

Rev. F. C. Fleischer, of Makkum (Holland).

Rev. C. Mayer, secretary of the Vorstand des deutschen Protestantenvereins.

Dr. Lunge, of Zurich.

Rev. G. Schoenholzer, President of the Schweizerischer Verein für freies Christentum.

Dr. C. J. Niemeyer, of Bolsward, stating that Dr. S. Baart de la Faille, of the Dutch Church, Austinfriars, was the representative of the Nederlandsche Protestantenbond.

Bishop FERENCZ, on behalf of the Unitarian Churches of Hungary, writes:—

From several signs we see that our liberal ideas are attaining great influence all over the country. He adds: I cannot end my letter without mentioning the great loss that happened to our country and nation by the decease of our great poet and novelist, Maurus Jokai. You will have read of this in the newspapers. He lived to a great age, and yet had kept the freshness of his spirit. There can hardly be a writer who has worked more than he. He was a trumpet of our national freedom in 1848; a prophet comforting and encouraging in the woeful times of oppression, and after the restoration of our national constitution he was by his great genius a light for us, adorned by royal favour and crowned by the laurels of a nation. His literary works have done a valuable service also to our Unitarian religion since he wrote the novel called "God is One." He evidently sympathised with us.

Professor E. MONTET, of the University of Geneva, writes regretting that he is unable to come to London for the meetings. In his letter he says:—

Tell your friends that we are busy preparing for the Unitarian Meeting at Geneva in 1905; everything seems to show that the international meetings there will prove a great success.

Miss M. B. WESTENHOLZ, of Denmark, writes:—

I cannot come myself, but as I sit here far away and seem to hear the voices of those strong, earnest men, and see all those listening, upturned faces, that wonderful feeling which I first experienced three years ago in London, of one in all and all in one, comes back to me strong and vivid, and loving thoughts and good wishes for your meeting rise in my heart.

Rev. P. H. HUGENHOLTZ, of Amsterdam, writes:—

I want to tell you in some few words that I will be with you all in spirit, and to send you my fraternal greetings and my best wishes for the success of your meetings. I know by experience how they are refreshing and elevating, and after our meetings of the International Council at Amsterdam there exists and remains between us a link of cordial sympathy and religious communion.

Rev. A. M. JENSEN, of Aarhus, Denmark, states:—

Since August, 1902, when the Unitarian Congregation in Aarhus was founded, we have had regular weekly services, which have been well attended. I have spoken at several hundred meetings in all Jylland, and my words have been heard with great interest and been followed by many articles in the public papers. We are trying now to collect most of the Unitarians of Denmark by a common meeting here in Aarhus in June.

The Rev. M. J. SAVAGE, D.D., of New York, writes:—

Will you say to the friends assembled at your May Meetings that I feel that the cause on both sides of the water is the same. I am as happy when you are prosperous as I am over our own advances. I have all confidence in the future of our cause both in Europe and America, for it seems to me that it is essentially bound up with the growth of intelligence and the advance of civilisation. As fast as men learn the truth they must come into sympathy with our aims.

Signor FERDINANDO BRACCIFORTI, of Milan, in sending greetings from Italy, writes feelingly of the late Dr. Henry Paira, the liberal pastor of the Protestant church, who was held in high honour by all who came under his influence.

Professor GEORGE BOROS, D.D., of Kolozsvar, in an interesting letter, sketches some recent developments in the religious thought and life of Hungary.

While large numbers of the cultivated classes now hold liberal views, the leading journal of the Reformed Church took occasion to warn its readers against the dangerous heresies contained in the Rev. C. J. Street's pamphlet "A Rational View of the Bible," a Hungarian translation of which had recently been published.

Dr. SCHIELER, of Dantzig, writes:—

The Free Religious Communities of North-East Germany at a meeting in Koenigsberg (Prussia) commissioned me to express to the Unitarian Association their affectionate greetings. We work with you towards the same end, but with more and greater difficulties. We have, in fact, no religious liberty. I have had new trouble on account of the religious instruction of the children of my community.

Professor JEAN REVILLE, D.D., of the University of Paris, writes:—

My friend, Mr. Bourrier, will deliver you an address about the progress of liberal religion among the Roman Catholic clergy in France. We ought to encourage this movement as much as we can, because many Roman Catholics, who are somewhat alarmed by Protestant denominations, are induced to favour liberal Christianity. In the great struggle between Roman Catholicism and Free Thought in France, too often religion is identified with Roman theocracy and stupid superstitions—free thought with the destruction of all kinds of religion. Whatever develops free religion, a liberal faith and truly evangelical piety, without dogmatism and confessional narrowness, should be supported. Therefore we, liberal Protestants in France, feel such a sincere sympathy for the British Unitarians, who generously are at work wherever the cause of free religion is to be defended. I am sure I am uttering the feelings of all my liberal Protestant countrymen by sending you our best wishes for the success of your meetings and for the increasing extension of your influence in the Christian world.

Mr. MATHIAS JOCHUMSSON, of Akureyri, Iceland, who is at present in Copenhagen, regrets very much his inability to come to England, as his time is taken up with the Danish Government, for whom he is preparing a work on the history of the Danish people in the century—a work that will occupy him all this month and next.

The Rev. HERMANN HAUGERUD, of Christiania, writes :—

By the officers of Unitarisk Samfund I am asked to thank the British and Foreign Unitarian Association for the visit of the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, whose presence among us was a great help to our cause and an encouragement to us all, that we fully appreciate. His sermon was printed by one of our leading papers—Dagbladet—and we are making use of it now as a missionary tract. Mr. Armstrong won us all by his speech, his sympathy, and manliness, and he made many friends here, who would be glad to meet him again. Our movement is prospering ; we are growing, and our growth seems healthy and steady. My own faith in a Unitarian Church for Norway is stronger than ever, and I am thankful to God for the opportunity of service given unto me in my native land for the upbuilding of his kingdom of truth and love.

Rev. TONY ANDRE, of Florence, Italy, sends warmest greetings to all the members of the Association, with best wishes for the success of the work they are doing. He says :—

It takes a long time to eradicate old ideas, but your Association is acting as the leavening influence.

Baron F. DE SCHICKLER, President of the Délégation Libérale des Eglises Reformées de France sends brotherly greetings. His Society regret they are unable to send a delegate, and will be most happy to see Mr. Pritchard in their midst at their Triennial Meetings in June.

Rev. J. T. SUNDERLAND, of Toronto, writes :—

We in Canada feel a warm interest in the Motherland. Our Unitarian Churches wish we could oftener receive visits from English Unitarian ministers. As regards the three Unitarian Churches in Canada which I am best acquainted with—those in Toronto, Ottawa, and Hamilton—I am glad to be able to report conditions which are in every way encouraging. To the churches which we already have we hope to be able to add several new ones at no very distant day. Plans are now made by the American Unitarian Association to establish at once a new society in Winnipeg, Manitoba, the coming metropolis of that great new North-West, which is so rapidly developing, and also to put a home missionary into Western Ontario, with the hope that he may be able to plant one or more new churches there. Two strong young ministers have recently come to us from the Presbyterian body, and one from the Methodist. One of these is already doing excellent work, and the others will be at work soon. As yet the Unitarian cause in Canada is weak, but it is making distinct and gratifying progress. The number of our workers steadily increases. We believe in our cause, and we confidently expect growth. The word that stirs in our hearts is—FORWARD !

The report of the Committee was presented by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, the secretary.

THE REPORT.

The report gave full particulars of the largely extended work of the Association during the past year, rendered possible by the increased income, the total expenditure having been £6,619, an increase of £1,500 on the previous year. A warning was added that the one munificent subscription of £1,000 remained dependent on the level of subscriptions for 1903 being maintained, and as several generous subscribers had been lost by death, their places must be filled.

Home Mission Work.

Upwards of a hundred congregations had received visits from representative ministers on behalf of the Association, when special services and conferences had been held, and many of the smaller and more isolated congregations throughout the country were brought into closer touch with the committee. The lectures of the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter on the "Christianity of the Creeds and Experience" had been given at Nottingham, Lewisham, and Richmond, in the autumn of 1903, and at Aberystwyth, Cardiff, and Manchester in the spring of 1904, and had met with the warmest appreciation. The Rev. C. Hargrove also gave a course on "The Fourth Gospel" at Hull and Scarborough, and on "The Origin of the Gospels" at Brighton. The lantern lectures by the Rev. H. V. Mills on "Evolution and Religion" had attracted large audiences, especially in the North. A course by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong on "Agnosticism and Theism in the Nineteenth Century" was promised for the coming season. People's services were held in theatres in London, Manchester, Merthyr, and Devonport, and in the Town Hall at Newcastle-on-Tyne, conducted by the Revs. J. Page Hopps, J. C. Street, and others.

The lowest attendance was about 200, the highest about 2,000. The attendances seldom kept up to the number present on the first evening. The theatre at Islington was, however, a noticeable exception ; the attendances were 450, 900, 1,200, and 1,450. The secret of this steady increase lay in the energetic and persistent visiting and advertising week by week. At most other places the visiting and advertising were confined almost entirely to preparing for the first service.

Upwards of eighty congregations received assistance from the Association during the year, chiefly in aid of the ministers' salaries, the aim always being to stimulate effort in the churches themselves.

At Cambridge the Rev. J. E. Carpenter lectured in the Town Hall in November, 1903, on "How to Read the Gospels," and in the two following terms religious services were held in a room in Emmanuel-street, and a strong wish for their continuance has been expressed by the undergraduates at whose instance they were established. Grants of £100 each towards the support of a District Missionary were made to the Liverpool District Association, London and South-Eastern Counties Provincial Assembly, the North Midland Association, and the Yorkshire Union. The death of the Rev. T. B. Broadrick, District Missionary of the Western Union, was recorded with regret, and the hope expressed that a capable successor would soon be found. And the report added :—

"The crying need of churches and societies alike is for MEN,—men strong and active in mind and in body, men prepared to face difficulties and to surmount them, men free and reverent in spirit, keen, patient, tactful, persevering. Few meetings of the Committee pass without an eager request for such men ; but perhaps congregations hardly realise how much of the making or the marring of a good minister lies at their own door."

Publications.

After giving particulars of the work of the McQuaker Trust in Scotland, the report furnished a record of the year's publications. In the new series of Handbooks Dr. Mellone's "Converging Lines of Religious Thought" and the Rev. R. A. Armstrong's new book on "The Trinity and the Incarnation" had been issued, and the following were promised or in course of preparation :—"The Apocalyptic Christ," by the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A. ; "The Unity of the New Testament," by the Rev. W. H. Drummond, B.A. ; "The Foundations of Religious Belief," by the Rev. L. P. Jacks, M.A. ; "Natural Religion," by the Rev. W. J. Jupp ; "The Bible and Modern Criticism," by the Rev. E. W. Lummis, M.A. ; "Know Thyself," by the Rev. H. S. Solly, M.A. ; "Ethics and Religion," by the Rev. C. B. Upton, B.A., B.Sc.

The first of a series of sixpenny reprints had been issued, Armstrong's "God and the Soul," to be followed by Carpenter's "First Three Gospels" and Newman's "Soul." Mr. Birrell's Essex Hall lecture on "Emerson" had been among the other publications, and the new series of "Home Pages." A third edition of the Revised Essex Hall Hymnal had been called for. The publication of the centenary "Life of Dr. Joseph Priestley," by the Rev. A. Gordon and Mr. J. P. Hartog, had been unavoidably delayed, but was looked for in the autumn. Mr. Carpenter's "Life of Dr. Martineau" was to be issued in connection with his centenary, April 21, 1905. A new volume of sermons by the late Dr. Brooke Herford, with a brief memoir by the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, was also in preparation.

Foreign Mission Work.

The mission of the Rev. Charles Hargrove to Australasia was noted as a new departure in the foreign mission work. Particulars were given of the work in India, and interesting notes as to the progress of liberal religion in Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland, Hungary, Norway, and Switzerland were added. This part of the report was fuller and more interesting than ever, and should be read in full. Under the heading of Switzerland it was stated that the next International Council meeting was to be held in September, 1905, at Geneva, and that at Basle at the Congress on the History of Religions, to be held at the end of August this year, the Association would be represented by the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter.

Under the head of "Deputations," special notice of the International Meeting at Amsterdam last September was included, with the following expression of thanks :—"The warmest thanks are due to Professor B. D. Eerdmans, of Leiden, the hon. secretary of the Netherlands Committee, for the immense labour he bestowed in preparing the programme and planning the meetings of the International Council, and to the Rev. P. H. Hugenholtz for his assiduity and care in looking after the local arrangements. The meetings were an unqualified success. The ministers of the various sections of the Dutch Church assembled in large numbers, and visitors from distant lands soon felt themselves at home among the people of Holland."

Obituary.

The report recorded the death during the year of four past presidents : Mr. Richard Enfield, Dr. Brooke Herford, Mr. J. T. Preston, and Mr. Harry Rawson, and a large number of other supporters of the Association. To an expression of sympathy with the relatives and friends of the deceased, it was added :—"The generosity and steadfastness displayed by those who have gone may well become an incentive and encouragement to those who remain."

Mr. OSWALD NETTLEFOLD, as treasurer, presented the accounts, and announced that the collection at the service that morning had been £33 14s. 4d., a slight increase on last year. In former years, he said, if he had taken a text, as treasurer, for his annual statement, it would have been from Lamentations, but that year it would be from a Psalm of praise and thanksgiving, coupled with an exhortation not to go backwards. Their subscriptions had increased by £3,000, but they must not forget that the £1,000 of their anonymous friend would be continued only if they maintained the other £2,000 a year subscriptions, which had been the condition of his gift. Subscriptions and donations for the year amounted to £5,152 19s., and collections £566 14s. 5d. The collections on Association Sunday were £50 less than last year, a decrease for the first time since 1895, though more congregations had taken part. They must hope that another year, when the world was at peace, they would go forward again. They had spent much more both on publications and on grants to churches, for that was part of their extended work. He appealed to members not to let the income diminish, that the extra work might not languish for want of funds. The obituary list showed the loss of many names of those who had long been known among them as generous supporters and leaders in the work. He appealed to all who valued the work of the Association to do their utmost to fill up the ranks.

The PRESIDENT, in moving the adoption of the report and accounts, spoke of the greatly increased work done by the committee. The report spoke of their having met nine times, but that did not by any means represent what had been done; if it were not for the enormous amount done by the various sub-committees, and by their indefatigable and most admirable secretary, it would be impossible to do their work. He made sympathetic reference to the withdrawal of Mr. Philip Green, through ill-health, after many years of faithful service in the office, and then touched upon some of the chief points in the report. The many visits paid to congregations he felt to be some of the most valuable work, and spoke with great satisfaction of the visit he himself had recently paid to the churches in Scotland. The mission of the Rev. Charles Hargrove to Australasia he regarded as of great significance, and made warm acknowledgment to the friends who had received them at the International Council meeting at Amsterdam.

The Rev. H. ENFIELD DOWSON, seconding, congratulated the President on having presided over the work of the Association in a year when so much had been done to extend the influence of their work, the spirit by which they lived, and the thought that inspired their minds. He also congratulated Mr. Armstrong on having been instrumental in securing that great increase of their resources, so that his year of presidency was marked, as Dr. Brooke Herford's had been, by an impulse of new life given to the Association. With thirty-seven years' experience in connection with the East Cheshire Union, he spoke with gratitude of the constant support they received from that Association, help generously given, with no interference in the local work. That Association exercised no ecclesiastical authority over the churches, and that was one reason why they had increased confidence in its work. Another reason was the Secretary, and he paid a warm tribute to the broad spirit and high capacity and devoted work of Mr. Bowie. The visits paid by ministers to churches, and especially Mr. Harwood's visits, had been of great service, and Mr. Carpenter's lectures throughout the country were of inestimable value. It meant to Mr. Carpenter a great sacrifice of time, which, when he resigned his full professorship at Manchester College, he had hoped to devote to literary work; but, happily, Mr. Carpenter's lectures became literary work of a permanent character, and they were very grateful for them. He also congratulated the Association on "thinking imperially," by sending Mr. Hargrove to Australia and New Zealand, and as an instance of the way in which their influence spread told of a letter he had received from a missionary in China, asking about John Hamilton Thom. He had been reading a volume of Mr. Thom's "Laws of Life after the Mind of Christ," and in no other writer had he found greater insight into the heart and life of Christianity, and was anxious to know something of one whose name he had not heard before. The result was that Mr. Bowie sent out to him a complete set of Mr. Thom's works; and so their foreign work went on. With great confidence in the work of the Association he seconded that motion.

Mr. T. GROSVENOR LEE having called attention to the importance of the services held at Cambridge, the motion was adopted.

Mr. PERCY PRESTON moved, and Mr. W. B. BOWRING seconded a vote of thanks to the President, and that the Right Hon. William Kenrick be appointed President for the ensuing year. Mr. Preston referred to the honour in which the name of Sharpe was held among them, and recalled the memory of the late Samuel Sharpe. Nor was it the first time that a Kenrick had served as President, for in 1872-3 Mr. Timothy Kenrick held that office.

The PRESIDENT, in acknowledging the vote, which was very warmly accorded, said that he believed both the Sharpes and Kenricks could claim descent from Philip Henry, but Mr. Kenrick could trace back his Nonconformist ancestry further than he. In an old document of 1725 he had found that in the Consistory Court of St. Asaph's the house of John Kenrick, from whom their new President was descended, was certified as a Dissenting meeting house.

The PRESIDENT moved, and the Rev. CHARLES ROPER seconded:—

That the cordial thanks of this Meeting be given to the Officers and the Committee, for their services during the past year, and that the following be the respective appointments for the present year:—

Treasurer—Mr. Oswald Nettlefold. Trustees—Mr. S. S. Tayler, Mr. David Martineau, J.P., Mr. W. Blake Odgers, K.C., Sir E. Durning-Lawrence, Bart., M.P. Auditors—Mr. Ronald Bartram, Mr. Harold Wade, Mr. Benson Lawford. Council—(See List in Annual Report.) Committee—Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., Mr. J. Barlow, M.D, Mr. G. W. Brown, Mr. H. Chatfeild Clarke, Mr. Edwin Clephan, J.P., Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A., Rev. Henry Gow, B.A., Rev. Charles Hargrove, M.A., Rev. James Harwood, B.A., Miss Helen Brooke Herford, Mr. Herbert B. Lawford, Mr. T. Grosvenor Lee, Mr. G. H. Leigh, Mr. David Martineau, J.P., Mr. W. Blake Odgers, K.C., Mr. C. F. Pearson, Mr. Percy Preston, Mr. Stanton W. Preston, Mr. Ion Pritchard, Rev. F. W. Stanley, Miss Tagart, Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A., Mr. S. S. Tayler.

Mr. Roper spoke with admiration and astonishment of the amount and variety of the work accomplished by the Committee. He referred to the theatre services, which had been held, with sincere approval, and said they hoped much from the Lay-Preachers' Union which had been started, or re-started, in Manchester. He suggested that it would be well for the Association as a part of their summer work to set up a Unitarian Van, which he was sure would do good work. The sending of special preachers to congregations was good, but equally good, if not better, would it be to encourage the advertising of local ministers, to compel them to do something special. It was true that the Association had no control over the churches, but it would be well if they paid more attention to the fact that up and down the country there were churches, the trustees of which never met. Some of those churches were fast dying, and the trustees did nothing. That ought not to be.

The PRESIDENT moved and the Rev. V. D. DAVIS seconded:—

That the hearty welcome of this Meeting be given to the representatives of the following societies:—East Cheshire Union—Rev. W. Harrison. Eastern Union—Mr. A. M. Stevens and Rev. A. Hall. Irish Non-Subscribing Association—Rev. Thomas Dunkerley. Liverpool District Association—Rev. H. D. Roberts. London District Society—Mr. G. H. Clennell. London and S.E.C. Provincial Assembly—Rev. T. E. M. Edwards. Manchester District Association—Rev. D. Agate and Rev. J. A. Pearson. Mid and Christian Union—Rev. A. H. Shelley. North and East Lancashire Mission—Rev. J. Collins Odgers, B.A. North Lancashire and Westmoreland Association—Rev. H. V. Mills. North Midland Association—Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas. Northumberland and Durham Association—Rev. Charles Travers. Scottish Unitarian Association—Mr. J. G. Davidson. South Cheshire District—Rev. James C. Street. South Wales Unitarian Association—Rev. E. O. Jenkins. South-East Wales Society—Rev. W. J. Phillips. Southern Unitarian Association—Mr. J. Cogan Conway. Western Union—Rev. J. McDowell. Yorkshire Unitarian Union—Rev. E. Ceredig Jones. National Triennial Conference—Mr. W. B. Bowring.

To this the Rev. J. A. PEARSON responded on behalf of England, the Rev. T. DUNKERLEY on behalf of Ireland, Mr. J. G. DAVIDSON on behalf of Scotland, and the Rev. E. O. JENKINS on behalf of Wales. Each speaker acknowledged the helpfulness of the Association, and spoke with courage and hopefulness of the prospects of work in their churches.

The PRESIDENT moved, and the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG seconded:—

That this Meeting extends its warmest welcome to the representatives of Unitarian and other Liberal religious movements from abroad; and conveys an expression of its gratitude, esteem, and good-will to those who, in other lands, are endeavouring to unite pure religion and perfect liberty.

That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Foreign Correspondents of the Association in America, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Cape Colony, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland, Hungary, Iceland, India, Italy, Japan, New Zealand, Norway and Sweden, and Switzerland.

Mr. ARMSTRONG said there was nothing so delightful in the recent meetings of their Association as the coming together on that platform, either in body or in spirit, of those who thought and felt with them in all parts of the world. He had never forgot that wonderful morning three years ago at the International Meeting, and he rejoiced that they had on that occasion also brethren with them from other countries, while he held in his hand letters and messages from many more [the letters referred to at the beginning of this Report]. To all alike they offered a heartfelt welcome, and the God-speed which was in their hearts.

The Rev. W. H. LYON, D.D., of Brookline, Mass., was the first to respond, and conveyed to them the greetings of the American Unitarian Association, expressing warm sympathy with the mother church, and the work it had to accomplish under more arduous conditions than were found in America. Personally he desired to say what stimulus and encouragement he had received from hearing and meeting brother ministers in this country. He would like to give every Unitarian minister in America the same experience.

M. le pasteur ARNAUD, of Sèvres, spoke as one who had come from a great distance, not merely from France, but from Rome, to which he had been subject for many years before be became a free man. The liberal movement due to the influence of Sabatier and Réville had penetrated also into the Catholic Church, and his friend, M. Bourrier, had shown them the way, and through his paper, Le Chrétien Français, brought words of hope and liberty to many. That influence was shown also in some who had not had the courage to come out. On behalf of the liberated priests and the liberal Protestants of France, he thanked them for that welcome and offered cordial good wishes.

Mr. THEO BERG, of Copenhagen, spoke of the great pleasure it was to be there and to see and hear men whose names had long been familiar to him, and whose words had inspired. In the name of fellow-believers in Denmark, who had so much sympathy with their work, he thanked them. They were at present in Denmark little and weak, but they hoped soon to be able to stand alone and find their own way; and was not the future with the children? Their little Danish brother was just four years old before he started to come to London. They were very grateful for the help they received in their work.

The Rev. J. HOCART also responded, and said it was a great honour to be welcomed as those who were "endeavouring to unite pure religion and perfect liberty." He could at least say that humbly and fervently they aspired to both.

The PRESIDENT then moved, and Sir ROLAND WILSON seconded:—

That this Meeting of Unitarians cordially approves of the Agreement between Great Britain and France, which settles in a spirit of mutual consideration pending subjects of controversy between two great and free nations; and for this notable contribution to the cause of international concord, it recognises that thanks are due to His Majesty the King and President Loubet; to the Cabinets and Foreign Ministers of the two countries; and to all who, on either side of the Channel, have laboured with pen and voice to remove misunderstandings, to expose calumnies, and to promote a better state of feeling between the two peoples.

Sir ROLAND WILSON said that he had, he thought, more satisfaction in seconding that resolution than he had five years ago in moving a resolution on the Hague Peace Conference. He thought the historian of the future would find that agreement the more important of the two, as a very practical step towards what they desired. He noted specially that it marked an abandonment of what might be called dog-in-the-manger rights. It was not a peace-at-any-price agreement, or he would not be there to support that resolution. He could only go so far as "peace to men of good will." He rejoiced in the agreement which brought more closely together two nations whose influence would make for truth and righteousness.

The motion was unanimously agreed to and the last resolution, very cordially passed, was one of thanks to the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, the preacher of the anniversary sermon, to the Little Portland-street congregation, and London friends for their hospitality—moved from the chair, and seconded by the Rev. E. Ceredig Jones. The President spoke of Mr. Tarrant's sermon as uplifting, encouraging, and hopeful, and they were very grateful for it. The meeting then adjourned for tea. The subsequent public meeting and Friday's proceedings we must report next week.

ANNIVERSARY MEETINGS.

The following ministers were present at the meetings:—

Revs. W. Agar (Sidmouth), Dendy Agate (Altrincham), F. Allen (London), A. Amey (Colyton), R. A. Armstrong (Liverpool), H. Austin (Cirencester), J. Worsley Austin (Birmingham), J. Birks (Yarmouth), W. Birks (Southsea), W. Copeland Bowie (London), S. S. Brettell (Maidstone), S. Burrows (Dover), J. Burton (Poole), J. Estlin Carpenter (Oxford), C. C. Coe (Bournemouth), J. Cogan Conway (Ringwood), G. Cooper (London), C. Craddock (Liverpool), G. Critchley (London), E. Daplyn (London), V. D. Davis (London), R. Davis (Evesham), H. E. Dowson (Gee Cross), T. Dunkerley (Comber), T. E. M. Edwards (London), J. Ellis (London), E. D. Priestley Evans (Kidderminster), S. Farrington (Richmond), J. Felstead (Lewes), F. K. Freeston (London), E. I. Fripp (Mansfield), C. A. Ginever (London), H. Gow (London), C. A. Greaves (Canterbury), J. L. Haigh (Liverpool), A. Hall (Norwich), W. Harrison (Stalybridge), C. Harvey-Cook (Warrington), A. Harvie (Northampton), J. Harwood (London), E. S. Hicks (London), P. M. Higginson (Manchester), J. B. Higham (Wolverhampton), R. Hill (Bedford), E. R. Hodges (Guildford), F. A. Homer (Taunton), A. Hood (Parkstone), J. Howard (Tamworth) L. P. Jacks (Oxford), E. O. Jenkins (Llandyssul), E. Ceredig Jones (Bradford), F. H. Jones (London), L. Jenkins Jones (London), T. Lloyd Jones (Liverpool), W. J. Jupp (Croydon), H. M. Livens, W. Lloyd (Gloucester), E. W. Lummis (Leicester), J. McDowell (Bath), J. E. Manning (Manchester), A. J. Marchant (London), J. J. Marten (Horsham), H. V. Mills (Kendal), R. C. Moore (Bolton), F. B. Mott (Southport), R. Newell (Bedfield), A. E. O'Connor (Torquay), J. Edwin Odgers (Oxford), J. Collins Odgers (Liverpool), A. E. Parry (Liscard), C. Peach (Manchester), T. Paxton (Birmingham), J. A. Pearson (Oldham), H. S. Perris (London), H. Woods Perris (London), W. J. Phillips (Nottage), C. E. Pike (Newport), W. W. C. Pope (London), W. G. Price (Hinckley), C. Read (London), F. T. Reed (Sevenoaks), H. D. Roberts (Liverpool), T. Robinson (Manchester), C. Roper (Manchester), W. H. Rose (Walthamstow), H. Rylett (Tenterden), G. St. Clair (London), W. R Shanks (Leeds), A. H. Shelley (Cradley Heath), J. Kertain Smith (Belper), T. P. Spedding (Rochdale), F. W. Stanley (London), J. C. Street (Shrewsbury), C. J. Street (Sheffield), S. H. Street (London), J. E. Stronge (London), F. Summers (London), A. Sutcliffe (Crewkerne), W. G. Tarrant (London), L. Tavener (Ipswich), F. Taylor (Bridport), A. H. Thomas (Stourbridge), E. L. H. Thomas (Dean Row), J. M. Lloyd Thomas (Nottingham), A. Thompson (Dudley), E. Thompson (London), J. Toye (London), W. J. B. Tranter (Birmingham), C. Travers (Carlisle), E. Turland (Newbury), W. F. Turland (Walsall), G. Hamilton Vance (Dublin), F. Walters (Newcastle), J. Warschauer (Clifton), A. Webster (Aberdeen), J. H. Wicksteed (London), J. Wood (Birmingham), W. Wooding (London).

No jesting is allowable which is not thoroughly innocent; it is an unworthy perverting of wit to employ it in biting and scratching; in working prejudice to any man's reputation, or interest; in needlessly incensing any man's anger or sorrow; in raising animosities, dissensions, and feuds among any.—Isaac Barrow.

OBITUARY.

THE LATE J. P. THOMASSON.

THE funeral of Mr. John Pennington Thomasson, of Bolton, took place on Thursday, May 19. The service at the Manchester Crematorium was for private friends only, of whom a large number were present, but to the confines of the borough at Bolton the funeral party was accompanied by a great and representative gathering of the whole community. It was a popular demonstration of honour and affection, which showed how deeply the noble character and the eminent services of Mr. Thomasson's life were appreciated.

The service in the chapel of the Crematorium was conducted by the Rev. C. J. Street, of Sheffield, formerly minister of Bank-street Chapel, Bolton. After the singing of the hymn,

God giveth quietness at last,

Mr. Street delivered an address in which he spoke with deep feeling of Mr. Thomasson's life, and the nobility and beauty of his nature. The essence of such a life, he said, was eternal, for being of the nature of God, it was like Him immortal. The friend whom they knew and loved did not lie there. That was only the frail outworn tenement in which for a time he dwelt. Having spoken of the immortal life, Mr. Street referred to the pathetic silence in which Mr. Thomasson's life was spent. How sweet his nature! Never does bury deprivations under which others would have despaired. He had a rich personality which developed and asserted itself through and in spite of its limitations. If their friend could speak to them that day he would bid them be of good cheer, and not allow their hearts to fail. He was fervent, heroic, good. To know such a man was an inspiration and a blessing.

An address was also given by Mrs. Cliff Scatcherd, and after the coffin had passed out of sight, the organist played "O rest in the Lord," and Chopin's "Funeral March," the service concluding with the Benediction.

On Sunday morning a memorial service was held in Bank-street Chapel. The Rev. J. H. Weatherall, in the course of his sermon, said that their memorial of Mr. Thomasson must be a rejoicing for his life, and an inspiration for their own. Three things in the people's memorial of him might be sources of grace to them. The first was the gentleness and simplicity of the spirit that was in him. One had heard stories that lay close to tears of the modesty and humility of him who was all the while doing things that made us proud for human nature. He must have known that by the standard of the world his services to humanity were princely; but of the simplicity and humility of his life one might say, as Stopford Brooke said of James Martineau, "the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ was in his heart, and it lit up his countenance." The second thing was that in a day of flourishing and flamboyant materialism he lived and died with an unquenchable belief in an ideal life, in which justice should be the foundation of human intercourse; and the third thing was the persistency and strenuousness of the efforts he made owards the realisation of that faith in the deal life. From one newspaper or another, nd from one or another neglected corner of he vineyard of God, had come the record ow Mr. Thomasson did not neglect; it was lways a story of interest, watchfulness, ncouragement, faith, and generosity untinted. To have known such a man was, s Arnold said of his dead friend, "part f life's unalterable good." Over that leath the powerful had no power. So, n remembrance of him, their faith in the trength and victory of goodness would enew its youth like the eagle's, and day y day brace up their drooping spirits to ove afresh, to plan afresh, to execute fresh the deeds of love and mercy.

In the evening Mr. Weatherall also preached at Halliwell Road, giving a memorial address, as did also the Rev. R. C. Moore, at the Horwich Unitarian Church.

THE chief general interest of the recent meetings of the Congregational Union is o be found in the resolutions passed n the great political issues of the day, nd in the ample allowance of time for heir full consideration. The following esolution was moved by Mr. J. H. Whitley, M.P.:—

That this meeting of the Union, while it oes not bind itself to an approval of the onstitution and the powers of the present icensing authorities, believes that the power f the licensing justices to refuse to renew a icence has not hitherto been unjustly or arshly exercised, and should not in any egree be diminished.

The Union, therefore, condemns the Licensng Bill now before Parliament, because—

(a) For the first time it bestows upon the wners of annual licences a permanent vested nterest in these licences.

(b) While thus enforcing compensation it ixes no time limit; and

(c) Because it will prevent any considerble reduction of the number of existing icences. The Union, therefore, believes that he Bill will enormously strengthen the posiion of publicans and brewers, which is lready a menace to the State.

AN equally frank declaration on the uestion of Chinese labour was made on he motion of the Chairman elect of the Union. Dr. Forsyth's speech was a owerful argument for listening to the oice of the Christian teacher on the noral issues involved in commercial undertakings. It was resolved:—

That this Assembly condemns the Ordinance, ecently sanctioned, for the introduction of ndentured Chinese labourers into the Transvaal, because that ordinance imposes conitions of service which a liberty-loving eople should not tolerate within the bounds f the Empire, because it introduces serious noral dangers to our African fellow subjects, nd especially to the ruling race, and because t sanctions means of producing wealth which Christian nation is not morally free to use.

And, generally, the Assembly profoundly eplores the growth of a disposition to allow inancial considerations an excessive place in etermining public policy.

A RESOLUTION expressing high appreciaion of the pacific spirit embodied in the ecent Anglo-French Agreement was also dopted on the motion of Mr. Compton Rickett, M.P. Mr. Rickett handled with lmost unnecessary emphasis the thought hat it is only in a very limited sphere that such agreements are possible. One might have hoped from a religious assembly some more clear expression of such political aims and motives as will deliver us from the barbarous and essentially foolish arbitrament of war.

THE inevitable resolution condemning the Education Acts and sympathising with the Passive Resisters was passed. The Assembly, as appears from the discussion, still hankers after the teaching of "undenominational religion" at the cost of the State, though there were not wanting signs that the "secular" view is gaining ground. Dr. Guinness Rogers, the veteran defender of the principle that religious teaching is the concern not of the civil servant but of the churches, had an enthusiastic reception, but whether this was given to the man or to the principle is hard to say.

TUESDAY week was a day of testing for the University of Oxford. The proposal to open examinerships in the Honour Theology School to laymen was taken forward, as we anticipated, from Congregation (which approved it) to Convocation—that is, the general body of Masters of Arts upon the University books—and the voting was taken on that day. The discussion upon the proposed new statute had recently turned simply upon the real principles at stake. On the one hand it was urged that students in theology, like other students, ought to be examined not in what they believe, but in what they know; that the survival of a denominational school in modern Oxford is an anomaly; that truth has nothing to fear from light. On the other hand, the denominationalists made the retention of their special privileges a matter of "loyalty to the Church." They urged, moreover, that what they understand by truth has everything to fear from the opening of shutters, foreseeing that when the statute is passed Christian origins will be studied scientifically, and in the light of other religions—which would indeed be deplorable. The question is, indeed, as the Church Times said in a hostile leader, "the largest question, with the most far-reaching issues, which has come before it for a generation."

ON the vote, Conservative Churchmen won by a large majority, 676 to 278, and there was great excitement in the Sheldonian Theatre, where the meeting was held. In the debate the Regius Professor of Divinity (Dr. Ince) was pitted against the Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical Theology (Dr. Bigg). The former declared that the decision of Congregation, if maintained, would logically exclude, not only clergymen from examining, but even laymen of the Church of England, since they had bound themselves in baptism to believe all the articles of the Christian Faith. Dr. Bigg, on the other hand, said that they wished to strengthen the School by throwing it open to orthodox Dissenters. As examiner he had found that the best candidates were orthodox Dissenters, taught, he supposed, by orthodox Dissenters. And how should those who taught be forbidden to examine? Mr. Allen, of Exeter, said what was asked for was neither denominationalism nor undenominationalism, but the advance of sound learning. To-morrow it would be said throughout England that the Church of England was afraid of learning, and had to protect itself with hedges like the Rabbis of old. Such appeals, however, were of no avail; and Dr. Bigg spoke amid great interruption. The Guardian and the Church Times may breathe again!

THE question of the use or disuse of the Athanasian Creed, which has been eagerly canvassed for many months in the Anglican papers and at diocesan meetings, came before the Upper House during the recent session of the Convocation of Canterbury. Several different proposals for reform were put forward, and the resolution which was finally carried was compounded of two, moved by the Bishops of Worcester and St. Albans. It affirms faith in the three creeds, and proceeds:—

But, at the same time, believing that the present manner of reciting the Quicunque Vult in public worship is open to serious objection, especially on the ground of the phraseology of the minatory clauses, this House respectfully requests his Grace the President to appoint a committee to consider in what way the present use of the Quicunque Vult may be modified, the document itself being retained in the formularies of the Church as an authoritative statement of the Church's faith.

THE votes actually cast for the motion were 9 against 8; but the Bishop of of Bristol, who intended to vote for it, had retired through illness, and the Archbishop was also prepared if necessary to support the resolution. There is, therefore, a real majority of the Southern Bishops in favour of reform. But the nature of the opposition offered by the minority is even more significant. Only one voice, that of the Bishop of Norwich, ventured to defend the Creed on its merits. The attitude of the rest is expressed in the first few words of the Bishop of Salisbury's rejected amendment, "That the present is not an opportune time." Alas! the opportune time arrived and departed thirty years ago. We have, however, in the result of this debate a proof that "reform of the Church from within" is not impossible, and therewith an example of the rate of speed at which it may be expected to move.

THIS is the day of popular sixpenny reprints, and while the Rationalist Press is issuing such standard works as Darwin's "Origin of Species," Mill on "Liberty," Spencer on "Education," Arnold's "Literature and Dogma," Renan's "Life of Jesus," essays by Huxley, Tyndall, and Emerson, and other works of more doubtful worth, each for sixpence in thoroughly readable editions, and the great publishers are entering the field, Macmillan with such books as 'Ecce Homo" and Illingworth's "Personality, Human and Divine," Longmans with Newman's "Apologia," we are glad that the British and Foreign Unitarian Association is not content to stand aside.

As the first of a series a popular edition of Mr. Armstrong's "God and the Soul" is just issued for 6d., that is 4½d., and we trust that those who have the opportunity throughout the country will use every effort to make this invaluable "Essay towards Fundamental Religion" more widely known than ever. This edition is a reprint of the seven chapters of the book, complete, with a new preface, which tells of its original publication in 1896, and then adds:—

The standpoint is that of one who heartily and without after-thought rejoices in every advance of knowledge in every field, and desires to retain in his thought no opinions whatever that clash with or are contradicted by the newer knowledge; one who, nevertheless, believes that the religious element in man is primary and permanent, and that God has direct messages for the human soul, and that the human soul has direct access to the living God.

IN one section of his book, Mr. Armstrong says in the new preface, the argument might have been made much stronger had it been written a few years later. The section referred to is that which deals with the question of animal suffering in the chapter on "The Problem of Evil." "Let that paragraph stand," he says, "for what it is worth."

But a wonderful light has recently been cast on the life of the wood and the plain, the mountain and the stream, by such writers as Prince Krapotkin in his "Mutual Aid" and such close, patient, and loving observers as Mr. W. J. Long in his "School of the Woods" and other delightful and illuminating works. It is not too much to say that these writers, and such as these, have in the last half-dozen years lifted a nightmare from the heart of religious men, revealing the tribes of living things as dwelling in an habitual atmosphere of happiness and innocent joy. The fear of death or ill, the pangs of hunger, the conflict for life have no such part in the daily consciousness of the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air as we had learned to suppose; and the newest natural history endorses the sentiment of the maker of the ancient mythic poem who conceived that after breathing the breath of life into each fresh manner of living thing, "God saw that it was good."

FOR some two years past the Manchester Citizens' Association for Improving the Dwellings and Surroundings of the People has been engaged in a careful examination of the present conditions of Manchester life, and their secretary, Mr. T. S. Marr, has compiled and published the results of the investigation in a shilling volume printed at the Manchester University Press, with the title, "Housing Conditions in Manchester and Salford." It is a valuable report, which should be carefully considered by Manchester people, and is an able contribution to the general subject of the scientific examination of the conditions and causes of poverty and the needful remedies. There is an excellent map, and a large number of illustrations are included. A volume similar in size is published at the same time by Mr. T. C. Horsfall, President of the Citizens' Association, on the example of Germany in Housing Reform. These volumes form the most important literary contribution to the subject since Mr. H. Seebohm Rowntree's book on Poverty (with especial reference to York) and the completion of Mr. Charles Booth's remarkable series of volumes on London. We hope to give them further attention in a future issue of THE INQUIRER.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Wednesday, or Thursday Morning at latest.]

Bradford.—On Sunday evening, May 22, the Rev. E. Ceredig Jones gave a special lecture at Chapel-lane Chapel, in which he replied very forcibly to the incorrigible Dr. Torrey's absurd slanders of Unitarians, and took the opportunity of giving some exposition of the Unitarian faith.

Darlington.—The series of week-night meetings associated with the work at Unity Church were brought to a successful close on Wednesday evening last by a social gathering of a very pleasing character. An excellent musical programme was provided, and during the proceedings Miss Cox Walker was the recipient of a diamond ring and a beautifully bound complete edition of Browning's poems from the members of the church in appreciation of her services as church organist and also superintendent of the Sunday school.

Halifax.—The prizes for early attendance and good conduct at the Northgate End Sunday-school were distributed to 23 scholars on Whit-Sunday by the Rev. P. Richards, B.A. A number of readings and recitations were given. The scholars had the annual treat at Lightcliffe on Whit-Monday. The Ramble society had a day's outing at Ingleton on Whit-Tuesday.

Horsham.—The 131st Whit-Sunday anniversary was celebrated on May 22, when the preacher of the day was the Rev. Henry Gow, of Hampstead. The morning sermon referred to the recent religious census taken in London, emphasising the importance of truth and truthfulness rather than of numerical strength. The evening sermon dealt with the necessity of definite convictions and principles to mould a strong and finished character. The afternoon was occupied with a historical sketch of the story of the old "Meeting House," which dates from 1721, and possesses records of considerable interest. The usual open communion was administered after morning service, and was conducted by Mr. Gow and the Rev. J. J. Marten. The lunch and tea, as usual, were carefully provided. The choir mustered in good force, and the Essex Hall hymnals were used. Considerable regret was felt that no representatives of the Guildford, Brighton, or Ditchling congregations were present, but the Billingshurst friends helped splendidly by coming in full force. The collections amounted to rather over £5, and considerable addition was made to the fund for the repair of the organ.

Leeds: Mill Hill.—On Sunday afternoon, May 22, the Rev. L. P. Jacks, who has been occupying Mr. Hargrove's pulpit for the last few weeks, presented prizes for good conduct and regular attendance in the Sunday-school, and gave an address, setting forth the great good, in the building up of character, done by such schools. Mr. Grosvenor Talbot presided, and Mr. Jacks was thanked for his address. On Monday the teachers and scholars again visited the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Talbot, at Southfield, and had a most enjoyable time, for which host and hostess were heartily thanked.

London Guilds Union.—The quarterly meeting of the London Guilds Union was held at Mansford-street Church, Bethnal-green, on Thursday evening, May 12. There were representatives present from each of the Guilds belonging to the Union. The proceedings opened with refreshments and social intercourse. The members then adjourned to the church, and took part in a short devotional service conducted by the president, the Rev. J. Ellis. After service a conference was held on the Guilds Union motto, "For God and the Good Life." A representative from each Guild read a short paper or gave a brief address on the above subject. The president, in the course of his remarks, said that the idea of the Guild was to help our young people to realise the truth that religion is the basis of all good and noble life. The next meeting of the Union will be held some time in July, and will take the form of a picnic.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—At the close of morning service last Sunday the Rev. Frank Walters announced the withdrawal of his resignation, in response to the urgent and affectionate requisition which he had received from the congregation. The matter will come up for formal confirmation at a special meeting of the congregation to be held on June 4.

Sheffield: Upperthorpe.—Sunday-school anniversary services were held on Sunday, May 22. The preacher was the Rev. John Ellis, of London (former minister). There were large congregations at the services, which were concluded by an address to parents and teachers by the Rev. A. H. Dolphin.

Whitchurch.—The open-air address given by the Rev. C. D. Badland, reported in this column last week, was not on the subject of Unitarianism. It was a temperance address at the first of a series of meetings arranged by the Whitchurch Temperance League. The Primitive Methodist and Baptist ministers assisted, and will take charge of meetings in their turn.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from A. L. B., C. D. B., E. B., H. B. B., R. B. B., F. E. C., W. H. D., van L. M., A. N., R. J. O, F. P., H. F. M. R., R. R., C. B. U., W. W.

"HONOUR all men!"—and we cannot then be guilty of the contempt which is the ill-humour of egotism; the ill-manners which spring from selfishness; the offensive patronage which is a mark of vanity; the churlishness which comes of savagery and pride.—F. W. Farrar.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

SUNDAY, May 29.

Acton, Central Auction Room, Market-place, High-street, 7, Rev. J. H. WICKSTEED, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Rev. EUSTACE THOMPSON.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. S. TURLAND.

Brixton. Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. W. STANLEY.

Child's Hill, All Souls' Free Church, corner of Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 7; Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. JUPP.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 and 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. PERRIS.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 and 7, Rev. E. CEREDIG JONES, M.A., of Bradford.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. GREAVES.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11.15 and 7, Rev. G. CRITCHLEY, B.A.

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. J. E. STRONGE.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. JOHN ELLIS.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11, Rev. J. H. WICKSTEED, M.A., and 6.30, Rev. F. H. JONES, B.A.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15, Prof. W. H. HUDSON, and 7, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.

Stepney Green, College Chapel, 11 and 7, Mr. C. A. GINEVER.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 and 7, Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.

Stratford, Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. T. ELLIOT.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 and 7, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR, B.D.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. J. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

Bath, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. McDowell.
Blackpool, Dickson-road, North Shore, 10.45 and 6.30, Pulpit Vacant.
Blackpool, South Shore Unitarian Church, The Hall, Lytham-road, 11 and 7,
Bootle, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Morley Mills.
Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 and 7, Rev. R. C. Moore.
Brighton, Christ Church, New-road, North-street, 11 and 7, Mr. Herbert Rix, B.A.
Buxton, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 7, Rev. George Street.
Canterbury, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11, Rev. J. Harwood, B.A.
Dover, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. Burrows.
Guildford, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Rattenbury Hodges.
Hastings, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Gardner Preston.
Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. J. Marten.
Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. Warschauer.
Liscard, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. E. Haycock.
Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Charles Craddock.
Liverpool, Hope-street Church, 11, Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., and 6.30, Rev. H. D. Roberts.
Liverpool, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Crossley; Evening subject, "The Origin of the Doctrine of the Dual Nature of Christ."
Maidstone, Earl-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. Sidaway Brettell, M.A.
Manchester, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. T. Poynting.
Newport, Isle of Wight, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. E. Pike.
Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. J. E. Carpenter, M.A.
Portsmouth, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45.
Portsmouth, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Mr. Thomas Bond.
Scarborough, Westborough, 10.45 and 7, Rev. Ottwell Binns.
Sevenoaks, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 and 6.45, Rev. F. Teasdale Reed.
Sheffield, Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B.
Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. Agar.
Southport, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Frederick B. Mott.
Torquay, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 and 6.30.
Trowbridge, Conigre Church, 11 and 6, Rev. J. Wain.
Tunbridge Wells, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 and 6.30,

IRELAND.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 7, Rev. G. H. Vance, D.D.

WALES.

Aberystwith, New Market Hall, 11, Rev. Enoch E. Jenkins.

Cape Town, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. R. Balmforth.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY SOUTH PLACE, FINSBURY.—May 29, at 11.15, AYLMER MAUDE, "Tolstoy as Dramatist."

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN SQ., W.—May 29, at 11.15, DR. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The Ethical Religion of Japan."

RIVINGTON CHAPEL.—The ANNIVERSARY SERMONS will be preached on SUNDAY, June 5th, 1904, at 3 o'clock and 6.30 P.M. by the Rev. E. Savell Hicks, M.A., of London. Tea between the Services, 6d. each.

WELSH UNITARIAN SERVICES.

A Special WELSH SERVICE, conducted by the Rev. Ceredig Jones, will be held at Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, Sunday afternoon, May 29th, at 3 o'clock, with appropriate Welsh Hymns and Music.

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss Lilian Talbot, B.A. Honours Lond. Preparation for London Matriculation, Trinity College, and Associated Board of Musicians. Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. Apply to the Head Mistress.

WAVERLEY SCHOOL, 24, Hamilton Road, Sherwood Rise, Nottingham.

Preparatory to the Public Schools.
Head Master Mr. H. T. FACON, B.A.(Lond.).
Prospectus on application. BOARDERS received. Reference kindly permitted to the Rev. Frank K. Freeston, Essex House, Campden-hill, W.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, 14 & 15, SOUTH MARINE TERRACE, ABERYSTWYTH.

Principal ... Miss MARLES-THOMAS.

This School is splendidly situated in one of the healthiest parts of Wales, overlooking Cardigan Bay, and close to excellent golf links. Pupils have passed the London and Welsh Matriculation; Cambridge Higher Local; Senior and Junior Cambridge Locals, besides the usual Theoretical and Practical Music Examinations. Scholarships have also been obtained at the Welsh University Colleges.

Gymnasium, Swimming, and excellent Hockey Club.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY, ADELAIDE PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Assets, £158,000.

Directors.

Chairman—Sir H. W. Lawrence, Bart., J.P. 17, Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—Mark H. Judge, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W
Miss Cecil Gradwell, 7, Victoria-street, S.W.
F. H. A. Hardcastle, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st. S.W.
Miss Orme, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
Stephen Seaward Tayler, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham, S.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4 per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3 and 3½ per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

BORROWER'S INTEREST 4 per cent. Monthly Repayment, including Principal, Premium, and Interest for each £100.

10 years.	12 years.	15 years.	18 years.	21 years.
1 1 1	0 18 4	0 15 6	0 14 2	0 12 11

Compare the above rates with those of other Societies. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

FRUITARIAN CAKES.

MADE ENTIRELY OF FRUIT AND NUTS

Uncooked, Concentrated, Natural Food.

READY FOR USE WITHOUT PREPARATION.

For travelling they are ideal. A meal will go in pocket.

PEAR and WALNUT	7d.	per 8 oz. packet.
APRICOT and NUT	7d.	" "
MUSCATEL and ALMOND	6d.	" "
FRUIT and NUTS	5d.	" "
DATE and GINGER	4d.	" "
DATE and LEMON	4d.	" "
DATE and ORANGE	4d.	" "
FIG and CITRON	4d.	" "
DATE and NUT	3d.	" "
FIG and NUT	3d.	" "

Sample Box containing 14 varieties Fruitarian Cakes, 8d.; or with 3 varieties of Nut Butters, post free, 1s.

HUGH MAPLETON, Nut Food Manufacturer, ARDWICK GREEN MANCHESTER.

UNDERBANK UNITARIAN CHAPEL, STANNINGTON.

Minister, Rev. IDEN PAYNE.

This old cause at a village on the hills near Sheffield, which has existed for 250 years, is almost entirely dependent for its support on the income derived from farms in the locality constituting the endowment. Latterly two good-sized Cowhouses have had to be rebuilt, at a total cost of £450, and the Trustees find themselves nearly £300 in debt.

The Salary which they are able to pay to the Minister is a very low one, and even a slight augmentation would be a very material aid.

Subscriptions to the extent of £129 19s. have been already received (mainly from Sheffield), as per list at foot.

The members of the Congregation are not in a position to do much. Unitarian friends at a distance are now appealed to.

Donations should be by Cheque or Postal Order, made payable to Mr. Edward Bramley, and sent to him at 6, Paradise-square, Sheffield

John Stevenson,
Chairman of Trustees.
Michael J. Hunter,
Vice-Chairman of Trustees.
Edward Bramley,
Hon. Treasurer.

LIST OF DONATIONS RECEIVED.

	£	s.	d.
Mrs. S. M. Aspland	1	1	0
Miss Atkinson	0	5	0
Mr. F. H. Atkin	2	2	0
Mr. E. T. Atkin	25	0	0
Rev. Wm. Blazeby	3	3	0
Mr. J. S. Beckett	3	3	0
Mr. J. S. Beckett	10	0	0
Mrs. Bramley	0	10	6
Mr. H. R. Bramley	0	10	6
Miss A. F. Bramley	0	10	6
Mary Crooke	1	0	0
Mr. A. H. Dalton	2	2	0
J. Figorski	0	5	0
Mary Fisher	1	1	0
Mrs. Greaves	2	2	0
Mr. J. J. Gratton	0	10	6
Mr. H. W. Gair	1	1	0
Mr. A. J. Hobson	5	0	0
Mr. M. J. Hunter	25	0	0
Mr. P. H. Holt	5	0	0
Mr. J. Harrison	1	1	0
Ellen Kirke	5	0	0
M. Kitson	2	2	0
J. Kirby	2	2	0
J. K. Lister	1	1	0
E. Langton	1	1	0
Wm. Laycock	0	10	6
J. Laycock	2	10	0
Mrs. J. Laycock	2	10	0
Mr. H. J. Morton	3	0	0
G. W. Osborne	5	0	0
C. J. Street	1	1	0
W. R. Stevenson	2	2	0
W. Ward	1	1	0
M. H. Walker	0	10	6
J. R. Wigfull	10	0	0
	£129	19	0

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

MARRIAGE.

Green—Pennack.—On May 21st, at Upper Brook-street Free Church, Manchester, by the Rev. Charles Peach, Walter Battye, third son of Walter Norman Green, of Longsight, to Ethel Mary, youngest daughter of the late William Pennack, of Longsight. No cards.

DEATHS.

Buckton.—On 20th May, at 27, Ladbroke-square, London, aged 77, Catherine Mary, widow of Joseph Buckton.

Curling.—On May 18th, at Richmond-road, Horsham, Caroline Susannah Curling, aged 87.

Notcutt.—On 19th May, Helen Marianne, wife of John Notcutt, of Blakeshall, near Kidderminster., aged 52,

Annual Subscription by Post, One Copy, 1s. 6d.

UNITY

An Organ of Reasonable Religion for Unitarian Propaganda.

NEXT MONTH'S ISSUE NOW READY.

Unitarian Doctrines Explained; Trinitarian Orthodoxy Refuted; the Christianity of Jesus advocated.

"UNITY" contains Thoughts from Unitarian Leaders and Advanced Thinkers, Poetry, Incidents, Special Articles of Congregational Interest, and Light for the Perplexed.

Good for Church Members, Sunday School Teachers, Adult Classes, and Home Reading.

Adopted by Churches for Sale or Free Distribution with Printed Calendar Page or without.

Single copies, by post, 1d.; 1s. a year; 5d. per doz.; 3s. per 100; Calendar Page extra.

Published every month by the EDITOR, Ivy House, Mottram, Manchester.

AMONG THE DUTCHMEN.

BY THE

Rev. LUCKING TAVENER.

Nine Discourses suggested by the visit of the National Conference to Amsterdam.

CONTENTS:—The Dykes and Dams. The Dutch Painters and the Italian. The Holy Land of Europe. Erasmus. William the Silent. Spinosa. Rembrandt.

2s. 6d. net.

ARTHUR STOCKWELL, Creed-lane & Essex Hall.

By REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

UNITARIANISM RE-STATED.

FOUR POPULAR LECTURES.

1. THE BIBLE. 2. JESUS CHRIST. 3. GOD. 4. A WORKING RELIGION.

In neat Pamphlet, 48 pp. Sixpence.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, ESSEX STREET, W.C.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKLETS.

By the REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

DAILY MEDITATIONS

(Fourth Edition Revised.)

NIGHT UNTO NIGHT.

Cloth, red edges, 6d.; roan gilt, 1s.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C.

UNITARIAN CHRISTIAN CHURCH, LEWISHAM.

A BAZAAR

in Aid of the Building Fund is to be held at ESSEX HALL on June 8th and 9th.

Lady E. Durning-Lawrence will open the proceedings on the first day, and Mrs. W. Blake Odgers on the second day.

Gifts of money or goods are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope, Minister, or A. G. Warren, Esq., Hon. Sec., Kearsney, Berlin-road, Catford.

LYDGATE CHAPEL AND SUNDAY SCHOOL.

—o—

SCHEME for the provision (1) of a New Sunday School; (2) a New Organ; (3) £450 for Improvement of the Endowment. £2,500 required to complete the Scheme.

A BAZAAR is announced to be held in July, 1905. Contributions will be gratefully acknowledged by the Treasurer, Mr. JOB LEE, Sycamore, New Mill, Huddersfield, or by the Rev. J. H. GREEN, Lydgate Parsonage, New Mill, Huddersfield (Minister).

The following contributions have already been received:—

	£	s.	d.
J. H. Wicksteed, Esq.	25	0	0
Mrs. Buckton	20	0	0
SirJ. T. Brunner	10	0	0
Mrs. Wells	8	0	0
John Scott, Esq.	3	3	0
Miss L. S. Leigh	2	2	0
J. H. Leigh, Esq.	2	2	0
J. Laycock, Esq.	1	0	0
H. J. Morton, Esq.	1	0	0
Other sums	10	3	0
Raised in Congregation and Sunday School	71	0	9
	£153	10	9

Board and Residence.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH. — ARNEWOOD. Pension. Commanding position in the West Cliff-road; full South aspect; sea views and private grounds; close to Winter Gardens, Cliff Promenade, Square or Pier; moderate Tariff.—Apply, MANAGERESS.

CHELTENHAM.—Board and Residence in the best part of Sunny Cheltenham, sheltered from North and Easterly winds. Near the Spas and Gardens. Comfortable home. Moderate terms. Excellent cuisine.—A. G., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, W.C.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE; most comfortable throughout. Sea View, excellent cuisine. billiard and smoke room, sanitary certificate—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

LANGLEY HOUSE, DAWLISH, DEVON.—A delightful HOLIDAY RESORT for Ladies and School-girls (Boys under 15). Beautiful country, bracing climate. Sea and Moorland. Prospectus from MISS N. JONES, Matron; or A. E. JONES, Esq., Proprietor.

FELIXSTOWE.—Comfortable HOME for Permanent BOARDERS, Adults or Scholars; also APARTMENTS on reasonable terms.—Apply, Mrs. ROBINSON, Kimberley, Ranelagh-road, Felixstowe.

LAKE DISTRICT.—Small House with good-sized Garden to be Let Furnished. Rural situation. Few minutes' walk from shops and Lake. Two sitting-rooms, four bedrooms.—Miss E. NEWLING, Windy How, Hawkshead, Lancashire.

SOUTHEND HOLIDAY HOME.—Open all the year round.—Accommodation provided for Six Visitors, elder scholars, teachers, or members connected with our Missions and Schools. Present bookings, July and part of August. June and September are now vacant. For particulars and application form, apply to the Local Hon. Sec., Mr. J. MURROW, Bellevue-road, Southend.

TO LET, UNFURNISHED.—Three large Rooms, gas stove, bath (hot and cold), near Crouch End and Hornsey Road Stations.—21, Cheverton-road, Hazelville-road, N.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Enlarged, Remodelled, Refurnished.

PRONOUNCED BY THE PRESS TO BE THE BEST TEMPERANCE HOTEL IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Accommodation for about 250 Guests.

Highly commended by the Rev. Dr. Aked, Rev. Rowland Hill, Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. Alderman White, M.P., the Misses Cadbury and thousands of other guests.

Spacious Coffee, Reading & Drawing Rooms. Electric Light throughout.

Apartments, Service and Table d'Hote Breakfast from 5/- to 6/6 per day (with Dinner from 8/- to 9/6

77 & 101,

Southampton Row, London.

FREDERIC SMITH & SONS.

EATON'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL,

22, Guilford Street, Russell Square, LONDON.

Facing the Gardens of the Foundling Institution.

Central. Homelike. Beds from 1s. 6d. Breakfast and Tea from 1s. Patronized repeatedly by many visitors during the 30 years of its existence.

Opposite the British Museum.

THACKERAY HOTEL,

GREAT RUSSELL STREET, LONDON.

This large and well-appointed Temperance Hotel has Passenger Lift; Bathrooms on every Floor; Electric Light throughout; Spacious Dining, Drawing, Writing, Reading, and Smoking Rooms; Fireproof Floors; Perfect Sanitation; Telephone; Night Porter.

Bedrooms from 2s. 6d. to 5s. 6d.

Inclusive charge for Bedroom, Attendance, Table d'Hôte Breakfast and Dinner, from 8s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. per day. Full Tariff and Testimonials on application.

Telegraphic Address: "THACKERAY, LONDON."

A LECTURE on VISITS to DENMARK, with Slides illustrating Visits. On SUNDAY, MAY 29TH, at 8 P.M., at the PASSMORE EDWARDS SETTLEMENT, TAVISTOCK-PLACE. Admission free.

VISITS TO DENMARK. Third Visit, August 6th to 22nd.

LECTURES:—The Danish Peasantry—Rural High Schools—History and Organisation of the Social Democratic Party—Modern Danish Literature, &c.

VISITS:—Farms—Rural High School—An Old Age Pension Home—Co-operative Dairies and Bacon Factories—A Co-operative Bakery—An Open-air Museum, &c.

Expenses of Visit, from nine guineas (inclusive).

For particulars as to journey, expenses, hotels, &c., apply to the Hon. Secretary, Miss F. M. BUTLIN, Old Headington, Oxford.

Situations, VACANT AND WANTED.

LADY, Cultivated, Musical, fairly good Linguist, requires position as COMPANION to a Lady of means. Neighbourhood of Cheltenham preferred. Reference if required.—Reply to L. S. K., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, W.C.

GENTLEMAN (Young) seeks position as Companion, Secretary, or similar work. Salary secondary consideration.—ROWE, 26, Sneinton Hollows, Sneinton, Nottingham.

AS HOUSEMAID, where Manservant or Parlourmaid is kept; good references; in Hampstead, or temporary; aged 39.—C., 3, Oak Hill-park, Hampstead, N.W.

A YOUNG GERMAN LADY would like to spend a few months in an English family, on mutual terms.—Apply, G. SCHARTIGER, Brightside, London-road, Leicester.

WANTED.—MOTHER'S HELP or LADY NURSE, domesticated, good needlewoman; one boy, 3 years; two servants.—Mrs. SWIRE, Sutton-in-Ashfield, Notts.

SITUATION WANTED as USEFUL SEWING MAID, with light housework; age 28.—F. VINCENT, Sunnydene, Talfourd-road, Peckham-road.

Terms for Advertisements.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF-PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6

Special Terms for a Series.

Calendar Notices, 10s. per year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge 1/6,

Situations Vacant and Wanted,

20 words, 1s. 3 insertions charged as 2.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. The entire remittance should accompany all orders to insert Advertisements.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

GOD AND THE SOUL: An Essay towards Fundamental Religion. By R. A. ARMSTRONG. People's Edition. Paper covers, 6d.; by post, 8d.

"The first half of this little book is a perfect model of subtle thought, apt illustration, lucid reasoning, and terse exposition."—Spectator.

RELIGION AND LIBERTY. Addresses and Essays at the Second International Council of Unitarian and other Liberal Religious Thinkers at Amsterdam, September, 1903. Edited by P. H. HUGENHOLTZ. 2s. net, postage 4d.

THE PLACE OF CHRISTIANITY AMONG THE RELIGIONS OF THE WORLD, AND OTHER ESSAYS ON COMPARATIVE RELIGION. By J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A. 2s. net, postage 3d.

One by one the great civilisations of the past have yielded up their treasures, and the 19th century has witnessed the discovery of ancient faiths, so that the history of religion is now known to be inseparably connected with the whole history of the human race. To sketch this process is the object of this volume.

HOME PAGES: Twelve Talks on Practical Religion. Edited by HELEN BROOKE HERFORD. 1s. net, postage 2d.

CONTENTS :—(1) Woman's Work and Care, by Brooke Herford, D.D.; (2) Jem Cooper's Geraniums, by E. Bauner Williams; (3) Patchwork, by Brooke Herford, D.D.; (4) "A Bit On," by J. Crowther Hirst; (5) In Honour Preferring One Another, by Brooke Herford, D.D.; (6) A Preacher's Message, by Frances E. Cooke; (7) A World without Worship; (8) Blessed be Drudgery, by W. C. Gannett; (9) "Early will I seek Thee"; (10) Yes and No, by J. J. Wright; (11) Where is Thy God? by Brooke Herford, D.D.; (12) Nicodemus, by Brooke Herford, D.D.

THE TRINITY AND THE INCARNATION. By R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.

CONTENTS :—Part I., The Growth of the Doctrine of the Deity of Christ. Part II., Modern Pleas for the Doctrine of the Trinity and the Deity of Christ. Part III., The Heart of the Argument. 2s. net, postage 3d.

CONVERGING LINES OF RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By S. H. MELLONE, M.A., D.Sc. 2s. net, postage 3d.

CONTENTS :—Introduction; Belief in God; Revelation, Inspiration, and Miracle; The Incarnation and the Trinity; The Atonement, Redemption, and Education; The Immortal Hope; Notes.

"An attempt is made to trace the main lines of growth in that deep change of religious thought which is now proceeding in the modern world. The author's plea is for a whole-hearted allegiance to the principles by which that change appears to be governed. These principles he endeavours to bring together and describe in as clear and simple a form as possible."—Author's Preface.

THE PROBLEM OF THE FOURTH GOSPEL. By J. WARSCHAUER, M.A., Ph.D. 2s. net, postage 3d.

CONTENTS :—I. The Problem Stated. II. The First Three Gospels and the Fourth. III. The Fourth Gospel as History. IV. Was John the Author? V. Conclusions and Conclusion.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

NOW READY.

The Sunday School Association Hymn and Tune Book.

FOURTH EDITION. Revised and Enlarged. Price 2s. 6d. net. Postage 4d.

The fact that a fourth edition of the HYMN AND TUNE BOOK has been called for is sufficient evidence that the action of the Committee of the Sunday-school Association in publishing such a work has been amply justified.

Opportunity has been taken to add to this new edition some twenty tunes, to make the volume available for the two Hymn Books issued by the Association, namely, "Hymns for Heart and Voice" and "The Sunday School Hymn Book."

Picture Lessons from the Parables of Jesus.

Twelve Pictures and Twelve Suggestive Lessons, with Bible Passages for reading and memory verse.

The Set in Envelope, price Fourpence, net. Postage 1d.

These are admirably adapted for a Home or a Sunday class; and, in the former, especially, would afford a pleasant occupation to children if they were allowed to colour the pictures. They are brought out at a specially low price, in order that each child may have a copy. This might be pasted into a book, and perhaps a few words about the parable, written down on the opposite page by the scholar.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Stories of the EARLY ITALIAN MASTERS

By MISS KATHARINE F. LAWFORD.

With Fifteen Full Page Illustrations.

Cloth, 1s. 6d. net; Presentation Edition, Gilt Edges, 2s. net. Postage 3d.

Contains pleasant glimpses into the lives of the following fifteen Old Masters; told simply and in an interesting manner.

CIMABUE. GIOTTO. LORENZO GHIBERTI.
PAOLO UCELLO. DONATELLO. FRA ANGELICO.
FILIPPO LIPPI. ANDREA MANTEGNA.
SANDRO BOTTICELLI. PERUGINO. PIERO DI COSIMO.
LEONARDO DA VINCI. MICHAEL ANGELO.
RAPHAEL. TITIAN.

"One of the purest pleasures comes from taking an intelligent interest in painting and sculpture; and in writing these Stories it is my desire to be of service in leading young people to seek out and appreciate true works of art, especially those which belong to the nation, and in which they ought to feel that they too have a share."—From Preface.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,

ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate-hill, London, E.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Sole Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 & 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale) JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate. Saturday, May 28, 1904.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3232. NEW SERIES, No. 336.] LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 4, 1904. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 353
LEADER—
Cobden and To-day 360
ARTICLES—
Manchester College, Oxford 361
Professor Wendt at Oxford 361
The Tendencies of Modern Religious Thought 363
MEETINGS—
The Ministerial Fellowship 354
The British and Foreign Unitarian Association—Public Meeting 355
Conference 362
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Memorial to the Committees of the Colleges 354
Unitarians in Canada 354
The Time Limit 354
OBITUARY—
Catherine Mary Buckton 359
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 365
OUR CALENDAR 366
ADVERTISEMENTS 366

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

A FURTHER instalment of Whit-week matter fills nearly the whole of our present number, and there are still reports of the rest of the Conference, the Postal Mission and the Temperance meetings to come. A report of Dr. Hunter's lecture last Sunday evening on "James Martineau" we regret to have to hold over. We must ask forgiveness of the children also that their column is again crowded out.

LONDON friends, we trust, will not forget the Bazaar of the Lewisham Congregation, to be held at Essex Hall on Wednesday and Thursday next. The congregation, which, under the devoted leadership of the Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope, has made steady progress, at present meets in an old chapel quite inadequate to its needs; but now, through the generosity of Sir Edwin Durning-Lawrence, one of the most desirable sites for a church building in Lewisham has been secured, and an appeal is made to the loyal support of all Londoners to help in the building of this church.

THE Bazaar is to be opened at 2.30 each afternoon: on Wednesday by Lady Durning-Lawrence, when Mr. W. Blake Odgers, K.C., ex-President of the London District Unitarian Society, will take the chair; on Thursday by Mrs. Blake Odgers, Mr. Howard Chatfeild Clarke, President of the London District Society, in the chair. Sir Edwin was President in 1902-3, and these gentlemen are all keenly interested in the success of this effort, of so much moment for the future prosperity of the church.

ON Wednesday week, June 15, as will be seen from an advertisement in another column, the Laymen's Club is giving a concert at Essex Hall, in aid of the Southend Home and the Children's Country Holiday Fund. The object must appeal to the sympathies of all. A glance at the names on the programme will show that the audience may be sure of a delightful evening. Essex Hall ought to be crowded.

THE House of Commons re-assembled on Tuesday after the Whitsuntide recess, and on Monday the Licensing Bill goes into committee. It is said that whatever else goes by the board this will be pressed to the end. That is as it may be. We doubt whether it can be done without at least some radical modifications in its provisions. The remarkable demonstration at the Albert Hall last Saturday, representative of every shade of progressive thought in the community, and which has its counterpart all over the country, must inevitably have its effect upon members of the House of Commons. Even in the House of Lords the Bench of Bishops has unanimously declared that a time limit is essential to the compensation scheme. Altogether the omens for the conflict which opens on Monday are far from inauspicious. Victory for the temperance cause, if it is secured, however, will only be secured by the untiring energy and pertinacity of its friends, both inside and outside Parliament.

THE Archbishop of Canterbury received at Lambeth on Tuesday a deputation of clergy, headed by Bishop Welldon, praying for release from the obligatory use of the Athanasian Creed in public worship. While affirming their unshaken faith in the doctrines of the Creed, they felt that, especially by reason of the damnatory clauses, it was a stumbling-block to thoughtful people, and quite unsuited for use in public worship. The Archbishop expressed his own sympathy with the views of the deputation, but impressed upon them the difficulty of making any alteration in the rubric.

A WONDERFUL meeting of welcome to Dr. C. F. Aked, on his return to duty, was held in the Philharmonic Hall, Liverpool, on Monday evening. The vast building was filled in every part by an audience full of gladness and enthusiasm. Dr. Aked has fought a brave fight with death among the snows of Davos. He returns, after fifteen months' absence, apparently full of life, health, and vigour. The chair was occupied by Dr. Clifford. The Rev. R. A. Armstrong opened the meeting with prayer. Among the speakers were Dr. Watson (Ian Maclaren) and Sir Edward Russell. Dr. Watson pointed out that the meeting was a striking testimony to the power of preaching. The true prophet was always the mightiest power in the world. The people of "Pembroke" have built their pastor a charming cottage at New Brighton, with a sunny balcony where, on summer days, he may recall the radiant sunshine of his late retreat.

THE first service of the first Unitarian Church of Winnipeg was held on May 8, in the city, in the Sons of England Hall. The church is organised under the auspices of the American Unitarian Association, the Rev. H. F. M. Ross being the minister in charge. Mr. Ross was for thirteen years a minister of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, having been ordained in Winnipeg thirteen years ago. We understand that there are a considerable number of English Unitarians in the city, and wish every success to the new church.

A CONFERENCE on the Congo Question, in which several Members of Parliament, representatives of missionary and philanthropic organisations, and others interested in the subject will take part, has been arranged by the Aborigines' Protection Society, to be held at Westminster Palace Hotel on Tuesday, June 7, at 3 P.M. The Bishop of Hereford has consented to preside, and among those who have promised to speak are Sir Charles W. Dilke, M.P., Sir Brampton Gurdon, M.P., Mr. Alfred Emmott, M.P., Dr. Harry Guinness, and the Rev. Silas K. Hocking. General discussion will be invited, and the presence of all anxious for the prompt removal of abuses further disclosed by Consul Casement's report will be welcome.

COUNTRY HOLIDAY MOVEMENT.—Miss Lawrence, 23, Campden House-chambers, Campden Hill, London, W., acknowledges with thanks receipt for this fund of the following sums:—Mrs. Frank Jolly, 10s.; Mrs. Holt, £1 1s.; Mrs. Haynes, 10s.; Miss Short, £1 1s.; Mr. Quintell, 10s.; Mr. Taylor Heape, £1 1s.; Miss M. C. Martineau, £1 1s.; Mr. Warren, £1 1s.; Miss Warren, £1 1s.; Mr. P. M. Martineau, £1 1s.; Mrs. Wade, 10s. 6d.; Mr. Chitty, £1; A. B. C., £1 1s.; Miss Swaine, £5.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

THE MEMORIAL TO THE COMMITTEES OF THE COLLEGES.

SIR,—As one of those who signed the recent Memorial I feel it my duty to say that the explanations given at the recent Ministers' Conference have greatly modified my judgment, so much so that, if the occasion were repeated, I certainly should not repeat my signature. It is a pleasure and relief to say this publicly, inasmuch as I felt deeply the apparent ungraciousness of opposing a movement in which so many honoured friends and brothers were earnestly engaged. Nothing but a sense of incumbent duty would have made me sign the Memorial, and I rejoice to be convinced that that sense of duty was mistaken.

I say this without expressing any personal opinion either in favour of or against the particular scheme in contemplation, and it will, of course, be understood that I speak for myself and myself alone.

The one thing which I do heartily hope is that a conference between the committees of the two Colleges—a conference which both committees shall enter entirely unpledged—may promptly be arranged.

RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG.

Liverpool, May 31, 1904.

UNITARIANS IN CANADA.

SIR,—We are soon to set a Unitarian home missionary at work in Western Ontario, Canada, and would be greatly obliged if any ministers or other readers of the INQUIRER knowing of English Unitarians who have settled in that section would send the names and addresses of the same to Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, Essex Hall, London, to be forwarded by him to us here. We would like particularly to learn of English Unitarians living in any of the following named cities and towns:—Brentford, Stratford, St. Thomas, London, Woodstock, Galt, Guelf, Berlin, Chatham, Sarnia, Windsor, all in the Province of Ontario.

J. T. SUNDERLAND.

Toronto, Canada.

THE TIME LIMIT.

SIR,—This has nothing to do with the Licensing Bill, but with our inveterate Unitarian, Liberal Christian, &c., &c., habit of trying to cram too much into a given time, as illustrated by the recent Anniversary Meetings at Essex Hall. There ought to have been one speech less at the Public Meeting, and each of the other speakers ought to have had five minutes more. What but the time limit could have prevented the Rev. Joseph Wood from telling us that the American Unitarian Conference undertakes no executive functions, but leaves all that to the Unitarian Association, and confines itself strictly to deliberation?

Then, on Thursday, either of the subjects announced required an entire morning for its adequate discussion.

A long paper, "discussion" opened by the reading of another paper, composed and conscientiously rendered without the slightest apparent reference to the paper it purported to discuss, one genuine contribution to real discussion, and then the other subject started. The second subject, touched on only by the last speaker, who necessarily had totally to ignore what had gone before, which had no bearing on the supply of ministers for our churches. Most interesting and important, however, the discussion was in itself, but here again the time limit prevented any reply to Mr. Dowson and Mr. Gow on the question as to the rightful disposal of Manchester College funds. Had time permitted, it would have been pointed out that no one proposes to ask questions of students who desire to enter Manchester College; that, if the English Presbyterians be a denomination, then the college is denominational; that Mr. Dowson's interesting and touching bit of autobiography has no bearing on the present crisis, for Mr. Dowson never was on the foundation of the College, and the only question in dispute is whether it is right to employ the funds of the College to educate the clergy of the Church of England. No one seeks to prevent any mortal from entering the College, and studying there at his own expense; but when a young man announces his deliberate intention of taking "holy orders," and renounces his foundation scholarship on that ground, it seems to most people a superfluity of naughtiness for the committee to urge him to retain it, and to tell him it makes no difference whether he has made up his mind to enter the Church of England or not. The funds were never contributed for that purpose.

J. COGAN CONWAY.

THE MINISTERIAL FELLOWSHIP.

THE fifth annual meeting was held in the Memorial Hall, Manchester, on Monday, May 30, the Rev. C. C. Coe, president, in the chair. There was a good attendance of members. Sixteen new members were elected, bringing the total membership up to 120.

Resolutions of sympathy with the Rev. Principal Gordon on the death of his daughter, with the Rev. T. R. Elliott in his serious illness, and with the Rev. Thos. Leyland in his prolonged enforced retirement from active service were passed.

The annual report recorded a continuation of the steady progress of the Society in membership, financial strength, and practical usefulness. An actuarial examination of the finances had been made at the end of the first quinquennial period, with most satisfactory result. The Committee, in consequence, recommended changes in the rules which would entitle members either to increased benefit under the present subscription or to a lower rate of subscription for proportional benefit. They also presented a special report on ministerial settlements, submitting a detailed scheme for the purpose of bringing together congregations needing ministers and members desiring a settlement. The balance-sheet showed that the amount standing to the credit of the Society was £366 0s. 2d., representing a gain on the year of £79 14s. 3d.

The PRESIDENT, in moving the adoption of the report and balance-sheet, expressed hearty sympathy with the objects of the Society. He congratulated the members on its flourishing condition, and hoped that its membership would continue to grow. He dwelt upon the brotherly spirit and desire for mutual service which such a fellowship evinced. He was a little doubtful as to whether some of the congregations would avail themselves of the Settlements Scheme, but he felt sure that, if adopted, it would prove beneficial.

The Rev. William Harrison was elected President for the ensuing year. The treasurer (Rev. Dendy Agate), and secretary (Rev. C. J. Street) were re-elected. Vacancies on the committee were filled by the appointment of Revs. Charles Peach, A. Cunliffe Fox, and N. Anderton, and Mr. A. E. Piggott, F.S.A.A., and Rev. W. R. Shanks were re-elected as auditors.

The necessary alterations were made in the rules to carry out the suggestions of the committee as based on the actuary's report.

The following resolution was moved by Rev. C. J. STREET, seconded by Rev. ARTHUR W. FOX, supported by Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL, and carried unanimously:—

That in the opinion of this meeting, competitive candidature in the ministry of religion is to be discouraged altogether as detrimental to the unity and peace of a congregation, and humiliating to the ministers concerned. This meeting, therefore, urges upon ministers the propriety of judging each opportunity of ministerial service as speedily as possible on its own merits; and suggests to congregations that, whatever be the method adopted by way of preliminary selection, one name only should be submitted to a congregational meeting for a formal vote.

The Special Report on Ministerial Settlements was then considered, and unanimously adopted, on the motion of the President, seconded by the Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL. At the last annual meeting the Committee were instructed to bring up a scheme for this purpose if they thought it practicable. The Special Report presented such a scheme in detail, which will now be put into operation. The problem, said the Report, was to devise a method of bringing together with greater facility and more regard for self-respect congregations needing ministers, and ministers who are without charge or may desire a change. This subject has been under careful consideration by the Ministerial Fellowship for a good while past. It was also a subject of reference to its committee from the last National Conference; and the Ministerial Fellowship offered to cooperate in any practicable and suitable way with the Conference Committee in bringing about a better state of things. The Conference Committee, however, has decided against taking any action in this direction at present. But the Ministerial Fellowship is unwilling to let matters rest in their present unsatisfactory state, and desires to make a beginning at once in the direction of a reform which, it is generally admitted, is needful.

The Secretary is, therefore, instructed to prepare a list of congregations requiring ministers, and another of members of the Fellowship who are desirous of a fresh appointment, with a view to bringing both into communication with each other. More than this is not contemplated, and counsel would only be given if specially asked for. The result of this experiment will be watched with interest.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

PUBLIC MEETING.

FOLLOWING the Annual Business Meeting of the Association in the afternoon, a public meeting was held on Wednesday evening, May 25, in Essex Hall, which was well filled, the President, Mr. W. ARTHUR SHARPE, being in the chair.

The PRESIDENT, in the course of his opening address, said that he wished to offer a few words of criticism, which he trusted his colleagues on the Committee would pardon, from the point of view of one who was new to the work of the Association when he first came to it, and was not much wiser after the experience of a year. The work of the Association was done by its Executive Committee, but he was at first perfectly appalled by the agenda paper of sometimes as many as 100 items which confronted that Committee at its monthly meetings. The work could not be done without the assistance of the sub-committees, and their reports, prepared by our very able secretary, were presented to and acted on by the Executive. He doubted whether the Executive Committee could really properly consider them. The work of the Association during the last ten years must have certainly nearly doubled, and the time was rapidly coming, if it had not already come, when some form of delegation of the work of the Executive Committee would be necessary. Whether this could be done by sending it to the district associations, allotting them funds, for instance, which they might deal with, he was not prepared to say, but as regards home missionary work this appeared to him to be a feasible plan, and one well worthy of consideration. It might be that more work could be got out of the Council, a body of 200 persons, which met in small numbers twice a year to hear a report from the Executive and pass abstract resolutions. It was, perhaps, because of its not having more to do that the Council had taken upon itself on occasions to pass resolutions on political subjects, and had in that way brought into the Association subjects of difference which some wished to avoid. Their Association contained persons of all political parties, and they gloried in the fact. What was wanted, in his opinion, was not to bring politics into religion, but to bring religion into politics. That was a very nice distinction, of course, and there had been, in the past, attempts made to draw lines to avoid discussion of questions of practical politics of the day which had from time to time been brought before the Council. He hoped, personally, that those lines would never be drawn. Primarily they were a religious body, and they had to think what was the meaning of their religion before they could draw lines of that character. The best definition of religion that he had ever found was that which Thomas Carlyle had given when he said: "The thing a man does practically believe, does practically lay to heart, and know for certain concerning his vital relations to this mysterious universe, and his duty and destiny there; that is in all cases the primary thing for him, and creatively determines all the rest. That is his religion." That was a religion which must necessarily embrace the whole of things, and anybody who would attempt to exclude possible resolutions in the future would, in his opinion, be damaging the Association, and the cause which they all had at heart.

There was no doubt a power in the office of President, and that could be relied upon in the future, when such questions were raised, to exclude them, if he thought well, by ruling them outside the objects of the Society. That power had been exercised on many occasions, and he trusted that no President would hesitate when he thought proper to use it. He thought that the rules of the Association, which were silent on the subject, should remain silent. They were served, and he hoped they would continue to be served, by presidents and officers of all political parties, and in the exercise of his veto, any president could exclude what he honestly believed to be outside the objects for which the Association existed. He could hardly conceive that such an exercise of discretion would be questioned, and he believed that while the members of the Association loyally respected that discretion, their strength as an Association for the diffusion of Unitarian Christianity was never likely to suffer. He had made the foregoing remarks because political questions had recently been brought up. No doubt it might have been thought that he, as President, could have exercised his veto and excluded from the discussions some of these questions which were not approved by all. He had not done so because he felt strongly that questions which divided them should not necessarily be excluded, and he pleaded earnestly that no attempt should be made to draw lines of exclusion. He again thanked the meeting for the pleasant year of office they had given him as President.

The Outlook for Liberal Religion.

The Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER gave the first address, on "The Outlook for Liberal Religion." Eight days ago, he said, he was present at a very remarkable meeting in the Sheldonian Theatre at Oxford. There was an assembly of nearly a thousand graduates from all parts of the country. There were present besides a considerable concourse of residents of Oxford, and there was a due share of undergraduates in the gallery. That assembly was called to discuss the question whether in the theological school for the Arts degree, which was taken by students of all denominations, the examinerships should be confined to clergy of the Church of England. One bold member of the Examining Board had persuaded his colleagues that it was a desirable thing that members of other religious communions should be included in the examining body; they, in turn, persuaded the Hebdomadal Council, the first legislative body of the University, who, in turn, brought the question before what was known as Congregation—the body of resident Masters of Arts engaged in the work of teaching in the University. That body by a large majority also passed the proposition, and it then remained for Convocation to declare its vote. That vote had become a matter of history, and it was likely that that decision would form a landmark in the religious history of the University. He had noticed the incident because it was a specimen of the temper of one section of the opponents of what was called "Liberal Religion," and if he were to judge by that scene alone, when the word "traitor" was freely bandied about by those black-coated gentry against such loyal sons of the Church as Canon Sanday and Canon Bigg, his hope for the outlook of Liberal Religion in England would be very small indeed.

But a few days later he had been also present at another meeting held in a small upper room, when a distinguished graduate and clergyman had read a paper to a mixed assemblage of Anglicans and Nonconformists upon the Fourth Gospel. That paper, so far as its reverent freedom was concerned, might have proceeded from their illustrious friend, Professor Wendt, of Jena. Nothing more subtle, more discriminating, and more delicate in its criticism could have been imagined than the paper, which was received with a universal chorus of approval (though not necessarily of agreement) by all who were present. The victory of the historical method of the treatment of the Scriptures was, in England at least, practically complete. It had begun ten or twelve years ago, when Professor Driver had issued his famous introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament. Only a few days ago he had read in the Quarterly Review for the month of January a very remarkable article on the Abbé Loisy. The writer of that article reminded them, as their own preacher had done that morning, that in the Bull "Providentissimus Deus" "the traditional view of the inerrancy of the sacred books was propounded in its most extreme form. But the clergy were urged to the study of the Scripture in the original tongues, availing themselves of all the assistance that modern research and its methods afford. This was an effectual though an indirect and unintentional antidote to what had gone before. Thought had a natural logic; such studies once entered upon take their own course, and carry men with them whether they will or no." The writer further denounced "the system which introduced an alien factor into the things of the mind. The two are contrary one to the other. In the external sphere authority has its place and its necessity. In the internal it is, in the literal sense of the word, impertinent. The one answer which thought can make to it is to deny at once its competency and its jurisdiction. 'Woman, what have I to do with thee?'"

He hardly knew whether to wonder most at the audacity of the quotation, or the courage of the editor of the Quarterly Review—the most conservative bulwark of Church and State—in admitting such and other words, or, lastly, at the fact that the author of the article was an English Roman Catholic priest. The victory then was practically assured. But it must be remembered that liberal religion was not confined to any one group of churches; it was a spirit that constantly appeared in all. It might take years, generations even, to gather in the results, for there was always a vast difference between literary theories and the actual working of institutions. They must consider how subtle were the ties that bound men to the ecclesiastical organisations in which they had been trained, and in which they found, as they believed, their noblest opportunities of usefulness. There always would be gigantic obstacles to the progress of liberal religion in the great organised churches as they knew them to-day. Mighty were the forces that were girding themselves on each side for the great conflict. The cleavage was going wide and deep, but before it could produce its full effect it would have to go far wider and deeper than they at present dared dream.

The representatives of the older churches, when they looked out on their own struggling efforts for the organisation of liberal religion, did not feel attracted by them. They saw their churches very often enfeebled; they saw the ministry destitute of some at least of the gifts and graces they themselves possessed, and, alas! too often too impoverished to enable them to take their rightful place among the teachers of the day. They said that the Unitarian worship was cold, poor, lacking enthusiasm, wanting in quickening sympathy which came from the glow of multitudes bent upon a common idea and working towards a common end. They saw among the Unitarians types of character often heroic, noble, devoted and self-sacrificing, but they found them sometimes at least lacking in the spiritual graces of humility and personal devotion in which they had learned to find the very essence of their religious life. And they shivered. They thought that to join with Unitarians would mean loss of strength, loss of opportunity, and they therefore felt that they could not cast in their lot with them.

And yet they knew that there was one thing that they would find among them in which they were lacking—one thing which was the very essence of their life, and without which they must perish—"Veracity." To quote once more his Roman Catholic author: "The one grace, said Martineau, the Roman Catholic Church never seems to reach is veracity. But for a teacher veracity is the essential grace. The Church must reach it, or she must die." Those were grave words. They were applicable no less to the Unitarians in their outlook than they were to Rome. There were many forces among the Unitarian body which were destined, he thought, to help on the cause of liberal religion. But they needed that baptism of the Holy Spirit without which they would only languish and droop. Through what channels would the new quickening come? He would venture to name two, at least, among the powers by which they must invigorate their life. Two of the great forces which had manifested themselves in the last century were Science and Democracy, and these were destined, he believed, to exercise more and more influence on the religion of the future. Already much had been experienced of the quickening power of the great truths of science. They knew that all the churches were engaged in assimilating its methods and in adopting its results, and they saw that it was destined to have a far-reaching effect upon the traditional faiths. Already, indeed, science had again and again declared that it was not hostile to religion, as it was deemed to be a generation ago, when the first revolt took place in this country under the leadership, for example, of such men as Huxley and Clifford, against the traditional barriers placed by a stupid orthodoxy in its way. As that was generally admitted he need hardly dwell upon the point.

But there was the influence of Democracy, which had already produced such powerful modifications of some forms of traditional belief, for it had had a great deal to do with the repudiation of the ancient Calvinistic doctrine of arbitrary decrees, its selection of some to privileges, and its absolute condemnation of others to eternal woe. And just as it repudiated the idea of privilege in salvation, so it rejected the conception of privilege as embodied in a hierarchy, and undermined the whole basis of a priesthood. Just as science made away with the magic of a sacrament and rendered impossible the doctrine that by a mere word the feeling of Almighty God could be altered towards the infant child, so did democracy demand that for every soul in the family of God there should be equal opportunity to fulfil its powers, and equal chance to reach the mighty destiny of eternal life. That principle of democracy had brought with it again the idea which Professor Wendt alluded to the previous evening—the universality of revelation. Some of his hearers might remember how, a generation ago, the brilliant Disraeli in one of his novels had described the two powers that were preparing themselves for the attack that would be brought into inevitable conflict — the Church and the Revolution. What were the watchwords of the Revolution? Liberty, Fraternity, and Equality. The late Bishop of Durham, Dr. Westcott, had said that those watchwords were only a translation into political form of the essential principles of Christianity. So the opposition was done away with. They had learned that the real foundation of religion lay in the conscience, and the reason, and the heart of man. But these were not mere individual properties. The present age was discovering that they were essentially social, wrought into form within us through innumerable ties of family, occupation, government, and race. It was through the communication of man with man that those powers had reached the fulness of the scope that they possessed at the present time, so that the very assurance that they had of the ultimate basis of religion lay deep in that mighty order by which they were encompassed, and of which the full and ultimate expression was to be found in the organisation of our democracy.

The work was hard and long, and there were all kinds of difficulties in the way. They had, however, no right to speak upon those things until they had striven to make themselves masters of the facts that were all around them. But here were new sources for faith, and new powers with which they might go forward. Let them remember the pregnant maxim of Goethe, "Thought widens, but lames; action narrows, but quickens." There was danger lest they should rely too much on what was known as the spirit of the age, and expect time to do the work that they should do. There was a danger lest liberal religion should occupy itself with its criticism, its philosophy, its social difficulties, its political exclusions, and a thousand and one other petty problems which did not affect its real being and its duty to the great masses. What share were they going to take in the great warfare with ignorance and suffering and sin? What crusade were they going to organise; to what would they call their young people; against what specific evil would they try to lead them forth? for he was deeply persuaded that until they understood the spirit of rescue and deliverance, and could use the great words of the old theology, salvation and redemption, they would have no chance of making liberal religion the power that it ought to be among the masses. It was a wise saying of Jeremy Taylor, that "we should trust as if God did all; but labour as if we did all." Time was on their side, but only on condition that they were on the side of Time. If they did not take advantage of the opportunities it brought, if they sat slumbering on the bank while the tide swept by, they would be left stranded without power and without love, and they would deserve it. But he did not think so ill of their Churches. He had not so little faith in their great ideals, and he asked his hearers to take up their share in this high task, so that whatever might be their destiny, whether outward failure or outward success came to them, they would be assured in their hearts they had done what they could. Let them realise the mighty paradox of Paul, and work out their salvation with fear and trembling, for it was God "that worketh in you to will and to work for His good pleasure."

Unitarian Work in America.

The Rev. JOSEPH WOOD was the next speaker, his subject being "What I saw of the Unitarian Churches in America." He received so much kindness, he said, not to say inspiration, in America, that he was moved to say nothing but good of her people and her churches. He went to America expecting to find people of kindly hearts and gracious hospitality, and he was not disappointed. He found the brethren in America confident of their churches, and with good reason. No one could fail to be struck by the fact that everything was growing, changing, perplexing, and bewildering. There was ceaseless activity of action and ideas. Again he was struck—and this was true of the churches especially—by the optimistic tone which characterised everybody. The Americans as a nation were absolutely confident of their own future. There might be things to grieve over, wrong things and mistaken things here and there, but they were so confident of their own strength that they were quite sure things would come out right in the end. There was something in the atmosphere which was electrical. Everybody was alive and alert, everybody was hopeful, and especially were people hopeful in the churches. He asked one young minister, "What of the good cause?" and received the reply, "The ball is at our feet." Fancy an English Unitarian saying that! He asked the grand old veteran of New York, Robert Collyer, "How goes the good cause?" The reply was, "God's in His Heaven; all's right with the world."

That tone of confidence, of hopefulness, of optimism, was very refreshing to an Englishman coming from an atmosphere which was often too pessimistic. The optimism was all the more remarkable, for relatively with the population the Unitarians of America were not so numerous as in England. In England, with a population of forty millions, there were three hundred and seventy Unitarian churches; in America, with a population of eighty millions, there were four hundred and seventy Unitarian churches. To be on an equality there ought to be seven hundred and forty. This was largely to be accounted for by the vast emigration to the West, where there was a splendid mission field open to Unitarians, and of which they were taking rapid advantage. In New England it was different. There Unitarianism occupied much the same place as the Episcopalian Church in this country. There were twenty-seven Unitarian churches in Boston, and in most places the little parish church of the village had become the Unitarian church by process of natural development. The American churches possessed some advantages which were absent in England. For instance, they had no Established Church. It was equality they worked for in England; that was their birthright in America. Denominational bitterness was not so bitter, narrowness of sect and party was not so narrow as with us. That was due partly to the character and splendid work of some of their own men, Dr. Hale, Robert Collyer, and many others; partly to the influence of outsiders like Phillips Brooks; and more to the frank recognition of the principle of religious equality. There was a more thorough-going democracy in America than here. Not indeed more individual liberty, but there was a clear pathway in America for merit of whatever kind. Everywhere doors stood open to intelligence, character, and energy, and this condition of things was eminently favourable to progressive movements of life and thought. Another advantage arose from the fact that there was a better educated community in America, and the churches had better material to work upon. He did not say that the professional classes—lawyers, ministers, medical men, teachers in the university—were better educated, but the great multitudes of the common people stood on a higher educational level than here. Many of the problems which had to be faced in America were the same as here. In New England they suffered as in Old England from the movement of the country people to the towns, which was depleting many of the country churches of their congregations. Then they suffered from that deficiency of students for the ministry which they regretted so deeply over here, and they were dealing with the problem of allowances for old ministers.

They complained also of decay, in certain quarters, of public worship, and he also heard the cry of apathy and indifference. Unhappily, apathy and indifference in religious matters prevailed in nearly all countries. Although some of the problems were much the same, he was bound to say he thought they were faced in America with greater courage and determination. In America they were less afraid of co-operation than people were here, and they were less afraid of that dreadful word organisation. They felt the need for coming closer together for common service and common objects. For instance, the National Alliance of Unitarian Women had gathered in a few years the sympathies and support of masses of the people. To-day the Alliance had 370 branches, and those branches between them raised £20,000 a year for the work of their churches. That was an astounding fact. The Young People's Religious Union, with 140 branches, raised an income of £400 a year. Another most important thing was that Americans had revived the feeling about church membership—the revival of the old Puritan habit and feeling with regard to the church. Ninety of the churches used the covenant or statement of faith adopted by the National Conference, and in 117 other churches there were covenants of membership. He was more struck with this feature than with any other, and it seemed to him to be a solution of the problem which was troubling them here. He must mention, too, the remarkable generosity of American Unitarians. It might be said that they were wealthier, but he doubted if that was so man for man. Two of the churches each contributed £1,600 a year towards the funds of the Association, and other churches contributed on the same scale. One of the pleasing features was that an Englishman felt at home in America. The forms of worship were largely different, but there was the same love of truth, the same passion for freedom, the same veracity, the same large outlook on the world.

Liberated Priests in France.

M. ANDRÉ BOURRIER, of Sèvres, editor of the Chrétien Français, then read a paper in French, on "The Emancipation of Religious Thought amongst the French Clergy," an English translation of which was distributed among the audience.

The history of my work, he said, is really my own history. The work I wish to see realised in the conscience of the French clergy is what has been accomplished in my own conscience. The crisis, through which those priests who are emancipating themselves from dogma are passing, is one that I have experienced before them; their aspirations, their hopes, and also their sorrows have been mine. I have found peace of mind and the solution of my doubts in the Gospel. They are still seeking. And I am not content only to sympathise with them; I wish to help them to find the same peace, the same light. I admit that there are different ways of attaining this end. I know that the method that has been good for individuals, will, perhaps, not be successful for the society to which they belong. It is for this reason that our work is broad and varied; and that it finds friends and helpers in opposing camps. Against the vast unity of Catholicism, it places the Protestant unity, the Protestant "Bloc." And it does not even present the Protestant solution as the necessary one. We say: "Be Christians!" or, again: "The Gospel before everything." We have a shining beacon towards which we are marching: it is the Kingdom of God. We have only one way—Liberty.

M. Bourrier then told how he entered the great Seminary at Marseilles in 1871, and four years later, at the age of twenty, was ordained priest, and at once was thrown into the most active ministerial work. He was closely associated with the work of Catholic Working Men's Clubs; but as time went on he met doubts which he could not overcome, and in facing social problems, also, he lost faith in the Church, for he saw that the Catholic clergy did not really wish to serve, but to reign. So after twenty years' experience as a priest, and a long inward struggle, he left the Church, and came to Paris to be trained as a Protestant pastor under Auguste Sabatier, as was told in an article published in THE INQUIRER of April 30. Of his position when he began to edit the Chrétien Français, M. Bourrier said:—"The day is past when one could surrender one orthodoxy to embrace another, yet if I have purified my faith I may still say that I have kept it. I am a Christian, as I was on my mother's knees. I have retained the same beliefs, the same hopes; I recite the same prayer. I have renounced superstition and falsehood, but I have not apostatised. I am in communion with all who proclaim the faith of the Apostles, I pray with all who pray to one God, Father, and Friend. I excommunicate none, and I disown none but those who anathematise others." His aim was to organise the emancipation of religious thought among the priests; and much has been accomplished. Many have come out from the Church. Of these he told as follows:—

Our organisation has helped a certain number of these fugitives to settle down in civil life. Some are now in most honourable positions. Among them are physicians, lawyers, notaries. A greater number have turned to journalism, trade, industry, the civil service, or to teaching. There are some, too, who have cast all prejudices aside, and are now working men, happy and proud no longer to eat the bread of hypocrisy and falsehood. Some twelve of our protégés are pastors in Protestant churches. That number was already too great for our few French churches, and this career is now closed to ex-priests. It is certain that, in spite of our efforts, we have been unable to respond to every application. One must have the courage to admit that there are still many priests who wander about the streets of Paris and our great towns seeking work, that they may live as free and sincere men. They see doors closed against them, they wait for long months, their savings are exhausted, and they are reduced to want. There is nothing for them but to return to the fold, or to die of starvation. I have known some who were reduced to this extremity. They went back, and I would say to those who are scandalised: Let him who has known what hunger is cast the first stone. If I venture to relate these things, it is because I still cherish the hope that one day my voice will reach some Christian souls, rich in pity and in this world's goods, who will enable us to provide employment for the fugitives. We are convinced that, when that day comes, those who escape will be counted by hundreds.

After these revelations it is not surprising that a strong and numerous party has been formed among the clergy, who say: Let us not go out; let us reform our Church. Among these the most illustrious is the Abbé Loisy. He and his school have aroused considerable movement in France. By drawing the attention of the younger clergy to the results of criticism, and introducing the historical method of study, they have let a ray of light penetrate into the Church, and have produced a ferment of independence which will, sooner or later, cause a revolution in its dogma and its hierarchy. No orthodoxy can resist work like this, guided by sincerity, sustained with courage. Those who are not acquainted with the Catholic attitude of mind will perhaps not understand M. Loisy, and will blame him for his apparent subtlety and submission. For my part, I do not judge him. I only affirm that the fact that it is possible to write "L'Evangile et l'Eglise," and to remain in the Catholic Church is the most striking proof of the work that has already been accomplished in Catholicism.

In a recent number of the Chrétien Français a priest wrote the following lines, which might be signed by an archbishop and by more than one bishop:—"It is not all over with the Church, as some seem to believe. It is one of the transitory forms of the Church that is passing away. The century that is now beginning will see hitherto unheard of transformations, which are already foreshadowed by certain signs. We have learned from history that the heretic of to-day is the orthodox of to-morrow. Galileo needed more than 200 years to force the Roman congregation to admit the diurnal movement of the earth; in our time ideas move quickly: in twenty years M. Loisy will have no more contradictors. Gradually a church is arising, broad, tolerant, human, full of respect for science, a friend of liberty, full of care for justice, a Church to which one will be able to belong without repudiating reason or honour. To that church my friends and I belong, although we are priests; we are preparing the way for it with all our energy, and it is in its name, in the name of the universal and pacific religion of the future, that I heartily join hands with you."

For Abbé Loisy's teachings to become orthodox would be the end of orthodoxy, though the hierarchy might still remain standing, and the liturgies still be solemnly chanted beneath the cathedral arches, and skilfully interpreted by the consciences of the worshippers. Would this still be Catholicism? Not that Catholism, at any rate, against which we have always fought, which has shed streams of blood and striven to dominate society in order to hinder its forward march.

The Chrétien Français has favoured critical study among the clergy, because it sees in it a means of emancipation for religious thought. At the same time it has supported the anti-Concordat movement which has made itself felt in certain dioceses, and notably at Belmontet. There we have seen a curé, unanimously supported by his parishioners, remaining in his church in spite of his bishop, continuing to officiate and to preach, and this for nearly fifteen months. This situation had a considerable importance in our view, and for the following reason. The relation between the Church and the State in France is governed by a Concordat. According to this Concordat it is the State that pays the clergy, but through the medium of the Bishop, so that the latter gives the curé his share of the budget des cultes, but at the same time shows him the end of his crosier. You will understand the meaning of this. The Belmontet case showed that a change in the mode of distributing the budget des cultes would be enough to give the signal for a great schism in the Church of France. To make the priests independent as regards their material existence would be to emancipate their conscience and their faith.

Such is the ecclesiastical situation in France. We believe that there is a Catholicism which is advancing towards the emancipation of religious thought, and it is to the clergy that we look for a reform. It is for this object that we are working, and by means of our journal we have brought these ideas into the homes of thousands of priests. You will help us to carry on this work. Yes, help us to break the bonds that bind the French clergy to the yoke of the Roman Curia. Let us break the first link of the chain, the others will follow of themselves, Liberty will do the rest.

At Paris, on the heights of Montmartre, over the door of the edifice erected by the clergy to the glory of the same clergy, France is depicted, kneeling before the Sacred Heart, with this inscription:—Gallia pœnitens et devota. Too long France was indeed on her knees at the feet of the idol of the Vatican. She is to-day rising up, and she has only to turn her eyes in the direction of the Bastille to see the statue of Liberty. To Liberty France will go, without forsaking the Christ of the Gospel. That, in conclusion, is the wish I desire to express.

Unitarianism in America.

The Rev. W. H. LYON, D.D., of Bookline, Mass., gave an account of the American Unitarian Association and its work. He said they did not trouble themselves in the churches much about the Association. They supplied it with funds, not so generously as Mr. Wood thought, but still with tolerable generosity, and seeing they had as President a young man of marvellous executive ability, and as secretary a man of equally marvellous enthusiasm, and behind them a body of men and women full of wisdom, they went about their parish work and let the Association attend to their own work. Now and then they were reminded of the fact that they ought not to submit so tamely, and they got up a ferocious criticism, but the Association did not mind, and it was soon forgotten. They had an enormous country to cover. Although £10,000 or £12,000 a year might seem a large sum, it was small to cover the territory of the United States and Canada. All over America people were imbibing liberal views, and some professors—"orthodox" episcopal professors—were saying things about the New Testament which he would hardly dare to say for fear of his conservative people. He was not sure that it would not be the mission of the Unitarian churches to hold back the Evangelical churches from the extremes to which they were rushing. Their liberal views were penetrating silently, and some day people would find that all unconsciously they had slipped away from the old basis, and that their faces were towards the future. In conclusion, he expressed the very great sympathy they had in America with what was being done in England, and their admiration for the courage and manliness with which difficulties were faced. The daughter stretched her hands across the sea, and whenever the need arose for one or other, they knew that from either side towards the other it would be "Hands across the Sea."

The Home Churches.

The Rev. JAMES HARWOOD spoke on "Thoughts Gleaned from a Visitation of Our Churches." The churches, he said, were getting away from the isolated position in which they had stood to each other, and welcomed the signs of increasing fellowship. That was something to congratulate themselves upon. The congregations which he visited were mostly those called grant-aid congregations, but they must not draw too great a distinction between those and other congregations. As a matter of fact many congregations which were called self-supporting owed their resources largely to the benefactions of earlier generations, and did less for themselves than those which were called grant-aided. It was the endowed churches above all which had to guard against the dangers of inactivity and decay. No one had insisted more than Unitarian ministers that religion did not consist merely of going to church; still less did it consist in merely providing places of worship. Nothing was more hopeless than providing buildings with the idea of attracting congregations. Not buildings but live men must be looked to to do the work. He suggested that if a congregation was unable to make the modest provision necessary for a minister fully alive to its work, it might join with a neighbouring church, and between them engage a really capable and live man. If that policy were persisted in they would be able to achieve far greater results than by the method now adopted, which led sometimes, he was afraid, to the choosing of ministers whose only recommendation was that they could be got on the cheap. If they were sometimes discouraged by the apparent want of success they must go on in the spirit of hope. It might be that out of some of their smallest country churches, as from some Nazareth, men would come forth who would be leaders among them and carry them on to greater things.

Popular Irreligion and Liberal Christianity.

The Rev. Dr. WARSCHAUER was the last speaker, and gave an eloquent address on "Popular Irreligion and Liberal Christianity." Referring to the extraordinary anti-religious revival they had lately witnessed, associated with the personality of Mr. Robert Blatchford and his writings in the Clarion, the keynote of which was sounded in the one word "Nunquam," he said that this Gospel of Irreligion owed a great deal to the influence this vigorous and popular journalist had gained by his brilliant advocacy of Socialism. He did not doubt that if Mr. Blatchford had lent the support of his pen to Buddhism, for instance, Buddhism would now be enjoying a considerable vogue among the readers of the Clarion, and tens of thousands who now swear by—but generally do not read—the "Riddle of the Universe," would be purchasing copies of the Bhagavadghita, to be similarly taken as read—and there would be sixpenny editions of the Sacred Books of the East. The present popularity of "Nunquam's" agnosticism he did not regard as a sign of decay of the religious sense. The Clarion propaganda, and the immense interest aroused by it proved one thing, and one thing only, with startling clearness, that the thinking section of the working classes were tired of, and ready to revolt against, what is known as orthodoxy, and are prepared in large numbers to seek a resting-place even on the hard and sterile soil of negation, rather than sojourn longer on the insecure and swampy ground of an exploded theology. Orthodoxy was powerless against "Nunquam's" attack; the only effectual reply could be made by Liberal Christianity, which found its most unfettered expression in their own circle of churches. Thus was presented to them an unprecedented opportunity, and, he would add, a great and solemn duty. It was for them to proclaim, with all their energy and by every means they possessed, that the choice lay not simply between an impossible creed and agnosticism, but that when men had given up all that a better knowledge rendered untenable, when all had been sifted and winnowed, there yet remained unassailable those fundamental beliefs which consitute the essence of the Christian faith. People did not really want to give up religion or Christianity, they wanted a religion in accord with reason and conscience. This was for them a great opportunity. If they failed to make use of it, they would deserve their unsuccess.

To meet the present crisis, they must strike the positive, confident note of conviction, assured as they were that Christianity is true. The doctrine of a personal God, a Father in heaven, who loved and heard and answered prayer, was the message the people were unconsciously listening for; a doctrine not of higher Pantheism or highest Agnosticism, but definitely theistic and Christian, was what they would receive; and as to methods of propagandist work, he would only ask for more of what they already had, more literature, more lectures, more people's services—and he strongly urged, after lectures, even at the ordinary evening services, giving an opportunity for questions. As to literature, he asked for a penny pamphlet giving the results of the criticism of the Bible, and a sixpenny edition of "Positive Aspects of Unitarianism," and, if possible, of Harnack's "What is Christianity?" But more vital than any matter of detail was the question, "Have we received the Holy Spirit?" Multitudes were perishing for lack of the message they had to give, tossing on the sea of doubt, or clinging in despair to old worn-out beliefs. Their duty, who stood on the safe shore, surely was to send out the lifeboats!

OBITUARY.

CATHERINE MARY BUCKTON.

OUR obituary last week recorded the death on May 20, at 27, Ladbroke-square, of Catherine Mary, widow of the late Joseph Buckton, at the age of 77. Mrs. Buckton came from a family well known in South Wales, where her eldest brother, Mr. Morgan Williams, is still active and honoured at Swansea.

The first home of her married life was in Leeds, where she belonged to the family group so intimately associated with Mill Hill Chapel. There she won the distinction, says the Yorkshire Post, of being the first lady member of the Leeds School Board, and a pioneer of much that is now esteemed as most useful and practical in the education of girls. A Unitarian and a Liberal, she was a candidate for a seat on the first Board in 1870 as an undenominationalist, but was defeated. Three years later she was second on the list, and in 1876 she was returned at the head of the poll with a majority over the next candidate of more than 3,000. This popularity was due to the energy with which she threw herself into the work of the Board. She was the only lady member, and felt specially charged with the interests of the girls. In the modern methods of domestic and hygienic training she showed herself at once a pioneer.

Her experience on the Board Committees, where she was frequently brought into close intercourse with the parents, and especially the mothers, led her to undertake courses of simple lectures on physiology and the laws of health. Some of these were repeated at Saltaire to audiences which numbered five hundred persons, and they were ultimately published in an admirable volume under the title of "Health in the House" 1875). This work led to the introduction of lessons on cookery into the Board-schools. The methods of instruction, with the necessary apparatus, were all worked out by Mrs. Buckton, and she presided over the actual teaching. In her little book on "Food and Home Cookery" (1879) she expounded her results; and in the same year she also issued another record of experience in "Town and Window Gardening." Another of her books was on "Our Dwellings, Healthy and Unhealthy." These books brought her into relation with many workers in different parts of the country, and her advice and help were eagerly sought by correspondents far and near. Her example, moreover, stimulated similar efforts in many other localities; but her removal to London in 1882 left the Leeds undertaking to be developed by her successors. Experience in a London house produced another little book, "Comfort and Cleanliness: The Servant and Mistress Question," in 1898.

In the course of a short address at the funeral service, held at her house, before cremation, the Rev. J. E. Carpenter spoke as follows:—"What gifts of happiness and help do we not associate with her, who was for so many years her husband's pride, and for still more years her sister's and her children's joy. It is difficult to speak of one or other element of character without doing some injustice to the whole: but first and most prominent it cannot be wrong to note the brightness and gaiety of her spirit. All who knew her will remember how her wit played around human affairs, always with kindliness, sometimes with a deep insight as she flashed a new light on difficult places. It was never bitter, never suspicious, never ungenerous. She was full of trust in the efforts and endeavours of others; and she conciliated opposition because her transparent singleness of purpose begot an answering trust on the part of others in her; while her sense of humour often carried her through difficulties such as beset all champions of unfamiliar ideas. To this gift of humour was added a sympathy that never failed to the last hour of life. It was so gentle, so penetrating, so quietly effective, that it quickly won its way even among the careless and indifferent. It fell upon tired women with an inexpressible charm, on weary and hard-worked parents, or hardly less weary and hard-worked teachers, and, above all, on the little children. It was so spontaneous, so free from pretentiousness, so pure, without demand for personal response. Her heart went out to those who were in need; she lamented their ignorance; she asked herself what she could do to help. The strength of this sympathy gave her courage to attempt difficult things. It might be a sudden journey to Russia in the midst of family sorrow; it might be lectures on the conditions of health to women who needed the utmost simplicity and clearness of teaching. She had a way of seizing on the essential elements by a kind of intuition, and isolating them in her thought, while her imagination suggested various modes of impressing them upon her hearers. This often required technical knowledge which she did not at first possess; but she was never afraid of the efforts needful to acquire it. She went at her problems with a blythe fearlessness of attack; and by persistent toil and serious steadfast labour she gave her best to the mothers and children whom she sought to help. She passes, and we see her no more. She enters the land which to us is silent, but (in my faith at least) is for those who go thither vocal with innumerable harmonies of prayer and praise. Is it not said of her there, "She hath done what she could"?

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from T. B., J. H., W. R. M., H. R., W. R., A. W. W., J. W., W. W.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C.

LONDON, JUNE 4, 1904.

COBDEN AND TO-DAY.

IT is a sound instinct which is leading men to make much of yesterday's centenary of the birth of RICHARD COBDEN. His life and teaching have many useful lessons for us to-day. How many and how much needed it would have sadly grieved him to know, had a prophet foretold it him in the plenitude of his success when the Corn Laws were repealed. It is a common and cheap mistake to assume that COBDEN was concerned merely to bring about material prosperity for his class, and cared nothing for the wider problems associated with the phrase "social reform" so glibly used by all political parties to-day. But COBDEN's advocacy of Free Trade was only part of a large political philosophy which, though it had its errors and its narrownesses, is far indeed from being exhausted or fulfilled by the removal of Protective tariffs. Even on Free Trade it has become necessary to re-state his arguments and fight again the battle one had supposed he had won for us for ever. But assuredly also his speeches and writings have something to tell us of use in solving other present-day problems in his hatred of an aggressive foreign policy, of tyranny over inferior races, of excessive expenditure on armaments, and in his conviction of the necessity of land, education, and electoral reform.

It has been well said of him that he was no system monger. He saw the necessity of delivering the mass of his fellow countrymen from the tyranny of class privilege, and he knew how wide the ramifications of that tyranny were. But he had the wisdom to realise the importance of concentrating upon one thing at a time, and it was his political genius which perceived that in the Corn Laws, rather than in any of the other abuses against which others were protesting, lay the citadel of the evil to be attacked. To a clergyman who asked him in 1841 to subscribe to a fund for building ten new churches in Manchester, he said :—

> The first and most pressing claim of the poor is for food ; all other wants are secondary to this. It is in vain to try and elevate the religious and moral character of a people whose physical condition is degraded by the privation of the first necessaries of life ; and hence we are taught to pray for "our daily bread" before spiritual graces. . . . So convinced am I that there is no other mode of raising the condition of the working classes in the scale of morality or religion while they are denied by Act of Parliament a sufficiency of food, that I have set apart as much of my income as I can spare from other claims for the purpose of effecting the abolition of the Corn Law and Provision Law.

Because the Millennium did not come forthwith on the repeal of the Corn Laws foolish people have called COBDEN a vain prophet. COBDEN never believed that it would. He knew, for instance, how essential it was, not only that food, but that land, should be freed for the common use, and he knew that he who freed the land would do as great a work as that with which he himself was primarily associated. He strongly condemned the virtual exemption of land from taxation, which still continues to the encouragement of the disastrous dog-in-the-manger policy of the speculator, and he told the landlords that they would never get their land properly cultivated till they gave such security of tenure as would encourage men of enterprise and capital to take it up. He was, too, a strong educationist. "I hope," he wrote to TAIT, the Edinburgh bookseller, "you will join us in a cry for schoolmasters as a first step to radicalism."

> I have unbounded faith in the people, and would risk universal suffrage to-morrow in preference to the present franchise. But we shall never obtain even an approach towards such a change except by one of two paths—Revolution or the School-house. By the latter means we shall make permanent reform ; by the former we shall only effect convulsive and transient changes, to fall back again, like Italy or Spain, into despotism or anarchy.

To the education of his own work-people he devoted much thought and money, but he was supremely impatient of the efforts of the sects to impose their several systems in the schools. The following extract from a letter to Mr. EDMUND POTTER, immediately before the repeal of the Corn Laws, illustrates both this and the unbounded faith of his friends in his ability to work political miracle :—

> That zealous and excellent educationalist, STONE, of Glasgow, seized upon me yesterday. "I have often thought," said he, "that Lord ASHLEIGH or Mr. COLQUHOUN was the man to carry a system of national education through Parliament. But they have not moral courage. If you will take it in hand, in less than four years you will get a vote of twenty millions, and reconcile all the religious parties to one uniform system of religious education." I replied that I had tried my hand on a small scale in the attempt to unite the sects in Lancashire in 1836, but that I took to the repeal of the Corn Laws as light amusement compared with the difficult task of inducing the priests of all denominations to agree to suffer the people to be educated.

Next to the charge that he regarded Free Trade as the be-all and end-all of social reform, perhaps the favourite misrepresentation of COBDEN's views is the charge that he stood for "peace at any price." He vigorously opposed PALMERSTON's reckless policy of intervention anywhere and everywhere in the internal affairs of foreign states, and he denounced the war against Russia for the maintenance of the "balance of power" and the defence of that "progressive Liberalism" of the Porte which he knew from personal experience to be non-existent. "He was," says Mr. MORLEY, in his Life of COBDEN, "too practical to dream that regard for purely moral opinion could be trusted to check the overbearing impulse of powerful selfish interests."

Wars, however, constantly arise not from the irreconcilable clashing of great interests of this kind, but from mismanaged trifles. This was what he had maintained in his argument for arbitration. The grave and unavoidable occasions for war, he said, are few. In the ordinary dealings of nations with one another, where a difference arises, it is about something where external opinion might easily be made to carry decisive weight. In the undecided state of the CZAR'S mind as to the invasion of Hungary a vigorous expression of English opinion might, and probably would, have made all the difference. However that might be, it is the duty of the more highly civilised Powers to lose no opportunity of shaping and strengthening the common opinion of Europe against both intervention of nations in one another's affairs and against war for the first resort, instead of the very last, as the means of settling international differences.

It was not solely—perhaps not chiefly—on moral grounds that COBDEN based his peace principles. "He opposed war because war and the preparation for it consumed the resources which were required for the improvement of the temporal condition of the population," and it was on this ground that he made his remarkable onslaught on the Englishmen who made loans to Austria and Russia to cover the cost of the war against the liberties of Hungary, as well as on the ground of the complicity in that outrage it involved.

In the early days of the struggle for Free Trade he told Mr. ASHWORTH that—

> Free Trade, by perfecting the intercourse and securing the dependence of countries one upon another, must inevitably snatch the power from the Governments to plunge their people into wars. What do you think of changing your plan of a prize essay from the Corn Law to "Free Trade as the best human means for securing universal and permanent peace"?

General Free Trade has not come yet, though its principles are making more progress abroad than some people suppose. But it is beyond dispute that the influence of legitimate British trade has been on the side of peace at least in international affairs, though that cannot be said with the same confidence with regard to our Colonial wars. But of this we may be certain, that COBDEN would see nothing in our present position, either at home or abroad, to warrant departure from the great principles which he lived to impress upon his countrymen. Here are two extracts from his letters with which we will close:—

I have faith in nothing but slow and heavy toil, and I shall lose all hope if we cannot see with toleration, and a desire to encourage, every effort that aims at curtailing the power and privileges of the common enemy.

We must choose between the Party which governs upon an exclusive or monopoly principle, and the people who seek, though blindly perhaps, the good of the vast majority. If they be in error we must try to put them right, if rash, to moderate; but never, never talk of giving up the ship.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

THE following is the reply of the Committee of Manchester College to the Memorial published in our issue of May 14:—

DEAR MR. JONES,—The Committee desire to acknowledge the receipt of the Memorial forwarded to them by yourself on the 9th inst. It was considered by them at a meeting held on the 20th inst., at which they passed the following resolution nem. con.:—"That the Committee will be glad to consider suggestions for co-operation or arrangement between the two colleges, and that the chairman and secretaries be requested to write to the memorialists and the secretaries of the Unitarian Home Missionary College expressing this." We are, yours faithfully,

H. ENFIELD DOWSON, Chairman.
A. H. WORTHINGTON, HENRY GOW } Hon. Secs.

CHARLES W. JONES, ESQ.

IT is not the truths that are known, but the truths that are loved, that make men better.—J. H. Thom.

THE first British National Peace Congress is to be held in Manchester on June 22 and 23. For some years past an International Congress has been held. At the twelfth Universal Peace Congress held at Rouen last autumm the hope was expressed that while international congresses should still be held annually, national congresses should also be held at an earlier date each year. A conference of representatives of British peace societies last February decided to carry out the idea of a national congress for Great Britain and Ireland; and Manchester has been chosen as the first place of meeting. Mr. Leonard Courtney has promised to take the chair, and among the speakers the following are expected:—Lord Monkswell, the Bishop of Hereford, Mr. J. E. Ellis, M.P., Mr. C. P. Scott, M.P., Sir Edward Fry, the Dean of Durham, and Dr. Spence Watson. The Rev. Priestley Prince is chairman of the local committee

PROFESSOR WENDT AT OXFORD.

LECTURE ON TYPICAL FORMS OF CHRISTIANITY.

PROFESSOR H. H. WENDT, of Jena, whose Essex Hall lecture on the "Idea and Reality of Revelation" we reported last week, paid a visit also to Oxford, and on Friday afternoon, May 27, on the invitation of the Hibbert Trust, delivered a lecture at Manchester College on "Typical Forms of Christianity." There was a large audience, which, in addition to the Principal and Professors of Manchester College, included Professor Cheyne, Dr. Rashdall, Dr. Fairbairn, the Rev. W. R. Inge, Mr. Gwenogfryn Evans, Mr. G. A. Simcox, Professors Vernon Bartlett, Buchanan Gray, and G. W. Thatcher.

Dr. DRUMMOND, in introducing Professor Wendt to the audience, said that it was hardly necessary to do so, since he was already so well known to them all as a distinguished scholar and author of Die Lehre Jesu, and a more recent work on the Fourth Gospel. It was a great pleasure to welcome him to Oxford.

The lecture, which was delivered in English, was very warmly received, and at the close Dr. EDWIN ODGERS, on behalf of the Hibbert Trust, expressed their great indebtedness to Professor Wendt. It had been their privilege to hear other eminent Continental scholars lecture in that place, but they had spoken in their own languages. It was a matter of no small daring for Dr. Wendt to undertake to address them in English, and they must congratulate him on his success. Yet he was sure they would be of opinion that the "gift of tongues" was as nothing compared with certain other spiritual gifts which he possessed. The spiritual insight with which he had penetrated to the essence of different forms of Christianity, and grasped the spiritual unity amid diversities of operations, was a thing they would not easily forget. He offered to Professor Wendt their most cordial thanks.

THE LECTURE.

Having the honour as a German Theologian of lecturing in that ancient and renowned English University, he proposed, Dr. Wendt said, to speak of "Typical Forms of Christianity." Thus he would have the opportunity of showing how modern Protestant theologians in Germany, especially those who had learnt of Albrecht Ritschl and Adolf Harnack, conceived the historical development of Christianity, and in what direction they tried to influence its further development.

Church history showed them many different forms of Christianity; he proposed to treat the several types, not in any chronological order, but according to their inner relationships. They were often found in the same church, either successively or simultaneously, and analogies to most of them were to be found in other religions also. Yet rarely was one type found without admixture of other elements. As essential to every form of Christianity he noted (1) the Monotheistic idea of God, (2) the hope of a future salvation, (3) the assurance of a certain present salvation, (4) the duty of the penitent to turn from sin to holiness, (5) the valuation of Jesus Christ as Saviour and Mediator. It was in the varying emphasis on these common points, and particularly on the last point, especially distinctive of Christianity, that the different types arose.

He mentioned first the Superstitious type and the Dualistic type. The former was much occupied in its practical piety with a multitude of superior beings and miraculous things—angels, saints, statues, pictures, and relics. It did not take from Jesus Christ his rank as highest mediator, but added many other mediators — a mother full of grace, apostles, martyrs, saints, and a multitude of relics. While Monotheism remained theoretically valid, this type of Christianity renewed the forms of polytheistic religion. Since the fourth century, especially in Catholicism, both East and West, it had been the form of Christianity prevalent among the common people. The Dualistic type, on the other hand, was governed by the conviction of a difference in principle between the heavenly world of God and the material world of the earth. Christianity first grew up in a dualistic atmosphere, for the ancient Babylonian and Persian religions had greatly influenced Jewish thought, and the same influence had made itself felt in the Helleno-Roman world. Hence arose the gnosticism of the second century, and the asceticism which was so prevalent in the Catholic Church. By the side of the Dualistic type, from the earliest times of Christianity, was found the Enthusiastic type, represented in the "Apocalypse of John" and the "Shepherd of Hermas," and in successive ages by the Montanists, the Anabaptists, the Quakers, and Swedenborgians, down to the Russian Doukhobors.

Two other types were the Mystic and the Orthodox Forensic, which were found within the organised church.

Mysticism, though very prevalent in Christianity, was also strongly developed in Oriental religions, and was specially cherished by the later Hellenism and Neoplatonism. Its essence was a longing for immediate communion with God, as an end in itself. Within the church it found the means for divine contemplation, not only in individual effort, but through religious rites, and especially the holy sacraments. It became the higher form of Catholic piety, side by side with the superstitious, and, uniting easily with ascetic views of life, had its home chiefly in the cloister. The German mystics, such as Eckhart, Tauler, Suso, had been wrongly described as essentially Evangelical precursors of the Reformation. Except those of exaggerated pantheistic tendency, they were in harmony with the church dogmas, and the authoritative leaders of the Catholic Church, also, such men as Bernard, Aquinas, and Bonaventura, in their personal piety did homage to mysticism. It was found also in Luther, who edited the mystical little book of "German Theology," and in the later Pietism, and the Moravians.

Beside the Mystic type within the church was found the Orthodox Forensic type, which was the enemy of enthusiasm. In this type God was represented as highest Lawgiver and Judge, Christianity was regarded as a new law, of which the church was the guardian; the individual Christian must show his piety by unquestioning obedience, while with the sin-forgiving grace of God was linked the condition of a vicarious satisfaction to the justice and lawful claims of God.

The Mystical and Orthodox types were often united in the church, even as alternate frames of mind in the same person, but they were essentially distinct, and the mystics were often unorthodox. Mystics of all schools were drawn to one another, Catholic and Protestant alike using and loving the same books and hymns, but the orthodox of various denominations called each other heretics, for orthodoxy in its essence is intolerant.

The Mystical and Orthodox were at one with the Enthusiastic type, as rejoicing in the miraculous, the supernatural, and ultrarational; but there was another type of Christianity, to which miracle was a rock of offence—the Rationalistic-Moralistic type. This type found revelation in the natural order of the world and in the spiritual life of man. The highest appeal was to reason, and Christianity was regarded as in harmony with philosophy. Reason and conscience were opposed to church authority, and the essence of religion was found in trust in Divine Providence, faith in the immortal life, and in an ethical service of humanity. Christ was regarded as the teacher of reasonable religious thought and the highest pattern of virtue. Essential features of this type were found in the second century apologists and in Clement and Origen, but for the type fully developed there was no room in the Catholic Church. In later times, when it grew to maturity, it opposed a rational scepticism to the supernatural authority of the Church. It found scope in the Humanism of the Reformation, and its chief representative in Erasmus of Rotterdam. Out of the same Humanism came Socinianism, and, later, English Deism, and the Rationalism of the German Aufklärung. In rationalism the rejection of this craving for miracle, the renouncing of mysterious dogmas, and the strong emphasis on morality, meant an advance and an approach to the original Gospel of Jesus; but this tendency to reduce religious knowledge to reasonable truth and religious life to moral action might be exaggerated in such a way as to lose the reality of religion. Of the essence of genuine religion was the conviction of the immediateness of communion with the supermundane, and the longing of man for that immediate communion. Belief in the unmerited grace of the heavenly Father, and the deeply felt happiness in that salvation by grace belonged to the essence of Christianity—a rationalism and a moralism which had no understanding for that immediateness of merciful communion with the heavenly Father degraded Christianity.

On the other hand there was another special type, that of the vivid consciousness of guilt and grace, of which Augustine, following out certain Pauline thoughts, had been the great representative, and which in Western Christianity found varying expression in Calvinism, Methodism, and the German Pietism of Spener and Francke. Notwithstanding its vehement condemnation of sin, the danger it had to guard against was of a paralysis of moral energy.

One other type of Christianity remained to be noted, and, indeed, the most important and genuine of all. Reading the Gospels without prejudice, they could not fail to see that the piety of Jesus did not resemble any of those types previously mentioned. His religious conceptions and teaching were entirely governed by the idea that God is the Father, filled with fatherly love, acting entirely according to the ethical manner of a true Father. That idea in its characteristic simplicity and sublimity was the reason that in the teaching of Jesus the greatest certainty of salvation was joined to the highest moral earnestness. The views of Jesus were strongly eschatological, yet He had not the excited and world-forsaking manner of the Enthusiasts, for he lived in the calm assurance of constant communion with the heavenly Father. What he himself possessed, and what he demanded from his disciples and promised them, was the refreshing rest, the inward peace, the perfect joyfulness which spring from a childlike confidence in the heavenly Father, which would endure even amid persecution and the torments of death, and was ever active in the service of brotherly love. Such, in his view, was the chief type of Christian piety, what he would call the Gospel type, in which Jesus as Saviour and Mediator opened the way to a true childlike faith in the fatherly love of God. That Gospel type found expression in apostolic times in many grand passages of the Pauline epistles, and chiefly in the First Epistle of John, which, in his view, was a genuine work of the disciple who stood nearest to Jesus, the most beautiful document of a mind directly inspired by the words and life of Jesus. In the middle ages he would name Francis of Assisi as the representative of that type, with his joyful trust in God, at the same time conscious of the duties of love. Luther also was a hero of that Gospel type, though in him there was admixture of other types, and the subsequent development of Protestantism had been by no means consistently true to that great ideal.

Since Schleiermacher's time Protestant theology in Germany had become more and more conscious of its task to complete the work of the Reformers and bring Christianity into harmony with the Gospel type. That was the goal for which, at the present time, a great part at least of the German theologians were striving—to lead Christianity back to its original form, to the simplicity and sublimity of the original Gospel of Jesus. They knew full well that times and circumstances had changed, that it was impossible to accept and to follow mechanically the words of Jesus, as they were conditioned by the views and circumstances of his age. They must distinguish the essential from the unessential, and so grasp the spirit and what was permanent in the fundamental religious view of Jesus. And, further, that fundamental view must be explained in the light of present-day ideas, the problems of their present knowledge of the universe, and the practical circumstances and requirements of the present. It was a difficult task, to be executed only with tenderness and tact, but it was the greatest and most beautiful task of theology.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE CONFERENCE.

THE Conference on Thursday morning, May 26, at Essex Hall, was occupied with two papers. After a brief devotional service, conducted by the Rev. J. Worsley Austin, the chair was taken by the President, Mr. W. ARTHUR SHARPE, and the first paper, here printed in full, was read by the Rev. L. P. Jacks, on "The Drift of Present Day Religious Thought." The second paper, by the Rev. C. J. Street, on "The Supply of Ministers for our Churches," we hope to publish next week.

The discussion on Mr. Jacks' paper was to be opened by the Hon. Rollo Russell, but what he actually did was to read a second paper, compact of thought and vigorous of utterance, which we must reserve for publication in full. After this there was time only for one speech towards a discussion, by the Rev. E. W. Lummis, and as he noted the chief points of Mr. Jacks's paper, it may serve here by way of introduction.

The Rev. E. W. LUMMIS said the paper was marked by that genial gravity, that force and amenity of phrase which they associated with Mr. Jacks, and that gentle irony for which also he was famed. He affected to regard his subject as one to be met with a blank face, and answered parodoxically by a query. He gave them certain reasons for that hopeless attitude, and from those reasons they were left to gather for themselves his opinion on the drift of present day religious thought. Yet they were rejoiced to find that, on the whole, it was a very hopeful view he took. Three reasons Mr. Jacks gave for refusing to answer his que tion: (1) The unexpected prominence recently attained by psychical research as an element in religious thought. (2) That physical science had learnt afresh to wonder at this goodly universe, instead of dogmatising about it, recognising that the world is not the world, with the Soul of the world left out. (3) That religion remained a dominant interest of the human mind. Thus Mr. Jacks found something in the life of the people, though still inarticulate, which he would not yet define, something to be taken up by the master prophetic teacher of the future, to be expressed and made the banner for the federation of free minds.

That federation was indeed coming about, the Liberal movement was wonderful; and, for his own part, he thought the scruple of liberal thinkers in other churches, both in Scotland and England, to commit themselves in word to what in their heart they did not believe, was becoming more prevalent. There was a growing uneasiness of the clerical conscience under the weight of subscription. The conclusion he took to be that they were moving, all of them, in the philalethian direction. There would be a greater readiness to receive fresh truth. Both they who were called "professional religious people" and the others were abandoning their cut and dried formulæ and dogmas; and this made it clear that the religion of the future would not be dogmatic. The central drift was away from dogma to the philalethian position.

THE TENDENCIES OF MODERN RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.*

BY THE REV. L. P. JACKS, M.A.

THE subject on which I am announced to speak is scarcely one of my own choosing. It originated in the fertile and ever-active brain of the Secretary of this Association. It was only one more instance of the tyranny of which Essex Hall is the centre, that on opening my letters one morning I found myself set down to give a paper on "The Tendencies of Modern Religious Thought." Of course, I obey, but I assure the Secretary that he could not have chosen a subject giving me a larger opportunity to display my ignorance. One gleam of benevolence, however, shed its softening ray upon this stern official act. The Secretary had described me in the announcement as Editor of the Hibbert Journal, thereby indicating a wish that I should speak, not as a student of philosophy, but as one who had lately enjoyed exceptional advantages to observe what was going on. That simplifies the problem. It was a merciful thought, and I intend to avail myself of it to the full. But even so, I can give no satisfactory answer to the question, and should despair of saying anything to the purpose, were it not that the reasons why the question cannot be answered are important and well worth the attention of an audience like this.

The Unexpected Happens.

In the first place, the data are too numerous to lie within the compass of any single mind and too complex to yield an off-hand reading of their outcome. A syndicate of observers would be necessary, and miraculous interference would have to be invoked to bring their conclusions into harmony. And even if we could estimate the tendencies which exist to-day, no man could tell what new tendencies will declare themselves to-morrow. In the development of religious thought, as in every other department of history, you must always reckon upon the sudden appearance of the unexpected. In no sphere of our activity has the human mind much control over the course of events, but in this region, where it seems to have more, it has probably less than anywhere else. "The things that are not hath God ordained to bring to nought the things that are" is the one principle most clearly attested by the history of religious speculation. Looking back twenty years, when psychical research was a much more discredited employment than it is to-day; who would have had the hardihood to predict that its results would ever become a respectable factor in theology? Some may doubt it still; I do not; and the difference of opinion thus indicated may serve to illustrate the uncertainty of the whole subject. Unless I am mistaken, psychical research is now reaching out by a new path towards that conception of the unity of all consciousness which, if once it be finally established, will give us a key to some of the deepest problems of life. All the ways of thought converge upon the Eternal Mind, and though thought may linger for a century upon any one of them without seeming to come nearer the goal, we may take it as certain that no other termination is possible. But none can foresee the moment of the great surprise. As Saul setting out to find his father's asses found a kingdom, so it happens that many an investigator of things mundane, or even trivial, who to-day has no object in his inquiries but to solve some practical need, or to gratify some foolish curiosity, may pass at a single step into the presence of that which is the End of all curiosity and the satisfaction of every need.

Science Grown Reverent.

Again, there was a time, within the memory of most of us, when the tendency of natural science seemed rigidly hostile to a spiritual interpretation of life. Who could then have foreseen the surprising change of attitude which is now taking place? Not in vain indeed did the great man whom we all honour devote his incomparable genius to the overthrow of the materialism and agnosticism with which natural science flooded the world of thought in the middle of the last century. But the physicist of to-day is a very different person from the physicist of fifty years ago. In the kindred department of biology no great change is so far apparent; here science betrays the old unwillingness to ask the meaning of her own assumptions; but in physics, which are perhaps a stage nearer to the unseen universe, the eyes of man are recovering the look of wonder which they had lost for a time, and a finger of science, hesitating at first but rapidly growing bolder, is laying its touch on the spiritual basis of the world. It would, however, be a grave error to assume that science in thus modifying her attitude towards religion has been influenced by the criticisms which theologians have directed against her proceedings. We who belong to the class which Sir Oliver Lodge somewhat scornfully describes as "professional religious people" should take little credit to ourselves for what has happened. If our arguments, or the arguments of those we follow, have helped to save the cause of religious truth among laymen at large, I fear it must be confessed they have exercised singularly little influence on the course of scientific speculation. It is not from us that the scientific men have learnt either how to think, or what to think. They have gone about their own business in their own way. We have often taunted them with their want of metaphysics; But they have paid no heed to our taunts. And now it is all turning out for the best. They are learning for themselves what we could never have taught them, and when they have learnt it a little more fully, they will teach it to a vast multitude of persons who would never have listened to our appeal. Science, I make bold to say is now finding in the universe something it never expected to find, nay—if charity will allow me to say so—something it never wanted to find.

A Great Discovery.

What she expected to find was—how the world works; what she did not expect to find is that the world isn't the world when the soul of the world is left out. Because it was unsought the discovery is all the more impressive. Not without reason is the taunt sometimes levelled against us, that we find only what we want to find; that we defend only what it were the end of our vocation of lose. Our vested interests in theology are so vast as to make it difficult for us to play the role of impartial thinkers. It is one of the misfortunes incident to the position of "professional religious people" that their honesty is seldom exempt from suspicion. But I venture to say that no one can read such utterances of religious thought as those of Sir Oliver Lodge in the Hibbert Journal without perceiving that, obiter dicta as those utterances are, the conclusion contained in them has been literally forced upon the writer by the facts of the case. Every man has his bias, no doubt; but the fact of bias, which is often at its maximum among us, is obviously at its minimum here. Vast is the significance therefore which attaches to such words.

Well, then, I beg to submit that in the world of religious thought a wholly unexpected situation is even now developing. If there be any man who knows whither it will lead us next, I certainly am not that man. My subject being the drift of Religious Thought, I verily believe that the most honest method of treating the question would be to exhibit before the audience a large note of interrogation, and then make room for the next speaker. The uncertainty of the situation is sufficiently indicated by what I have already said; but perhaps I may add one other reason why the course of religious thought in the near future is utterly beyond the range of human prediction.

The Common Thought of Men.

We have been accustomed to regard the course of religious thought as under the control of professional thinkers. Would we ascertain which way the wind of philosophy is blowing? We resort to the universities and inquire what is Professor So-and-so saying; or we consult the books, and the reviews, ascertain from them what the writers of deep counsel are doing, and, having acquainted ourselves with the newest speculations of the learned, and the latest systems of metaphysics, we flatter ourselves that we have a clue to the problem before us. Now, surely, we know the drift of thought. But for my own part I am bound to say that I would not base the least of my hopes or fears for religion on a conclusion so formed. It would ill become me to disparage the services which professional thinkers render to the religious life of humanity, for I owe to them all that I have the highest reason to value, but I must express the conviction that if we would learn what intellectual truths are maturing in the womb of time, we must extend our inquiries far beyond the region of professional thought, we must descend into the subliminal conciousness of human society; we must close our books and mingle with the great currents of life; we must learn, not so much what the professors are thinking and saying in the university, but what men and women are feeling and hoping for and striving after in the great centres of population, where action is most strenuous, suffering most terrible, joy most fierce, and life most tragic. Whether the master minds of the age be rather the causes or the effects of their environment is a question beyond my present scope; but I cannot doubt that there is reciprocal inter-dependence between the thoughts which the wise are shaping and the lives which the multitudes are living. The elemental passions which move in the under-world of common life are the ultimate source of all systems of philosophy, of all changes of the form and temper of religious thought. Plato and Augustine, Spinoza and Kant, Martineau and Herbert Spencer are not the dictators of what poor men must think; they are the articulate voices of spiritual forces which show their beginning in poor men's lives. The doubt whether any good thing can come out of Nazareth is to be found in all ages haunting the seats of the learned and often blinding the eyes of the wisest; but, whether in the twentieth century or the first, some Nazareth is ever the birthplace of the saving powers. True it is that the emotions, the passions, the yearnings of the human heart must pass through many forms of expression before their final offspring arises in a new form of religious thought. Long before the philosopher has discerned what is going forward, art and literature have received the influence, politics and social reform have yielded to the impulse, popular theology has been swept into the stream. A wide troubled ocean of human life intervenes between the thinking of the sage and the origin of that which he shapes into thought. The wave which is breaking to-day on the shores of moral philosophy and whispering the secrets of conscience to Martineau or Upton, is the same wave which flung the shock of its waterfloods on the soul of John Bunyan. How different are the forms of its expression then and now! But how plain is the inward identity to the seeing eye!

* A paper read at Essex Hall on Thursday morning, May 26, at the Conference of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association.

Philosopher v. Common Man.

Often the philosopher misses the meaning of these things, and his message, divorced from its roots in human life, consequently fails. He overlooks the springs of his own activity, and well he may, so deep hidden are they in the vast under-world of the spirit. The waves of the soul's passion have almost spent their force before they reach the distant promontory where the philosopher keeps his watch. But one day he closes his Kant and his Hegel and opens the humbler page of the Bedford Tinker. And as he reads a new light dawns upon the nature of his own business. Here before him are the almost naked passions of man's immortal soul. Here is the elemental conflict between the flesh and the spirit waged, not as we wage it in the schools with the long-range artillery of our rival systems, but as it was, is, and always must be, in real life—a combat at close quarters, nay, a locked wrestle of life and death. In the hot breath of that conflict our moral philosophy had its beginnings, and the impulse which sustains our highest speculations on duty is the energy which was first liberated there. Whence do these elemental forces have their rise? Let us be content to say "in the deeps of God." Where is their dwelling-place now? They dwell in the common heart of man. Now as ever beneath the surface of common lives, which have no beauty that the eye of culture should desire them; in the souls of men and women who seem to have no aim beyond the satisfaction of their daily or animal wants; in the midst of communities given over to trade and to pleasure, the elemental conflicts still go on, evolving the results which make the spiritual history of man. Who can tell what revolutions of thought they are competent to bring about? When I consider my subject to-day in the light of these things; when I attempt to estimate the drift of religious thought, my ignorance overpowers me, and I can only answer "I do not know." But though to me this question is unanswerable, there are matters associated with it on which I believe I have learnt something since the Hibbert Journal was started, and these lessons are not without significance for an audience of Unitarians. Unitarians are, I believe, an eminently cheerful generation, yet they are not exempt from the mood of depression; and, again, though their standards of toleration are the widest, yet they do not always quite live up to their own ideal. In both connections I think the editors of the Hibbert Journal have been learning a useful lesson.

What the Editor has Learnt.

Speaking for myself I am very sure that the doing of this work has cheered my outlook and, I trust, extended my sympathies. No one who has had the experience we have had during the last three years would be inclined to doubt that religion is now, as it always has been, the dominant interest of the human mind. Whosoever has a word of true religion to speak to this age and generation may confidently expect that a swift and eager response will follow his appeal. If the word that we are speaking fails to evoke a response, we may be very sure that in the deepest and truest sense it is not a religious word. Religious words, as far as my experience goes, are comparatively rare. Words about religion, which are a very different kind of thing, are as the sand on the sea-shore for multitude. If you want a religion weighed, estimated, criticised, compared with other religions, and assigned its own place and order in the evolution of religion, you have only to give the sign, and a hundred eager minds will be ready to do the business. But when you want a religious idea expounded by one who can speak at first hand of its inner meaning, not merely repeating catchwords of his environment, but giving you the living outcome of his own thought and experience, you will have to search long, and meet many disappointments before you encounter the object of your quest; and, when at last you find it, the probability is that the author will be no Doctor of Divinity in a high place, but a dweller in one of the many Nazareths of our modern world. Prophetic utterance of that kind is extremely rare. Another sort of prophet is less uncommon; I mean the denouncer of abuses, the hunter of iniquities, the stern rebuker of the world's sins. He, too, is a needed personage, though perhaps he is sometimes too much in evidence; but the man most wanted is one mightier than he. That he is wanted, I am very sure; and I imagine that every reader of the Hibbert Journal, often, I fear, in vain, is on the lookout for his coming. I suppose there never was a time when so much was spoken and written about religion as there is now. It is a genuine source of wonder to me that religion has not been talked out of existence ere now. If any other concern of man had been subject to such incessant analysis and discussion it would by this have lost all vital interest for the human mind. That religion has suffered from this cause I do not doubt; she has been cheapened by it in the eyes of many; that she still survives is the proof of her eternal vitality. She lives, and never was more alive. But her life is inarticulate and formless. There is a religion not found in the lives of the churches; not expressed in the books of the theologians—a vast amorphous energy blindly struggling in the million hearts of the people, waiting for an interpreter who has long delayed his coming, but who may come, or should I say may "return," at any hour. This is the conclusion to which I have been brought anew in recent years. To trace the steps by which I reach it would not interest you. But my growing belief that these things are so, fills me with hope and good cheer for the future.

Far-reaching Liberal Movement.

More valuable perhaps than the cheering of the outlook, of which I am sure, is the broadening of sympathy for which I hope. When you have lived and worked for years under the belief that you were a liberal, it is something to come in contact with men of differing faiths who are about twice as liberal as yourself. The liberal movement in religion is a larger and deeper thing than many of us suspect. You may find it running in a broad and full channel in quarters where you believed it non-existent. If there ever was a time when I thought that the spirit of intellectual freedom had its sole manifestation in my own church, I can only say that I think so no longer. That spirit, which we have sometimes treated as our own peculiar possession, is, thank God, the common property of a vast and ever growing body of men and women in all the Churches of Christendom. If ever we are tempted to speak or act as though this were not so, we shall only make ourselves ridiculous. I am not going to underrate the contribution which Unitarians have made and are still making to the growth of that spirit, but he who can see nothing but the Unitarian contribution is, I should say, one of the blindest of men. It is very right that we should set up our own standard and gather round it for the battle of religious freedom; but when we give out that this is the only standard under which progressive Christianity can march, and declare that all who would be truly liberal must adopt our colours, it seems to me that we are making a claim to which no attention whatever is likely to be paid. Nay, we ourselves shall suffer if we make it, for the arrogance of the claim invalidates our own title to the liberal name. Our punishment will be that we shall be left out when the various currents of the liberal movement unite, as one day they will. It requires very little acumen to see that the different elements concerned in this movement are beginning to discover their affinity for one another, are feeling out towards higher points of unity, are converging towards common grounds of thought and action, which common grounds are not in any one of them at the present time, but above and beyond them all. I have little doubt that the outcome of all this will be such a federation of free spirits as the world has never seen. The best that we can hope for is that we shall be included in it when the time comes. No existing form of liberalism can hope for more. If there is any denomination which thinks it can exploit the liberal movement for its own ends, I pray God that we at all events be guilty of no such intention. When great forces are rising and great movements beginning in the religious world, there are always men whose first thought is to take advantage of these things for their own ends, and the question is sure to be asked, "Shall we not capture those forces, and divert them, and cause them to turn the wheels of our denominational machine?" But not thus does prosperity come to any church. You may harness Niagara, but you cannot harness the winds and the currents of the Holy Spirit. These will not lend themselves to such low ambitions. You may serve them; but they will never consent to serve you.

Need of Clear and Stronger Thought

I have only to add that day by day I am more and more impressed with the need of clear and accurate thinking in matters of religion. The theological brain of Christendom is getting into a sad state of confusion. We are not the thinkers that our fathers were. We dabble in this problem and in that, but there is as yet no serious attempt to grapple with the enormous range of new knowledge and combine it into the much needed new synthesis. We criticise the work of the great thinkers who have gone before, but produce little new thought of our own. The fountains of thought seem to be running very low. Christendom is being invaded by a pestilent host of amateur theologies, the children of a feeble will and a muddled conscience, with hardly enough vigour in them to dig their own graves. The skeleton framework of religious thought needs bracing up. The cry of "dry bones" has been somewhat overdone. For if dry bones are bad, soft bones are worse, and this is the age of soft bones in theology. What can be feebler than the current treatment of the Problem of Evil? Who among us has shown himself bold enough to face all the implications of the doctrine of an Immanent God? Immanent, truly, says the feeble theology of the day, but immanent only in the things we like, not in those which terrify and appal us. There is one great truth which the fathers of Puritan theology never shrank from admitting, but which we are for ever seeking to evade and to gloss over, and this is, that human life, by its very nature, is tragic through and through. In old days this truth yielded the fear of hell; but it also yielded the hope of heaven. We, for want of it, have neither hell nor heaven that are worth the name. But hell and heaven are facts in all men's lives. And thus for the moment there is no point of meeting between the hearts of the multitude and the brains of the thinkers. That which we are thinking and saying does not express what they are feeling. But they will get it expressed. The religion of the future will come from the same source as the religion of the past, the source from whence new art, new literature, new politics arise. It will come from the lives of the people.

A MAN should be sparing of superfluities to himself, that he may supply necessaries to others.—Fontenelle.

MORE than once in these columns a word of cordial recognition has been gladly given to the service rendered to the general Christian public, and, if they will receive it, to the general sceptical public, by the series of addresses delivered in the Central Hall, Manchester, and afterwards published in cheap form under the general heading, "Is Christianity True?" The most curious, but surely not the most convincing or the most helpful, of these essays was delivered the other day by Dr. Arthur T. Wilkinson on "The Witness of Physical Science to the Triune God." It is an almost incredible statement, but perfectly correct, to say that in this lecture an attempt is made to illustrate the doctrine of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost as one God by attributing a similar relationship to ether, matter, and energy.

The physical trinity of ether, matter, and energy is revealed as a universe of matter; it shows itself in its second person just as the triune God manifests Himself in the Son, the second person. So striking is the manifestation in each case that the believer in the triune God is called, after the second person of this Trinity, a Christian, whilst the man who makes the triune physical universe his god, is also called after its second person, a materialist.

Further on: "Curiously I cannot find any word which more exactly expresses the relation of energy to ether and matter than the one used in the Bible to express the relation of the Holy Spirit to the Father and the Son." The arrogance of Haeckel's monistic philosophy has now received its appropriate answer. Those who were bewitched with the confident dogmatism of Haeckel's "Riddle" may now study Dr. Wilkinson's lecture, and learn—what Matthew Arnold reminded us a long time ago—"Words will tell this way or that way."

MANY of our readers who are admirers of the late Miss Beatrice Barmby's varied genius will be interested in the following extract from a notice of the late York Powell in the Manchester Guardian of Tuesday, May 10:—

He was a fertilising and often secret spring of guidance or encouragement to a great number of persons. Sometimes he wrote prefaces ushering forth good work which otherwise might have escaped notice. One of the books to which he did this service, which justified it most fully, was the "Gisli Surssen" of the late Miss Beatrice Barmby, founded on the Saga of Gisli, and greeted by him as one of the most genuine and living dramatic poems printed during recent years. His few pages of introduction are an instance of his sane discrimination and his quickly generous perception of excellence, and show how the heroic strain of the best Saga writing was shared by him, and was hailed by him in the writer of the play, to whom he was a stranger.

THE Countess of Warwick was the chief guest of the Lord Mayor of Manchester the other day at a brilliant reception at the Town Hall and in a short lecture explained the work she has inaugurated at Studley Castle for the training of women "to take places successfully and efficiently in the horticultural and agricultural world." She said that the college had attained decided success, that "women taking up the lighter branches of agriculture will not only find a healthier life than in the crowded cities, but also an opening, if not to riches, at least to a competence. But it must be understood that there is in the work no chance of success for the amateur. The women who take it up must go in for sound training and be prepared to become workers, dropping all class prejudices and proving to the farmer and the gardener that being educated women does not make them any less fitted for a trade." The cost of a two-years training is about £160. The Countess hoped that the centres of population might provide scholarships for the college.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Wednesday, or Thursday Morning at latest.]

Halifax.—At the Northgate End Sunday-school, on Sunday afternoon, the teachers made a presentation to two of their number who are going out to New Zealand. To Miss Clara Drake they gave a silver-plated sugar basin and cream jug; to Mr. Harry Parkin a travelling bag. The superintendents and the Rev. P. Richards joined in expressions of appreciation and good wishes. Mr. A. K. Wrigley, a former teacher, who is going out to New Zealand at the same time, also received from the superintendent the farewell gift of a book.

London: Kentish Town.—On Sunday evening last the monthly musical service was held at the Free Christian Church. The first part of the fifth service of "Common Prayer for Christian Worship" was used, after which a number of selections from the "Elijah," "St. Paul," Gounod's "Redemption," and other sacred music were rendered by soloists and the choir. The service was brought to a close by the singing of a hymn and the Benediction, pronounced by the Rev. George Critchley. These services, which are given on the last Sunday of each month, promise to be a success.

London: Little Portland-street (Resignation.)—The Rev. H. S. Perris, M.A., has conveyed his intention of terminating his ministry at the chapel at the close of the present year. At a meeting of the congregation on Sunday last, at which the resignation was accepted with regret, it was unanimously resolved "that the congregation wish to express to Mr. Perris their sense of gratitude for his services throughout his ministry at Little Portland-street, and for the energy and confidence with which he has encountered the many difficulties that are almost inseparable from the pastorate of a church in Central London"; and expression was given to the congregation's best wishes for Mr. Perris's future ministerial work.

Manchester Domestic Mission. — At Willert-street on Sunday evening the service was conducted by Mr. R. D. Darbishire, with a special selection of hymns and lessons, and a discourse recounting the history and activity of Jesus as a means of continuous personal communion with him in life and spirit, a preaching of Christ and him crucified from heart to heart.

Manchester. — The usual Whit-Sunday Scholars' Festival was held in the Free Trade Hall on May 22, the preacher being the Rev. Thomas P. Spedding, of Rochdale. There was an extremely good attendance. The body of the large hall was filled with scholars of all ages from our various Manchester Unitarian Sunday-schools, while the galleries were also well-filled with parents and friends. A number of elder scholars formed a choir, and not only led the singing of the hymns, but also contributed two anthems. The special hymns were selected from the Hymns and Choral Songs published by the Manchester District Sunday School Association. Mr. Baker presided at the organ, and Mr. Whittaker was conductor.

Whitchurch.—Sunday-school Anniversary services were conducted by the Rev. C. D. Badland at the Church of the Saviour, on May 29. Fair congregations assembled, and the collections were satisfactory.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

SUNDAY, June 5.

Acton, Central Auction Room, Market-place, High-street, 7, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIS, B.A.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Rev. EUSTACE THOMPSON.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. W. STANLEY.

Child's Hill, All Souls' Free Church, corner of Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., 11 and 7, Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, M.A. (Evening only), "Francis of Assisi."

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON, 11, "Debtors to the Greek"; 12, Communion; 7, Vesper Service.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. PERRIS.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. GREAVES.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Mr. EDWARD CAPLETON.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11.15 and 7, Rev. G. CRITCHLEY, B.A.

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. J. E. STRONGE.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15, Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A., and 7, Rev. C. A. GENEVER, B.A.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. JOHN ELLIS.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WICKSTEED, M.A.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.

Stepney Green, College Chapel, 11, Mr. C. A. GINEVER, and 7.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 and 7, Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.

Stratford, Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. G. SKELT, and 6.30, Mr. DELTA EVANS.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. J. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. McDOWELL.

BLACKPOOL, Dickson-road, North Shore, 10.45 and 6.30, PULPIT VACANT.

BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Church, The Hall, Lytham-road, 11 and 7,

BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 and 7, Rev. C. C. COE.

BRIGHTON, Christ Church, New-road, North-street, 11 and 7, Rev. A. FARQUHARSON.

BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 7, Rev. GEORGE STREET.

CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11.

DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.

GUILDFORD, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. RATTENBURY HODGES.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. J. MARTEN.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. WARSCHAUER.

LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. COLLINS ODGERS, B.A.; Evening subject, "The Spirit of Persecution for one's Religious Opinions; its False Assumptions and its Betrayal of the Spirit of Christ."

MAIDSTONE, Earl-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. SIDAWAY BRETTELL, M.A.

MANCHESTER, PLATT CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. T. POYNTING.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. E. PIKE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. L. P. JACKS, M.A.

PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. W. BIRKS.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Mr. THOMAS BOND.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 7, Rev. T. B. EVANS, M.A.

SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 and 6.45, Rev. F. TEASDALE REED.

SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. AGAR.

SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FREDERICK B. MOTT.

TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 and 6.30.

TROWBRIDGE, Conigre Church, 11 and 6, Rev. J. WAIN.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 and 6.30,

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 7, Rev. G. H. VANCE, D.D.

WALES.

ABERYSTWITH, New Market Hall, 11, Rev. JOHN DAVIES. Third Annual Meeting.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY SOUTH PLACE, FINSBURY.—June 5, at 11.15, JOHN M. ROBERTSON, "Cobden as a Moral Force."

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN SQ., W.—June 5, at 11.15, DR. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "Mr. Moseley's Commission on Education in America."

RIVINGTON CHAPEL.—The ANNIVERSARY SERMONS will be preached on SUNDAY, JUNE 5th, 1904, at 3 o'clock and 6.30 P.M. by the Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A., of London. Tea between the Services, 6d. each.

BIRTH.

THOMAS.—On May 25th, at Granta, South-street, Stourbridge, the wife of Rev. A. Hermann Thomas, of a son.

MARRIAGE.

SWANWICK—NORTON.—On the 27th May, at St. Mark's, North Audley-street, by the Vicar, the Rev. R. H. Hadden, assisted by the Rev. A. W. S. Young, Vicar and Rural Dean of Kingston-on-Thames, Eric Drayton Swanwick, of Hasland House, Chesterfield, second son of Russell Swanwick, Esq., of the Royal Agl. College Farm, Cirencester, and Whittington House, Chesterfield, to Margery Eleanor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Norton, of 31, Green-street, Park-lane.

DEATHS.

COLE.—On the 27th May, 1904, at West Dene, Streatham, S.W., Agnes, the beloved wife of Arthur Cole.

SAYER.—On 21st May, at 19, Burghley-road, N.W., Ann Price Sayer, daughter of the late William Backshell, of Southsea, aged 79.

WEIR.—At St. Mungho's, Malvern, on May 22nd, Anna Maria, widow of Archibald Weir, M.D., aged 63.

WILSON.—At Montreux, on the 28th of May, John Remington Wilson, M.A., of 70, London-road, Canterbury, aged 56.

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A. Honours Lond. Preparation for London Matriculation, Trinity College, and Associated Board of Musicians Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. Apply to the Head Mistress.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH

AN UNSECTARIAN PUBLIC SCHOOL.

Next Term opens SEPTEMBER 15TH. Admission Examination, July 5th.
For particulars apply HEAD MASTER.

MINISTERS and SECRETARIES of UNITARIAN CHURCHES are desired to send the names and addresses of Unitarians who may have removed to Nelson, to Mr. J. S. MACKIE, 33, St. Matthew-street, Burnley.

LAYMEN'S CLUB.

CONCERT

ESSEX HALL, Wednesday, June 15th, 8.15 P.M.
IN AID OF
SOUTHEND HOME AND CHILDREN'S COUNTRY HOLIDAY FUND.

Tickets, numbered and reserved, 5s.; sides of Hall and Balcony, 2s. 6d.; rest of Hall, 1s.
To be obtained of Miss ANNIE LAWRENCE, 23, Campden House-chambers, Kensington; Mr. ALEC BARNES, 132, The Grove, Ealing, W.; Mr. H. B. LAWFORD, 4, Wexford-road, Wandsworth-common; and Mr. W. FITCHETT WURTZBURG, 3, Lawn-road, Hampstead, N.W.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY, ADELAIDE PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Assets, £158,000.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., J.P. 17, Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W
Miss CECIL GRADWELL, 7, Victoria-street, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st. S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham, S.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4 per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3 and 3½ per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

BORROWER'S INTEREST 4 per cent. Monthly Repayment, including Principal, Premium, and Interest for each £100.

10 years.	12 years.	15 years.	18 years.	21 years.
1 1 1	0 18 4	0 15 6	0 14 2	0 12 11

Compare the above rates with those of other Societies. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

FRUITARIAN CAKES.

MADE ENTIRELY OF FRUIT AND NUTS

Uncooked, Concentrated, Natural Food.
READY FOR USE WITHOUT PREPARATION.
For travelling they are ideal. A meal will go in pocket.

PEAR and WALNUT	7d.	per 8 oz. packet.
APRICOT and NUT	7d.	" "
MUSCATEL and ALMOND ...	6d.	" "
FRUIT and NUTS	5d.	" "
DATE and GINGER	4d.	" "
DATE and LEMON	4d.	" "
DATE and ORANGE	4d.	" "
FIG and CITRON	4d.	" "
DATE and NUT	3d.	" "
FIG and NUT	3d.	" "

Sample Box containing 14 varieties Fruitarian Cakes, 8d.; or with 3 varieties of Nut Butters, post free, 1s.

HUGH MAPLETON, Nut Food Manufacturer,
ARDWICK GREEN MANCHESTER.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

JOHN PAGE HOPPS' MONTHLY.

THE COMING DAY.

ENLARGED. PRICE THREEPENCE.

Contents for JUNE.

Not for Bread Alone.
Law and Faith.
The Dean of Ely's Sermons.
The Revolution in Russia.
The Church and its Athanasian Creed.
Women's Work.
Society Butchers.
Spiritualism in the Bible.
Cannon and Christ.
The Labour Ministry in Australia.
Thoughts for To-day.
Notes by the Way, &c.

London, Edinburgh, and Oxford: WILLIAMS and NORGATE, and all Booksellers.

AMONG THE DUTCHMEN.

BY THE
Rev. LUCKING TAVENER.

Nine Discourses suggested by the visit of the National Conference to Amsterdam.

CONTENTS:—The Dykes and Dams. The Dutch Painters and the Italian. The Holy Land of Europe. Erasmus. William the Silent. Spinosa. Rembrandt.

2s. 6d. net.

ARTHUR STOCKWELL, Creed-lane & Essex Hall.

By REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

UNITARIANISM RE-STATED.

FOUR POPULAR LECTURES.

1. THE BIBLE. 2. JESUS CHRIST. 3. GOD. 4. A WORKING RELIGION.

In neat Pamphlet, 48 pp. Sixpence.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, ESSEX STREET, W.C.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKLETS.

By the REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

DAILY MEDITATIONS

(Fourth Edition Revised.)

NIGHT UNTO NIGHT.

Cloth, red edges, 6d.; roan gilt, 1s.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C.

YORKSHIRE UNITARIAN UNION.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at SHEFFIELD, on Wednesday, the 8th June.

Anyone arriving early will find the King's Head, High-street, and the Albany Temperance Hotel, Fargate, comfortable houses for Luncheon.

At 2 o'clock a GENERAL COMMITTEE MEETING will be held in the Vestry of UPPER CHAPEL, Norfolk-street; to be followed by the ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING, in the same place, at 2.45 P.M.

At 3.30 there will be Service in UPPER CHAPEL, with a Sermon by the Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., and a Collection in aid of the Funds of the Union.

At 5 o'clock Tea will be served in the CHANNING HALL. Tickets 1s. each.

After Tea, parties will be organised to visit the Mappin Art Gallery and Weston Park and Museum.

At 7 o'clock there will be a PUBLIC MEETING in the CHANNING HALL.

All friends are invited to attend.

E. BASIL LUPTON,
Secretary.

EAST CHESHIRE CHRISTIAN UNION.

GRAND BAZAAR,

St. James's Hall, Manchester,

NOVEMBER 30th, and DECEMBER 1st, 2nd, and 3rd.

SAMUEL JONES' FUND.

THE MANAGERS meet Annually in October for the purpose of making Grants.

Applications must, however, be in hand not later than June 15th, and must be made on a form to be obtained from

EDWIN W. MARSHALL,
Secretary,
38, Barton-arcade, Manchester.

Board and Residence.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH. — ARNEWOOD. Pension. Commanding position in the West Cliff-road; full South aspect; sea views and private grounds; close to Winter Gardens, Cliff Promenade, Square or Pier; moderate Tariff.—Apply, MANAGERESS.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE; most comfortable throughout. Sea View, excellent cuisine. billiard and smoke room, sanitary certificate —Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

LANGLEY HOUSE, DAWLISH, DEVON.—A delightful HOLIDAY RESORT for Ladies and School-girls (Boys under 15). Beautiful country, bracing climate. Sea and Moorland. Prospectus from MISS N. JONES, Matron; or A. E. JONES, Esq., Proprietor.

FELIXSTOWE.—Comfortable HOME for Permanent BOARDERS, Adults or Scholars; also APARTMENTS on reasonable terms.—Apply, Mrs. ROBINSON, Kimberley, Ranelagh-road, Felixstowe.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea-level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort.

THE ABERYSTWYTH CONGREGATION will gladly assist Visitors to find Apartments.—Stamped envelope, A. JOINSON, Chairman, Pier-street.

ALDEBURGH-ON-SEA.—House to Let, close to and facing the Sea. Comfortably furnished for owner's own occupation. Three sitting-rooms, six bedrooms (9 beds). Good bathing, sea and river boating and fishing. Excellent golf links.—Address, Mrs. MITCHELL, 41, Upper Addison Gardens, Kensington.

HAMPSTEAD.—Pretty small FURNISHED HOUSE to let; 5 or 6 bedrooms, including servants'; 2 or 3 sitting-rooms, and lounge, hall, bath, h. and c., 3 w.c.'s. Kitchen, &c., on ground floor; pleasant small garden.—Apply, Mrs. W. E. JEVONS, Wedderburn Cottage, Wedderburn-road, Hampstead.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Enlarged, Remodelled, Refurnished.

PRONOUNCED BY THE PRESS TO BE THE BEST TEMPERANCE HOTEL IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Accommodation for about 250 Guests.

Highly commended by the Rev. Dr. Aked, Rev. Rowland Hill, Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. Alderman White, M.P., the Misses Cadbury and thousands of other guests.

Spacious Coffee, Reading & Drawing Rooms. Electric Light throughout.

Apartments, Service and Table d'Hote Breakfast from 5/- to 6/6 per day (with Dinner from 8/- to 9/6

77 & 101,

Southampton Row, London.

FREDERIC SMITH & SONS.

EATON'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL,

22, Guilford Street, Russell Square,

LONDON.

Facing the Gardens of the Foundling Institution.

Central. Homelike. Beds from 1s. 6d. Breakfast and Tea from 1s. Patronized repeatedly by many visitors during the 30 years of its existence.

Near the British Museum.

KINGSLEY HOTEL

HART STREET, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, LONDON.

This well-appointed and commodious Temperance Hotel has passenger Lift; Electric Light in all Rooms; Bathrooms on every Floor; Spacious Dining, Drawing, Writing, Reading, Smoking and Billiard Rooms; All Floors Fireproof; Perfect Sanitation; Night Porter; Telephone.

Bedrooms from 3s. to 5s. per night.

Inclusive charge for Bedroom, Attendance, Table d'Hôte Breakfast and Dinner, from 8s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. per day. Full Tariff and Testimonials on application.

Telegraphic Address: "BOOKCRAFT," LONDON

Situations.

VACANT AND WANTED.

LADY, Cultivated, Musical, fairly good Linguist, requires position as COMPANION to a Lady of means. Neighbourhood of Cheltenham preferred. Reference if required.—Reply to L. S. K., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, W.C.

GENTLEMAN (Young) seeks position as Companion, Secretary, or similar work. Salary secondary consideration.—ROWE, 26, Sneinton Hollows, Sneinton, Nottingham.

AS HOUSEMAID, where Manservant or Parlourmaid is kept; good references; in Hampstead, or temporary; aged 39.—C., 3, Oak Hill-park, Hampstead, N.W.

A YOUNG GERMAN LADY would like to spend a few months in an English family, on mutual terms.—Apply, G. SCHARTIGER, Brightside, London-road, Leicester.

WANTED.—MOTHER'S HELP or LADY NURSE, domesticated, good needlewoman; one boy, 3 years; two servants. —Mrs. SWIRE, Sutton-in-Ashfield, Notts.

TEMPORARY SUPPLY or LOCUM TENENS.—Rev. WM. BIRKS, 56, Gains-road, Southsea.

THE PRESBYTERIAN FUND.

The Managers desire to give notice of the following Scholarships which are open to Theological Students of all denominations:—

Two Graduate Scholarships of £40 for three years, with free instruction for the B.D. Degree of the University of Wales, tenable at the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen.

Applications must be in the hands of the Secretary before July 23rd, 1904.

For particulars and forms of application apply to G. HAROLD CLENNELL, Esq., Secretary to Presbyterian Fund, 6, Great James-street, Bedford Row, London, W.C.

GOOSEBERRIES,

Green, for preserving, &c., 20 lbs., 3s. 6d.; 10 lbs., 2s. Carriage paid.

F. ROSCOE, Steeple Morden, Royston.

Terms for Advertisements.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF-PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6

Special Terms for a Series.

Calendar Notices, 10s. per year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. 3 insertions charged as 2.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. The entire remittance should accompany all orders to insert Advertisements.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

GOD AND THE SOUL: An Essay towards Fundamental Religion. By R. A. ARMSTRONG. People's Edition. Paper covers, 6d., postage 2d.

"The first half of this little book is a perfect model of subtle thought, apt illustration, lucid reasoning, and terse exposition."—Spectator.

RELIGION AND LIBERTY. Addresses and Essays at the Second International Council of Unitarian and other Liberal Religious Thinkers at Amsterdam, September, 1903. Edited by P. H. HUGENHOLTZ. 2s. net, postage 4d.

THE PLACE OF CHRISTIANITY AMONG THE RELIGIONS OF THE WORLD, AND OTHER ESSAYS ON COMPARATIVE RELIGION. By J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A. 2s. net, postage 3d.

One by one the great civilisations of the past have yielded up their treasures, and the 19th century has witnessed the discovery of ancient faiths, so that the history of religion is now known to be inseparably connected with the whole history of the human race. To sketch this process is the object of this volume.

HOME PAGES: Twelve Talks on Practical Religion. Edited by HELEN BROOKE HERFORD. 1s. net, postage 2d.

CONTENTS :—(1) Woman's Work and Care, by Brooke Herford, D.D.; (2) Jem Cooper's Geraniums, by E. Baumer Williams; (3) Patchwork, by Brooke Herford, D.D.; (4) "A Bit On," by J. Crowther Hirst; (5) In Honour Preferring One Another, by Brooke Herford, D.D.; (6) A Preacher's Message, by Frances E. Cooke; (7) A World without Worship; (8) Blessed be Drudgery, by W. C. Gannett; (9) "Early will I seek Thee"; (10) Yes and No, by J. J. Wright; (11) Where is Thy God? by Brooke Herford, D.D.; (12) Nicodemus, by Brooke Herford, D.D.

THE TRINITY AND THE INCARNATION. By R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A. 2s. net, postage 3d.

CONTENTS :—Part I., The Growth of the Doctrine of the Deity of Christ. Part II., Modern Pleas for the Doctrine of the Trinity and the Deity of Christ. Part III., The Heart of the Argument.

CONVERGING LINES OF RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By S. H. MELLONE, M.A., D.Sc. 2s. net, postage 3d.

CONTENTS :—Introduction; Belief in God; Revelation, Inspiration, and Miracle; The Incarnation and the Trinity; The Atonement, Redemption, and Education; The Immortal Hope; Notes.

"An attempt is made to trace the main lines of growth in that deep change of religious thought which is now proceeding in the modern world. The author's plea is for a whole-hearted allegiance to the principles by which that change appears to be governed. These principles he endeavours to bring together and describe in as clear and simple a form as possible."—Author's Preface.

THE PROBLEM OF THE FOURTH GOSPEL. By J. WARSCHAUER, M.A., Ph.D. 2s. net, postage 3d.

CONTENTS :—I. The Problem Stated. II. The First Three Gospels and the Fourth. III. The Fourth Gospel as History. IV. Was John the Author? V. Conclusions and Conclusion.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

NOW READY.

The Sunday School Association Hymn and Tune Book.

FOURTH EDITION. Revised and Enlarged. Price 2s. 6d. net. Postage 4d.

The fact that a fourth edition of the HYMN AND TUNE BOOK has been called for is sufficient evidence that the action of the Committee of the Sunday-school Association in publishing such a work has been amply justified.

Opportunity has been taken to add to this new edition some twenty tunes, to make the volume available for the two Hymn Books issued by the Association, namely, "Hymns for Heart and Voice" and "The Sunday School Hymn Book."

Picture Lessons from the Parables of Jesus.

Twelve Pictures and Twelve Suggestive Lessons, with Bible Passages for reading and memory verse.

The Set in Envelope, price Fourpence, net. Postage 1d.

These are admirably adapted for a Home or a Sunday class; and, in the former, especially, would afford a pleasant occupation to children if they were allowed to colour the pictures. They are brought out at a specially low price, in order that each child may have a copy. This might be pasted into a book, and perhaps a few words about the parable, written down on the opposite page by the scholar.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Stories of the EARLY ITALIAN MASTERS

By MISS KATHARINE F. LAWFORD.

With Fifteen Full Page Illustrations.

Cloth, 1s. 6d. net; Presentation Edition, Gilt Edges, 2s. net. Postage 3d.

Contains pleasant glimpses into the lives of the following fifteen Old Masters; told simply and in an interesting manner.

CIMABUE. GIOTTO. LORENZO GHIBERTI.
PAOLO UCELLO. DONATELLO. FRA ANGELICO.
FILIPPO LIPPI. ANDREA MANTEGNA.
SANDRO BOTTICELLI. PERUGINO. PIERO DI COSIMO.
LEONARDO DA VINCI. MICHAEL ANGELO.
RAPHAEL. TITIAN.

"One of the purest pleasures comes from taking an intelligent interest in painting and sculpture; and in writing these Stories it is my desire to be of service in leading young people to seek out and appreciate true works of art, especially those which belong to the nation, and in which they ought to feel that they too have a share."—From Preface.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,

ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate-hill, London, E.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street Strand, London, W.C. Sole Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 20 & 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale) JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, June 4, 1904.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3233. NEW SERIES, No. 337.] LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1904. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 369
LEADERS—
Men for the Ministry 376
In Committee 376
ARTICLES—
Manchester University and Degrees in Divinity 371
Unitarian Home Missionary College ... 371
MEETINGS—
Central Postal Mission 372
National Unitarian Temperance Association 373
The British and Foreign Unitarian Association 378
CORRESPONDENCE—
Martineau Memorial Hall and Sunday Schools, Norwich 377
Manchester College... 377
Blackfriars Mission... 377
OBITUARY—
Rev. J. R. Wilson, M.A. 374
Rev. T. R. Elliott 375
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 375
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 381
OUR CALENDAR 382
ADVERTISEMENTS 382

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

TO-MORROW is Hospital Sunday in London, and an appeal is made not only to those who will be present at services in church and chapel, but to those also who will be absent, from whatever cause, to send their gifts unstintingly for the furtherance of the beneficent work of the hospitals.

THE Cobden Centenary was marked last Saturday by a great demonstration at the Alexandra Palace, at which Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman was the chief speaker, and other meetings throughout the country, of which the most notable was that in the Birmingham Town Hall, addressed by Mr. John Morley, the biographer both of Cobden and of Gladstone. They honoured Cobden, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman declared, not, indeed, as an inspired prophet, but as a great citizen, a great statesman, a great patriot, and a great political leader.

Cobden's dream was no illusion, and the strength of our country depends not upon our fleets and armies, but upon our peace equipment, upon the development of our country's arts and industries, upon the education and character of the people, upon the success of our common struggle against preventable poverty, upon our freedom under better land laws to develop the resources of our country, and upon the friendly spirit animating our relations with other countries and the different parts of the Empire.

Mr. Morley, at the conclusion of an eloquent address, looking forward to the next stage in the government of this country, said that our rulers, whoever they might be, if they aimed at the strength of the realm, of the community of the Empire, at the peace and advancement and prosperity of the people, would have to imitate the spirit, the political temper, the sagacity, the brave and unselfish heart of the man, the great citizen and lover of his country, whom they were met that night to commemorate.

AMONG the Centenary literature we are very glad to see that the Cobden Club has issued as a penny pamphlet "A Short Life of Richard Cobden," by Frances E. Cooke. It is an abridgment of Miss Cooke's well-known story of Richard Cobden, written for young people, published by Sonnenschein under the title "An English Hero." Mr. Fisher Unwin has also issued as a threepenny pamphlet essays by Lord Welby and Sir Louis Mallet on "Cobden's Work and Opinions," reprinted from the recent edition of Cobden's Political Writings.

SUCCESSFUL meetings have been held in London this week by the British Women's Temperance Association. Mrs. Hugh Price Hughes presided at the Queen's Hall on Tuesday evening over the twenty-eighth annual meeting. They were appalled, she said, at the crisis brought about by the iniquitous Licensing Bill. They were face to face with a measure which, if carried, would put back temperance reform for years. Broadly speaking, it was a threefold danger, a danger to religion, to temperance, and to freedom. It was a terrible warning, and an illustration of the way in which the love of money was eating out the heart of the people. Presiding at the Friends' Meeting House, Bishopsgate-street, on Wednesday, the Countess of Carlisle also spoke in severe condemnation of the Bill. She feared the year would be one of shame and reverse. The influence of property was altogether too great in the councils of the nation. Still there were rays of light, as in the L.C.C. temperance work and in the memorial which 15,000 medical men had signed for temperance teaching in the education of children.

THE slaughter in Thibet continues unchecked, and preparations are being pushed forward for the despatch of further troops and guns to extend the work. The "peaceful mission" is now admittedly a "military expedition," though its actual composition—and methods—are the same as before. Since the Thibetans insisted on resisting it as an armed invasion, while yet we were proclaiming its peaceful character, it is not surprising that their resistance should continue and increase now that it has changed its name. Their native mountains afford them powerful help in the work of resistance, their numbers are increasing daily, and they are gradually acquiring better weapons. But their military knowledge remains so elementary that their effectiveness in the struggle is ridiculously small. Occasionally a few of our men are hit, but at every encounter wholesale slaughter is the punishment meted out to them, not only during the attack, but for hours afterwards during their helpless retreat. We are heartily sorry for the soldiers, Indian and European, whose orders compel them to engage in this ignoble butchery, and we cannot think that they relish the praise of the "conspicuous gallantry" of their exploits bestowed upon them by the correspondents.

THE very fact that this expedition was at first spoken of as a peaceful mission is a proof that our rulers did not at the outset consider that we had a casus belli against Thibet. Can it possibly be contended that the necessary justification is afforded after the event by the perfectly legitimate resistance offered to our armed invasion? It is said that the resistance makes it absolutely necessary for the maintenance of our prestige for us to go on to Lhassa, and that it would be cowardly to turn back. It is our own opinion, and the opinion of very many other Englishmen besides, that persistence in our piracy is far more damaging to our prestige than its abandonment would be, and that it is infinitely more cowardly to say that we cannot withdraw from a false position than to admit our error.

To those who still hesitate to commit themselves to an opinion on the Chinese Labour Ordinance we gladly commend the perusal of a pamphlet by Mrs. H. B. Bonner, recently placed in our hands. In substance it is a reprint from The Reformer of a survey of the "Labour System of Assam," by which it is thought, mutatis mutandis, to throw light upon the probabilities of the parallel South African problem. The excellence of paper regulations is no sort of guarantee of administrative probity. In the long run it is the character of petty local officials not the intentions of a legislative assembly which must determine the difference between "indenture" and "slavery." To define the law in letters, with no assurance that the letter will not shortly become "dead," is to hoodwink the national conscience where there is not the hardihood to defy it.

SPEAKING of the standardisation of wages on behalf of the Assam tea coolies by the Act enabling their indentures (together with illustrations of its wretched inadequacy at best) Mrs. Bonner says:—"This rate was, however, systematically ignored, and very few coolies indeed reached the minimum statutory wage." And in the section upon Recruiting we read:—

I observe, by the way, in the Indian papers that in June last the Bengal Government had before it reports on the evasion of the new provisions as to recruiting, showing how impossible it is to countenance any system of slavery, under any cloak or disguise, and yet safeguard the slaves from fraud or abuse.

The faults of the system are the faults of human nature, neither due to nor removable by the ascendency of this or that political party, this or that social influence. The dark places of the earth are always full of the habitations of cruelty. The remedy is more light upon them; and by those who are ready to assist in this diffusion such clear, temperate, well-ordered statements as Mrs. Bonner's will be welcomed. It may be had, price 3d., from the office of The Reformer, Took's-court, E.C.

THE Scottish General Assemblies had a quiet time this year. But in the Assembly of the Established Church there was a significant discussion on the last day of meeting. An overture was taken up which called for a special committee

To consider how, in accordance with statute law, and the constitutional usage of the Church, there may be secured to persons subscribing the formula of 1693 relief from unnecessary burdens as to forms of expression and matters which do not enter into the substance of the faith, &c.

The introducer of the movement declared that, as things were, it was absolutely uncertain what a man who signed the formula really believed. The standard of the Church was in a fluctuating condition. He asked the very pertinent question, "Did the General Assembly mean to give freedom of opinion to all its ministers and office-bearers to think as they pleased while subscribing to the Confession?" In criticising the speech of the mover an objecting Doctor of Divinity said:—

The individual conscience might say he was guided by the Holy Spirit. He might say what he pleased, but he signed the formula binding him to the Confession, and must not be allowed to transgress and contradict the faith of the Church.

Another divine pled for relief of conscience, and asked:—

Why, at the solemn moment of licence or ordination, did they read that which was a farce, and give the signatories the idea that they were getting some relief when they found out afterwards that it was a farce.

The overture was dismissed, and the matter was left as the deliverance of the Assembly of 1903 decided. The restlessness under the Confession is bound to rise, and, as one of the speakers during the discussion said, Parliament may soon have to be approached to have the dilemma of the Church dissolved?

THE recent Assembly of the Congregational Union afforded opportunity for a symposium which possesses features of more than merely denominational significance. The discussion ranged round the nearly related topics of the nature and authority of a Church, and the responsibility of this esoteric society to the larger body of non-churchgoers; and the interest of the debate was heightened by the widely divergent opinions expressed by the speakers. The Rev. J. D. Jones, of Bournemouth, appeared as champion of the High Church view. The view, admittedly a prevalent one, that the Congregational Church is a democracy was boldly challenged. The Church, it was urged, is a theocracy, an instrument of the supreme God, vehicle of the mind and will of Christ. This view is not unattractive to many minds, and especially so when it is not subjected to criticism. The visible constituents of any actual Church are the little groups of people banded for a common end by some similarity of faith, and as such subject to the imperfections of human organisations. What may be the precise relation of these to the mystic body of the theocracy is not made quite clear.

AN entirely different doctrine of the Church is that expounded by the Rev. Bernard Snell, according to whose exposition the idea to be emphasised is that of the prerogative of the people. His is a Church into which any godly, steadfast, zealous man with the enthusiasm of humanity in him should be heartily welcomed. Independency is a synonym for Progressivism. Still more strikingly divergent from High Church doctrine was the reference of another speaker to the L.C.C. The Church and the Council differ in function, but that is all. The one, equally with the other, may be the instrument of divine vocation.

THE larger question raised by this discussion may be put thus:—Has the Church, or any other particular social aggregate, any authority except what it derives from the larger body of humanity of which it is a partial expression? This will apply not alone to co-opted societies, such as a church, but to those far more inherent powers, the family and the nation. All these forms of union are partial, narrow, incomplete. In all lurks the peril that they may be regarded as ultimate. But they possess no virtue in themselves, save as they look to and subserve the full-orbed human idea. They require to be constantly freshened by the consciousness of the indivisible whole.

THE Church of the Congregationalists occupies a curious position. It is part only of any given congregation, sometimes not the larger, sometimes, as was pointed out, the less efficient part. Members of the congregation who are not members of the Church bear also the burden of finance, and of Christian work, in the Sunday School, or in any other branch. There is little to distinguish them, except that they have not thought fit to join the Church. This, it seemed to be agreed, they ought to do.

IT hardly becomes an outsider to enter on such a question. But there is one consideration to which we are prompted. Why do they not? It is a little strange. Their faith, their morals, their work, is not different from that of the avowed members of the theocracy, only they do not take the pledge or make the claim. There seems to be no reason, except simply their disinclination to do so. To other memberships they are probably as prone as the rest of us. The instinct of association is strong. Yet here are people acting in every other respect just as do members of the Church, but themselves holding aloof. There must be something, then, in this particular form that is not congenial, It may be, as was suggested, that they are not staunch Congregationalists. Or there may be a lurking subconscious suspicion that the local visible Church does by its essential claim obscure rather than illustrate the one adequate Catholic idea of human solidarity. If this be so the reluctance would be justified so long as a church arrogates a special order of virtue. Other societies exist for the achievement of an end. So long as the society is partial the end is outside itself. To this rule even a church must conform. It does not exist in the enjoyment of a special divine dignity. The final aim should be to become merged in a more universal fellowship.

A LETTER from the Rev. Charles Hargrove, dated April 17, from the Red Sea, near Aden, is printed in the June Mill Hill Chapel Record. On April 24 Mr. and Mrs. Hargrove touched at Colombo, and on May 4 reached Fremantle, Western Australia. The voyage appears to have been pleasant all the way. In the letter of April 17 Mr. Hargrove says:—

I referred to Jonah in my note from Port Said, and the story has been much on my mind since. We are apt to think of it in connection with the whale, and marvel how rational and thoughtful men could ever have brought themselves to believe in the tale. But this may be omitted, and the book will be left a quite credible story to believers in God. Jonah has a call to preach to the Ninevites, and seeks to evade it. A storm drives him back and he is forced to go on his unwelcome errand, and the result of which proves the Almighty infinitely more pitiful than his poor prophet. I too have had my call, though of a very different kind. I have a message to a few in Australia, or I am wasting time and money. I am glad that my growing reluctance to undertake the work has not had effect in my refusing to do it. I gave a copy of my Australian letter, which was printed in THE INQUIRER and Christian Life, to our Bishop, and he distinctly approved it, and in fact gave me every encouragement. I am not going to preach against anyone, but to declare that religion is reasonable, and that its offers and claims are such as demand the grave attention of all men; that I too hold a form of religion which can justify itself against all objectors.

This month's Mill Hill Pulpit contains a sermon for Trinity Sunday with the title, "God not such as we."

MISS WINIFRED ROBINSON'S Chamber Concert at the Bechstein Hall, on June 3rd, was of great interest, and was well attended. Both in her violin solos, and as leader of her ladies' string quartet, Miss Robinson showed her well-known executive skill; and the songs contributed by Miss Beatrice Spencer added greatly to the pleasure of the afternoon. The last item on the programme was a "Quartet in A," by Borodin, given for the first time in London.

MANCHESTER UNIVERSITY. AND DEGREES IN DIVINITY.

ALL those who are interested in the promotion of the study of theology without insistence upon the adoption of particular theological doctrines will be glad to learn of the progress made in this direction by the Victoria University of Manchester.

For some time an Advisory Committee, consisting of members of the Senate of the University and others, together with Dr. Sanday, representing the Anglican Church, and Dr. Fairbairn the Free Churches, has been busy devising a scheme for working a Faculty of Theology in this University. It must be remembered that one of the fundamental provisions of the will of John Owens was that no tests of a religious character should ever be required from any professor, student, or member of the college. This provision will be loyally observed in the arrangements for the course of studies in Divinity. The idea is to take a number of subjects which are generally recognised in a Divinity course conjointly at Owens College, and to recognise the class attendances in other subjects at the various theological colleges in Manchester. The Advisory Committee prepared a carefully thought out scheme, and presented it with a draft list of ordinances to the Senate, which in turn recommended its adoption to the Court of the University, and the Court, at a very influential meeting held on May 5th, adopted the ordinances almost unanimously on the motion of Professor Tout, seconded by Mr. J. W. Graham, of Dalton Hall. The step is so important that it is worth while giving the ordinances in full:—

The degrees in the faculty shall be Bachelor of Divinity (B.D.) and Doctor of Divinity (D.D.). All candidates for the degree of B.D. must have passed the intermediate examination in arts of the University (including classical Greek) or have passed the final examination for a degree in any faculty in this or some other University of the United Kingdom. The courses of study required shall extend over at least three years after the intermediate in arts has been passed. The examination shall be divided into two parts. The subjects of the first examination shall be:—

(1) A general knowledge of the contents of the Bible in English.
(2) Hellenistic Greek.
(3) Elementary Hebrew.
(4) A philosophical subject or a science.
(5) One of the following: (a) More advanced Hebrew, (b) classical Greek, (c) Latin, (d) German, (e) history, (f) a science.

The subjects for the second examination shall be:—

(1) Comparative religion.
(2) Biblical criticism and exegesis.
(3) History of doctrine.
(4) Ecclesiastical history.
(5) One of the following, to be approved by the faculty:—(a) Fundamental ideas of religion, (b) a special period of ecclesiastical history, (c) a branch of apologetics, (d) epigraphy, (e) patristic literature, (f) Biblical or ecclesiastical archæology, (g) liturgiology, (h) a Semitic language other than Hebrew, (i) the Old Testament in Hebrew specially studied, (j) the New Testament in Greek specially studied.

Those who have passed the final degree examination in any other faculty, or have graduated in any other university, shall be excused the subjects of the first part of the examination except (1) and shall be allowed to proceed to a degree after two years of study. A substantial portion of the courses of instruction required shall be taken in the University under the professors or lecturers of the University.

Such, then, are the ordinances and in a communication from the Registrar of the University I learn that the regulations for carrying them into effect are now in hand. How they will work remains to be seen. Already the University has made some appointments in the Faculty of Theology. Readers of the Hibbert Journal will have noticed that Mr. A. S. Peake, of the Primitive Methodist College, is now Professor of Biblical Criticism and Exegesis in the Manchester University, an honour which he well deserves. The Advisory Committee of the Faculty of Theology is to continue in being, and, on the motion of Dr. McLaren, seconded by Dr. Caleb Scott, is to be strengthened by the addition of the following members:—The Rev. Dr. W. F. Adeney, President of the Lancashire Independent College; the Rev. Alexander Gordon, Principal of the Unitarian Home Missionary College; the Rev. Leonard Hassé, Principal of the Fairfield Moravian College; Canon E. L. Hicks; the Rev. Dr. J. T. Marshall, President of the Baptist College, Rusholme; the Rev. J. Hope Moulton, tutor in the Wesleyan College, Didsbury; and Professor Peake.

Here, at last, then, we have an English university opening the way to degrees in divinity without any doctrinal tests, and appointing lecturers and professors in theological subjects without any demand for subscription to articles or a confession of faith. Truly the world moves. Until the older universities follow suit we may find graduates of Oxford and Cambridge coming up to Manchester to take the divinity course—some such may even find accommodation in the new Hall of Residence for lay and divinity students in Victoria Park, in which the Unitarian Home Missionary College is shortly to be housed. Mr. J. W. Graham went so far as to suggest that some students might even be found to take the divinity course from love of it, men who were not intending to enter the ministry. Oxford and Cambridge have a life and a tone and special features which no other university can pretend to; but Manchester has supplementary features, and is leading the way in a free and unfettered study of theology. There will doubtless continue to be in the future, as in the past, an interchange between the new and the old, some students passing on from one to the other, which is all to the good. It is a happy and significant coincidence that this onward step of the Manchester University should fall in the jubilee year of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, for the principle now recognised by the University has long been advocated and acted upon by that college. Being progressives, we rejoice in these signs of progress, and we feel bound to do our best to so equip the Unitarian Home Missionary College that she may play her part worthily in conjunction with the other theological colleges of the district and the University in the great work of instruction in the high themes of religion and theology. WALTER H. BURGESS.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

MEMORIAL OF THE PAST AND PRESENT STUDENTS TO THE JUBILEE MEMORIAL COMMITTEE.*

GENTLEMEN,—We observe that in the Circular which you have issued to Old Students, inviting suggestions for the celebration of the forthcoming Jubilee of the College, it is stated that the form and scope of the Jubilee Memorial have not yet been determined. We beg, therefore, most respectfully to submit to you certain considerations on this point, to which our position as Students of the College will, we believe, be allowed to lend special weight.

With the increasing concern for the intellectual equipment of the Students of the College we have the warmest possible sympathy, but we beg to suggest that the fullest advantage cannot be taken of the better opportunities now provided, unless at least equal care is taken for the physical and domestic comfort of the Students. The present system of leaving Students exposed to all the dangers of cheap lodgings, totally unprovided with any guidance or oversight in matters of health and comfort, involves a risk of frustrating all the good work of the College by physical collapse on the part of the men. You are not unaware of the frequent cases of failure of health which have occurred, and we recall with gratitude the efforts you made in past years to arrange at least one common meal for the Students each day. Life in lodgings is, for young men fresh from home, dreary in the extreme, and, limited as most of them are in pecuniary matters, and much absorbed in their work, they are constantly apt to neglect proper rules of diet and exercise. Further, the men lose the great delight and real help of intimate daily association with one another. A common life, under the wise care of a Tutor, would, we believe, do much to raise the standard of work of the men, while it would add immeasurably to the delight of their collegiate days.

We also beg to suggest that the rooms available in the Memorial Hall are becoming increasingly inadequate for collegiate purposes. Our growing denominational activities, and the tendency to concentrate all meetings in the Memorial Hall, added to the great frequency with which those premises are let for other purposes, render them increasingly unsuitable for the quiet pursuit of intellectual avocations. We are sensible of our deep indebtedness to the Memorial Hall Trustees for their long and generous hospitality extended freely to the College; they will not, however, we believe, misconceive our motive if we suggest that an honourable and useful function is open to the Memorial Hall as the centre of all local denominational activities, but that the College should now seek a home of its own. The inadequacy of the present rooms hardly needs stating. The College has absolutely no single room of its own. There are times even when its own Library is inaccessible, while the attention of the Students during class-work is frequently disturbed by band rehearsals and public meetings, proceeding in other parts of the Hall.

* This is the Memorial referred to by the officers of the College in their reply to another Memorial, published in THE INQUIRER of May 21.

These considerations point, in our minds, to the desirability of making an earnest effort to secure Collegiate and Residential Buildings as a fitting and worthy Memorial of the fifty years of the College. The Memorial of the past would thus ensure the efficiency of the College and the welfare of the Students in the future. The Home Missionary College is at present alone in not having proper Collegiate and Residential Premises of its own. All the other Theological Institutes in Manchester—Independent, Baptist, Wesleyan, Free Methodist and Primitive Methodist—have homes of their own, as has also Manchester College, Oxford.

The granting of a University Charter to Manchester, and the establishment of a Theological Faculty at Owens College, complete on the intellectual side those practical considerations which make Manchester, as a chief centre of Unitarian life, a peculiarly suitable home for a Unitarian College. Nothing, we believe, will make for the permanence of the College so much as its establishment in premises of its own.

Loyal and devoted sons of our alma mater, we beg to submit these proposals as, in our minds, best calculated to make for her dignity, efficiency, and welfare.

W. W. Robinson.	J. H. Bibby.
Henry McKean.	Charles Roper, B.A.
Adam Rushton.	John Ellis.
Henry Eachus.	Owen J. Jones.
William S. Smith.	Alfred Turner.
George Fox.	Charles Peach.
J. Joseph George.	Thomas P. Spedding.
James C. Street.	W. E. Atack.
William Robinson.	G. Lansdown.
Noah Green.	Richard Lyttle.
John Birks.	R. M. King.
Henry Austin.	W. Holmshaw.
Joseph Pollard.	R. C. Moore.
David Matts.	G. A. Payne.
W. G. Cadman.	Joseph Geary.
William Birks.	H. E. Haycock.
Thomas Leyland.	W. H. Burgess, B.A.
J. Miskimmin.	A. Ernest Parry.
Ephraim Turland.	C. Travers.
Halliwell Thomas.	W. G. Price.
A. O. Ashworth.	William C. Hall, M.A.
J. Crowther Hirst.	J. A. Pearson.
John McDowell.	D. J. Williams.
John Dale.	J. A. Miskimmin, B.A.
W. Rodger Smyth.	J. Joseph Magill, B.A.
William Agar.	J. Mason Bass, M.A.
Edwin H. Bollard.	Alfred Hall, M.A.
David Davis.	W. H. Rose.
J. J. Wright.	H. J. Rossington, M.A.
John Moore.	H. D. Roberts.
Philemon Moore, B.A.	W. G. Marsden.
William Mason.	A. Cobden Smith.
J. E. Stead.	Alfred Davidson.
W. Copeland Bowie.	F. H. Vaughan, B.A.
Herbert V. Mills.	Joseph Worthington.
S. Thompson.	H. Kelsey White.
Frederic Thomas.	W. L. Schroeder, M.A.
Alex. Farquharson.	John Evans, B.A.
W. R. Shanks.	Henry Dawtrey, B.A.
J. A. Kelly.	G. L. Phelps.
James Ruddle.	E. O. Jenkins.
William Fielding.	Eustace Thompson.
Peter Holt.	Simon Jones, B.A.
Alfred Lancaster.	H. McLachlan, B.A.
H. Bodell Smith.	D. R. Davies.
W. G. Tarrant, B.A.	E. Thackray, B.A.
Felix Taylor, B.A.	H. F. Short.
J. E. Stronge.	Felix Holt.
E. L. H. Thomas, B.A.	Edward Morgan.
J. Channing Pollard.	Walter Short.
S. S. Bretell, M.A.	William McMullan.

February 18th, 1904.

A Memorandum of Fraternal Sympathy from Alumni of Manchester College, Oxford.

The Unitarian Home Missionary College is about to celebrate its Jubilee. During fifty years of steady work, the Institution has fully justified its existence. The men trained at Manchester labour by our side, and, in devotion and ability, prove themselves our loyal and worthy comrades. The alumni of the Unitarian Home Missionary College have proposed that the Jubilee of their Alma Mater should be celebrated by the provision of Collegiate and Residential premises. A memorial to that effect has been signed by over one hundred of the Unitarian Home Missionary College men, and the Jubilee Committee has heartily approved the proposal. We, the undersigned, alumni of the Older Sister College at Oxford, desire to express our warm fraternal sympathy with the aims and desires of our Manchester brethren. The Unitarian Home Missionary College, in the words of its Constitution, "adheres to the principle of freely imparting Theological knowledge without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological doctrines." The curriculum of the Institution has been steadily advanced, and the desire now expressed for adequate equipment for its work is a quite natural one. Rejoicing in the splendid equipment of our own Alma Mater, desiring closer co-operation between our two principal Educational Institutions, and believing that this can best be secured by increased efficiency, we append our names to this expression of fraternal goodwill, and cordially commend the Unitarian Home Missionary College Jubilee Memorial Scheme to our public.

C. B. Upton, B.A., B.Sc.	T. Lloyd Jones.
	Edgar Lockett.
Dendy Agate, B.A.	E. A. Maley.
J. W. Austin, M.A.	John S. Mathers, M.A.
William Blazeby, B.A.	S. H. Mellone, M.A., D.Sc.
C. C. Coe, F.R.G.S.
H. M. Dare.	Edward Parry, B.A.
John Davies, M.A.	W. W. Chynoweth Pope.
J. Tyssul Davis, B.A.
R. B. Drummond, B.A.	Priestley Prime.
T. Dunkerley, B.A.	Thomas Robinson.
E. D. Priestley Evans.	Lawrence Scott.
George Evans, M.A.	Christopher J. Street, M.A., LL.B.
T. Bowen Evans, M.A.
Arthur W. Fox, M.A.	A. Leslie Smith, B.A.
W. Ed. George, M.A.	J. Kertain Smith.
George Heaviside, B.A., F.R.Hist.S.	F. W. Stanley.
	Arthur W. Timmis.
Vernon Herford, B.A.	W. L. Tucker, M.A.
E. Savell Hicks, M.A.	D. Walmsley, B.A.

J. H. Woods, M.A.

Addendum.

We, the undersigned, having enjoyed the privilege of studying at both the Institutions referred to in this Memorandum, cordially appreciative of the good in both, desiring their closer co-operation, and believing that this can best be ultimately achieved by their equal equipment and efficiency, subscribe our names to this Addendum to the Memorandum of alumni of Manchester College, Oxford.

Philemon Moore, B.A.	S. S. Bretell, M.A.
W. Copeland Bowie.	William C. Hall, M.A.
Alex. Farquarson.	Alfred Hall, M.A.
W. G. Tarrant, B.A.	F. Heming Vaughan, B.A.
Felix Taylor, B.A.
E. L. H. Thomas, B.A.	Henry Dawtrey, B.A.

R. C. Moore.

CENTRAL POSTAL MISSION.

The Annual Meeting of the Central Postal Mission and Unitarian Workers Union was held at Essex Hall as usual on Thursday afternoon in Whit-week, the President, Miss Tagart, in the chair.

The President, in opening the proceedings, said that there was inevitably a certain amount of sameness in their report, and yet there was constant inspiration in the work. Evidence came to them repeatedly that it was a ministry of real helpfulness in which they were engaged. She felt that Unitarians needed more zeal in exposing error and making known their own convictions of truth.

Miss Florence Hill, hon. sec., presented the annual report, which gave full particulars of the work and recorded a year of increased activity and success. Their literature found its way to all parts of the world, and they needed more helpers to cope with the growing work of their committee. There had been 2,151 new applications for literature, and there were 1,661 old correspondents on the books; 34 correspondents they knew had joined Unitarian congregations. The work of the Suffolk Mission at Bedfield and Framlingham had been vigorously carried on by Mr. R. Newell. The annual sermons were preached by the Rev. F. Summers, who also conducted a successful mission at Bedfield and the neighbouring villages.

Miss Ethel C. Lake, as treasurer, presented the accounts, which showed a total income of £117 10s. 1d. for the general fund, leaving a balance of £7 10s. 4d. in hand; but the whole of the income for Bedfield and Framlingham (including £24 18s. 3d. from the general fund), £187 16s. 7d. in all, had been expended, and although the general subscription list was increased by £21 14s. 8d., with fifty-four new subscribers, they still wanted more to meet the demands of the work, and she appealed especially for a large number of small subscriptions to extend interest in their work. For the legacy of £50 from the late Mrs. Yelland they would find abundant uses. She appealed especially to the young people to subscribe to the Mission.

The Rev. F. Summers, in moving the adoption of the report and accounts, enforced the Treasurer's appeal, and gave interesting particulars from his experience of the work at Bedfield, referring especially to what Miss Tagart had done for the improvement of cottage property in that district.

The Rev. L. Tavener seconded, and the motion was adopted.

The Rev. A. Webster then bore witness to the value of Postal Mission Work in Scotland, in which he had long been engaged, and recounted some of his recent experiences in connection with the Free Public Library incident.

Mrs. Tudor Jones told of the work of their Mission in Wales, as a liberating influence, helping towards better life.

Mr. R. Newell spoke of his work as missionary at Bedfield. As an ex-Methodist, he said, he still believed in method. Social work among the village people was often depressing, but he found the Unitarian gospel effective to uplift and brighten the lives of the people, who responded to the religion of the Lord's Prayer and the parable of the Prodigal Son.

On the motion of Mrs. H. RUTT, the Committee was then appointed, and the PRESIDENT offered a cordial welcome to the foreign delegates present.

Miss T. A. VAN ECK, who, with Miss A. Snellen, represented the Dutch Postal Mission, was the first to respond. She conveyed the cordial greetings of her Committee, and recalled the inspiration she had derived from a former visit, at the International Council meeting in 1901. Not long after that meeting they suffered a grievous loss in the death of the Rev. J. H. de Ridder, Remonstrant minister at Rotterdam, who had been chairman of their committee and an eager supporter and encourager of the work. She need not repeat what she had said three years ago as to their Dutch Postal Mission, which worked as a committee of the Protestantenbond. Continued experience only impressed them the more with the value of the work. In the course of eight years their six members, working separately, each with a share of the stock of books, both critical and religious, had sent out over 25,000 books and pamphlets in 7,534 parcels. It was impossible to overestimate the value of such literature, and the correspondence which went with the distribution of the books was an added opportunity of the highest worth. They in Holland were very reserved in the expression of their best feelings, but it was easier in writing, and they became very intimate with old correspondents, though they never met face to face. "How is it that I can tell you what no one else knows?" was often said by correspondents, who gave to them glimpses of their inner life. It was the work of sympathy. They knew that there were many lonely ones in their country asking a word of consolation, which they had sought in vain in their immediate surroundings, seeking help amid all the burning social and religious questions of human life. And they who were engaged in that work were thankful to the Mission, from which they received immeasurably more than they gave. It was a glad discovery to them, for therein they had found their work, and a new faith in liberal principles, a joyful confidence and an entirely different view of life. When they had gone to their rest the Mission would still remain, and continue to give light to others, the light of liberty and religion.

Mr. THEO BERG, of Copenhagen, also responded, and gave an interesting address on Religious Development in Denmark. In 1536, he said, the Lutheran faith was accepted in Denmark by delegates from all parts of the country, met in Copenhagen, and in 1849 the King granted a free Constitution, including religious liberty for all citizens. Those were the two chief events in their religious development during the last four centuries. Recently a liberal Ministry had undertaken to legislate for the church, so as to put its government really in the hands of the people rather than the bishops and clergy. It was proposed to establish congregational councils in every parish, comprised of the parson and not less than four members of the church: Both men and women of the age of twenty-five, who have lived for a year in the parish, have votes, and the law as now passed is to come up for revision in six years. In connection with this new law the question had arisen whether Unitarians might vote. In some places their votes had been allowed, in others not, and the Primate, the Bishop of Copenhagen, had declared that as they denied some articles of the Creed they were outside the Church. So a further question arose as to what really constituted membership in the Church, and this had been widely discussed throughout the country. It had been recognised what great variety of belief there was within the Church, and Unitarianism had been the subject of much controversy in the public Press. Thus they had found a great opportunity for Postal Mission work, and with the help of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association a vigorous effort had been made. In six months they had over 800 correspondents, of whom about 20 per cent. wrote a second time, and he had been sending copies of his little paper, Light Over the Land, quarterly to 200 school teachers, so that already 2,000 schoolmasters in Denmark knew of them and their aims. What they aimed at was to make the Church free. Only four or five years ago a young minister, Mr. Jensen, was deprived of his living for preaching against everlasting hell and refusing the public apology and the pledges demanded by his bishop. Now there were more heretics than ever in the Church, and more emphasis was being laid on the Christian life than the creed. But while there were in fact many Unitarians in the Church, both among clergy and people, and the authorities did not dare to interfere with them, the position was inconsistent; and what they now had to do was to work for an honest Church. They must have a new vow for the clergy, which would not pledge them to any creed, but simply to the preaching of Christianity according to their own conviction, and to the living of a Christian life. They as Unitarians were working not for toleration but for their rights within the Church and for the liberation of the Church from the creeds; and they were glad to know that many of the clergy as well as the laity were with them. It was a great task, but they refused to be discouraged, and they were receiving much sympathy from the Press in all parts of the country. Though themselves a small body, for only a few of their people were willing to be labelled as Unitarians, they felt themselves a link in the strong chain of Unitarians embracing the world; and they felt they had a stronger, elder brother by their side to take them by the hand and lead them on. And while God was in heaven they trusted that all would be right with the world.

Mr. V. A. SUKHTANKAR gratefully acknowledged the help they had received in India, and told of the gratifying response to his efforts at Postal Mission work in Bombay. Their special need was of literature in their own tongue.

A vote of thanks to the President, moved by the Rev. J. B. HIGHAM, brought the meeting to a close.

NATIONAL UNITARIAN TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

THE eleventh annual meeting of the Temperance Association was held on Friday, May 27, at Essex Hall, and opened with a Conference at 4.30 p.m. Mr. T. Pallister Young presided, and there was a fairly large gathering of representative temperance workers. Mr. Judson Bonner, of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union, gave an address on "The Use of Literature and Illustrative Appliances in Band of Hope Work," replete with the results of wide experience and practical skill, and showing what stores of illustration the Union is able to provide in the way of chemical apparatus, books, diagrams, models and pictures. The model addresses and other instructive matter in the Band of Hope Chronicle, he said, provided subjects for speakers in a liberal measure, and, to judge by the specimen numbers distributed, is unsurpassed as a journal of its kind. Every desire of temperance workers has evidently been met by the Union, for teaching aids of every kind were shown and explained. The hall presented the appearance of a picture gallery, and a "book-room" on a large scale.

A discussion followed, in which Miss Sale (of Northampton), the Revs. W. G. Tarrant, Frederic Allen, Alex. Webster, A. Amey, and Messrs. Fred Maddison and F. A. Edwards took part.

At the evening meeting the Chair was taken by the Earl of Carlisle, the President of the Association. After an opening hymn and prayer by the Rev. J. B. Higham, Mr. J. Bredall presented the report, which showed steady progress in the work, and Mr. F. A. Edwards presented the balance-sheet.

The PRESIDENT, in moving the adoption of the report and accounts, congratulated the Association on its increase, and proceeded to deal with the Government Licensing Bill. It was, he said, a complicated measure, and he had only a few remarks to make. Undoubtedly its greatest evil was its proposal to abolish the discretionary power of the local licensing magistrates. It was difficult enough at present to prove offences against licensees, but the Bill made it more so. He knew that Mr. Arthur Chamberlain had said the Bill could not be mended, but he could not agree to that. He recommended a concentrated effort to procure a time limit. The Bill was the outcome of the action of certain licensing benches whose unanimous desire was probably only to keep law and order. If the passing of that Bill produced numerous cases against law and order, and reaction was caused on behalf of temperance, good would ensue. The object of that Society was to work for moral suasion and education on lines of temperance, and perhaps in their enthusiasm about legislation temperance workers were apt to forget what made the temperance movement. Sweet reasonableness and persuasiveness were sometimes more powerful than the more obtrusive, militant quality shown by the law reformer. He trusted the Association would "go," and moved the adoption of the report.

The Rev. J. H. WICKSTEED seconded, and declared that the drink traffic, which the Government proposed to further entrench, destroyed as many people annually as any great war. He contrasted the awful drain on national resources of both evils, and said that the moment was one of great crisis demanding strong united action.

The motion having been adopted, a collection was then taken amounting to £3 14s.

The Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG then moved:—

That this meeting pledges itself to use every endeavour to bring about the defeat of the Government Licensing Bill seeing that:—

(a) It creates a vested interest in licences by its compensation scheme, and largely increases the capitalised value of all licences.

(b) The compensation levy, though professedly provided by the trade, is in reality public money, which the State could claim for purposes of national revenue.

(c) The Bill destroys the discretion of the local licensing magistrates.

(d) It prevents any appreciable reduction of licences. And this meeting believes that if the Bill became law a deadly blow would be struck against the welfare of the nation.

That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Prime Minister, the Home Secretary, and the Leader of the Opposition.

For 400 years, he said, the publicans had held licences under a yearly system under the control of licensing magistrates, yet all this was to be swept away. A speaker at one of the meetings had asked for a cause in which young people might work. "I say, take the Temperance cause, give it your full devotion, and you will reap ample reward."

The Bill was not only unjust and wrong in itself, but equally so to the publican and the lower orders in the trade. It would swell the dividend of the great capitalists, but could not benefit any other. Mr. Arthur Chamberlain had estimated that it gave 300 millions to the richest people in England. There was no precedent in history to equal it—it was a proposal to endow a vast and iniquitous monopoly. He half wished temperance reformers could make an appeal to the lower members of that vast trade to join hands in thwarting the passage of this measure. He reviewed the action of the Liverpool magistrates and showed how foolish was the cry about confiscation of licensed property, as only one licence out of 381 had been taken away in the whole country. In Liverpool, alone, £10,000 a day was spent in strong drink. They had a right, so some say, in the management of that sale. They thought that the local magistracy which knows local conditions should not be interfered with. It was hard to believe that there was a respectable motive behind this Bill, as its introducer had stated, for it destroyed every power for good, and was much more likely to effect a contrary purpose—it would produce an absolutely enormous amount of evil, it would place a load upon posterity almost too heavy to bear. It was a revolutionary and unconstitutional measure, and they ought to protest against it by every possible means.

The Rev. L. JENKINS JONES, Mayor of Woolwich, seconded the resolution. They stood, he said, on a platform broader than that of politics. They stood for social and moral or religious improvement, and because of the evil existing through the sale of intoxicants, and because of the evil that Bill would create if passed, they emphatically protested against it. Some sort of reform measure was necessary, as, for instance, one to regulate the rapidity with which licences are granted. He told how at one session of licensing magistrates 800 licenses were granted between the hours of 9 and 2.30, with an hour's interval. The Bill prevented reduction of licences, and the public were to be gagged. It would be an eternal shame to every Englishman if the Bill became law.

The Rev. C. J. STREET warmly supported the resolution, and only regretted that the British and Foreign Unitarian Association had not thought fit to have such a resolution in its annual proceedings. He read a petition against the Bill, which the President subsequently signed, and which was forwarded to the House of Commons.

Dr. READ, of Rhyl-street, then read a powerful indictment against the drink trade, a paper which will be published shortly.

The election of officers and votes of thanks completed the business of the meeting.

WHOEVER wishes to see a thorough exposure of the qualities and methods of the American Revivalist Dr. Torrey, by a number of liberal Congregational ministers and others, should procure the shilling booklet, "The True Revival versus Torreyism," edited by the Rev. J. Rhondda Williams, of Bradford, and published by Messrs. Percy Lund, Humphries & Co., London. We must be content here with three brief citations to show the character of these criticisms. Thus the Rev. James Bell says:—

The evangelistic mission of Messrs. Torrey and Alexander in Glasgow seems to have had no effect whatever. . . . The atmosphere they create is neither religiously helpful nor healthful.

The opinion of the Rev. David Dickie of the same city is:—

I have long regarded the modus operandi of these preachers as mischievous in the extreme. From first to last their methods are cleverly contrived to take the soul at a disadvantage. Throwing it off its balance, they keep it on the run, driving it from pillar to post, never suffering it to steady and settle itself, until through sheer exhaustion it holds out the white flag—surrender too often to them and their tactics, and not to a better life.

And Mr. Rhondda Williams observes in his preface:—

A Bradford minister received the names of four persons who were converted in the Simultaneous Mission; the same four were converted by Gypsy Smith; and there is little doubt that they will be converted a third time by Dr. Torrey. . . . Missions get their testimonials much in the same way that patent medicines do—excited patients in moments of temporary exhilaration write them, and, though the patients afterwards fall back, the testimonials continue in circulation.

COUNTRY HOLIDAY MOVEMENT.—Miss Lawrence, 23, Campden House Chambers, Campden Hill, London, W., acknowledges with thanks receipt for this fund of the following sums:—Miss Cooper, 10s.; Miss E. Taylor, £1; X.Y.Z., £1 1s.; Miss M. E. Swaine, £5; Mrs. Samuel Hollins, £1 1s.; Mrs. Buckton, £1; Mrs. F. Nettlefold, £1 1s.

OBITUARY.

THE REV. J. R. WILSON, M.A.

IT is with great regret that we have to announce the death of the Rev. John Remington Wilson, of Canterbury. For many years past he has been obliged to spend the winter months abroad. With Mrs. Wilson he left England earlier than usual last October, and since then his condition more than once caused alarm. A month ago they moved from Vévey to Montreux, previous to returning home. There he had a relapse, and died somewhat suddenly at last, on May 28, at the age of 56.

Mr. Wilson was the son of a prominent Congregationalist, and was born October 15, 1847, at 35, Highbury-place, Islington. He matriculated at London University in 1865, but two years later entered Trinity College Cambridge, and in 1870 graduated with classical honours. Having taken the theological course at Cheshunt he entered the Congregationalist ministry. For a short time he ministered at Petworth, but in consequence of throat trouble had to retire. Then he resided in London and was an attached member of the Rev. Stopford Brooke's congregation. He became a Unitarian, and he and Mrs. Wilson, on removing to Canterbury, joined the congregation at Blackfriars in that city. In 1891, when there was a danger that the chapel might have to be closed, Mr. Wilson most generously undertook the honorary pastorate. He even provided the expenses of the supplies during his absence, and his house was hospitably thrown open to receive them. A shy and retiring nature, coupled with broken health, prevented Mr. Wilson from being widely known; but by his congregation and those who had the privilege of his friendship, he was greatly esteemed. His generosity was large, though unobtrusive, and he was specially interested in helping young people bent on self-culture. Being an accomplished linguist he would hold gratuitously in his own house classes for French, German, and Greek. His large library was made freely available to friends and neighbours, who now mourn his loss.

A meeting of the congregation was held on June 4, after a service appropriate to the occasion, conducted by the Rev. James Harwood, B.A., when the following resolution, supported by Mr. Brothers, Mr. Alderman Cross, and the Rev. Dr. Greaves was carried in reverent silence:—

That the congregation of Blackfriars, meeting for the first time after hearing of the death of its beloved minister, desires to place on record its deep sense of gratitude for his services, of loving regard for his character, and its grief at his death. It also desires to assure Mrs. Wilson of its sincere and affectionate sympathy with her in her bereavement, and earnestly trusts that strength may be granted to her in this season of heavy trial.

We have lost in Mr. Wilson a true and most considerate friend, a man of fine culture and of beautiful spirit. His contributions to THE INQUIRER were not so many as we desired, but three articles of his on Arthur Hugh Clough appeared in April, 1899, and a sermon in September, 1897, and again in September, 1898, the latter on "Spiritual Independence," while in other thoughtful ways we received his constant sympathy and encouragement.

REV. T. R. ELLIOTT.

WE regret to announce the death of the Rev. Thomas Reid Elliott, of Mossley, which took place at his residence on Friday morning, June 3rd, after a lingering illness, in his seventy-first year. Mr. Elliott had been laid aside from pulpit work since March, his last sermon being preached on March 14. He entered upon the Mossley pastorate in 1883, and had, therefore, served for twenty-one years. During that time he had completely won the hearts of his congregation, and, indeed, of people in the town of all sects and creeds. He was beloved by all, doing his work in a quiet, unostentatious way. Any good cause had his help and sympathy. He was not only known to every scholar in the school, but almost every little boy or girl in the street to whatever school or church they belonged, by whom his kindly smile and sympathetic word will be missed. Mr. Elliott, who was a Leicestershire man, was apprenticed in his youth to a church builder. During his apprenticeship he became a strong Band of Hope worker, and often addressed his fellow workmen on the principles of Temperance. An earnest Band of Hope worker persuaded him to begin preaching. This he did, and eventually laid aside the mallet and was admitted a student in the Baptist College, Leicester. Amongst his fellow students was the present Dr. Clifford. Mr. Elliott began to read Channing's works, and of the change thereby wrought in his religious convictions he told in his sermon last year before the Provincial Assembly at Chowbent. His first settlement as a Unitarian minister was at Ilkeston, in 1859, whence he removed to Flowery Field, Hyde, and afterwards to Hunslet, Rochdale and Mossley. The funeral took place at the Mossley Cemetery on Tuesday, and was attended by several hundred people, amongst them the Mayor and Mayoress, the vicars of Mossley Parish Church and of St. John's Church, Revs. Geo. Parker, New Connexion; R. N. Barritt, Wesleyan, Jas. Campbell, Congregational. Of our own ministers the Revs. P. M. Higginson, J. A. Pearson, Geo. Knight, W. L. Tucker, W. G. Cadman, and T. P. Spedding were present. The service was conducted by the Revs. W. Harrison and W. C. Hall.

ON Tuesday, May 31, the annual meeting of the Society for the Relief of Aged and Infirm Protestant Dissenting Ministers was held at the Sunday School Union House, 56, Old Bailey, E.C., Mr. W. Lepard Smith presiding. The report showed that during the year seventy-two grants were made to aged and infirm ministers, the total amount thus voted being £831. Subscriptions or donations in aid of the fund will be thankfully received by the treasurer, Philip Cadby, Esq., 24, St. Peter's-square, Hammersmith, W., or by the Rev. P. G. Scorey, 10, Hartington villas, Hove, Brighton, the secretary.

I KNOW no surer refutation of atheism, no surer proof that God is good, than the fact that He has created in us an instinct for and a love of beauty, and has also abundantly gratified that instinct in every common sight and sound.

F. W. Farrar.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

ANIMALS lost one of their greatest friends a few weeks ago, when Miss Cobbe died. For a great part of her life she did everything she possibly could to defend animals from ill-usage or cruelty, and to get laws made that should punish people who ill-used them; and it was just like her that one of the latest things she ever had printed was a letter sent to THE INQUIRER and other papers, urging that children should be taught more about kindness to animals, and taught to understand that, as the animals are just as much God's creatures as we are, we are just as much bound to be kind and good to them as to our human friends and relations. Out of love to the animals' dear kind friend I should like to have a little chat with you children about them.

If we learn to know animals really well, we cannot help loving them, and reverencing the beautiful characters and instincts which God has given them. I hope all of you children have some pet or other to be your playfellow and delightful companion. You will know then what different characters they have, and how clever they are, and how they make their wants known though they cannot speak; and you will know their beautiful and faithful love. Look at their lovely gentle eyes that look so trustfully at you. It is terrible to think of people being unkind or cruel to them. Sometimes people are so only from thoughtlessness, and from not entering enough into the minds and ways and needs of these our "little brothers."

A boy I knew—a nice, kind, good boy, too—used to like, when he saw cats running along inside the railings above the street areas, to push them down into the area with his stick. Poor pussy! though cats do fall on their feet, think what a "turn" it must have given her, and how those hard flags must have stung those poor little toes.

Some boys say "Cats!" to their dogs, and teach them to chase them, instead of teaching the dogs that they must not do it. Think what terror and rage it sends into the poor little creature's heart.

Some people go away from home and leave their cats behind in an empty house or outside. That is terribly cruel, for cats love their homes and their comforts, and their masters and mistresses. When we go away, though we leave our cat safe and comfortable in the house with a kind woman to care for her, the servant says that all through the long summer, whenever the door bell rings, poor pussy flies upstairs to see if it is her mistresses come home, and is sadly crestfallen and sorrowful every time that she is disappointed. Dear faithful little grey cat, with round golden eyes and a serious face like an owl! But think what she would feel if we went away and left her with no one to take care of her, no nice milk and food, obliged to try and pick up a living for herself, and drink puddles, and get dirty and miserable—wet, too, which she hates—or find some poor shelter on someone's doorstep from which she will be driven away. Far better send her to the Cats' Home, and let her be put out of the way of such misery without pain, than leave her to such suffering as some people do.

I think people are usually kinder to dogs than to cats: but they are often very thoughtless even to dogs. I read just now a little poem about some young men who went out in a boat, taking two dogs with them, a little one and a big one; and when they were a long way from the shore, they threw both the dogs out, to make them swim to shore. It was a very long swim, but the big dog managed it, and was just landing safely when he heard the little one, far behind, yelping sadly for help, being quite exhausted and almost sinking. The big dog was tired too. He looked at the shore, and looked back at his little companion, and then turned and swam back to where he was struggling to keep afloat, let the little dog clamber up on to his back, and brought him back to shore. That dog was far kinder than his masters. It was a cruel, thoughtless thing to do to the poor dogs.

But how loving and faithful they are, even to cruel masters. I have seen a dog crouch and look up with such beseeching eyes at a cruel master who kicked him, without a shade of anger, and with a sort of humble look of "Please, dear master!" How can he resist it?

Now about birds. Boys, if you collect birds' eggs, mind you never take more than one egg out of a nest where there are several, and be careful not to frighten the mother, but wait till she is off the nest, and then take only one, and as quickly and quietly as you can. She will then be still happy with the remaining ones.

If you have canaries or any birds in cages, you must always remember how helpless they are except for your care, and be sure never to neglect them.

When we were children we had some little birds—a pair of canaries, called Dickie and Mimi, and a sweet little couple they were. We were so fond of them and of looking after them that we almost quarrelled as to who was to feed them, and at last we arranged that we should undertake it in turns, each for a week at a time. One day we were going out for a day's holiday, and when we came home, happy and boisterous, there was an awful silence in the nursery. Dickie and Mimi were dead. The child whose turn it was had forgotten to feed them in the hurry of going off. How we cried. It is between fifty and sixty years ago, but I have still a vivid memory of the misery of it, and of the helpless feeling that nothing could undo it. I am glad to say I do not remember which of us it was that forgot, and we were all grieved alike. There was food and water in the boxes, but it was too low down, and they could not get it. If there is a heaven where their merry little spirits went I know they forgave us, but we never forgave ourselves.

I am afraid this sad story must end our talk to-day; but perhaps we may have one next week also.

If you can get them, I advise you to read two books by Mrs. Ewing. One is a story called "Benjy in Beastland," which, when I knew it, was one of a set of stories in a book called "Timothy's Shoes." The other book is called "Brothers of Pity."

GERTRUDE MARTINEAU.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C.

LONDON, JUNE 11, 1904.

MEN FOR THE MINISTRY.

THE paper on "The Supply of Ministers for our Churches," read by the Rev. C. J. STREET at the Whitsuntide Conference of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and printed complete in our present issue, with a report of the subsequent discussion, ranged over a great variety of subjects. Under the circumstances it was perhaps too much to expect that Mr. STREET should refrain from allusions to matters of current controversy with regard to our colleges, and a forcible expression of his own opinion, to which of course he is perfectly entitled; and the paper being what it was, it was also natural that the discussion should be "switched off" on to that special topic, so that only in the last five minutes Mr. CARPENTER went to the very heart of the matter.

Mr. JOHN HARRISON'S generous plea for a more ample support of the ministry is just and always welcome, but at the same time we feel, with Mr. CARPENTER, that there is a deeper question still. Men kindled with the fire of true devotion will not shrink even from the sacrifices of a wearying poverty, if that should prove to be an unavoidable condition of their service, if only they are convinced that the work is a great and holy one, and under a divine compulsion hear the call and see the way open to a really effective ministry.

It is not, in the first instance, a question of what training our colleges can give, but far more of the responsibility laid upon the churches, to show, when they ask for ministers, that there is a true and worthy field for ministry; that the men devoted to their service will be honoured for the work's sake, lifted out of any littleness of their own, and not merely maintained in the bare necessities of life, but sustained in their ministry by the helpful spirit of a united people, by the sense of a supreme duty and a great undertaking for the kingdom of GOD among men, in which all together have their part.

The churches may criticise the colleges, and it may be salutary enough; but at their own door lies the responsibility to furnish the men, and to continue also to help in the making of the ministers. Out of the religious life of home and church must spring the impulse which cannot be denied, to consecrate the young life to that highest service, and to devote the matured powers of the man to that great work of inspiration. Then when the student is at college with that sacred purpose in his heart, there is still much for the churches to do, to keep the fires burning and the ideal of service vividly present throughout the years of preparation.

Mr. STREET refers in his paper to the dangers of a "chilling collegiate atmosphere," but where there are true teachers, the atmosphere is not chilling; and in determining the best methods of collegiate activity for the training of ministers it must not be forgotten that there is a ministry of truth as well as of moral regeneration. We want for our men the best and most quickening influences for the development of every gift and grace to be looked for in a minister of religion.

Thus we hold that the quiet and seclusion of the University, where the best teaching can be concentrated, and contact with the problems and the strenuous life of a great city, are both required to perfect the education of a minister. And in the case of our own men and the community of our Free Churches these conditions are most completely met when the student of theology finds at Oxford and in Manchester College the inspiration and the teaching of our best men (that is the ideal which the college is set to maintain), and at the same time during long vacations, and to some extent through Sunday work, is brought into close touch with the churches in great cities and social work such as centres in our domestic missions. He may have graduated in London, Manchester, Liverpool, or Birmingham, or some other University, if not at Oxford itself, and through those years the churches may have kept a vital hold upon their young men—that, indeed, is a duty they ought not to neglect; and it should be their care to offer always the warmest welcome and ample opportunities for service to the student of theology in the times left free from special studies. Then on the completion of the special theological course there is the further opportunity, which the churches ought to offer and the colleges encourage to the utmost, of a year or two of training in practical work and in preaching under the most efficient guidance.

In working for this ideal of the completest training for our men, the Unitarian Home Missionary College in Manchester might play a great part, if the new hall of residence became a centre of eager religious life, in close touch with the churches of the district. In spite of what is now said as to the Free Faculty of Theology in Manchester University, and the added inducement of a degree in theology, we still hold that our best teaching power in theology ought to be concentrated in Manchester College, Oxford, the more so because in that University freedom for theology has not yet been won; but, at the same time, we need the school and the home for practical ministerial training, which the great city, be it Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, or London, can best afford; and if the Home Missionary College still wished to keep its own students entirely in Manchester, that need not necessarily interfere with the working out of what appears to us a better scheme.

Now that these questions have been so prominently brought before the attention of our people, it seems desirable for every reason, that the authorities of the two colleges should meet together as soon as possible for frank and full discussion of the whole situation, and if "amalgamation" is still impossible or undesirable, yet the way may open for a more effective co-ordination of our forces for the better training of our men and the welfare of the churches.

IN COMMITTEE.

THE Licensing Bill went into Committee on Monday, and the crucial stage of the struggle has begun. No amount of special pleading avails to mask the absolute simplicity of the issue. On the one side is a trade with tremendous financial interests seeking to convert an annually granted monopoly into a monopoly for ever—a trade so dangerous that its adequate control and restraint is admitted on all sides to be essential to the well-being of the State. On the other side is a body of disinterested workers, with no financial interest to serve, who are fighting desperately to retain for the State, and in the interest of the community, the reality instead of the pretence of control. And at the direct invitation of the trade itself—an invitation backed by the most insulting threats of hostility at the hustings—the Government of the day has brought in a Bill conceding the whole of its demands, and approved in its entirety by no section of public opinion which has given any attention to the matter outside the ranks of the trade and its dependents.

The more closely the details of the Bill are considered the clearer it becomes that it is not, as its authors pretend, a Bill for buying out licence-holders, but a Bill for entrenching them beyond attack in the possession of their licences. It is useless to enact that licences may be determined on payment of compensation if you enact at the same time (a) that the compensation paid shall be so large, and the fund from which it is paid so limited, as to make the transaction the rarest possible event; and (b) that the duty of licence reduction shall be transferred to a tribunal which has throughout licensing history shown itself the steadfast foe of the attempts of the Licensing Justices to restrain the trade within the limits which public policy demands.

At the very outset of the debates in committee, the Government was given a chance of showing its solicitude for the real interests of temperance and its independence of the trade by accepting a time limit to the bestowal of compensation. Not even the trade—much less the PRIME MINISTER—has the boldness openly to assert that the holder of an annual licence has an absolute right to compensation for non-renewal on the same scale as though a licence granted for ever had been suddenly revoked. The plea is that compensation on any other basis involves inherent injustices of its own. One cannot suppose that the PRIME MINISTER himself seriously expects his speech on Monday to be regarded as finally demonstrating the impracticability of the time limit from this point of view. What Lord PEEL and his supporters propose is not the mere announcement that after a period of years the right to compensation should disappear. Such an announcement would not by itself destroy at the end of that period such shadowy equity claim to compensation as the licensee may now be said to possess. What is proposed is that at any time, on the initiative either of the licensing authority or of the licence holder, licences may be determined on payment of compensation based on the value of the holding during the unexpired portion of the time notice. This would place the man dispossessed in the first year of the transition period on exactly the same footing as the man dispossessed at any subsequent period, either before or after the time limit had expired. For whatever diminution there was in the compensation given—even to the vanishing point—would be balanced by the longer period of enjoyment of profits. The levy on surviving holders would not of course cease with the expiration of the time limit. It is a levy which the State is thoroughly entitled to make, irrespective of the purposes to which it is devoted, in return for the monopoly rights conceded, and it is not to be admitted for a moment that there would be any injustice in exacting the levy from the holder of a licence throughout the transition period, and then extinguishing the licence without compensation any time after the period had expired, so long as the licensee continued in enjoyment of his monopoly profits during the whole term the levy was imposed.

We are justified in concluding that those who see in this arrangement injustice to the brewer, however long the transition period is extended, are actuated by the belief that the extremist plea of the monopolist—of the possessor of "property" conferred upon him solely by the benevolence of the State and for the supposed convenience of the community—should be conceded without regard to any considerations arising from the question of the welfare of the community as a whole. The permanent establishment of the right to compensation on a scale assuming a freehold in the licence imposes a fatal handicap—as the Bill stands an absolute veto — on all those experiments in temperance reform, as to the expediency and necessity of which all students of the social problem are agreed. Those who persist in supporting the Bill in its present form will brand themselves irrevocably as indifferent to the regeneration of their kind.

THE Bishop of Hereford presided on Tuesday afternoon over a conference at the Westminster Palace Hotel on the subject of the maladministration of the Congo Free State. The object of the Conference, which was held under the auspices of the Aborigines Protection Society, was strongly supported by Sir Harry Johnston. The first resolution, which was moved by Sir Charles Dilke and seconded by Mr. Herbert Samuel, M.P., declared:—

That in the opinion of this meeting the recent report of Consul Casement upon the condition of affairs in the Congo State, supplementing and confirming allegations which have already and frequently been made as to monstrous injuries inflicted upon the native population, calls for continued and zealous action on the part of His Majesty's Government with a view to procuring observance of the humane provisions of the Berlin General Act of 1885.

Further resolutions urged a reference to the Hague Tribunal of the question of the assumed rights of the concessionaire companies and the state appropriation of lands previously at the disposal of the natives, and the establishment of a British Consular Court at Boma. The Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, in seconding the latter resolution, said that he had often been obliged to protest against the wrongs of British Colonial administration, but nothing in the whole record in the least approached the horrors of barbarism permitted under the Congo administration. On Wednesday evening in St. James's Hall, Mr. G. H. Head, as advocate of the Congo Free State Government, met Dr. H. Grattan Guinness in public debate, but had a hopeless case in view of the overwhelming evidence of the atrocities perpetrated in the extortion of rubber from the miserable natives.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

MARTINEAU MEMORIAL HALL AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS, NORWICH.

SIR,—In our anxiety not to encroach unduly upon your hospitable columns when making our recent appeal we omitted to mention one item which we shall be extremely grateful if you will permit us to state briefly now. Some time since Mr. F. M. Lupton very kindly offered to be one of fifty subscribers of £20 each to the site of our much-needed Sunday-school buildings. Thirty-five such subscribers would now enable us to claim Mr. Lupton's promise, and even twenty such would practically enable us to purchase the site. This is a matter, as was said before, of immediate and pressing urgency, and we venture to think, considering the place which the Octagon confessedly holds in the regard of our body and the nature of the memorial, this urgency only needs to be actually realised in order to bring forth the response required. May we take this opportunity of acknowledging an anonymous subscription of "A Widow's Mite" from "one whose mother and grandmother worshipped in the Octagon," which carries a London postmark?

(Mrs.) F. A. MOTTRAM, The Birches, Bracondale, Norwich,
W. N. LADELL, 69, Grove-road, Lakenham,
} Hon. Secs.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE.

SIR,—I ask your kind permission to correct Mr. Conway's statement in his letter contained in your last issue, that I was never on the foundation of Manchester College. I was in receipt of its exhibition, as a student for the ministry, during my entire undergraduate and theological courses.

H. ENFIELD DOWSON.

Gee Cross, Hyde, June 4, 1904.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION.

COUNTRY HOME.

SIR,—May I ask for space for a few lines to remind those who are interested in the Blackfriars Mission that subscriptions or donations will be thankfully received for the country home on Mitcham Common? This was opened at Whitsuntide, and already several families have enjoyed the pure air and country walks. The house has been nicely done up, and the matron who has managed so well for two summers is again in charge, so there is every prospect of a successful season.

SARAH E. MARTINEAU, Hon. Treasurer.

4, South-road, Clapham Park, S.W.
June 7, 1904.

To CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from A. E. C., H. W. H., J. H., W. C. H., H. M. J., F. L., F. B. M., R. N., H. R., P. E. R., W. W. R., E. T., R. H. T.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE SUPPLY OF MINISTERS FOR OUR CHURCHES.*

BY THE REV. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

THERE is not the same ground for complaint with us as there is with most denominations at the present time with regard to this question; for there is no numerical deficiency of ministers. The last Year Book shows that we have 373 congregations and, curiously enough, exactly the same number of ministers. Among the ministers who are recorded as being without a settlement I reckon that there were 20 who wanted one, and among the congregations 17 vacant pulpits for whom ministers would be sought. So that our problem is not that of an inadequate supply of ministers, at any rate as regards quantity.

And yet we cannot profess to be satisfied. The very fact that this subject has been chosen by the Committee for our consideration this morning is one indication of many that there is something to consider. If it is not a question of quantity, it must be one of quality. Are we satisfied or not with the standard of our ministry at the present time? and if not, what can we suggest for its improvement?

I frankly confess, at the outset, that I am one who is not satisfied. The Unitarian ministry is not what it might be, and ought to be. But the reasons for this are many, and the remedies are not so easy to find as the faults are evident, nor is the process of amendment so acceptable as could be desired. It is best that we should be quite frank with one another on a subject of such serious moment to the welfare of our churches, the great principles for which they stand, and the wholesome truths to which they testify. I shall therefore express some of my own conclusions very plainly, and invite the fullest and freest expression of the views of the laity as well as of the ministers.

Changed Conditions of Service.

On more than one occasion I have publicly said, as I say now, that too much is sometimes expected from our ministers in the present day, and they are unfairly compared with their predecessors. It is forgotten that the scope of their work is very much wider and its nature much more complex than if they were living under the conditions of half a century ago. The days for a leisurely ministry with time to keep a school or to specialise study outside the region of ministerial work are, and ought to be, gone. It is not enough now for a minister to prepare one or two thoughtful essays a week and visit his flock. There are a hundred calls upon his time and energies such as our forefathers would have trembled at. The placid, dignified, scholarly Presbyterian minister is an anachronism, lovable and venerable as he was The tide of human life would rush past him now, and leave him and his church high and dry. Indeed, as it was, many of the churches were so left, and if it church had not been for the new enthusiasms of the last century on the part of men of Unitarian missionary ardour and deep conviction, we should have been to-day a decaying denomination—which we are not, even though our rate of growth is very slow.

Higher Standard of Excellence.

Bring back the ministry of half a century ago, place it under modern conditions, and I believe there would be greater grounds for dissatisfaction than there are to-day. The average standard of scholarship and mental ability in our ministers is probably greater than ever it was. But so is it, and in much higher proportion as compared with the past, in the other denominations. Our standard has always been high, and we have never had reason to be ashamed of our ministers as a whole; but the standard of other denominations has been rapidly and considerably raised within the last two generations, so that the Unitarian minister is not to-day so noticeably different from the rest of the Nonconformists. This is a matter for rejoicing, but it is also one of the reasons why our congregations are not so conspicuously "cultured" as they were. Educated people can go with as much comfort and mental satisfaction to a Congregationalist church as to a Unitarian chapel, which they could not do fifty years ago. And, what is more, when they do go there, they often hear truth as freely and beautifully presented as they would among us—sometimes more eloquently too—without the disadvantage of being classed among those obnoxious Unitarians! I do not enter now into the question of whether this ought to be so; but it is so, and the fact is an important element in the judgment of the success or failure of our ministry.

Manifold Culture.

The greater demands on the modern ministry bring with them a very evident danger. The minister is tempted to diffuse his energies too widely, to attempt too much, and to let the intellectual and spiritual side of his life suffer in consequence. This is the road to disaster, for the man himself and for the congregation to which he ministers. The high standard of a cultured ministry must never be lowered. Our men must be equipped to meet the intellectual demands of the age, so that they shall be at least the equals of any other ministry; and when they enter into the busy work of their life they must have self-discipline enough to decline to be drawn into every possible kind of philanthropic work, remembering that one man is only responsible for one man's share, and the whole tone of his ministry will be lowered unless he keeps his mental standard high. And if the devotional spirit fails, the very reason for the ministry disappears; the influence of the teacher ceases to be religious, and is therefore harmful.

But if there is a real danger in a too busy life, I fear there is a greater danger in a chilling collegiate atmosphere. A love of souls is the first essential for a faithful ministry. When the young man goes to college he ought to be possessed by the enthusiasm of humanity, or he has no rightful place there. But if he goes with this beautiful spirit upon him, consecrating his youthful powers, and giving promise of blessing to others, woe is unto us if the college quenches his enthusiasms and chills his sympathies, driving him in upon himself again, and making him into a selfish acquirer of knowledge for its own sake, a mere dilettanté observer of the human struggle, a mechanical retailer of other men's thoughts, or a perfunctory member of a profession as a means of livelihood.

When men become students for the ministry, it should be—not for the sake of gratifying a private thirst for knowledge, or for any selfish reason, but to make learning into a means for a great end—the salvation of souls.

College Training:

The first purpose of our colleges is to train ministers and for our own ministry. It is not their province to evangelise the world—to wave the banner of "Unitarianism" on the one hand or of "Liberty at large" on the other. Let those who like to fly flags do so; let them buy them for themselves for that purpose, and choose the fitting place and opportunity for waving. The business of our colleges is to teach our students how to become efficient ministers in our free congregations. The creed-bound churches have not commissioned our colleges to supply their pulpits (they have colleges of their own for this purpose); and the funds supplied by Unitarian and Non-subscribing supporters were intended to be applied to one specific end. The colleges exist for the sake of our churches. They were created in order that they might produce a qualified ministry to serve the congregations that nourished them. Our colleges and our churches are (or were meant to be) of the same spirit. Their personnel is the same; their tradition is the same; their intent should be the same. It is not for the colleges to carry on a quixotic campain for "liberty" pure and simple, or to spend their funds in giving scholarships or bursaries to men avowedly preparing to enter a creed-bound church. Their business is to educate for the Non-subscribing ministry, which has ever been the glory of English Presbyterianism and of Unitarianism.

And this education must be adequate and appropriate to modern needs. The preparation which is needed can only be satisfactorily given by those who are in living touch with the spirit and work of our churches. The intellectual training among us is not likely to fall below the normal standard. Our defect does not lie that way, as our critics in other churches, friendly and unfriendly, never tire of telling us. Nor will the spiritual side of the work of the ministry be slighted or minimised. Our fault lies not in a lack of devotion or reverence. But in the application of high principles to practical life there is room for improvement. The great social problems of our time need careful study as a religious duty, which should not be postponed till the young minister is plunged into the midst of them to meet these vital issues as he may. The contrast between the quiet lecture-room or the tutorial study and the whirl of the world's life into which the student for the ministry is suddenly cast is apt to be too great, and he is unprepared for the change. In practical training for the ministerial office, too, there is much more to be done, as the churches can testify. At present, a great part of this is being done in the churches and at their expense after the student leaves college. This ought not to be. When a young man enters the ministry, he ought to have some sensible idea of the kind of work that will lie before him, day after day, and year after year, and of the way in which it should be done. Pastoral theology is a most important department of ministerial training. A little legal and medical knowledge could well be imparted with advantage to the student, in preparation for the vicissitudes of his future career. And what are we to say of the minister who cannot preach? Whose fault is it? If he is incapable, why was he allowed to finish his course? And if he is not, why were his powers not developed? Good preaching is an essential element in the equipment of any minister, and if he is turned out of college "a stick," there is something radically wrong.

* A paper read at Essex Hall on Thursday morning, May 26, at the Conference of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association.

That it is not our colleges alone which need bringing up to date is evident from the correspondence upon this subject which has appeared of late in the Christian World, and from many other indications. Just as old machinery has to be replaced by new in the factories and workshops, new methods of teaching and new subjects also are required in the colleges to bring them abreast of the times. Tutorial oversight of studies is more important than lecturing, and lecturing itself should be comprehensive in its scope and not pedantic or pedagogic. The main object of lecturing at college should be to set the men thinking and working on independent lines—not to take dreary facts or arguments which can be read in books; and the work of the tutor is to guide, strengthen, and correct the development of the student's own reading and thought. In their theological years the students are not boys, but men, and should be dealt with as such. A larger view is needed both of the men who are to be our future ministers and of the scope and purpose of the ministry into which they are to be drafted. As an admirable leader in the Christian World said: "Properly conceived, the training of the theological colleges is a training in the application of the highest known force to the whole life of society and of the individual. The efficiency of the theological colleges is an affair not of this or that detail, but of the extent to which they are in actual touch with the life of the community, and are an organised expression of its best mind." I am afraid, judged by this standard, our own colleges are not all they might and ought to be.

H. M. C. and M. C. O.

I have not the slightest sympathy with the proposal which has just been made by a number of distinguished members of our churches to amalgamate the two colleges; still less, with the lamentable untimeliness of their intervention, which has naturally led to friction and hampered the success of a great scheme for celebrating the jubilee of an institution that has done much to quicken and strengthen our religious life. I wish "God speed" to the Unitarian Home Missionary College in its good work of training our ministry, and in its immediate purpose of providing suitable buildings and equipments and endowment. I speak as an alumnus of the sister college when I say that there is room—nay, that there is necessity—for both. It would, in my opinion, be a fatal policy to attempt to run the minds of all our students into one mould; to perpetuate the mistakes of either institution, as would probably happen if one were merged into the other. A healthy emulation is good for both. The variety of type in the products of the two institutions is good for our churches. I do not regard it as a waste to keep two such academies going. But, at the same time, I believe there might and should be co-ordination and co-operation between them. There may be waste in the way in which they are managed. An interchange of students for a year would be a good experience for all concerned. Let the Oxford men go for a year to Manchester, and the Manchester men for a year to Oxford, and let a special course be arranged for this purpose. It would be good for the men, for their teachers, and for our congregations alike. The deficiency of each institution would perhaps be better met in that way than in any other.

Further Training.

Then, when the students have finished their training at the colleges, they should, with some few exceptions, go for at least a year—better still, for two—for a practical course of instruction as curates under an experienced minister in one of the larger churches. Ask the men who have served the congregations in this capacity whether they would like to have been without the experience. Ask the churches to which they minister now whether they are glad or sorry that their preacher and pastor has had practical guidance in his preaching and pastoral work. I know what the answer will be. And many a young minister, who has had a few years' experience of solitary work, will tell you that he wishes he had served a year or two as an assistant before he entered upon the responsible charge of a pastorate. It would have enabled him to avoid some regrettable mistakes.

Men from other Churches.

Here let me say a word or two about the men who come into our ministry from that of other denominations. What we should do without them I do not know, for our colleges alone do not provide us with the number we require. Of the 13 new names on our list of ministers this year, 6 were trained at our own colleges, 3 came from the colleges or the ministry of other denominations, and 4 were without college training. A very serious question is raised here. The certificate of our colleges may be taken as a guarantee that a man is in good standing, but what guarantee have we as to those who come to us otherwise? I am speaking in general terms, and without reference to particular persons or to special periods; but I believe that it is most desirable that there should be some recognised method of putting a sort of hall-mark—certainly not as to doctrine, but undoubtedly as to character and general fitness—upon the men whom we are asked to receive into our ministry. It is done by our brethren in the United States, and it might, and I think, should, be done here. The fellowshipping of ministers is there regarded, and I think rightly, as above all a ministers' question. Who so likely to guard the gates of the ministry as the ministers themselves? If by the general body of accredited ministers a newcomer be received into ministerial fellowship, the congregations would have some security in choosing such a man as their leader.

Ministerial Fellowship.

A beginning in this direction has been made by the formation of the Ministerial Fellowship, although it was not primarily established for this purpose. The fellowship is an elective society, already numbering 120 of our ministers, and is steadily increasing in membership every year, as its scope and application are enlarged. The fact of membership may be taken as an indication of good and regular standing in our ministry. The Ministerial Fellowship is also taking a much-needed step in attempting to provide machinery by which congregations in search of ministers and ministers who desire a change of sphere may be brought into touch with each other. The present slip-shod happy-go-lucky method, or rather want of method, by which ministerial settlements are usually brought about, conduces neither to the self-respect of the minister nor to the harmony of the congregation; and even an elementary attempt to improve the present state of things is to be welcomed.

In most cases it would be desirable for the man who comes to us from another denomination to spend a year at one of our colleges or serve a year as an assistant in one of our larger churches before undertaking a sole charge. This Association might do worse than spend some of its increased resources in making this possible.

I would not have it thought that I am unappreciative of the indebtedness of our people to many of the ministers who come to us from other religious connections. Some of our best men have come over to us after finding their ministry mentally and spiritually impossible elsewhere. And some of them have brought a breezy atmosphere with them which has freshened us up and made us realise our own defects. But there are others, of whom the less said the better, and it is only common sense to take reasonable precautions. No man with an honourable record would have cause to object to a care judiciously and charitably exercised for this purpose.

Shut the Back Doors.

And then, cannot some of the back doors into our ministry be closed? I grant that here and there one may find a man with special aptitude for the ministry, to the manner born, who seems able to dispense with the ordinary training school. But a Robert Collyer is not to be picked up every day, and I feel sure he would be the first to say how much he missed for want of a good educational start. No hard-and-fast rule can be made to apply to every instance, but at least a strong case should be made out before any untrained man is received and acknowledged as a regular minister. Here, too, the value of a system of fellowshipping is very evident. And where a man has not established his strong case for being received without training, this Association would be well advised to refuse any support towards the maintenance of his ministry. Special aptitude courses in our colleges could easily be devised for men who desire to rise from the ranks of lay-preacher into the accredited ministry, and, indeed, in the Unitarian Home Missionary College a two years' course of this kind is already provided.

Why not more Men?

Our colleges, under such a wider scheme, would have a better chance of developing their higher possibilities. We are not satisfied with them as they are—that seems to represent a pretty general feeling—but we have hopes that they will adapt themselves more completely to the needs of the age. But not all the criticism must be showered upon them. In reference to the questions often asked, why there is such a slack supply of home-grown students, why so few from the old Unitarian families, why so few of social standing, it would be well for the congregations to put these questions to themselves. They might, if they would, make the position of the ministry more attractive—more tolerable even. One does not expect luxury. The prizes, so-called, are few and far between, denied altogether to most, and not always so sweet as they are imagined. But a better living wage might be given all round. There might be less carping criticism directed at the preacher and pastor, fewer attempts at dictation from the big man, less desire to suppress open speech on the questions that go down to the roots of the moral life. Why do ministers' wives so seldom want their boys to be ministers? It is because they know the hardships and bitterness of the struggle which so many are called upon to face. Certainly the ministry of religion is not for those who desire an easy life, but it might be made a little less hard. It is bad enough to face the lowered national ideals of the present day, which are partly responsible for the shortage of the ministerial supply, hard enough to grapple with the materialism and selfishness of a grasping age; disheartening enough to preach to small congregations; trying enough to make ends meet on the miserable pittance upon which so many ministers are expected to house, feed, clothe and educate their families; but if, added to these difficulties, there is a poor response given by the congregations to personal sacrifice and to the efforts, often heroic, of ardent enthusiasm, it takes the heart out of a man altogether; and the younger generation, looking on and comprehending to some extent, is not inspired to take up a more or less thankless task.

All the more call for the prophet, you may say; and I agree that men who feel no prophetic call, no stirring of the soul to strive for human welfare, are better out of the ministry altogether; but even the prophetic fires may be put out if cold water enough is poured upon them, and when once they are quenched it is doubly hard work to kindle them again. Cheer the hearts of your ministers, then, with readiness of personal service; give yourselves to the cause, as far as possible, in the same spirit that you expect to find in your religious leader; help to make your own church live and work, and the ministers you have already will render better service than is possible now, and the half-empty benches of the reformed colleges will stand a better chance of being adequately filled by men who yearn to take a part in the quickened life of our people.

THE DISCUSSION.

Mr. Street's paper, read at the Conference at Essex Hall on Thursday morning, May 26, was followed by discussion, the President, Mr. W. Arthur Sharpe, being in the chair.

Mr. F. MONKS opened the discussion, and expressed himself as in hearty sympathy with the paper, the more so from their experience at Warrington of recent years in pretty frequent changes of ministers. They had been obliged to look outside their own ministerial training ground, and there was undoubtedly a great difficulty in the supply of men of the right quality. They looked to their own Colleges for a supply of efficient, well-trained ministers. He commended the idea thrown out by Mr. Street of offering bursaries to men who came over from other churches, and he did not see any reason why women should not enter the ministry. To many congregations their services would be acceptable. There was difficulty in finding students for the ministry, and recent correspondence in THE INQUIRER had indicated some of the reasons. The Home Missionary College was avowedly denominational, but both in its teaching and learning it was as free as Manchester College, Oxford. Manchester College prided itself on belonging to no denomination, and its claim was to train men for a church far wider than any single community. He did not see how amalgamation of the two colleges under one management was possible, but a scheme for co-operation might be devised. But the best scheme would be useless without an adequate supply of students.

The Rev. H. ENFIELD DOWSON agreed with Mr. Street that Manchester College, Oxford, had a great charge placed in its hands by the churches, from which it derived its support, and it had always done its best to train men for their ministry. He had looked through the list of alumni of the College, and the exceptions of those who had not entered the ministry of their churches was insignificant. Its work had been to train students for the ministry of their churches, and they had thought that the best way of training them was by the free unfettered search for the truth of God, in accordance with the inscription over their doors of "Truth, Liberty, and Religion." The churches themselves were born of the same spirit, and if they had not asked from their students any pledge as to the ministry they would enter, they trusted that spirit to lead them into their noble religious faith, and the trust had been justified by results. He recalled his own experience at college, when, under the influence of Maurice, he had been doubtful as to what ministry he should enter, being strongly drawn towards the Church of England, but had been bidden by the Committee simply to prosecute his studies and trust in God for the right guidance. In all the years he had known Manchester College they had endeavoured with the utmost devotion to serve those who worshipped in Free Churches. The men who came out from the doors of Manchester College had been doing the main work of Unitarianism, side by side with their brethren of the Home Missionary College. He had long wished to see an amalgamation of the two colleges, a union of co-operation between the two. He had the utmost sympathy with his brethren of the Home Missionary College, and what he had recently done he did in the interest of both colleges and their students, and in the interest of their churches. He felt that a crisis had arrived in their history, and what he asked was that there might be a conference to see whether they could not work together. He pleaded that there should be no heat or division, but union among them. The two colleges were working in the same spirit. The men of both were serving the same churches, inspired by the same spirit. They could not be brought too close together in the love and service of their churches.

Mr. JOHN HARRISON said that as laymen they must ask themselves what inducement they offered to young men who thought of entering the ministry of their churches. Were they considerate and generous enough? He was afraid not. He asked them to consider many of the stipends offered. It was an oft-told tale, but he should not cease to insist upon it until a remedy was found. After undergoing a lengthy and expensive education a man had often to accept a stipend that would be scorned by an ordinary ledger-clerk. It was said that those who preached the Gospel should live by the Gospel. He was afraid some of them were not ashamed to leave their ministers to starve on the Gospel. Could they expect a proper supply of ministers when only a starvation wage was offered? It was quite true that many congregations gave all they could afford, but that did not settle the question. A minister, whether preaching in a prosperous London church or to a small country congregation, was doing the work of the whole body. Their duty was to the churches as a whole.

The Rev. CHARLES PEACH said that the question was really one of the atmosphere of the churches themselves. Unless the atmosphere and life of the churches was high, no supply of men would be found for their ministry. That was the real question, but the discussion had been switched off on to another line, and he must follow it. They all reverenced Mr. Dowson in the Manchester district, as their esteemed and generous counsellor; but they certainly were amazed when a recent memorial was published, seeing that practically the whole of the alumni of their Manchester college said that, having served the churches for fifty years, and produced as many men as the Oxford college, it had demonstrated its right to exist and to have fitting buildings of its own, that it might do as good or better work in the future. When they analysed the memorial they found it was not a memorial, but a manifesto of another institution. What they felt in Manchester was that there was room for the two institutions and need for both, and he thought they could not have had a more eloquent plea on behalf of the Manchester institution than that offered by Mr. Jacks in his paper that morning. In the strifes and passions of great cities thoughts were formed, and to men in the cities their ministers were to speak. It was well that they should be in touch with them. On the intellectual side also they said that Manchester was as suitable a centre as any for a Unitarian academy. They had there a Free Faculty of Theology, and their own Principal was a member of its advisory committee. Under such circumstances they felt it would be a matter of treason to remove their students. Then they were in the midst of the churches, and the College came into being because it was necessary. If there was any question of waste, either of material or men, at any rate it was not in Manchester. He hoped the discussion would not be embittered. There was not the least feeling on their side, for they were not going to be extinguished, but to live on as good friends and brothers of the other institution. If on a full consideration of all the issues they saw that there might be co-operation, but that absorption was impossible, let them not waste energy in making more feeble a movement that would in any case go on in Manchester. Let them recognise diversity of operations, but one spirit. If the Home Missionary College were amalgamated with Manchester College, Oxford, next week, another college would immediately be started, only it would be a feebler one. Let them co-operate rather than hinder its development, and perhaps lead to failure and a feebler life in the future.

The Rev. HENRY GOW said that the question of the supply of men for their ministry was a most important one, but that, unfortunately, Mr. Street had not dealt with it. His paper was concerned chiefly with highly controversial matters. It was outspoken and strong, but it made the divisions amongst them appear much greater than they really were. They were certainly not entirely at one, but there was a great danger of exaggerating differences of opinion into enmities and absolute opposition. There was not so great a distinction between the two Colleges as was sometimes supposed. On the one hand, he understood that the Home Missionary College had a Trust Deed as open as that of Manchester College itself. On the other, Manchester College did not, as had been asserted, ignore the needs of their Free Churches. The two Colleges stood side by side on the foundation of freedom, and could be equally supported by free liberal thinkers. Manchester College had refused in the past, and still refused, to ask pledges of those who received its bursaries as to the ministry they would enter. There was nothing new in their action. If, as he understood Mr. Street to wish, the College took steps to confine its grants to men who would promise to enter their churches, that would be a new policy; it would be a subversion of the principles they had received. Many of their best students would, he was sure, refuse to enter the College on such terms; they would not bind themselves at the beginning of their theological course to enter a particular ministry at its close. The principle that they had no right to ask their students to bind themselves was clear, but as a fact it resulted in training ministers for their Free Churches. Mr. Monks had made the astonishing statement that two-thirds of the men trained at Manchester College did not enter their ministry. That statement was not in the least borne out by evidence. As a matter of fact their free college did serve the free churches, and those churches were not more denominational than the College. Both were unbound, and so College and churches worked hand in hand together. As to the Memorial, the word used was not extinction or absorption, the word was amalgamation; not the absorption of the weak by the strong, but the amalgamation of two strong colleges. Neither was it true to speak of the Memorial as a manifesto of one institution against another. It was a memorial of a large number of representative and practical people to both Colleges, asking them to consider whether some form of amalgamation could not be devised, a union of the two, to work together. What they said was, let the two committees meet and discuss the matter before the Home Missionary College settled in that large new way as an absolutely separate institution; let them see whether they could not co-operate, and each do part of the common work. They of Manchester College did not want the extinction of the other College, and he deeply regretted the misunderstanding which had arisen. He hoped that the two committees, without pledging themselves in any way, would find it possible to meet in friendly conference.

The Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER said that the question of the supply of their ministers was wholly independent of the question of the management of the colleges. Nor did he think the question of future maintenance of the ministry really decisive. It might indeed operate here and there, but what a young man chiefly desired was the assurance that he would have an adequate field of service. The suggestion he would make was so elementary that he must ask pardon for it. It was that the quickening of the desire, which was the ultimate source of the supply of their ministers, lay in the church and in the home. He could not disguise from himself the fact that for a long time circumstances in the education of their homes were not so favourable as could be desired for making in that direction. They saw parents declining the religious education of their children, habits of daily prayer, and especially of family prayer, dying out, regular attendance at worship discouraged. He recalled his own experience, in which the impulses which led him into the ministry were quickened by the Sunday teaching at home. His father was one of the busiest of professional men, but on Sundays he devoted himself to the religious education of his children. Before morning service there was religious preparation of hymns and catechism to be learnt. From University Hall they regularly walked out to Rosslyn Hill Chapel at Hampstead, and his father was the leader of the party. In the afternoon and evening again they had religious reading with him. He read the scriptures with them, discussed books, and made them feel that he and they had common interests, and that he cared that they should grow up God-fearing, man-loving boys. In the present day the dominant influence of athletics in their homes was apt to crowd religion out. Parents and ministers ought to concern themselves with that matter. They knew how, again and again, ministers devoted themselves to preparation classes and dedication services. There was great hope in that movement. Let it go wide and deep, and quicken the prayerful spirit in their homes, quicken the springs of love to God and man. Then there would be no lack of supply of men for the ministry, and the colleges would go forward to a success they had never yet attained.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Wednesday, or Thursday Morning at latest.]

Appeal.

London: Stratford.—The summer excursion of the West Ham-lane Sunday-school is to take place on Saturday, July 9, to Epping Forest. The managers make their usual appeal for contributions towards the expense, which may be sent to Mr. W. J. Noel, Grove Hill, South Woodford, the treasurer, or to the secretary, Mr. George Shute, 53A, Romford-road, Stratford.

Aberdeen.—The first of the open-air addresses was given by the Rev. A. Webster, on the Broad Hill, on Sunday last. The afternoon was sunny but a chill sea-fog made itself felt. There was no special advertisement of the address, but an audience of about 500 assembled, and listened closely to the declaration of what Unitarianism stands for. In the forenoon, in the church, the annual Summer Flower Service was held, when there was a large gathering of scholars and adults. The children's choir, conducted by Miss Jane Davidson, rendered the musical part of the service very creditably. In the evening Mrs. Webster conducted a musical service. The decoration of the church was much admired.

Ciliau = Aeron. — The Sunday-schools of Cwmsychbant, Capelybryn, Cribyn, Ciliau-Aeron, and Rhydygwin held their annual Gymanfa here on May 27. All the schools recited portions of the Scriptures, and were catechised by the ministers of the churches to which the schools belonged. A great deal of faithfulness was shown by the great numbers that attended.

Hatstead.—The annual flower service was held at the Free Christian Church on Sunday last, when Mr. E. Howard, of London, gave a suitable address from the words "Consider the lilies of the field." The band played appropriate selections during the service, and the church was decorated with flowers. The attendance was very good, between 50 and 60.

Kidderminster (Resignation).—The Rev. E. D. Priestley Evans has resigned the pulpit of the New Meeting, after a ministry of fourteen years, having accepted a call to Bank-street Chapel, Bury. The congregation has accepted the resignation with great regret, and last Sunday passed a resolution to that effect, at the same time thanking Mr. Evans for his faithful services, offering to him and Mrs. Evans the heartiest good wishes, and congratulating the Bury congregation on their acquisition. Mr. Evans's ministry at Kidderminster is to terminate at the end of September.

Leeds: Holbeck.—At the close of the service on Sunday evening the congregation passed a resolution of deep sympathy and condolence with the Rev. J. McDowell in his sudden bereavement through the death of his wife, who was a daughter of the late J. S. Mathers, of Leeds.

London: Bermondsey. — The Sunday-school anniversary and flower service was held last Sunday, when there was an abundance of flowers, partly contributed by a few faithful friends from afar, but principally as free-wil offerings from numerous members of the church and school. The behaviour of the scholars in the afternoon was almost exemplary. The congregation in the evening was united in worship in spirit and in truth.

London: Lewisham.—A bazaar for which the members of the Unitarian Christian Church have been strenuously working was held at

Essex Hall on Wednesday and Thursday, with the object of raising funds towards a new church building, to be erected on the splendid site which has been secured in the High-street, and to liquidate the debt of £1,300 on the site. The hall looked very bright with the well-laden stalls on every side but the platform, and a fish-pond in the centre, and plenty of willing helpers in attendance, a number of entertainments and competitions each evening adding both to the pleasure and profit of the occasion. The bazaar was opened on Wednesday afternoon by Lady Durning-Lawrence. The chair was to have been taken by Mr. W. Blake Odgers, K.C., but to his great regret he was detained in Court, and Mr. John Harrison, who on both days presided at the organ, took the chair. The opening verse of the hymn, "Now thank we all our God," having been sung, the chairman congratulated the Lewisham friends on their splendid bazaar and on the progress their church had made. Lady Durning-Lawrence, in declaring the bazaar open, said that it was a great cause in which they were engaged. Though they were few in numbers, wherever she went she found that Unitarian opinions were spreading and churches were growing more liberal, she wished them every success in their efforts. The Rev. W. Chynoweth Pope proposed a vote of thanks to Lady Durning-Lawrence, and spoke of the great indebtedness of their London churches to the Lawrence family and to Miss Durning-Smith. They owed it to Sir Edwin that they had secured the site for their new church, and they were more grateful than they could express. Miss Marjorie Pope then presented a bouquet to Lady Durning Lawrence, and the bazaar opened. On Thursday Mrs. Blake Odgers was the opener, the chair being taken by Mr. Howard Chatfeild Clarke. The opening hymn was "Our fathers faith, we'll sing of thee," after which the Chairman said that it was a great pleasure to him as President of the London District Unitarian Society to be there, he was deeply interested in the progress of their church, and when they had their new building he was confident that they would increase in numbers and in good works. Of Mrs. Odgers he spoke in grateful terms, as having long been with her husband the helper of all good work in connection with their churches. To her, more than to anyone else, they owed the success of their Church Building Fund, from which they hoped now to make a substantial grant towards the building of the Lewisham church. Mrs. Odgers, in declaring the bazaar open, said it represented a large amount of persistent patient effort in which all had taken part together for the common end. That was good not only for individuals but for congregations, and the more fully they realised it, the better it would be for them all. Those congregations were strongest in the best sense who recognised the claims of others on their help and sympathy. It gave her great pleasure to declare the bazaar open. Mr. A. G. Warren conveyed the thanks of the congregation to Mrs. Odgers, and Miss Ruby Francke presented a bouquet, after which business began. The takings on Wednesday amounted to over £100. The complete result we shall not be able to report until next week.

Northumberland and Durham Missionary Association.—At the monthly committee meeting, held on Monday, June 6, after the usual business, Mr. Edward H. Coysh, who has held the office of secretary for upwards of twelve years, stated that, having severed his connection with the Church of the Divine Unity, he felt he could no longer continue to act as secretary of the Northumberland and Durham Association. It would, under the circumstances, be difficult for him personally, and what had greater weight with him, it would be inimical to the interests and welfare of the society. Mr. J. Duncan Donald, who has acted as financial secretary in friendly co-operation with Mr. Coysh, also resigned. It being realised that the resignations were irrevocable, and indeed inevitable, they were formally accepted. Mrs. John Tweedy, who occupied the chair, and who, as a former president of the association, could speak with some knowledge, expressed in very feeling terms the committee's appreciation of the services so faithfully rendered by Messrs. Coysh and Donald, and moved a very hearty vote of thanks to each. This was cordially seconded and supported, and carried with unanimous applause. Mr. Coysh and Mr. Donald, in acknowledging the vote, expressed their gratitude at the kindness of the committee. The Rev. George A. Ferguson, of Gateshead, has consented to act as secretary pro tem.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

SUNDAY, June 12.

Acton, Central Auction Room, Market-place, High-street, 7, Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Rev. EUSTACE THOMPSON.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7.

Brixton. Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. W. STANLEY.

Child's Hill, All Souls' Free Church, corner of Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 7. Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. JUPP.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 and 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON. Collections for Hospital Sunday Fund.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. PERRIS.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. GREAVES.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. J. HARWOOD, B.A.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11.15 and 7, Rev. G. CRITCHLEY, B.A.

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. J. E. STRONGE.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15, Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A., and 7, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. JOHN ELLIS.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.

Stepney Green, College Chapel, 11 and 7, Mr. C. A. GINEVER.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 and 7, Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.

Stratford, Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. G. SKELT, and 6.30, Mr T. ELLIOT.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 7, Mr. DELTA EVANS.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. McDOWELL.

BLACKPOOL, Dickson-road, North Shore, 10.45 and 6.30, PULPIT VACANT.

BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Church, The Hall, Lytham-road, 11 and 7,

BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 and 7, Rev. C. C. COE.

BRIGHTON, Christ Church, New-road, North-street, 11 and 7, Rev. A. FARQUHARSON.

BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 7, Rev. GEORGE STREET.

CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11, Mr. W. H. SHRUBSOLE, F.G.S.

DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.

GUILDFORD, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. RATTENBURY HODGES.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. J. MARTEN.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. WARSCHAUER.

LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. P. FARLEY.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. COLLINS ODGERS, B.A.; Evening subject, "The Doctrine of the Divine Trinity not the Direct Teaching of Holy Scriptures."

MAIDSTONE, Earl-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. SIDAWAY BRETTELL, M.A.

MANCHESTER, PLATT CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. T. POYNTING.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. E. PIKE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND.

PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45 Rev. W. BIRKS.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Mr. THOMAS BOND.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 7, Rev. T. B. EVANS, M.A.

SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 and 6.45, Rev. F. TEASDALE REED.

SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. AGAR.

SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FREDERICK B. MOTT.

TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 and 6.30.

TROWBRIDGE, Conigre Church, 11 and 6, Rev. J. WAIN.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 and 6.30,

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 7, Rev. G H. VANCE, D.D.

WALES.

ABERYSTWITH, New Market Hall, 11, Rev. E. O. JENKINS.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY SOUTH PLACE, FINSBURY.—June 12, at 11.15, JOHN A. HOBSON, M.A., "New Aspects of the Population Question."

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN SQ., W.—June 12, at 11.15, DR. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "'Nathan the Wise'—An Ethical Document."

BANK STREET CHAPEL, BOLTON.

THE ANNIVERSARY SERVICES in connection with the Sunday School will be held on SUNDAY, JUNE 19th, 1904. Morning, 10 30; Evening, 6.30. Preacher: Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A. Afternoon at 2.30, a Special Service, conducted by Rev. JOHN EVANS, B.A. Collections at each Service.

MINISTERS and SECRETARIES of UNITARIAN CHURCHES are desired to send the names and addresses of Unitarians who may have removed to Nelson, to Mr. J. S. MACKIE, 33, St. Matthew-street, Burnley.

LONDON UNITARIAN CHORAL SOCIETY.

There will be a Practice at Essex Hall, on Monday, 13th inst., at 8 o'clock.

Further Practices will be held on Mondays, October 10th, 31st, November 21st, December 12th, unless otherwise specified. Members and intending members please note.

MARRIAGE.

JONES—SEDGFIELD.—On 4th June, at the Unitarian Church, Highgate Hill, by the Rev. R. H. Greaves, Edward Furnival, second son of the late Edward Jones, formerly of Llanfyllin and Ballarat, Australia, to Kathleen, youngest daughter of the late Henry Brougham Sedgfield, sometime of Poole, Dorset, and of Mrs. Sedgfield, 50, Whitehall Park, London, N.

DEATHS.

McDOWELL.—On June 2nd, at Oriel Villa, Prior Park-road, Bath, Annie, wife of John McDowell, Minister of Trim-street, Chapel, and eldest daughter of the late John Shackleton Mathers, of Leeds.

WARWICK.—On the 6th inst., at 119, Kedleston-road, Derby, aged 72, Elizabeth Hole, widow of the late John Alfred Warwick, of Ockbrook.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

"The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological Knowledge, without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological Doctrines."

The Annual Proceedings in connection with the closing of the Session will take place at the College on Thursday, June 23rd.

The Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., will deliver the address to the students at 11.30 a.m.

The Annual Meeting of Trustees will be held at 3.30 p.m.

A Valedictory Religious Service will be held in the College Chapel at 8 o'clock p.m. The Farewell on behalf of the College will be given by the Principal, and the welcome into the ministry by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong B.A.

A. H. WORTHINGTON, B.A., 1, St. James'-square, Manchester.
Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A., 3, John-street, Hampstead, London, N.W. } Secs.

UNDERBANK UNITARIAN CHAPEL, STANNINGTON.

MINISTER, REV. IDEN PAYNE.

This old cause at a village on the hills near Sheffield, which has existed for 250 years, is almost entirely dependent for its support on the income derived from farms in the locality constituting the endowment. Latterly two good-sized Cowhouses have had to be rebuilt, at a total cost of £450, and the Trustees find themselves nearly £300 in debt.

The salary which they are able to pay to the Minister is a very low one, and even a slight augmentation would be a very material aid.

Subscriptions to the extent of £152 1s. have been already received (mainly from Sheffield), as per list at foot.

The members of the Congregation are not in a position to do much. Unitarian friends at a distance are now appealed to.

Donations should be by Cheque or Postal Order, made payable to Mr. EDWARD BRAMLEY, and sent to him at 6, Paradise-square, Sheffield.

JOHN STEVENSON, Chairman of Trustees.
MICHAEL J. HUNTER, Vice-Chairman of Trustees.
EDWARD BRAMLEY, Hon. Treasurer.

LIST OF DONATIONS RECEVED.

	£	s.	d
Amount previously advertised ...	129	19	0
Friend of the Rev. Iden Payne ...	10	0	0
G. H. Hunt	2	2	0
J. B. Wostenholme	10	0	0
	£152	1	0

PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY

OF

Presbyterian and Unitarian Ministers and Congregations of Lancashire & Cheshire.

MEETING FOR 1904.

The Assembly will meet at Manchester (Moss Side) on Thursday, June 16th.

The Religious Service will be held in the Chapel at 11 a.m.; the Devotional part being conducted by the Rev. C. T. Poynting, B.A.; and the Sermon being preached by the Rev. J. C. Hirst, of Gateacre.

Lunch will be provided at the School, at 12.30 p.m., at a charge of One Shilling.

The Meeting for Business will be held in the Chapel, at 2 p.m., at which the President, Rev. D. Agate, B.A., will take the chair.

A Substantial Tea will be provided at the School, at 5 p.m. at a charge of One Shilling; after which a Meeting will be held in the Chapel, at 6.30 p.m.—J. H. Pimley, Esq., in the Chair—when Addresses will be delivered by Rev. E. L. H. Thomas, of Styal, on "Old Insight and New Outlook"; C. B. Byles, Esq., of Sale, on "The Need of a Message"; and Rev. M. R. Scott, of Ainsworth, on "Unitarianism and the Devotional Spirit."

Electric Cars to Brooks's Bar run from Exchange, Cross-street, and Albert-square.

DENDY AGATE, President.
H. ENFIELD, R. TRAVERS HERFORD, } Secretaries.

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A. Honours Lond. Preparation for London Matriculation, Trinity College, and Associated Board of Musicians Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. Apply to the Head Mistress.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH

AN UNSECTARIAN PUBLIC SCHOOL.

Next Term opens SEPTEMBER 15TH. Admission Examination, July 5th.
For particulars apply HEAD MASTER.

WAVERLEY SCHOOL, 24, HAMILTON ROAD, SHERWOOD RISE, NOTTINGHAM.

PREPARATORY TO THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.
HEAD MASTER Mr. H. T. FACON, B.A.(Lond.).
Prospectus on application. BOARDERS received. Reference kindly permitted to the Rev. Frank K. Freeston, Essex House, Campden-hill, W.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, 14 & 15, SOUTH MARINE TERRACE, ABERYSTWYTH.

PRINCIPAL ... MISS MARLES-THOMAS.

This School is splendidly situated in one of the healthiest parts of Wales, overlooking Cardigan Bay, and close to excellent golf links. Pupils have passed the London and Welsh Matriculation; Cambridge Higher Local; Senior and Junior Cambridge Locals, besides the usual Theoretical and Practical Music Examinations. Scholarships have also been obtained at the Welsh University Colleges.

Gymnasium, Swimming, and excellent Hockey Club.

WHY

No Gas, no Fire, no Smell. Hot in a few minutes and retains the heat. Double the work done in half the time. No change of Irons. Self-heating with Smokeless Fuel. Can be used anywhere without interruption, even out of doors. Beware of worthless imitations. No other Iron or Fuel will answer properly. The Price of the "Dalli" is 6/-. Price of the "Dalli" Fuel is 1/9 per box of 128 Blocks. Of all Ironmongers or Domestic Stores. If any difficulty apply to—

THE DALLI SMOKELESS FUEL CO.,
27, Milton Street, London, E.C.

FRUITARIAN CAKES.

MADE ENTIRELY OF FRUIT AND NUTS

Uncooked, Concentrated, Natural Food.

READY FOR USE WITHOUT PREPARATION.
For travelling they are ideal. A meal will go in pocket.

PEAR and WALNUT	7d.	per 8 oz. packet.
APRICOT and NUT	7d.	" "
MUSCATEL and ALMOND ...	6d.	" "
FRUIT and NUTS	6d.	" "
DATE and GINGER	4d.	" "
DATE and LEMON	4d.	" "
DATE and ORANGE	4d.	" "
FIG and CITRON	4d.	" "
DATE and NUT	3d.	" "
FIG and NUT	3d.	" "

Sample Box containing 14 varieties Fruitarian Cakes, 8d.; or with 3 varieties of Nut Butters, post free, 1s.

HUGH MAPLETON, Nut Food Manufacturer,
ARDWICK GREEN MANCHESTER.

Situations, VACANT AND WANTED.

GENTLEMAN (Young) seeks position as Companion, Secretary, or similar work. Salary secondary consideration.—ROWE, 26, Sneinton Hollows, Sneinton, Nottingham.

AS HOUSEMAID, where Manservant or Parlourmaid is kept; good references in Hampstead, or temporary; aged 39.—C., 3, Oak Hill-park, Hampstead, N.W.

A YOUNG GERMAN LADY would like to spend a few months in an English family, on mutual terms.—Apply, G. SCHARTIGER, Brightside, London-road, Leicester.

WANTED.—MOTHER'S HELP or LADY NURSE, domesticated, good needlewoman; one boy, 3 years; two servants.—Mrs. SWIRE, Sutton-in-Ashfield, Notts.

LADY (29), well educated, desires engagement as COMPANION to a lady who travels.—Address, A., INQUIRER Office 3, Essex-street, Strand.

WANTED, YOUNG LADY as NURSE.—Two girls, aged six and two, eldest at morning school. Two maids kept.—B. P. BURROUGHS, 12, Parkfield-road, Liverpool.

WORKING or COOK-HOUSEKEEPER WANTED for family of four. Three maids. State age, experience, and salary.—Mrs. F. W. MONKS, Warrington.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY, ADELAIDE PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Assets, £158,000.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., J.P. 17 Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W
Miss CECIL GRADWELL, 7. Victoria-street, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st. S.W
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham, S.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4 per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3 and 3½ per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

BORROWER'S INTEREST 4 per cent. Monthly Repayment, including Principal, Premium, and Interest for each £100.

10 years.	12 years.	15 years.	18 years.	21 years.
1 1 1	0 18 4	0 15 6	0 14 2	0 12 11

Compare the above rates with those of other Societies. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

THE LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

The Aggregate Service for Teachers and Elder Scholars will be held at Essex Hall, on Sunday, 19th June, at 3.15 The Service will be conducted by the Rev. W. WOODING, B.A Friends are cordially invited.

A. BARNES, Hon. Sec.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

GOOSEBERRIES,

Green, for preserving, &c., 20 lbs., 3s. 6d.; 10 lbs., 2s. Carriage paid.

F. ROSCOE, Steeple Morden, Royston.

PROVINCIAL FIRE INSURANCE Co LTD

HEAD OFFICE:—1, ACRESFIELD, BOLTON.

CAPITAL - - £250,000. PAID-UP CAPITAL - - £75,000.

DIRECTORS:

J. W. SCOTT. | GEORGE HESKETH.
WILLIAM HASLAM. | S. H. SCOTT.

APPLICATIONS FOR AGENCIES INVITED. - SPECIAL TERMS FOR SCHOOLS & CHAPELS.

"A PROTEST AGAINST THE LICENSING BILL."

An Address given at the Annual Meeting of the National Unitarian Temperance Association, by Charles Read, M.D., Lond.

This Address embodies in a small compass a large number of facts showing the evil influence of the Drink Trade, in its effects on the Community in general. It should be read by all who are interested in Temperance reforms.

Price 1d. ; by post, 1½d.

GAY & BIRD, 22, Bedford-street, Strand.

Just published, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

THE FIRST CONDITIONS OF HUMAN PROSPERITY.

By the Hon. R. RUSSELL.

 This is an examination of the chief elements of national stability and of the conditions favourable to happiness in the human race, with special regard to urban overcrowding and questions of diet.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.,
39, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKLETS.

By the REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

DAILY MEDITATIONS

(Fourth Edition Revised.)

NIGHT UNTO NIGHT.

Cloth, red edges, 6d. ; roan gilt, 1s.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C.

LAYMEN'S CLUB.

CONCERT

ESSEX HALL, Wednesday, June 15th, 8.15 P.M.

IN AID OF

SOUTHEND HOME AND CHILDREN'S COUNTRY HOLIDAY FUND.

Tickets, numbered and reserved, 5s.; sides of Hall and Balcony, 2s. 6d. ; rest of Hall, 1s.

To be obtained of Miss ANNIE LAWRENCE, 23, Campden House-chambers, Kensington ; Mr. ALEC BARNES, 132, The Grove, Ealing, W. ; Mr. H. B. LAWFORD, 4, Wexford-road, Wandsworth-common ; and Mr. W. FITCHETT WURTZBURG, 3, Lawn-road, Hampstead, N.W.

WILLASTON SCHOOL.—SPEECH DAY, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29TH.—The Governors will be obliged if anyone who has NOT RECEIVED an INVITATION, and who desires to be present, will send their name and address to the Clerk, 38, Barton Arcade, Manchester.

Board and Residence.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH. — ARNEWOOD. Pension. Commanding position in the West Cliff-road ; full South aspect ; sea views and private grounds ; close to Winter Gardens, Cliff Promenade, Square or Pier ; moderate Tariff.—Apply, MANAGERESS.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—"Cranstock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE ; most comfortable throughout. Sea View, excellent cuisine. billiard and smoke room, sanitary certificate —Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

LANGLEY HOUSE, DAWLISH, DEVON.—A delightful HOLIDAY RESORT for Ladies and School-girls (Boys under 15) Beautiful country, bracing climate. Sea and Moorland. Prospectus from MISS N. JONES, Matron ; or A. E. JONES, Esq., Proprietor.

FELIXSTOWE.—Comfortable HOME for Permanent BOARDERS, Adults or Scholars ; also APARTMENTS on reasonable terms.—Apply, Mrs. ROBINSON, Kimberley, Ranelagh-road, Felixstowe.

A DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED COTTAGE on the Derbyshire Hills to be Let furnished for June and July.—Apply Mrs. STREET, 4, Avenue Villas, Cricklewood, N.W.

FURNISHED HOUSE TO LET, for a few months or a year. Eight rooms. Lewes.—B. H., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

TO LET, for some months, COUNTRY COTTAGE, furnished. 24 miles North of London. Mile from station. Situation high. Three bedrooms, two sitting-rooms, and kitchen.—Apply G. L., 18, Harborne-road, Birmingham.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Enlarged, Remodelled, Refurnished.

PRONOUNCED BY THE PRESS TO BE THE BEST TEMPERANCE HOTEL IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Accommodation for about 250 Guests.

Highly commended by the Rev. Dr. Aked, Rev. Rowland Hill, Rev J. H Jowett, M.A., Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. Alderman White, M.P., the Misses Cadbury and thousands of other guests.

Spacious Coffee, Reading & Drawing Rooms. Electric Light throughout.

Apartments, Service and Table d'Hote Breakfast from 5/- to 6/6 per day (with Dinner from 8/- to 9/6

77 & 101,
Southampton Row, London.
FREDERIC SMITH & SONS.

Opposite the British Museum.

THACKERAY HOTEL,
GREAT RUSSELL STREET,
LONDON.

This large and well-appointed Temperance Hotel has Passenger Lift ; Bathrooms on every Floor ; Electric Light throughout ; Spacious Dining, Drawing, Writing, Reading, and Smoking Rooms ; Fireproof Floors ; Perfect Sanitation ; Telephone ; Night Porter.

Bedrooms from 2s. 6d. to 5s. 6d.

Inclusive charge for Bedroom, Attendance, Table d'Hôte Breakfast and Dinner, from 8s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. per day. Full Tariff and Testimonials on application.

Telegraphic Address: "THACKERAY, LONDON."

EATON'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL,

22, Guilford Street, Russell Square, LONDON.

Facing the Gardens of the Foundling Institution.

Central. Homelike. Beds from 1s. 6d. Breakfast and Tea from 1s. Patronized repeatedly by many visitors during the 30 years of its existence.

Terms for Advertisements.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF-PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6

Special Terms for a Series.

Calendar Notices, 10s. per year, for two lines ; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted,
20 words, 1s. 3 insertions charged as 2.

Reckitt's PARIS BLUE.

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Sole Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 20 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale). JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, June 11, 1904.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3234. NEW SERIES, No. 338.] LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1904. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 385
LEADER—A Life's Testimony 392
ARTICLES—
Dr. Hunter's Lecture on "James Martineau" 387
A Sunday Afternoon Experiment ... 388
Maeterlinck's "Olive Leaf" 389
Holman Hunt's "The Light of the World" 390
The Rev. Charles Hargrove's Mission to Australasia 393
Rome 394
MEETING—Yorkshire Unitarian Union ... 396
CORRESPONDENCE—
Manchester College, Oxford 395
Animal Suffering 396
The Tendencies of Modern Religious Thought 396
Oxford Summer Session for Sunday School Teachers 396
OBITUARY—
Mrs. Weir 391
Mrs. Mabyn Read 391
POETRY—The "Angelus" 393
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 391
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 397
OUR CALENDAR 398
ADVERTISEMENTS 398

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

WE publish this week a first letter from the Rev. Charles Hargrove, telling of the beginning of his mission in Australia. Others are to follow, recording his experiences throughout the tour, until his return by way of America in the autumn.

WE congratulate Mr. F. J. M. Stratton, of Caius College, Cambridge, on his position as Third Wrangler in the Honours List in the Mathematical Tripos. Mr. Stratton belongs to Birmingham, and he has taken great interest in the religious services recently conducted by Unitarian ministers at Cambridge. He will act as local hon. sec. of the services next term, in succession to Mr. Claude H. B. Epps, who has completed a distinguished career at the University.

DR. JOHN HUNTER has resigned the pulpit of the King's Weigh House Church, Grosvenor-square, having accepted the urgent invitation of his old friends at Trinity Church, Glasgow, to return to that city. The reasons which have led to this decision are complicated, with bearings on various aspects of the work in London; a statement will be found in this week's Christian World. For ourselves, we regret very sincerely the loss of Dr. Hunter's eloquent voice from among the preachers of the metropolis.

THE Christian Register of May 26 brings us a first instalment of the reports of the anniversary meetings of the American Unitarian Association in Boston. The President in his annual address gave a survey of the great field of work, and among new departures recorded the generous gift by Mr. and Mrs. Francis Cutting and Mr. and Mrs. Horace Davis, of San Francisco, of funds for the establishment of a training school for ministers in California for an experimental five years. The Rev. Earl M. Wilbur, of Meadville, has been appointed dean of the school, and it remains to be seen what response there will be to this fresh opportunity on the Pacific Coast. Referring to finance, Dr. Eliot stated that the total receipts of the Association for the past year, exclusive of gifts of church properties, amounted to over £35,000 (we translate dollars into pounds), of which about £5,000 was derived from endowments, £12,000 from subscriptions and donations for immediate use, and £2,000 from sale of publications. Nearly £12,000 was given for increase of endowment, nearly £4,000 in repayments to the Church Building Loan Fund. On the executive work of the Association Dr. Eliot said:—

> Your Association has now a membership so large, so varied in character, so many-sided in interest and influence, that it is beyond the dominion of any section of the country or any one set of men. Its policy cannot be dictated by one mind or by a small group of leaders. Its administration is entrusted to a body of twenty-eight representative men and women, of whom more than half are annually elected in open meeting. Each department is under the management of a committee of the board of directors specially familiar with the work of that department. The members of the Association have not sufficiently appreciated the importance of these committees. A number of our constituents appear to believe that the Association is governed chiefly by its executive officers. The fact is that the general officers serve as agents of unification and co-operation in the department work, but they have no votes in the committees which possess entire freedom of action and carry the responsibility.

The annual sermon was preached by the Rev. J. W. Chadwick, whose subject was "Our Religious Obligations."

THE long-announced new hymn-book for the use of the Wesleyans has appeared under the somewhat ambiguous title of "The Methodist Hymn-Book." It hardly satisfies the highest hopes one had formed of it. That it is a good everyday book for the usual services in Wesleyan chapels and churches is matter of course. But it was hoped by friendly outsiders that it might be more, that it might be a book which Christians generally might delight to possess, full at once of the best spirit of Methodism, and of what is truest and best in the spirit of the age. Unless our judgment is utterly at fault the book lacks inspiration. Excellent hymns are there, many of them. But hymns beautiful in themselves, and till now unappropriated by Methodist compilers, are rare. Some which appear for the first time are unworthy of their new surroundings, and the really excellent hymns which a Wesleyan minister will find at his command for the first time are not numerous enough to give character to the book. If more hymns of a thoroughly modern and, at the same time, thoroughly Christian type had been given—like the two from a poem of Whittier—and if Sankey's "Ninety-and-Nine" and somebody else's verses on the Harvest Home and other poor things had given way for them, it would have been a better book.

OPPOSITION to the Transvaal Labour Ordinance has been based in this country primarily on the conviction that the conditions of labour imposed constitute an unwarrantable curtailment of human liberty, and, secondarily, on the constitutional ground that the importation of Chinamen which has been found so detrimental to white communities elsewhere should not be undertaken except on the deliberately expressed demand and sole responsibility of the community concerned. There has been no serious attempt to meet the former objection, but some effort has been made (1) to disarm white opposition to the Ordinance on the spot, and (2) to make it appear that that attempt has been successful. Recent sworn depositions have shown, however, that organised labour on the Rand, to say nothing of the Boer agricultural population, is still determinedly hostile, and recent information as to the progress of the importation scheme makes it clear that, even on purely utilitarian grounds, that hostility is abundantly justified.

AN inevitable result of the introduction of a class of serfs into a community of free labourers is the "depression of the labour market" for the free element, and the Government were naturally compelled, at the time of the passing of the Ordinance, to devote much attention to the task of showing that its passage would not lead (a) to the lowering of Kaffir wages, and (b) to the displacement of white labour. Yet it is becoming clearer every day that, in spite of the best efforts of the Government at home, both these evil results will follow.

ON the question of the depression of native wages, Mr. Lyttelton assured the House of Commons on March 21 that the Chinaman "would receive in the Transvaal at least 2s. a day," and in April he declared to Lord Milner that he "really could not defend an arrangement by which Chinese would be used to lower Kaffir wages current now and before the war." Circumstances, however, have been too strong for the Colonial Secretary. Under pressure of the mineowners, with Lord Milner's assistance, he has been compelled to acquiesce in the establishment of 1s. a day as the minimum, instead of 2s., though with the promise that, if the average wage does not amount to 50s. a month—still below the promised minimum of 2s.—the minimum shall be raised to 1s. 6d. six months hence. Mr. Lyttelton, however, declares that he has secured a promise that the Chinaman shall be paid at the same rate as the Kaffir, and he lamely explains that when he said "2s." it was in the erroneous belief that the Chinaman could not be got to come for less.

WHAT has to be borne in mind, however, is that after the war the mineowners set themselves determinedly to reduce the Kaffir rate of wages, and that the only reason why the low rate they established could not be maintained was because the Kaffirs refused to come in adequate numbers till the rates were raised again. Since then wages have been steadily rising, and the supply of Kaffirs with them, and it is to this fact of the rise in the price of labour that the demand for importation of Chinese coolies is mainly due. What will be the result of that importation? Clearly that wages will again begin to fall. The 2s. guaranteed minimum for Chinamen might have counteracted this tendency. Without the guarantee the promise of equal wages with the Kaffir is a mockery, to both the yellow man and the black man. The Chinese will, in fact, and of necessity, "be used to lower Kaffir wages," the very arrangement which Mr. Lyttelton said, in April, he "could not defend."

AND what of the displacement of white labour? In February Mr. Lyttelton said that

> The Government only approved of the principle of this measure with the distinct conviction and belief that the labour which would be introduced would not be a substitute for, but would be supplementary to, the labour now employed. They acted with the conviction that this step would increase and not diminish white employment.

The theory was that each gang of imported Chinamen would need a white overseer while doing work which white men themselves could never be got to do with their own hands. It has been shown by experiment that white men can and will do profitably much of the work which the mineowners declare can only be done by black men or yellow men, but that is by the way. Will white men be employed as overseers to the Chinese gangs?

LAST week Mr. Lyttelton's attention was called to the curiously qualified provision under the Ordinance in its final form by which a Chinaman is forbidden to act as an overseer "in any capacity other than the management and control of labourers" in the mines, and the admission was extracted from him that "Asiatics were not excluded from acting as overseers," and that probably a portion of the labour of Chinese coolies would be supervised by Chinese overseers." This admission he has since tried, in many ways, to qualify and counteract, but the plain wording of the Ordinance remains, and it is absolutely certain that, that being so, the mineowners will give preference to cheap Chinese overseers understanding the language and methods of their men, rather than to white overseers who are neither cheap nor experts in Chinese. Over and over again the Government were warned that Chinamen would only work under overseers of their own race, and the framers of the Ordinance, at least, appear to have been well aware of the fact. The lesson of the whole business is plain, and it is a lesson of which we shall hear a great deal more before we are at the end of the experiment. Moral wrong cannot be done without not only moral but material injury.

COMMITTEE on the Licensing Bill has been postponed till the week after next—perhaps for longer. This is an almost unprecedented course. When once a first-class measure has got into Committee—and we had two days of the Licensing Bill at the beginning of last week—it is customary to continue it on every available day till the stage is completed. One result of the postponement is to make it increasingly doubtful whether the measure can be got through without an Autumn Session. Another is to give opponents of the measure an opportunity to make good the handicap imposed by their failure to anticipate the rather curious ruling of the Chairman of Committees with regard to amendments imposing a time limit to compensation.

IT will be remembered that Mr. Ellis Griffith last week moved an amendment limiting the operation of practically the whole of the Bill to a period of seven years, and that Mr. Lowther thereupon decided that discussion of this amendment precluded a subsequent amendment limiting the duration of the compensation scheme alone, which is the point that all Temperance reformers most desire to press. However, Mr. Henry Hobhouse has given notice of an amendment to Clause 2 which it is believed Mr. Lowther will admit, and which is in many respects a distinct improvement upon those ruled out.

CLAUSE 2 of the Bill provides that—

> When Quarter Sessions refuse the renewal of a licence under this Act, a sum equal to the difference between the value of the licensed premises, calculated as if this Act had not passed, and the value which those premises would bear if they were not licensed premises shall be paid as compensation to the persons interested in the licensed premises.

Mr. Henry Hobhouse's amendment substitutes for the words "calculated as if this Act had not passed" the words—

> Calculated on the assumption that the licence will expire on the last day of March, 1918—that is, on a time limit of thirteen years. It will be seen that the clause so amended would virtually embody the whole of the scheme of limited compansation described in our leading article last week, and it is earnestly to be hoped that every possible effort will be made to secure its adoption.

THE yearly meeting of the Society of Friends was held on May 19-25, with a large attendance, in which the proportion of young people was considerable. The annual business was transacted under new regulations which discourage needless discussion; and a more earnest and business-like tone prevailed than on some previous occasions. The feeling of large-hearted fellowship and of inclusive unity underlying the expression of many different attitudes of mind characterised the sittings. In the increase of this spirit is the best guarantee of real liberty of thought, and of the vitality of the Society. As the stress comes to be laid more and more upon unity of spirit, diversity of opinion and of expression will be less and less a source of misunderstanding.

THIS was probably the central thought in the discussion on the state of the Society, though it wandered over many subjects. The quickening of the sense of fellowship, both by the deepening of inward experience, and the purifying and enlarging of outward spiritual relations, was dwelt upon by many speakers. The remark quoted in an earlier sitting, "What thee is speaks so loud, I cannot hear what thee says" illustrated the need for fuller consecration of the daily life if the ministry was to be effective. Houses, dress, and all the methods of business must witness to the control of the spirit.

"SILENCE is invaluable," writes one who has intimate knowledge of the religious life of the Society, "as the basis for the lives and meetings of Friends; but it must be a dynamic and social silence, and not a merely meditative and personal one. The atmosphere of a Friends' meeting should be warm and welcoming, and charged with faith. As faith increases, some of the larger congregations will doubtless undergo a process of 'cell division,' and small meetings will be planted wherever Friends are to be found, and these will be linked together by continual intervisitation. Altogether the spirit of the meetings was full of the faith, hope, and charity which are essential to religious life."

THE Congregationalists face the future with an easy confidence. They are sure of themselves and their mission. We hear no question raised whether, perhaps, their message has been already delivered, so that they may rest from their labours on the comfortable if antique couch of their fathers' achievements. The task is in front of them. What precisely the task is they are no more able than the rest of us to define in detail. Still, there is the task ahead of them, and the method of solvitur ambulando is a good one. Statistics may suggest meagre church attendance in some places; but that hardly reckons with people who have been unduly compressed in an overcrowded village chapel. So they pull down their churches and build new ones in the neo-Gothic or some other architectural style. We read in a number of the Examiner of the opening ceremony of the new church at the little town of Wendover, in the beautiful country of the Chiltern Hills, and of a church at Herne Hill. In the same paper it is recorded how the extension of hothouses has suggested the need for new church buildings at Shoreham, and how classrooms and lecture-hall are already erected. So in many directions they reach out in town or country. For the growing of tomatoes cannot be without the corresponding culture of men.

WE turn from the matter of buildings: The Church finds its opportunity in the holiday camp for schoolboys—games, song, brief exhortation, morning and evening prayer. Thus by living a happy life together, the ideal of such a life is suggested, and the memory lingers as a quiet influence in later manhood. In yet another direction the virile energy of these churches shows itself. Some time since the Congregationalists and the Baptists, acting jointly, approached the War Office with a request to be allowed to appoint chaplains for soldiers and sailors. This privilege, hitherto confined to Roman Catholics, Anglicans, Presbyterians, and Wesleyans, has been conceded, and no less than thirty-five such chaplains have been appointed. In this way it is hoped to retain for Nonconformity men who have been attending church because the band went there. The fact that young men go from the village church to the army and navy, and back again to the village life, to be wholly absorbed or to re-enter partially as coast-guardsmen or in some other capacity, demands a care for them to whom the church owes no little. There is a little chapel in a quiet far off fishing village where the music, heart-stirring music, is made by members of the coastguard force with their fiddles. And this is significant of much in the way of sturdy support for village Nonconformity.

STILL another item from this same Examiner, this time of one of those derelicts of progress, a central City church. How well we know it, its empty spaces, and grim memorial tablets. Life has flowed other ways. The old building may drag out a dreary period of uselessness, or may be converted to other uses. Such is often the origin of the mission, the church settlement, or the institutional church. Another is apparently to be added to the number. Now this same institutional church raises a curious problem, how is it to be worked or supported without some political bias? It seems to be a commonplace at the present time that religion ought not to be political, although in periods when men generally had a strong faith in religion or politics this has not been so. The institutional church is likely to drive men into the political arena against their will, and perhaps before they know where they are going. It is so harmless a thing to set up a chapel billiard table to keep men out of the public-house. But the action includes what is the germ of all vital present-day politics. It is an attempt to effect the industrial environment. It is a curious thing that men who are foremost in promoting these modern institutions are found also denouncing the fusion of church and politics. The ideal of the institution is to provide a home for people who are deprived of a healthy home of their own, and is thus brought plumb against housing laws, slum landlords, and whatever there is in the political world that cannot be disentangled from these. It is in its essence political action. It might be well to work out the theory of politics that underlies such efforts. Is it perhaps in this way, that the political aim is again to become a serious and honourable element in national life?

THE new Wesleyan Chapel at Darley Dale was opened on Thursday, June 2, by Mr. R. D. Darbishire, who had previously laid the foundation stone, and had contributed generally to its erection, as well as giving the land. Before opening the doors Mr. Darbishire gave an earnest and affectionate address. At the service which followed, a sermon was preached by the Rev. Thomas Cook, Principal of Cliff College.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT ASSOCIATION AND THE UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.—At the meeting of the governing body of the Association, held Tuesday, June 7, the following resolution was passed:—

That the governing body of the Manchester District Association of Presbyterian and Unitarian churches heartily congratulate the committee and tutors of the Unitarian Home Missionary College on the approaching jubilee of that institution; deeply conscious of the great services rendered to the churches of the district by the students, and of the strengthening of the churches by the presence of the college in their midst, they desire for it a long continuance of increasing usefulness and efficiency, and earnestly commend its jubilee memorial fund to the support of the public.

THERE is time enough to read all the books worth reading, if you can only get the mind for it.—Jowett.

IT would seem as if God intended to disarm the most terrible events of their power to disturb our faith, by making them the occasions of the sublimest virtues. In shipwrecks we are furnished with some of the most remarkable examples that history affords of trust in God, of unconquerable energy, and of tender, self-sacrificing love, making the devouring ocean the most glorious spot on earth. A friend rescued from a wreck told me that a company of pious Christians, who had been left in the sinking ship, were heard from the boat in which he had found safety, lifting up their voices, not in shrieks or moans, but in a joint hymn to God, thus awaiting, in a serene act of piety, the last, swift-approaching hour. How much grander was that hymn than the ocean's roar! And what becomes of suffering when thus awakening into an energy, otherwise unknown, the highest sentiments of the soul? I can shed tears over human griefs; but thus viewed they do not discourage me; they strengthen my faith in God. Channing.

DR. HUNTER'S LECTURE ON "JAMES MARTINEAU."

ON Trinity Sunday, at evening service at the King's Weigh House Church, Dr. John Hunter gave his lecture on "James Martineau," in the series on "Religious Leaders of the Nineteenth Century," which he had been obliged to postpone from the previous Thursday evening.

The anthem was Spohr's "Come up hither, and I will show you what shall be hereafter. . . . Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Hosts, God Almighty, who wast, and who art, and art to come." The lessons were Ecclesiasticus xliv., 1-15: "Let us now praise famous men," and 1 Cor. xiii. The hymns, Thomas Hincks's "Hark, the evening call to prayer," Martineau's "Where is your God, they say," and Bishop Mant's "For all thy saints, O Lord."

The roll of the seers and prophets is not closed, and never will be closed, said Dr. Hunter, at the beginning of his lecture. No study makes a man less sectarian and more catholic than that of biography. So, although it was Trinity Sunday, he felt it appropriate to speak of a great religious leader, who was shut out from all the orthodox churches, because he could not accept the doctrine of the Trinity. A previous lecture in that course had been on Frederick Denison Maurice, whose experience in outward respects had been very different from that of James Martineau. The Unitarianism which he inherited left Maurice with only a distant heavenly Father, but in the doctrine of the Trinity he found the motive of a singularly practical Christianity, the divineness of man and the humanness of God, and the intimate association of divine love with humanity. Yet in Martineau's mysterious and adorable God they would find all, or nearly all, that Maurice found in God the Father, God the Son, and God the Spirit. To Martineau's philosophical and religious genius that generation owed more than was yet realised of solid assurance in matters of religion. Multitudes looked up to him with reverence, who did not share his theological views. His influence was large and would grow larger. He repeated what he said three years ago, after Martineau's death, that the hour would come when, with John Henry Newman and Frederick Denison Maurice, he would be regarded as one of the three greatest religious teachers of the nineteenth century.

Dr. Hunter then quoted Gladstone's testimony to Martineau's greatness as a religious thinker, and that noble tribute of the address on his eighty-third birthday, signed by Tennyson, Browning, Jowett, Wendell Holmes, and many others:—

You have taught your generation that, both in politics and religion, there are truths above party, independent of contemporary opinion, and which cannot be overthrown, for their foundations are in the heart of man; you have shown that there may be an inward unity transcending the divisions of the Christian world, and that the charity and sympathy of Christians are not to be limited to those who bear the name of Christ; you have sought to harmonise the laws of the spiritual with those of the natural world, and to give to each their due place in human life; you have preached a Christianity of the spirit, and not of the letter, which is inseparable from morality; you have spoken to us of a hope beyond this world; you have given rest to the minds of many.

We admire the simple record of a long life passed in the strenuous fulfilment of duty, in preaching, in teaching the young of both sexes, in writing books of permanent value, a life which has never been distracted by controversy, and in which personal interest and ambitions have never been allowed to have a place.

When Martineau's "Endeavours after the Christian Life" were published, the volumes soon took their place on library shelves with the classic literature of the Church. Men felt that there was a new teacher in the land. Then, after his great year in Germany, in 1848, he began to exercise still wider power as a spiritual philosopher, a great idealist, a great Theist, a champion not of one form of religion against other forms, but of religion itself as the true interpretation of the universe. "It would seem," wrote a High Church clergyman, "as if this man were endowed so as to be a witness to those who could accept no other witness to the reality of the divine in life." No one did more to stem the tide that was running forty years ago towards materialism. When physical science was absorbing the highest intellects, he carried his power and genius into the science of the soul, and by teaching and inspiring the teachers of the age, helped more than any other to carry forward that psychic progress, to place Christian Theism on the stable basis of philosophy. Not by flouting science or depreciating her great achievements, but by a deeper and larger reading of her reports, he dissipated the shadows of materialistic science, and made the universe a translucent window through which streamed the light of God.

Dr. Hunter then dwelt on the work Martineau did as interpreter of the inward life of the soul and the Divine significance of conscience, laying stress on his teaching as to the true seat of authority in religion, and the reality of communion between the human soul and God, and noted how this affected his appreciation of the Scriptures, as a great whispering gallery of the Spirit, in which he caught the same heavenly voices, coming down through the ages, which he heard in his own soul. Though separated technically by his theology from the larger body of Christians, he had long been recognised by the best spirits of all the churches as a helpful and inspiring teacher in what concerned the whole development of man's religious life. Thus Dr. Hunter told how some years ago he met one Sunday morning high up on the Italian side of the Alps a devout Quaker from York, who was reading to a little company of fellow-travellers from the "Hours of Thought on Sacred Things." "I always carry a volume of Martineau with me on my travels," he said; "there are no sermons anywhere like his. He divines my own heart for me."

The lecture then dwelt on Martineau's devout Christian discipleship, and what he had done to find a deeper spiritual unity beneath the differences of Trinitarian and Unitarian. It spoke also of his intense repugnance to all Sectarianism, and his ideal of a truly Catholic and comprehensive church: In all this, Dr. Hunter said, the man was greater than his words and works: No one could be in his presence without feeling uplifted. His personality was that of a pure philosopher and prophet, but also of a Christian saint. Reverence was his natural attitude. Spirituality shone through his simplest words and deeds. While of the world, he was above it, in the loftiness and grace of his character, and in his independence of the judgments of men. His religion was that of a little child, and when world-wide recognition came to him, fame did not spoil him, but made the simplicity of his character appear the more sublime. At the end of his long life he did not see death, but passed away quietly in sleep, to join the greater company of his friends within the veil, where "beyond these voices there is peace."

As a fitting conclusion to his lecture, Dr. Hunter quoted from Martineau the following passage, as profoundly true in its application to himself: "Among the societies of men it is ever the greater spirits that morally sustain the less; and as the scale of realised excellence ascends, the conscience of us all is ashamed to linger, and eventually rises too. We are lifted by the souls of mightier wing, and are set where otherwise our feet would not have climbed."

A SUNDAY AFTERNOON EXPERIMENT.

DEAR MR. EDITOR,—You ask me to send you some word of the success or otherwise of an experiment upon which I have been engaged of late. A new form of Sunday afternoon entertainment, a witty old Irishman of my acquaintance called it; and perhaps he was right if we use "entertain" in the full sense of the word. For must not all good and beautiful things have an air of gladness and pleasure about them? If any one has found my experiment entertaining in that way I will not quarrel with the term, though it did take place in a Gothic church and was associated with worship. All men who preach at the present time, and are not content with the ruts, must feel painfully the difficulty of getting into touch with the serious life of the world outside the church. There are hundreds of men in every large town who feel that the official services of religion do not help them, and yet they have the root of the matter in them—seriousness, reverence, and a desire to penetrate the secrets of the mystery by which life is surrounded. It is said sometimes that there is a growing feeling of dislike of being merely talked to in the fashion of the pulpit. I confess that I find listening very delightful, but that may be because this exercise of the spirit comes to me only seldom; and I have a feeling for the man whose mind is full of the other point of view and of the difficulties which have not been dealt with fairly. So I decided to try the simple experiment of inviting people to come both to listen and to ask questions. The five Sunday afternoons in May were set aside for this purpose, and handbills were issued announcing a series of addresses on Present Day Subjects for Men and Women, with an opportunity for questions at the close. The subjects chosen were as follows: "A word about Nunquam's God and my Neighbour"; "The Bible and Modern Thought"; "How the New Testament grew"; "Christianity and Agnosticism"; and "Do we need Religion?" Perhaps I cannot do better than describe the procedure in some detail. From 3.45 to 4 there was an organ recital. At 4 I went into the pulpit, gave out a hymn, and, after a short prayer, spoke upon the subject for the afternoon for half-an-hour to forty minutes. I then left the pulpit and sat on a chair at the top of the chancel steps, and allowed myself to be cross-examined for half-an-hour, when the meeting was brought to a close with another hymn and the benediction. From the first the success, so far as attendance was concerned, was assured. The numbers grew till, on the fourth Sunday, the congregation nearly filled the church, more than three-fourths of it being men. They were of various social grades, and all most eager listeners. For myself the questions were full of interest. Sometimes they were put quite shortly, sometimes with more elaboration, and as each speaker sat down I gave the best answer I could. In this way we were saved from anything like a general debate, which would not have been helpful. The questions themselves were from different points of view, ranging from mild orthodoxy to complete agnosticism, but they were serious. Almost without exception they showed intelligence and a real desire to know, and from beginning to end there was not a single touch of irreverence. Probably some people will think that it would be better to hold such meetings in a school or lecture-hall, but for myself I was glad to welcome all these people into our beautiful church. I believe that its atmosphere helped us to keep a worshipful tone. It was using it for the helping of human lives, and that is divine service.

I have an impression, it would be premature to say more than this at present, that along lines similar to those I have sketched there is an opening for work of far greater value than theological propaganda, or theatre services, or other agencies of that kind. But it is work which must be done with a single eye, if it is under taken at all, with no idea of numerical gain to a church or denomination. It is one of the finest forms of teaching, in religion as in everything else, to be a learner with those who are eager to learn; and I believe that men will listen, if we can persuade them that we are ready to teach in that fashion, not as clergy with a professional point of view or as the representatives of a denominational position, but simply as fellow-learners with them in the school of life, who are anxious to give in "fair and square human language" a reason for the faith that is in them. Pardon, Mr. Editor, the length of this communication, and, still more, its personal note. I have no wish to magnify our humble experiment, but it did not seem fraternal to withhold all word of it, if there is any possible help in it for others.

W. H. DRUMMOND.

All Souls' Church, Belfast.

MAETERLINCK'S OLIVE LEAF.

"WE are living in expectation, and perhaps in the last moments of expectation": so concludes the latest translated utterance of Maeterlinck.* Amid the devastations of a deluge "wide weltering" indeed, to use Carlyle's phrase, this is the olive leaf which Maeterlinck's genius brings to give assurance and hope. We are to expect, and to lift up our hearts in expectation. The devout "looking for and hastening unto" which so powerfully exercised the first Nazarenes; the thrilling sense of a new order at hand of which Wordsworth wrote: "Bliss was it in that hour to be alive"; the largeness and freedom, if also the perplexity, that have ever heralded the dawn of a new spiritual day—these are to be our portion also. And in the largeness and freedom we must learn to abide the bewilderment. In all this the seer is appealing to the poetic consciousness, to our sense of the poetry and mystery of life, which, while "knowledge grows from more to more," is the great thing for us, the stimulating, energising thing which bids us hold by "God's sun-skirts" "through the conventional gray glooms" alike of doubt and reason, of time's sad winter and perplexing spring. It is more than all certitude, more than all demonstration, because the infinite soul is saved, not by facts, but by Hope, ever reaching forward past the fact, to lay hold on the unseen. And he who stimulates this upward endeavour, ministers to the highest interests of man as the mere dealer in evidences, apologetics, demonstrations scientific or theological cannot do.

Maeterlinck is a poet, so that his own vehicle alone adequately presents his thought. Nevertheless. some brief indication of it may be suggested. He begins by asserting that "our happiness depends on our conception of the universe," a great and ennobling assertion, and one far too much neglected to-day. One conception—that of the last three or four centuries—is crumbling about as rapidly as it can, and Maeterlinck freely admits how disconcerting is this shaking not of earth only, but also heaven, to the faith of many. The seer, however, feels that we are moving in a wondrous dawn, ourselves hardly aware of the magic of the hour. Its genius is expectation. The new conception is at hand. "Mind" and "matter" "are no more than interchangeable attributes of the same "unknown," not "unknowable." This "abode of our ignorance" appearing "frightfully empty" in consequence of the passing of familiar conceptions is "gradually becoming peopled with vague but enormous figures." The whole of the features of the yet unknown conception are not connectedly present, only here a something and there a something.

Until now we had been prosing, with the aid of our infirm logic or idle imagination, on the subject of the riddle; to-day, issuing from our too inward abode, we are trying to enter into relations with the riddle itself. . . . We put questions to it, and in reply it unmasks at moments a luminous and boundless perspective in the immense circle of darkness in which we move. We were, it might be said, like blind men who should imagine the outer world from inside a shut room. Now, we are those same blind men whom an ever-silent guide leads by turns into the forest, across the plain, on the mountain, and beside the sea. Their eyes have not yet opened, but their shaking and eager hands are able to feel the trees, to rumple the spikes of corn, to gather a flower or a fruit, to marvel at the ridge of a rock, or to mingle with the cool waves, while their ears learn to distinguish, without needing to understand, the thousand real songs of the sun and the shade, the wind and the rain, the leaves and the waters.

The seer further anticipates the passing of the blindness itself. The power of seeing is at least within us. "There is nothing mad in supposing that the secret of this sovereign force—the force that gives unity to all that is—"lies hidden within us, or around us, within reach of our hand. : . : It is, perhaps, wholly spiritual, and depends upon a very simple cause which the displacing of an object may reveal to us." The discovery of an unexpected property of matter—analogous to radium—"may lead us straight to the very sources of the energy and life of the stars."

Meanwhile it is the duty of all to entertain large views and exercise a large trust. And while there is some tendency in the essay to speculation, it is in this suggested duty that the pith of the message lies: "Our happiness depends on our conception of the universe"—not on our conceiving it as mind, or matter, or x, but on our lifting up heart and soul to the vast possibilities of it, on our refusing every kind of limitation or suggested finality whether of exact thought or creed. "Our morality," says Maeterlinck, "depends much less on the nature than on size of our own conception," and he proceeds in the bold hyperbole of a prophet: "We should be better, nobler, more moral in the midst of a universe proved to be without morality, but conceived on an infinite scale, than in a universe that attained the perfection of the human ideal, but which appeared to us circumscribed and devoid of mystery." Of course it may be replied that the former alternative implies a contradiction in terms. It does, and therein lies the moral claim that Maeterlinck makes for it: no "universe conceived on an infinite scale" could be "proved to be without morality." It is in the refusal to limit our conceptions that our strength lies. We must make the abode of our thought and feeling as vast as possible.

No one who has read both can fail to connect this essay of Maeterlinck's with that of Professor Jethro Brown in the current Hibbert on "The Passing of Conviction." Both deal—though very differently—with the same subject. Each is the sincere utterance of the writer's conviction; the one sincere despondency, the other sincere hope. No doubt Professor Brown's despondency will be more intelligible to many than Maeterlinck's hope, for the simple reason that the former is pointing to certain clearly defined changes, while the latter has nothing clearly defined to point to, nothing but the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. Like every seer, he is in the confidence of Nature, and out of the plenitude of his assurance speaks as Emerson said the poet should—"as blows the breeze, free, peremptory, clear." In estimating the two views we must allow for this. But without unduly contrasting them, the point I wish to emphasise is that their root difference is one of conception. The one is limited — and how limited!—the other spacious and serene. "Is it not surprising," says Maeterlinck, arriving at a conclusion diametrically opposite to that of Professor Brown, "that, in spite of the decrease of religious feeling and the influence which this decrease must needs have on human reason, : : : the sum of justice and goodness and the quality of the general conscience, far from diminishing, have incontestably increased ? : : : Doubtless the fact will be contested, and to establish it : : . would demand a detailed and very long study. But I think that any fair mind will without difficulty allow that there is, notwithstanding the existence of much real and widespread wretchedness, a little more justice, solidarity, sympathy, and hope, not only in the wishes of men---for thus much seems certain—but in very deed."

If Professor Brown's survey of the times is less happy it is because his conception is less universal, his standpoint more sectarian. I have nothing to urge against his survey because of its unhappiness. The question is: Is it true? Is it just? Can the change through which we are passing be properly estimated from the standpoint of certain convictions, however potent they may have been in their time? That there is much evil attendant on the change no one can deny, but that the evil is final, that the order is relapsing into chaos, and not developing through much seethe and unrest into a larger and nobler order, will, I imagine, be denied in proportion as our conceptions are large and vigorous and our standpoint is that of Man and not that of a system. The narrower our creed the greater must be the number of dissentients from it, therefore the keener will be our distress on surveying a world so alien. On the other hand, the larger and more liberal our conceptions the more robust will our hope be. The more freely our poetry circulates, the less we attempt to reduce it to formulæ, the less shall we experience the corrosive tendencies of despondency. It is significant that Jesus, whom we can never imagine despairing of a single individual or, finally, of any tendency, and from whose lips the name of Father was rarely absent, never attempted to define his convictions or press them in definite form on the minds of his hearers or disciples. He who believed all things and hoped all things, who exhibited the most loving tolerance, and held the most unbounded faith in mankind, never descended to formulæ, and therefore never confused change with loss. The broad and relative ethic he enunciated, the conceptions indicated by the "many mansions" and the "other sheep," and, indeed, his whole intercourse with men and women, are significant of a largeness of view "as broad as the blue sky above." Could Calvary have been endured with any conception less vast, less inspiring?

THOMAS J. HARDY.

* "The Leaf of Olive." By Maurice Maeterlinck. Fortnightly Review, May, 1904.

HOLMAN HUNT'S "THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD."

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

AFTER a lapse of fifty years Holman Hunt has turned back to the love of his youth, and made a revised replica of his masterpiece. "The Light of the World" thereby changes rank as the once-born, and falls into the category of the twice-born.

Just as it has been said of John Wesley that what he was at thirty he was essentially at eighty, so it may be alleged of Hunt; the change from the youth of twenty-five to the old veteran of seventy-seven, has involved no other transformation than that of growth and expansion. This is a characteristic of the truly religious character.

Of all tests the most exacting is the test of time. To find an old man placing the seal of his approval on a work that engrossed the ardour and enthusiasm of his youth would seem to indicate no mean achievement in the conception or treatment of that work. In fact, Hunt set before himself, early, his life's ideal. A wonderful unity stamps his whole life-work.

In after days it will surely be told as a marvel that three young men, whose ages were respectively nineteen and twenty and twenty-one, ventured to challenge the artistic standard of their day, and though men of peace, were found willing to bear the shame and opprobrium that attach to rebels until their revolt was vindicated by the dying down of antagonism, and the gradual leavening of English art through the new spirit they introduced. Of these three Holman Hunt has remained ever true to the vision of his youth. He has demonstrated that he knew a great deal better than his critics what he was about.

So far as criticism, applied to the aim and methods of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, had any validity, it was based upon a want of harmony to which insistence upon careful attention to minor detail equally with the major, exposed their work. Consider what harmony in such a picture as is under review actually involved. Here is a representation of a moonlit scene, which for the sake of fidelity to nature, has been painted by moonlight. The moon is hidden from view, but the landscape is bathed in her soft radiance, and her gleam is on the distant stream which runs beyond the orchard, whose blue shadows give depth to the picture. From a green-blue sky, a few stars twinkle through the foliage of the orchard trees. The foreground is, however, lit up by shafts of light from a lamp which the Christ carries suspended from his left wrist. This light is reflected from the white surface of the woollen seamless robe, from the rich embroidered cloak worn over it, and the clasp in rubies and emeralds, consisting of a cross that unites circular and square emblems of Urim and Thummim. The beautiful hand raised to knock at the door shines with this light; also the prominent parts of the face, leaving the rest in sombre shadow, and so heightening the mystery of its compassion and yearning. Overhanging ivy-leaves, the seeded hog-weed and bramble and wild grass outside the door, a flying bat looking rusty red, pink-cheeked apples on the sward, all these in different ways reflect the light cast by the fretted lanthorn.

Then there is another light, not of the moonlight, not of the starlight, which forms an aureole around the head of the divine messenger. Consider the difficulties of the task of harmonising so large a variety of rays, of showing their unity in that "light whose smile kindles the universe," that light which lightens every man that cometh into the world, yet also is the light of setting suns, and the round ocean as well as in the mind of man. The success of attaining this harmony, of subduing all diversities, from the splendour of the astral nimbus, symbol of the divine influence, to the sparkle of the frost gems at the sandalled feet, symbol of the earthly reflection of heavenly radiance in the lowliest pathways of life, this success constitutes one of the wonders of the picture. A greater success in this direction makes one of the distinctions of the new canvas over the old. The halo especially seems less aggressive, and most of the frost-sparkles have been removed, having been so often mistaken for flowers. To suggest the removal of the halo as an unnatural concession to mediæval superstition, is to misunderstand the lesson of the allegory. For the picture is intended as a lesson, is in fact a sermon on a specified text. The absence of this emblem of heavenly glory would weaken the intention, which is to represent the indissoluble union of the divine with the human, and the divine purpose of speaking the word to men in a way men can understand. The wearer of the heavenly halo carries a lanthorn. Or as Browning puts it:—

> Thro' such souls alone
> God, stooping, shows sufficient of His light
> For us i' the dark to rise by.

In revising his picture the artist not only wished to supply defects in technique, but to strengthen the force of his message. There are no errors to avow, no youthful ungraciousness to repent of, as in "Locksley Hall, or Sixty Years After," compared with Tennyson's "Locksley Hall." Here the message of the old man is the message of the youth, and the aim is the same, to drive home the spirit of Christ into the hearts of men. It is not the historic Christ, nor the theologic Christ, who is portrayed, but the eternal Christ, the mystic Christ. We must come to this picture, not as lovers of the beautiful, but as sincere hearers of the word. It is said of an Italian painter that he wrought his work kneeling, as an act of devotion: such is the spirit of "The Light of the World." We can therefore only interpret it correctly as we approach it reverently. The work carries with it the atmosphere of a shrine. As you approach it the same spell falls upon you as on entering a sanctuary where the flame of devotion has been burning for ages. I felt the gabble of the fashionable sightseers at the Bond-street Gallery to be a desecration like brawling in a church. With mute appeal from the wistful eyes and the upraised hand, the Christ seems to speak personally to each one who gazes towards him: "This door at which I knock has long been closed to divine influences, he who is within has been weighted with other cares, engrossed in other pursuits—wilt thou open unto me?" If we do not catch from the artist's sermon an awe-full summons to ourselves, if we do not gain experience of a direct appeal being made to ourselves, the painter has laboured in vain. Surely, the soul-yearning of a devout Christian streams from it. Like Olive Schreiner's artist, this man has dyed his pigments in his heart's blood. For fifty years, in many forms, this living word has gone forth from him. And now in the waning days, once more he takes up his brush; in his hand the thing becomes a trumpet, whence to blow soul-animating strains.

He has strengthened the force of his message by strengthening the character that looks through the Christ-visitant. With the larger canvas there goes also a larger presence. A larger compassion sits upon the more erect and broader figure. A look of deeper yearning, a gaze of an Infinite Patience, broods beneath the brows crowned with the double crowns of thorns and gold, suggesting the transmutation of suffering into secure and victorious peace.

The alteration suggests to me something as follows. Whereas, in the earlier work, the figure gives the impression of having just arrived and of being disappointed, with a profound sorrow at being rejected, in the new the figure conveys the impression of having been there a long time, of having waited patiently, but with a resolve to wait and abide waiting, until the door shall open. Hopelessness is stamped upon the rusty-hinged door, over which the ivy has crept, clasping it with many tendril hands; upon the threshold choked with weeds and brambles. "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved." But the Christ is clothed with the radiance of Hope. There is no haste or impatience in the waiting figure. Long-suffering is the Lord of Love. If there is sorrow it is that "strength of sorrow" by which is proved "the unconquerable strength of Love." "Love shall conquer at the last." It is the final word of another teacher, and it is the final word of Holman Hunt.

He comes by night. At noonday, in the bustle of outward activity, the voice of gentle stillness is not heard. "I loved the garish day—pride ruled my will," is the language of heedless heyday. But in the home of calm, when the din and noise of forgetful motion have ceased, then the voice that pulsates through the silence may haply be heard, and the divine pleading of the spirit at length be attended to.

> They haunt the silence of the breast,
> Imaginations calm and fair,
> The memory like a cloudless air,
> The conscience as a sea at rest.
>
> But when the heart is full of din,
> And doubt beside the portal waits,
> They can but listen at the gates,
> And hear the household jar within.

He who stands at the closed door of the symbolised soul in the picture, seems to hear the voice of earthly care, but the eyes are set with a far-off gaze, and seem to catch glimpses of a place where beyond these voices there is peace.

AZIL BRETT.

OBITUARY.

MRS. WEIR.

THE brief announcement in THE INQUIRER of June 4, of the death of Mrs. Weir, which occurred at her residence at Malvern, on May 22, must have called up regretful memories in the hearts of many who knew her as Miss Annie Bright, the youngest of four sisters who, connected from their youth with Renshaw Street Chapel, Liverpool, and the ministry of the Rev. J. H. Thom, have carried the influence of that connection into wide regions of sympathy and usefulness. Some readers of THE INQUIRER may learn now for the first time, that she was the author of "Echoes of Holy Thoughts: arranged as Private Meditations before a First Communion"—one of the most beautiful of our "books of piety." Such books are few and far between. The "Echoes" give back the tones of that great teacher whose communion-addresses revealed the very heart of his faith and devotion. But the book is no mere gathering of notes and recollections. Everything is transmuted into the life of a disciple-soul, alive with pure and unselfish purpose; destined to be developed and fulfilled in years of patient and watchful helpfulness. Miss Bright removed from Liverpool on her marriage with Dr. Weir, in 1874, to Malvern, where she rapidly won the respect and affection of all who recognised in her "a faith that worketh by love." In her years of widowhood she was full of kindly offices and ready aid to the younger generation of her own kindred. In nursing a young relative during a fatal illness, she contracted the disease from which she sank, a few days after returning to her own home. Mrs. Weir leaves, we believe, three sons, one of whom left England just before the outbreak of the war in the Far East, to serve as a medical missionary in Korea.

MRS. MABYN READ.

IN our columns, Feb. 20, there appeared some verses of singular beauty and tenderness with the title, "In Hospital"—eloquent of much to those who knew. The signature "I. M. R." was recognised by many as that of a lady who, coming of honourable descent, had herself early given proof of a fruitful intelligence and constant piety. As Isabel Lawford, third daughter of the late Mr. George Lawford, of London, she compiled a little book of Biblical stories for the Sunday School Association, and after her marriage to Dr. Mabyn Read, she found time in a busy life for contributions to the Helper, and for occasional verse now treasured by her friends. A Christmas hymn of hers is in the Essex Hall Hymnal. Born in 1863, she died at Worcester on Saturday last, leaving to her husband a son and daughter. Her own words are fittest here:—

Could we live but in His Presence,
We should understand
That to face our sorrows bravely
Is to take His Hand;
And to feel Him close beside us,
Not in realms unknown,
With our wayward hearts at rest, dear,
In our Father's Own.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

HAVE you ever known a jackdaw intimately? If you have, you will agree with me that he is a most delightful pet. We picked up our little Jackanapes on a Scotch hillside, where he was lying all alone and nearly naked, on the ground, deserted—the ugliest little thing you ever saw. We took him home and put him in a basket with cotton wool for his bed, and fed him on bread and milk. Several times in the night he arose and uttered loud squawks, and must be fed instantly! He throve splendidly, and got his feathers, and was most clever and amusing. We gave him every chance to go wild and join the families of jackdaws near, but he only looked at them, with his head on one side, as they flew past, and never would leave us. He followed us about in the garden, and pounced upon us with a friendly cry of "Jiarck!" at all sorts of unexpected places. At last, when we had to leave Scotland, we gave Jackie to a young friend who stayed with us, and she took him home. He was very happy, and seemed quite at home; but suddenly he vanished; and after a sad search he was found drowned in a cistern where he must have been trying to bathe, for jackdaws dearly love water. There was great sorrow over the early death of the dear, merry little friend.

Then horses; it is terrible that people can be found who are cruel to them; they are so patient, so good and obedient, so cheerful and glad to work for us, when they are well kept and kindly treated. Did you ever see the cart-horse parade in the Regent's Park on May day? It is a beautiful sight; the noble horses in splendid condition, decked out with coloured ribbons; and the coal waggons and other carts all freshly cleaned and shining—with the carters' wives and children sitting inside, dressed in their best. This show is a great encouragement to carters to treat their horses well. Some people put on to horses what are called "bearing reins," which are straps from the bit to the collar or saddle, which prevents the horse putting his head down. It is supposed to make him look more proud and handsome; but it should never be used; for a horse pulls by means of his shoulders, and to do this with ease and comfort he naturally stretches his neck out forwards; and the bearing rein prevents his having free use of his neck, and makes the pulling terribly hard to him. So if you have anything to do with horses never allow bearing reins.

There is a story which I was always very fond of when I was a child, called "Peter and his Pony." Peter's father gave him a dear little rough pony named Shag when he was a little boy, but only on condition that he managed it entirely himself. Peter was enchanted, and looked well after Shag, keeping his stable clean, feeding him regularly, giving him water, combing and brushing him, washing his feet, and looking that his shoes were all right. But one day, when he rode out on a visit to a friend, he and Shag both stayed the night there, and Peter was so excited and happy that he forgot to look to his pony's shoes. As he rode home the next morning through a lonely lane where there were rough stones Shag went slower and slower, and stumbled, and at last would not go on at all. Peter couldn't think what was the matter, and whipped Shag, which he had never done before; but he would not go on, even when Peter got off and tried to lead him. He did not know what to do, but at last a farmer came down the lane, and Peter asked him to help him. The farmer examined Shag's feet, and then found that he had lost a shoe, and that his foot was badly cut. He blamed Peter very much for his carelessness and cruelty, and Peter was dreadfully sorry and unhappy; but the farmer was very kind, and let Peter put Shag in his stable, and sent him on to fetch the farrier to come and doctor the poor pony's feet. Peter had to walk home and tell his father and mother and sister how careless he had been. He could not ride Shag again for a month, but after that time the little fellow was well again.

You see, Peter was cruel through thoughtlessness. These pet animals are entrusted to us; they depend on our care for their happiness and their lives; and if we do not look well after them we give them great suffering.

What heroes animals can be, and what beautiful brave natures they have. There was a great fire once at a theatre; and some of the people watching it saw a cat run back into the burning building and out of sight, and then rush out again carrying one of her little kittens in her mouth, then rush back again and fetch another, and then again plunge into the burning place to fetch a third; but this time she did not come back. She gave up her noble little life with that third little child of hers. I hope some of the people who saw what she did took the two little orphans home.

Is it not beautiful to see how each animal has its own character and its own mind, and its own love for its children and friends, and for its master? What a happy world it should be if the people who keep tame animals always took pains to understand them and enter into their thoughts and feelings, and treat them lovingly and justly. And they are so clever; all are clever in their own ways; and some can be taught to do wonderful things.

I read once of some elephants in India, who had to carry a great quantity of goods across a large river; they were loaded on the bank of the river, and told to cross, and they carried the goods safely over, wading through the rushing water, and when they reached the further bank they unloaded themselves and came back again through the river to fetch another load, and so on till all the goods were taken, and then last of all they came back and fetched their masters.

And now I am afraid we must not ask for any more space for our animals here. But here is a little verse to remember:—

He prayeth best who loveth best
All creatures great and small;
For the dear God who loveth us
He made and loveth all.

GERTRUDE MARTINEAU.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street Strand, London, W.C.

LONDON, JUNE 18, 1904.

A LIFE'S TESTIMONY.

IN this month's Contemporary Review there is an article on "FRANCES POWER COBBE" by the Rev. JOHN VERSCHOYLE, the broad-minded clergyman who has been editor, since its establishment in April, 1899, of the Abolitionist, the organ of the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection. Mr. VERSCHOYLE first made Miss COBBE's acquaintance in 1878, while still an undergraduate at Cambridge, when he helped her in a successful effort to obtain the remission of the death sentence on a poor woman unjustly convicted of the murder of her husband. Subsequently in London he worked with her in various efforts for the advancement of women, and in her great crusade against Vivisection, and of recent years, as editor of the Abolitionist, had been in constant, intimate association with her, as fellow-worker and friend. It is, therefore, with full knowledge and complete sympathy that Mr. VERSCHOYLE writes this warm tribute. Our purpose here is simply to call attention to his article, and to reproduce some passages of exceptional interest, which he quotes from recent letters received from Miss COBBE.

We are thankful to have Mr. VERSCHOYLE's tribute, to place side by side with Mr. CARPENTER'S, published in THE INQUIRER of April 16, and also separately issued in pamphlet form; and we are glad to hear that there is to be a new edition of Miss COBBE'S autobiography, edited by Miss BLANCHE ATKINSON, and completed by a record of the last period of her life by her own hand.

It was a life overshadowed at the end by the weariness and grievous disappointment of hope deferred, if not of failure, in the great effort to which she had devoted her whole strength. "I have sacrificed everything to it and it is a failure," Mr. VERSCHOYLE says, was often her sad admission. But she was undaunted to the end, and would not neglect a single claim of her painful task. At the same time Mr. VERSCHOYLE notes her happy power of detachment, her unfailing delight in social intercourse, her unflagging interest in the movement of the world; and looking back upon the whole course of her years, so full of varied interest and strenuous activity, one sees that it was altogether a very happy life—as indeed she herself always insisted that it was—a life rich in lessons of wholesome wisdom and sunny faith.

Mr. VERSCHOYLE records his impression of "a frank, straight gaze of penetrating eyes that seemed to read one's unspoken thoughts," which "carried the impression of intellectual power and absolute truthfulness; and then in another moment her face beamed with humour and wit, or shone with the radiance of a great goodwill and kindliness, the natural language of a big human heart."

She was, in fact, a great natural fountain of human sympathy, with joy as well as with suffering, which bubbled up according to the need of her companions. An atmosphere of happiness, a breath of the joy and the goodness of life, radiated from her like sunshine. She was, on the whole, the happiest-hearted person I have ever known. She combined in a rare way the frankness and large geniality and generosity of a man with the tenderness, the delicate thoughtfulness, the quick perceptions of a woman. A delightful companion, even to mere surface acquaintances, naturally fitted to be all things to all sorts of people, her deeper self was reserved for the inner circle of friends who had some spiritual affinity with her.

Miss COBBE'S whole nature was made for happiness, and every other endowment was crowned by her sunny faith. "She enjoyed life not only without any hesitation as to the rightfulness of such enjoyment, but with the feeling that the thankful acceptance of natural joy was a part of religious duty, and so joy was a duty to her, and duty a joy, in a way very rare and very beautiful." Mr. VERSCHOYLE lays stress on her keen delight in natural beauty, and the devoutness which found in the quiet garden or amid the trees of the forest the most fitting place of prayer. All that he says of her faith in the abundant happiness of animal life upon the earth, of her delight in gardening and in the music of nature, is very pleasant reading. "The carol of a bird or the singing of the little river in the woods of Hengwrt was dearer to her than the best that human skill could produce from the most perfect instrument." But if she had not much ear for instrumental music her pleasure in the music of verse was the more keen, and SHELLEY was her favourite poet to the end.

The progress of religion, Mr. VERSCHOYLE says, was always Miss COBBE'S chief interest, and in that direction he agreed with her in feeling that her best work had been done. We know what her friendship for Dr. MARTINEAU was, and how eager was her appreciation of every effort that made for the clearing of religious faith from superstitions, and its establishment on the basis which she had found for her own ardent Theism. The passages from recent letters, which Mr. VERSCHOYLE quotes, are a welcome addition to our knowledge of Miss COBBE'S inmost mind.

Thus, referring to the liberal movement within the Church of England, she wrote:—

"To try to liberalise the great Old Church from within is a noble endeavour. The religion that must arise out of the ashes of this controversy by and by must be very different from what either the Ritualists or the Evangelicals hold—one in which you and I will not be very far apart. I cannot live to see it, but I should prophesy that after great and painful disturbance of minds and vehement controversies there will arise a noble new Church which may be called one of Christian Theism, in which the Church of England, the Dissenting Churches, the enlightened Jews, and many now numbered as Agnostics will join in essential if not in formal unity. I suppose you know that we (Theists) have pretty nearly all come to the belief in what we may call the normality of inspiration. We think that the wonder is how our poor puny spirits, which live and move in the ocean of the Divine Spirit, are so far and so often separated from Him. And we conceive that the action of GOD on the intellect is altogether parallel with His action on our moral natures. We call the latter influence "grace," and every religious man believes in it, but does not believe it makes the recipient impeccable; and just in the same way, we believe the divine influence on the intellect to be "inspiration," but it does not render the most inspired of men infallible. I have written all this because I should like you to see the point of view from which I look at the Bible. I see here and there through it what appears to me to be undoubtedly divine inspiration. Many of the utterances of the Prophets and Psalmists were most justly heralded by the preface, 'Thus saith the LORD,' and that the main current of CHRIST'S doctrine is truly and in the highest sense inspired I also believe. But it does not in the least interfere with my profound reverence for such utterances to find them in a book full of every imaginable historical and even moral error."

Again:—

"It is astonishing how much real scepticism underlies the boasted faith of orthodox people. They believe implicitly that GOD spoke long ago to ABRAHAM and a great many other men, and that they know exactly what He said, and where, and how, and have it all infallibly written down word for word in a book. But what GOD says now—the revelation of His love and holiness, which He 'in whom we live and move and have our being' makes naturally and by no miracle in the hearts of His creatures; this they treat as of no account at all, not to be thought of as a safe and sufficient reason for faith and love.

"There is a great religious change obviously hanging over the world, and blessed be those who help it to pass safely, and teach men not to lose hold on GOD because they are forced to lose hold on rotten cords which, they imagined, bound them to Him."

Through her long experience in unselfish labours, which brought her into contact with a great variety of fellow-workers, Miss COBBE became more and more impressed with the effective power of a truly Christian spirit. Beneath the received doctrines, which she saw to be untenable, she recognised the reality of a pure spiritual life, which was the hope of the world. And that life, it was the clear testimony of history, had first come to men through CHRIST. There was nothing inconsistent with the teaching of her own Theism in acknowledging that his life was in the highest sense inspired.

Thus she wrote to Mr. VERSCHOYLE concerning CHRIST :—

"His coming was to the life of humanity what Regeneration is to the life of the individual. This is not a conclusion doubtfully deduced from questionable biographies, but a broad, plain inference from the universal history of our race. We may dispute all details, but the grand result is beyond criticism. The world has changed, and that change is historically traceable to CHRIST. He was not merely a moral Reformer, . . : nor merely a religious Reformer. He might have taught the world better ethics and better theology, and yet have failed to infuse into it that New Life which has ever since coursed through its arteries, and penetrated its minutest veins."

What we feel in this supreme instance is true, we are convinced, of every other noble life; the words of the teaching remain, beautiful, searching, quickening; but greater still is the teacher's personality, enriching our common life, and confirming faith in the reality of the unseen things of the spirit. Therefore it is that we are grateful for every personal record, such as this, which brings us nearer to one whom we are the better for having known.

THE "ANGELUS."

TOIL, trouble, and care,
All to spend and nothing to spare
From the dawn of day to the evening grey,
Telle est la vie!

Weary of heart and brain,
With back that aches under grinding strain,
Youth's first hopes crossed, faith almost lost—
Triste maladie!

Hark! 'tis the distant bell—
An angel's message it seems to tell,
Faith, hope restores as the heart adores:
Ave Maria!

Peace, and a moment's rest—
Love revisits the soul opprest;
God's breath may now refresh thy brow,
Anima pia:

R. BRUCE BOSWELL.

THE REV. CHARLES HARGROVE'S MISSION TO AUSTRALASIA.

LETTERS EN ROUTE.

I.

Perth, Western Australia,
May 15, 1904.

WE arrived here four weeks to a day after leaving Leeds, and we might have left three days later, had we been pressed for time, and come by way of Brindisi in twenty-five days. Indeed, it would scarcely have been possible to have had a quicker, smoother, or more comfortable voyage. Our only misadventure was a delay of some eight or nine hours in the Suez Canal, due to the foundering of a cargo steamer at the southern entrance. So we had to "tie up," as they say, sailors landing in the boat and tying the ship fast to the shore, to let ships bound northward go by. In this way we had to watch one after another pass us, their claim over us consisting in the yellow quarantine flag which floated at their prow. They could not tie up, as none of their crew would have been permitted to land, so we had to bear the penalty of health, and give them way. They mostly came from Jeddah, the port of Mecca, and were conveying pilgrims home to Turkey and the East. It was curious to watch the pilgrims at their prayers, as indifferent to the eyes of a hundred European infidels gazing at them through glasses, and discussing their devotions, as if we had been so many birds perched in the rigging. Not hypocrites, certainly, for what could it advantage them to be seen of us as we passed and were gone for ever. Men rather to whom prayer was one of the ordinary practices of decent life, and who were no more ashamed to be seen praying than we are to say grace at table.

On the whole, I was glad of the little delay, for it helped to fix on my mind the impression of the eternal desert, just the same now as it was in the days of Moses, and long before his time. To our right was a narrow plantation of tamarisk and reeds, and the railway running from Port Said to Cairo; beyond, sand and the gleam of distant waters blending with the sky. On the left nought but a desert of sand and clay, here and there rising into mounds, here and there glistening with the white salt left where some sea pool had long ago dried up. On the horizon broken hills, their bases hidden in the mist. A Bedawin family had made their camp for the night beside some dry bushes, as the same people—almost, one would think, the same individuals did a thousand years ago. And through it all, the timeless, unchanging wilderness, we men of these last days have stretched the line and cut a path for our mighty steamships, and laid iron rails for our engines. A little while more, measuring time by the desert standard, will it all have passed away, the canal be filled with the sand which it is so difficult now to keep it clear of, and the rails be covered up, and no traces be visible of our all-conquering might, but the waste stretch far and wide as from of old? We are fond in this day of progress of speculating more or less seriously of the state of mankind in a hundred or two hundred years hence. I do not know that anyone has dared to face the problem of what will be in ten thousand years, but however it fare with man this we may safely assert, that the scene will be unchanged here save for perhaps another broader waterway or more railroads. The waste of sands will stretch then as now to the barren hills, and the desert watch unmoved the clever little animals who score its surface with their lines of travel, as do the ants who make their little paths in the great forest.

We arrived at Aden on April 18, and left in a few hours. There was no temptation to risk a landing, for of all places I have ever seen, from the Shetland Islands to the West Indies, it seemed the least eligible for human habitation. Naked and desolate as it is, a chaos of bare burnt rock, here have 30,000 human beings made themselves a home and hewed out fortifications to protect it against any attempt to wrest it from the possession of the Mistress of the Seas.

Across the Indian Ocean the heat was certainly oppressive, but very tolerable, I was assured, compared with what it would be either later or earlier in the year. The crew had to do their customary work just as if the weather was cool and bracing. We, the idle passengers, because we had nothing to do, found ourselves reduced to a state of utter incapacity, unless exception should be made for bridge-players, who pursued their calling with apparently undiminished ardour.

At Colombo we were greeted just as on the Sunday morning we were stepping into the boat to go ashore by a friendly inquiry as to our identity. It was Mr. Creach, who will, I hope, by this time have made the acquaintance of many English Unitarians. He had come from Melbourne the day before by the German packet, and was on the look-out for us here when our boats happily met. He very kindly took us under his care, having the advantage over us of having made acquaintance with the place the previous day.

Of what we saw there I will mention only a Buddhist temple, a poor little place, for we had no time to go up to Kandy where is the world-famous temple of the Golden Tooth. But in a way it was the more interesting, just the home of worship, the Bethesda, of the natives. At the entry was the altar table on which lay the offerings of simple flowers, gathered in the woods and brought there to spend their fragrance and die in sacrifice. So much better, it seemed to me, sweeter and cleaner, than the crowded candles which I had seen flaring before the image of Our Lady of the Watch at Marseilles. Further in on a screen were painted the sins men do in this life and the torments which they earn for themselves hereafter—"not everlasting" the priest who showed us round was careful to explain, as if he knew how abhorrent the doctrine of hell was to us, or else would correct our erring Christianity by his own more charitable faith. In the inner shrine was the statue of the Lord Buddha, and the contemplation of the huge figure, lying at rest with head supported on the elbow, gave me to understand, as I never had before, the secret of Buddhist influence in the East and its impotence in the Western world. The expression—if indeed it may be called expression at all—of feature and posture was not of rest as one who had passed through sore trial, nor was it of victory, nor exultation, nor joy, nor even love. It was not life, nor yet was it as of one dead. Fear, hope, desire, passion, even the bliss of attainment, were surpassed. He seemed to be rather than to live, but to be with a fulness of being which included and was more than living. It was an ideal, as far as possible, from that of the Vision of God which enthralled the devout Christian poet of the Middle Ages—the ecstasy of perfect knowledge, of perfect love, of oneness with the Infinite and Eternal Energy which is the Fount of All Being and All Bliss, which Dante learnt of from the great theologians of his age and made popular in his verse. And I could understand how to the teeming millions of the East, who seemed to spring as grasshoppers under our feet, who were doomed from birth to lives of extremest penury and to early death, this ideal of the perfect life as one of absolute impassivity, of being which was almost the same as not to be, would commend itself as the most satisfying to the craving of their souls for rest.

It was in rain and darkness that we came alongside the wharf at Freemantle, the port for Perth. There was no one to meet us, and I knew not what to think or where to go, or whether it were better to leave Perth, where there was no Unitarian congregation, and go on with the boat to Adelaide. But the next morning, before we were yet dressed, arrived Mr. W. D. Campbell in all haste from Perth. The boat had got in before it was expected, or he would have been there to meet us. He conducted us on to the city some twelve miles distant by rail, and found us a comfortable boarding-house. The same evening we met a number of persons friendly to the movement at the café of Mrs. Macdonald, herself one of the warmest supporters it had. The next day I gave a lecture on "The Religion of the New Testament." It had not been advertised, and the attendance was very small. I was doubtful whether it would be worth while to spend a fortnight here, as was first intended, and only delayed a decision for the Sunday. I expected little, but was agreeably disappointed. The service was held in the evening, in the Town Hall, and I think there would have been nearly 250 present—enthusiastic supporters said 400. But for a first Unitarian service, and in a city in which I was a complete stranger, even 200 was an excellent beginning. The service of the following Sunday, i.e., of to-day, has not been so well attended. The novelty had worn off, and the newspapers had ceased to write of me. But there were a hundred earnest listeners, and I had good reason to be content. I invited those who were interested to meet me on Thursday evening for the purpose of forming a church committee, and if I can get this done I shall depart for Adelaide the next day, not, indeed, elated, but satisfied to have done all that could be done under the circumstances.

This is a charming place to be idle in, at least in this season of the year, which answers to our English November. They call it winter, and tell me how beautiful it is in spring; but were I dropped down here, ignorant of all the differences between the Northern and Southern hemispheres, and of the peculiarities of Australian vegetation, I should guess it to be midsummer. The trees are all green, flowers are abundant, there is plenty of sunshine, and though it is sometimes a little chilly at morning and evening it is rather too hot in the daytime. But it is decidedly relaxing, and I should not like to have to do as much work as I get through at home. The people are very friendly, and the two morning papers have given me kindly notices.

I earnestly hope I may succeed in persuading our friends here not to wait for a minister, but to begin at once regular Sunday services among themselves, however few they may be. If they will do this I have no doubt but that in time they may have a fair congregation, which will increase with the rapid growth of the city. But for an unknown man to come here at once would be a doubtful experiment, and the failure of it would be disastrous to our cause. Unitarian literature there is none. If some friend who can spare his or her INQUIRER or Christian Life would send it to Mr. Macdonald, City Café, Perth, W.A., it would be appreciated, and lead, perhaps, to others being ordered.

CHAS. HARGROVE.

MATERIALISM, the philosophy of all expiring epochs and peoples in decay, is, historically speaking, an old phenomenon, inseparable from the death of a religious dogma. It is the reaction of those superficial intellects, which, incapable of taking a comprehensive view of the life of humanity, and tracing and deducing its essential characteristics from tradition, deny the religious ideal itself, instead of simply affirming the death of one of its incarnations. Mazzini.

THE Rev. R. A. Armstrong publishes in this month's Sermons for the Day his two addresses at Christiania, of which he told in these columns on May 21, the Sunday morning sermon, which was delivered in English, and a translation of his speech at the conversazione on the following evening, given in Norwegian. The sermon on "The Religious Situation" contrasted the positions of the Orthodox and the Sceptics, and then showed how there was a better middle way of faith in accordance with reason and conscience. The significance of this middle party he emphasised also in his speech, by a reference to the experience of the two meetings of the International Council in London and Amsterdam. In the sermon, having recalled some of the great names of American and English Unitarians, he added.—

> You here, with us, select the name "Unitarian" to express the genius of your movement. Your brothers south of the Kattegat, in Denmark, call themselves the "Frikirke Samfund." In Holland those of our faith call themselves "Moderns." But, under whatever name, there is everywhere arising a party of the Middle—friends alike of Free Thought and Pure Religion, the religion set forth of old by the lips and life of Jesus of Nazareth, the religion of love to God and to our Neighbour, the religion which seeks to worship God in spirit and in truth,

ROME.

A LETTER from Rome, Mr. Editor, it is all very well to suggest, but how is it to be managed, when every minute of one's time is absorbed either in sight-seeing or, when one is tired out, in recruiting one's energy preparatory to seeing more sights? But now that I am sitting under the thick foliage of chestnut trees, which exclude the blazing sunshine, revelling in a delicious breeze on a hilltop near Siena, more than 1,000 ft. above sea level, and waiting till it is cool enough to walk back to our pension in that famous old town, I will try to put together a few impressions of a fortnight's stay in the Eternal City. They certainly differ from those of the American visitor, who came for six days but departed after three, giving as his reason, "Well, I calculate that I've seen every house in Rome with a roof on, and as for the rest, I've concluded it is best to let bygones be bygones." The actual sight of the ruins of ancient Rome, the Forum, with all the interest of recent excavations, the Pantheon, the Mamertine dungeon where St. Paul was not confined, but where many of Rome's captives undoubtedly perished, when the only opening into a horrible cellar was a hole in the roof, such as we use for shooting coals, the mouth of the Cloaca Maxima at its entrance to the Tiber, the Colosseum, with all its grim memories, the Arch of Titus, the remains of baths and palaces, convey an impression incomparably stronger than can be derived from books and pictures. The Catacombs furnish the link, otherwise missing, between ancient and mediæval Rome, and possess a special interest in representing a fact from a period when so much in legendary and uncertain mediæval Rome, "the ghost of the dead Roman Empire sitting around on the grave thereof," still meets one at every turn; while the real modern Rome, with the future in its grasp, is represented by the changes made since 1871, when the city once more became the Capital of a united Italy—changes often unpicturesque, hated by the artist (and modern Rome is not beautiful) but meaning the strong growth and determined progress of a young, new nation. How devotedly new Italy cherishes the memory of its founders is shown in the fine monuments to Garibaldi and Victor Emanuel, to Mazzini, and Cavour, which adorn every town, and in the still more numerous streets and public places which have had to give up old names in order to commemorate the new heroes of the last century; and how bitterly ecclesiastical Rome still laments the loss of the temporal power is shown in a story told in connection with the election of the present Pope. As soon as he was elected he wished to come forth and give his blessing to the people assembled in a vast crowd in the Piazza in front of St. Peter's. But this Piazza also contained a large number of soldiers sent there by the Government, and ordered to present arms if the Pope appeared. Learning of this order, it is said that the Cardinals, who really control the Papacy, prevented the Pope by actual force from making a public appearance, which would have thus received a Government civility.

The exterior view of St. Peter's is most disappointing until one can get half a mile away from it. The original noble design of Bramante and Michael Angelo was spoiled by the ignorant interference of a later Pope, and while St. Peter's is the largest church in the world it is also the one which does most to throw away the grandeur which size rightly used may contribute to a building. The interior suffers in the same way. Everything there is colossal, and hugely colossal, so that nothing conspicuous gives the eye the unit which is multiplied time after time to produce the actual length and breadth and height. St. Paul's, London, suffers from the same defect, though, perhaps, not to the same extent, and in both cases we lose the sublimity which characterises Westminster Abbey and the noble Gothic cathedrals of which our own land as well as other countries have received so rich an inheritance. The interior of St. Peter's is disappointing in another way. The high altar is sunk beneath the floor (as in several other churches at Rome), covered with a fine canopy, indeed, and right under the great dome, but utterly incompetent to give a central unity to the gigantic church: Moreover, only the Pope, or a Cardinal specially and rarely authorised, ever says Mass at this high altar; so that the saying is, St. Peter's is never its real self except on those rare occasions when the Pope himself says Mass there.

I went there in good time one Sunday morning, but found no service, only a crowd wandering about looking at monuments and kissing the toe of a statue of St. Peter—a well-dressed, apparently well-educated, man was among the number doing this—while another man, I fear English, exultingly seized an opportunity to scribble his name on the pedestal. Again, on Ascension Day, which was kept as an important festival, High Mass was celebrated by Cardinal Rampolla with much beautiful music, but this all took place in a side chapel where only a small congregation could find accommodation. The whole building is certainly made as magnificent as marble and other fine stone can make it, but scarcely one single stone used was brought straight from the quarry; they were all obtained by the destruction of the Baths and Palaces of ancient Rome. Truly Imperial Rome deserved its fate, but the fact does not make one think any the more highly of its successor, and the result of our contemplation of St. Peter's may amount to a recognition of its value in provoking the Reformation.

Passing from things external to the far more difficult estimate of things spiritual, I should like to say how my visit to Italy confirms my previous conviction that there is now no danger of our high Anglican clergy going over to Rome. They are not so ignorant or so foolish. They already possess a religion incomparably truer, finer, deeper, higher, than Rome could give them; and they know it. They wish to revive elements in the common Catholic tradition which increase their hold over the people, but they will not ask Italy to teach them how to do this. The only popular service I chanced to see, where women and a crowd of children were really taking part in congregational worship was at the famous old church of San Clemente, and this church has long been exclusively managed by Irishmen. In short, the cure for Romanism is Rome; and if any father has a sensible son inclined to the "ism," he cannot do better than send the lad to study it at headquarters. One sight which we saw was as instructive as it was ridiculous. Rome is not only full of priests, mostly with gross, sensual faces, it is also full of Seminarists, young fellows training for the priesthood; and on the fine May evenings these young men crowded out into the public gardens to get some healthy recreation. Imagine some thirty or forty of them playing a running game something like prisoners' base, and racing across the ground in their absurd dressing-gowns, petticoats, and great round hats. Even when the outermost garments were stripped off the same incongruity attached to all they wore below. A little distance off were six lads, presumably English, playing cricket, and managing to bat and bowl somehow in spite of their heavy skirts and flopping hats. But what can be the efficient force of a system which compels resort to such absurdities! Inability to meet the situation, refusal to face the facts, trust in something that was once good a long while ago under quite different circumstances; that is the main characteristic of the mediæval Rome which survives in Vaticanism, and which the present Pope will hardly be strong enough to modify.

I wish I could find out how the average educated Italian laymen regard these things. Apparently they don't believe themselves, but think it good for the lower classes, or, perhaps, for women and children generally, to believe what they know is not true. At any rate, they hold their tongues. An English lady who has been staying many months with Italian friends at their country place, told me that she had once asked her hosts what they thought of some superstitious practices, and they frankly said, in reply, that they would rather not talk about the question, so no discussion could take place.

One final criticism of Rome I give for what it is worth. I was told that for 1,800 years Rome itself has hardly produced a single great man. Certainly an enormous proportion of the great men who have lived there have been born elsewhere. Siena, for instance, has produced eight Popes and 38 cardinals. And if we take the real men of genius who have made their country famous, the contrast is said to be most marked. I have no means of checking the statement, and will gladly hand on to someone else the trouble of doing this. But I believe it contains much truth.

H. SHAEN SOLLY.

"HONOUR all men!"—their inherent dignity, the infinite possibilities of their nature, their freedom of conscience, the awful price of their redemption, their immediate accountability to God. While this honour leads us to deep reverence for all human goodness, let it inspire us also with such hope and compassion as shall feel none to be too low, too fallen for our pity or our help.—F. W. Farrar.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

SIR,—Mr. Dowson is, in your last issue, reported as using these words in his speech at the B. and F.U.A. meeting on Mr. Street's paper. He "had looked through the list of alumni of the College, and the exceptions of those who had not entered the ministry of their churches was insignificant." Presumably by "their churches" is meant "our churches." I, too, have examined the list of the alumni of Manchester College, and I find that, including all who have received bursaries or exhibitions, M.C.O. has turned out or passed through her doors seventy-two students in the fourteen years since she went to Oxford. Of these ten are Hungarian, Indian, or Japanese, whose maintenance is defrayed by special funds not included in M.C.O. accounts, two are dead, two are in the colonies in pulpits of free churches, forty-two are on the Essex Hall list of ministers, and sixteen apparently "have not entered the ministry of our churches." Sixteen does not appear to me an insignificant number out of seventy-two, but it may be that some explanation is available. To make it easier I append the names of the sixteen:—T. Eads How, W. A. Weatheral, T. J. Stewart, E. A. Hillier, J. B. M. Barnes, Cuthbert Holden, Frank Parker, Thomas Paxton, C. E. Popplestone, H. H. Johnson, J. A. Fallows, J. C. Duncan, C. L. Briggs, Daniel Rees, Herbert Pole, J. B. Brinkworth. If Mr. Dowson informs us that taking the period before Manchester College went to Oxford the number of its alumni "who did not enter our ministry" was much smaller, I fear we can only conclude that during the last fourteen years M.C.O. has become less useful to our churches. JAMES R. BEARD.

[Of Mr. Beard's sixteen we find on reference to the College Reports that two were Americans, who were special students and received no bursary from the College. Mr. Paxton's connection with the College was of the slightest, but he is, as a matter of fact, now minister of Newhall Hill Church, Birmingham. Of the remaining thirteen not more than seven were theological students of the College (unless Stewart was an eighth), the others held external exhibitions for longer or shorter periods, or had a Daniel Jones grant for preliminary studies and never came up to the College. Of the seven who were theological students at Manchester College five only took the complete three years' course (and one of them had most of his time in London, not at Oxford. Two are now clergymen of the Church of England; the others are not engaged in ministerial work.—ED. INQ.]

SIR,—I greatly regret that I should have been led into error with respect to Mr. Dowson, through trusting to information on which I thought I could rely. I apologise to Mr. Dowson and to your readers. J. COGAN CONWAY.

June 13th, 1904.

ANIMAL SUFFERING.

SIR,—May I be permitted to make a few comments on the extract from the preface of the new edition of Mr. Armstrong's "God and the Soul," which you gave in your issue of the 28th ult.

Mr. Armstrong contends that recent writers on animal life have "lifted a nightmare from the heart of religious men" by revealing the fact that "tribes of living things dwell in an habitual atmosphere of happiness."

But is not the consolation derived from such reflections sentimental rather than ethical? The justice or injustice of animal suffering cannot be determined by the degree of its prevalence. Were there only one living thing enduring an agony of pain, the problem of animal suffering would still press as urgently for solution.

For my part I cannot see that the happiness of the great majority of living things is any compensation for the sufferings of the few. From the standpoint of the suffering creature it is of little moment that millions of its fellows live in an habitual atmosphere of enjoyment. We must find some solution of the problem that will include all animal life—not only a part, even though it be the greater part—or the nightmare for many of us will remain unlifted.

To my mind the only way of solving the mystery is by doing away with the dividing line between animal life and human. Why should we look upon human suffering as easier of explanation than animal suffering? Why should not the theory that consoles us in the one case hold good in the other? Our consolation in contemplating human suffering springs from a faith in its profitableness. Suffering calls into play such qualities as fortitude, sympathy, endurance, courage—and thus it would appear impossible for anyone to suffer without being, in however small a degree, the better for it. And why should we limit the action of this beneficent law? Is not each living thing a separate consciousness slowly but steadily gravitating towards the life we call human? Hunger and fear and pain are its educators, working, not wantonly, but along the lines of development ordained by the Divine mind. To believe anything else is to impugn the righteousness of our Creator. To believe that any animal can suffer without reaping some equivalent gain is to charge God, or Nature, or whatever we choose to call the eternal consciousness, with that most repellant of all vices—cruelty.

Torquay, June 7. FRANCES LEE.

THE TENDENCIES OF MODERN RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

SIR,—I have prayed to be delivered from the enervating spirit of dissent, I have foresworn the phrase, "I beg to protest, &c."; but, after reading Mr. Jacks' essay as printed in THE INQUIRER, June 4, under the above heading, my soul is "disquieted within me." How can Mr. Jacks stop where he does? It is true that Saul was out looking for his father's asses when he found a kingdom, but—he found a kingdom! Who remembers the asses?

Have we no recently discovered kingdom? If not, we may justifiably return perhaps to the useful though uninspiring toil of searching still further for the asses. But have we no kingdom? Mr. Jacks does not deny the "fact" of religion, "she lives" are his words, "but her life is inarticulate and formless."

I dare Mr. Jacks to go on. He must not leave us there. The ringing trumpet tones of our greatest and best are still in our ears, "All souls are one—one in the great family of God." "We are sons and daughters of the living God." What an inheritance! Out of the profound deep of unformed being the Eternal God, brooding, did impart the divine mystery of life. He quickened within us that ascending impulse which can only fulfil itself by ceaseless, unwavering ascent, upward flight, until it rides

> Triumphant through mid-heaven, into the courts
> And temple of the mighty Father, throned on high!

All haunting theological perplexities drop off like dead scales. Life itself is the kingdom. We cannot be uncertain in this our glorious privilege of Unitarian Christian faith. Mr. Jacks says that today "we have neither hell nor heaven that are worthy of the name," because we have outleaped the Puritan conception, to which we are told we must return, that life is gloom stricken, an awful tragedy. God bless the hour when it was first conceived that life was much better than a tragedy, a divine triumph. It is the uncertain, disorganised, mournful, waiting life that is degenerate. Joy, vision, light, inspiration are the natural divine qualities of life itself, and constitute a perpetual triumph.

We cannot have read our New Testaments in the new way, heart to heart with the Master, eye to eye, both as at one with God, if we do not perceive that we have our kingdom, that to live is a joy and a triumph! I urge Mr. Jacks to go on and say this in words of power and spiritual eloquence such as are easily given to him and will mean so much to us; we do not want to believe that he is holding aloof from this great joyousness and definiteness of modern religious thought.

FREDERICK BLOUNT MOTT.

OXFORD SUMMER SESSION FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS.

SIR,—Will you kindly enable me to call the attention of superintendents and teachers to our Summer School opening on July 1, and to remind them that the names of intending students should be at once sent in to me.

The committee are anxious that, as the opportunity offered only occurs once in two years, all who can should be enabled to take advantage of it.

A copy of the programme and time table has been sent this week to all the Correspondents.

ION PRITCHARD, Hon. Sec.
Sunday School Association,
Essex Hall, London.

To CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from W. H. B., E. H. C., J. T. D., H. A. R. J., M. L., W. M., A. E. O'C., A. W., J. H. W.

YORKSHIRE UNITARIAN UNION.

ANNUAL MEETINGS IN SHEFFIELD.

THE twenty-first annual meetings of the Yorkshire Unitarian Union (the eighty-eighth of the West Riding Mission Association) were held at the Upper Chapel, Sheffield, on Wednesday, June 8. At the business meeting in the afternoon, the Rev. C. J. STREET took the chair, in the absence of the President, Mr. Grosvenor Talbot.

Mr. E. BASIL LUPTON, hon. secretary, read the committee's report, in which special mention was made of the unqualified success of the bazaar held at Leeds in November, producing £4,100, which had enabled them to appoint the Rev. John Ellis, formerly of Upperthorpe, Sheffield, District Minister to the Union. In connection with this appointment, the British and Foreign Unitarian Association had promised a grant of £100 towards the new work. The opening of a new chapel at Selby in September was also recorded.

The balance-sheet, presented by the Treasurer (Mr. GEORGE WEBSTER) showed an income from subscriptions and collections, and invested funds, of about £278. The Union had received grants of £65 from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and £655 from the bazaar fund. There was a balance in hand of £39.

The CHAIRMAN moved the adoption of the report and balance-sheet, and the appointment of officers (Mr. Grosvenor Talbot being reappointed President). In commenting on the report, he said the smaller churches in the county had a hard struggle, and their deep sympathy went out to those who were doing their very best to keep the flag flying, and the cause alive. The reports gave a very small idea of the work that was being done in some of those little outposts. He also referred with gratification to the successful result of the bazaar, which had removed the accumulating debt on the Union.

Mr. A. J. HOBSON seconded, and the motion was carried.

A vote of thanks to the lay-preachers of the Union was moved by the Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN, seconded by the Rev. A. H. DOLPHIN, and acknowledged by Mr. T. MANNING, of York, and Mr. T. G. TURTON (secretary of the Sheffield district branch of the Lay Preachers' Union), who said lay workers in large towns required the same encouragement and warm sympathy that they obtained in the villages. The Sheffield branch, he said, was doing an excellent work.

A service was subsequently conducted in the chapel by the Rev. C. J. STREET, the sermon being preached by the Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, of Styal and Dean-row, who took for his text Revelation iii. 2, "Be thou watchful and stablish the things that remain."

After tea a largely attended public meeting was held in the Channing Hall.

Mr. GROSVENOR TALBOT, the President, was in the chair, and remarked that Sheffield was celebrated for having sent out into the West Riding many ministers whose fame and name were household words in the Unitarian body. After alluding to the usefulness of the Union, he said Unitarians believed in a pure and simple faith—a faith that went back to the early times of Christianity, and to its founder. Many people said they did not require religion; they only required morality. But whatever they might say, it was impossible to have a morality which was higher than that of the religion which that country professed. Therefore, they were determined that the religion which formed the morality of our country should be kept at the highest possible level. The real reason, he thought, why Christianity had not thriven as it ought to have thriven, and, among the working people especially, had not taken hold, was that so many who professed it did not act up to that profession. It was by living up to their faith that they would bring people into the fold and into the chapels. The Unitarian faith was no easy-going one. They who professed it were not allowed to escape their responsibilities because some one else had suffered. They had to live up to what it gave them to do, and what they believed their Father in heaven would desire them to do.

Mr. A. J. HOBSON (ex Master Cutler, Sheffield), in proposing a vote of thanks to the preacher at the afternoon service, said they must see that the wide spirit of toleration that made Unitarians see good in all religions, and to ask more of a man's character than of his belief, did not drift into indifference in pushing the religion that they knew would make those happy who believed in it. If they could only crystallise round them the support that really belonged to them, there would be no doubt as to the size and weight in the community of the Unitarians as a body.

The Rev. W. STEPHENS seconded, and the motion was carried.

The Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, in reply, insisted on the necessity of giving the name "Unitarian" a distinct connotation. They must not be told at a critical time that they were agreed upon only one thing—opposition to the Trinity. Let them take the word, and give it the broadest designation they could, and then fight under it boldly.

The Rev. A. H. DOLPHIN moved a resolution congratulating the Unitarian Home Missionary College, Manchester, on attaining its Jubilee, expressing recognition of the admirable work which had been done by this institution in preparing students for the ministry, rejoicing to hear of the purchase of commodious premises to serve as collegiate and residential buildings, and appealing for generous financial support towards the £20,000 it was proposed to raise.

Mr. H. J. MORTON, who seconded, deprecated any display of hostility between the Manchester College and the Oxford College. The men educated in both were wanted by the churches.

A protest against the resolution was entered by the Rev. W. MELLOR, because no proper notice of it had been given, and because he held that the scheme, in support of which the resolution had been moved, was an impossible one. They were too small a body properly to support two colleges. He hoped that before another step was taken the colleges would enter into friendly conference, and he appealed to the denomination not to throw away its money.

The resolution was then put, and carried with about half a dozen dissentients.

On the motion of Mr. ARNOLD LUPTON, seconded by Mr. CHARLES STAINER, a cordial welcome was formally extended to the ministers who had settled in the district during the year, viz., Revs. C. J. Street (Sheffield), Edgar Lockett (Pudsey), and W. R. Shanks (Holbeck).

The Rev. Dr. Warschauer, who spoke in support, dwelt on certain main difficulties with which Unitarian ministers had to contend. On the one hand they had to contend against an ossified and petrified orthodoxy, and on the other against a gross, shallow, flippant irreligiosity. Another difficulty was the possibility of misplacing the emphasis of their work; there was a chance of their dwelling too much on negations or of sliding into a spurious liberalism which was only a little removed from indifferentism. A third difficulty was the growing liberalism in the churches round them. Thirty years ago, when a man left the orthodox even a little way behind him, it was almost necessary for him to join the Unitarian body. As they all knew, that necessity no longer existed. More than ever during the next thirty years would they have to draw upon their own resources.

The Rev. C. J. STREET, who replied on behalf of the newly settled ministers, moved:—

That this meeting expresses its pleasure at the financial result of the recent bazaar at Leeds, and thanks the congregations and all other friends who contributed to its success; and that, in the appointment of the Rev. John Ellis as superintendent missionary, this meeting sees a happy augury for increased interest in the work of the Union, and for the development of the Unitarian cause in Yorkshire.

Mr. WILLIAM LAYCOCK seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

Thanks were voted to Upper Chapel for its hospitality on the motion of Rev. WILLIAM STEPHENS, seconded by Mr. THOMAS KETTLE (Scarborough), and to the PRESIDENT, on the motion of Mr. J. B. WOSTINHOLM, seconded by Mr. RICHARD FISHER. A successful series of meetings was closed by the Benediction.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Wednesday, or Thursday Morning at latest.]

Appeal.

London: Mansford-street.—The Rev. John Ellis writes: "At a time when many of our good friends are planning or starting for their summer holidays, among the mountains or by the sea, will you kindly allow me to ask them to remember their poorer brothers and sisters in this crowded part of London, to whom a week, or even a day, from their monotonous toil and the noisy streets, spent in the country, is such a boon? My Convalescent and Country Holiday Fund is almost exhausted, and there are special cases needing change during these hard times. I should like to ask also for a few small donations to the funds of the Window Gardening Society. We like to encourage our friends to take an interest in the culture of plants. This can be done at a very small cost, but every few years this fund needs replenishing." Donations to either of these objects will be gratefully received by Mr. Ellis, at the Parsonage, Mansford-street, Bethnal-green, E.

Bolton District Sunday-school Union.—The annual United Scholars' Services were held on Whit-Sunday at Bank-street, Bolton, and Chowbent Chapels. At Bank-street the service was conducted by Rev. R. S. Redfern, of Leigh, and an address was delivered by Mr. Peter Gorton, of Park-lane. At Chowbent the service was conducted by Rev. John Moore, of Hindley, and an address was delivered by Mr. C. E. Reed, of Horwich. The scholars, teachers, and friends from the various schools in the Union attended in large numbers. Special hymns were sung, and collections amounting in all to £12 14s. 4d., taken on behalf of the funds of the Union.

Chichester.—On Sunday last anniversary services were held in connection with the Sunday School. The Rev. C. A. Hoddinott was the preacher. The attendances were very good, and the collections for the Sunday-school Treat were the highest in amount for a number of years.

Crediton (Re-opening Services).—The Bowden Hill Chapel was reopened with special services on Wednesday, June 8, after having been renovated by the removal of the old high-backed pews, and the introduction of new and comfortable seats, in which some of the old oak has been introduced with good effect. There is a new flooring of wooden blocks and tesselated pavement in the porch. Mellow tints have been introduced into the windows, and ventilation and lighting have both been reformed. A panelled draught-screen has been placed between the porch and the body of the chapel, while the doors are covered with baize. The old chapel thus renovated is said to have been built in 1729. The Rev. Micaiah Towgood was minister from 1737 to 1749, and the Rev. John Johns, author of the well-known hymn, "Come, Kingdom of our God," and afterwards first minister of the Liverpool Domestic Mission, from 1820 to 1836. The opening service on the afternoon of June 8 was conducted by the Rev. J. Edwin Odgers, of Manchester College, Oxford, who congratulated the congregation on the restoration of their old chapel, and recalled the fact that he had once before preached there, thirty years ago. His sermon was from Acts vii. 47, 48, "But Solomon built him an house, howbeit the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands." After service there was tea in the lecture hall, of which from 100 to 150 partook, including friends from Exeter, Plymouth, Cullampton, Tavistock, &c.; and in the evening a further service was held, conducted by the Rev. L. Phelps, of Devonport, when the Rev. J. Worthington was the preacher. Among others who were present were the Revs. J. M. Connell, A. Amey, J. Barron, A. E. O'Connor, and A. Lancaster, and Mr. Philip Worsley, of Clifton.

Evesham.—The Sunday-school anniversary services were conducted last Sunday by the Rev. J. B. Higham, of Wolverhampton, the children attending both services. Special hymns were sung, and the collections amounted to £5 13s. The children brought flowers to the evening service, which were afterwards sent to missions in Birmingham and London.

Irish Sunday School Conference.—A very successful conference of teachers and others interested in the work, in connection with the Association of Non-subscribing Presbyterians, was held at Dromore on Saturday, June 11, under the presidency of Mr. John Rogers. Some 600 persons were present. The Rev. A. O. Ashworth was convener. The President, in opening the Conference, spoke of the great importance of their work, and noted with satisfaction an improved attendance in their schools. Miss Eileen L. Andrews, of Comber, read a helpful and suggestive paper on "Our Aim in Sunday-school Teaching," in the course of which she said that their aim was to teach their religion so as to make it a really great and active influence in the lives of their pupils. It had been said of education in general that "the education of the young was the renovation of the world;" and surely that applied in an even greater degree to religious training than to the other branches of education? Unfortunately none of them could doubt that the world needed improving, in many particulars at least. The Sunday-school teachers had undertaken to do what they could to improve the world by the surest means—that of teaching the young people. Every time they met their classes the opportunity was given them of teaching them something which would influence them for good, and through them might touch others, and have far-reaching effects. Personal affection for their pupils, ambition for the members of their churches that they might be true leaders in the progress of mankind, love for their fellow-men—all called them to do their very best to teach well. The Rev. Richard Lyttle, who opened the discussion, said that there would be a general agreement with the writer of the paper that the aim of Sunday-school teachers was to teach religion. Though they might inculcate certain dogmatic views with great correctness and precision, they would entirely fail in the aim they had in Sunday-school work, unless they stirred up in the minds of their pupils that God-consciousness which would make all untruthfulness and all dishonesty and meanness simply impossible. He agreed with Miss Andrews in the statement that they ought to aim at making the young Unitarians of the future leaders in all true good. The Rev. J. A. Kelly said they should never forget the fact that, after all that might be learned from human models, from the study of bees, from the study of noble biography, their greatest model was Jesus Christ their Lord. He never liked the phrase "Our Gospel," because it gave one the idea that Unitarians were separate from the great bulk of men and women who did not perhaps see eye to eye with them, but many of whom in regard to self-sacrificing efforts and enthusiasm in Church work were putting them to shame. He would like them to feel that they were one with the great body of Christians throughout the world who had set their faces for the extermination of all evil. Miss Malcolm of Holywood, Miss Lindsay of Dromore, the Revs. A. Davison, D. Walmsley, J. M'Cleery, Messrs. J. Smyth, J. Bailie and J. Steel continued the discussion, and on the motion of Dr. S. H. Mellone, seconded by the Rev. J. J. Magill, Miss Andrews was thanked for her paper, and the Dromore congregation for their hospitality. The conference is invited to Holywood for next year. A vote of thanks to the President, moved by the Rev. T. Dunkerley, seconded by the Rev. W. H. Drummond, and the Benediction, brought the meeting to a close, after which tea was served in the school-room.

Knutsford.—A very successful sale of work and garden party was held last Saturday at Heath Grange, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Pearson. The weather was delightful, and a large number of friends from neighbouring churches were present, including the Rev. W. C. Hall and party from Ashton-under-Lyne, and the Rev. B. C. Constable and party from Stockport. Dramatic performances were held in the billiard room, concerts on the terrace, games were played on the lawns, and there were other attractions, while teas were provided in the open air. The Ladies' Sewing Society had already £10 in hand, and £34 7s. was taken during the day. After paying all expenses a balance of £40 14s. 2d. has been added to the £52 10s. already in hand towards the £100 promised by the Knutsford congregation towards the East Cheshire Grand Bazaar to be held in the St. James's Hall, Manchester, on Nov. 30, and Dec. 1 and 3.

Leeds: Hunslet.—On Sunday evening, at the close of his sermon, the Rev. J. Fox proposed a vote of condolence with the family of the late Rev. T. R. Elliott, in their sad bereavement. This was seconded by Mr. George Clarke, an old worker with Mr. Elliott in the early days of the Hunslet movement. The vote was passed by the congregation standing. Mr. Elliott was the first Unitarian minister in Hunslet, and laboured acceptably for a period of ten years.

London: Highgate (Resignation).—The Rev. R. H. Greaves having resigned the pulpit of the Unitarian Christian Church, a meeting of church members was held on Sunday morning last, when the following resolution was carried, nem. con.:—"That this meeting accepts with regret the resignation of the Rev. R. H. Greaves, thanking him at the same time for the earnestness of purpose and the loftiness of aim which have characterised his ministry, and assuring him of the kindly feeling towards him of the congregation, and their hearty good wishes for the future of himself and Mrs. Greaves. They further express the hope that Mr. Greaves will find it convenient to complete his three years' ministry at Highgate."

London: Laymen's Club Concert.—On Wednesday evening a concert was given in Essex Hall, under the auspices of the Laymen's Club, in aid of the Southend Home and Children's Country Holiday Fund, and, except in the matter of attendance, was a great success. Before the concert began Mr. Fitchett Wurtzburg, hon. sec. of the club, had to announce that owing to a recent bereavement, Mr. Herbert Lawford, who had been a prime mover in the arrangement of the concert, and Miss Helen Lawford, were unable to take their part in the programme, but that Mr. Lawford's place in the dramatic sketch had been kindly taken at very short notice by Mr. Body. The concert opened with a pianoforte solo by Mr. John Harrison, who in the interval, as President of the London Sunday-School Society, in whose interest the concert was given, offered on behalf of the audience cordial thanks to the friends who were helping. Songs were contributed by Mrs. Curtis, Mr. Albert Norcroft, and Mr. W. Savage Cooper; and Mr. Ivor James, A.R.C.M., gave a delightful rendering of two pieces for violoncello, kindly responding also to a warm encore. The dramatic sketch, "The First Anniversary," was given with much spirit by Mr. Body and Miss Gwynneth Galton, and the second part of the programme consisted of a selection of choruses, quartette, and solos by the "Pompadeur Pierrots," which was capital fun, and was greatly enjoyed both by the troupe and the audience. In spite of the thin attendance, we understand that a good many tickets were sold, and that about £10 will be secured for the object in view.

London: Stratford.—On Saturday week, the members of the Sunday-school Choir who sang in the recent Essex Hall competition were the guests of the conductor, Mr. Walter D. Welford, and Mrs. Welford, at Warwick Lodge. A very successful group photograph was taken by Mrs. Welford, and tea, games, and singing combined with lovely weather to make the event a complete success.

London Unitarian Choral Society.—The first half-session was concluded on Monday with a very pleasant rehearsal under the conductor, Dr. H. Walmsley Little. Success has so far attended the society; fifty members are enrolled, and there has been an average attendance at the practices of thirty-seven. A further increase of membership is confidently anticipated for the autumn, when it is intended to give a concert.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—The Rev. Frank Walters having, as already announced, withdrawn his resignation, a well-attended meeting of the members of the congregation of the Church of the Divine Unity, was held on Sunday week, when it was decided to rescind the previous resolution accepting Mr. Walters's resignation, and a general feeling of pleasure was expressed that Mr. Walters had consented to remain as the pastor of the congregation.

Pudsey (Re-opening Services).—The church at Pudsey has been improved and beautified by putting in stained-glass windows and cleaning, and it was re-opened on Sunday last, special services being held morning, afternoon, and evening. There were large congregations, especially in the afternoon and evening. Special music was sung by the choir, who at the musical service in the afternoon were kindly assisted by four members of the Bradford church. The services were conducted by the minister (Rev. Edgar Lockett), and a short address was given in the afternoon by Mr. W. J. Noble. The money for the new windows is being raised by the ladies of the congregation.

Stannington.—On Sunday, June 5, the anniversary sermons were preached by the Rev. C. J. Street, of Sheffield, when there was a large congregation, in the afternoon and in the evening the chapel was so crowded that at least 100 persons had to stand and listen outside the building. Special hymns were sung by the children and choir. Tea was provided for visitors, at which upwards of 180 sat down. The collections were much above the average, and altogether the gathering was the most successful that has taken place for several years.

Sunday-School Conference.—On Saturday week a joint conference of the North-East Lancashire Sunday-school Union and the Yorkshire Unitarian Sunday-school Union took place at Todmorden. The day was an ideal one, and about 200 met together from different parts of the two counties. The afternoon was devoted to a ramble through the grounds of Dobroyd Castle, the beautiful residence of Mrs. John Fielden, who very kindly threw open the gardens and conservatories to the visitors, the party returning by Lover's Walk and Burnley Valley to the school-room for tea. At the subsequent conference, Mr. Samuel Holden, president of the Lancashire Association, was the chairman, and welcomed their Yorkshire visitors. A vote of thanks to Mrs. John Fielden, moved by the Rev. W. R. Shanks, and seconded by Mr. P. Hargreaves, of Burnley, was carried by acclamation. Rev. John Fox gave many interesting reminiscences of his previous visits to Todmorden. Mr. E. O. Dodgeon, of Leeds, spoke of the good to be accomplished by meeting with people with common objects and common interests. The Chairman, in introducing the next speaker, said that, in his opinion, the two best replies to "Nunquam" were those written by the Rev. Rhondda Williams, of Bradford, and Dr. Warschauer, who then gave an address, which was very warmly received, on the great opportunity open to them as preachers of a reasonable religion, opposed both to the orthodoxy, which was being so widely abandoned, and a militant unbelief. Mr. J. S. Mackie (of Burnley) said the main purpose of meeting together was to exchange views, to encourage one another in the work they were engaged in, and to promote the best interest of their common faith. Each church should have its Sunday-school, and not a school for children only. The ideal school was one for all ages, where along with the children, the youths and maidens, and the men and women could meet together. There was plenty of work to be done whilst the gambling, drinking, and other habits were so much in vogue, and whilst the duties of citizenship and religious life were so much neglected. Rev. A. W. Fox added a few words of encouragement to his fellow teachers. He said it was often very hard for those working in the factories to come and teach on Sundays. It meant a good deal of self-denial and patience. But the teacher who was patient and tender with the children would have a great influence over them. The time would come when such teachers would look back and see their scholars grown into manhood, and would feel that many of them had derived inspiration and help from them. A vote of thanks to the Todmorden friends was moved by the Rev. W. H. Burgess, and seconded by Mr. Hill, of Leeds. A very enjoyable evening concluded with the hymn, "Now pray we for our country."

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

SUNDAY, June 19.

Acton, Central Auction Room, Market-place, High-street, 7, Rev. J. H. WICKSTEED, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Rev. EUSTACE THOMPSON.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. GEORGE LANSDOWN.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. W. STANLEY.

Child's Hill, All Souls' Free Church, corner of Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. JUPP.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15, Mr. GEORGE WARD, and 6.30, Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 and 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. PERRIS.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. GREAVES.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. B. KIRKMAN GRAY.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11.15 and 7, Rev. G. CRITCHLEY, B.A.

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. J. E. STRONGE.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. JOHN ELLIS.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11, Rev. J. H. WICKSTEED, M.A., and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.

Stepney Green, College Chapel, 11 and 7, Mr. C. A. GINEVER,
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 and 7, Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
Stratford, Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. A. PHARAOH, and 6.30, Mr. E. WILKES-SMITH.
Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, Easthill, 11 and 7, Rev. J. HARWOOD, B.A.
Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. McDOWELL.
BLACKPOOL, Dickson-road, North Shore, 10.45 and 6.30, PULPIT VACANT.
BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Church, The Hall, Lytham-road, 11 and 6.30.
BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 and 7, Rev. C. C. COE.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church, New-road, North-street, 11 and 7, Rev. A. FARQUHARSON.
BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 7, Rev. GEORGE STREET.
CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11, Mr. H. A. R. JOY, M.A.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
GUILDFORD, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. RATTENBURY HODGES.
HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. J. MARTEN.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. WARSCHAUER.
LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.; Evening subject, "The Unity of the Godhead the direct Teaching both of the Old Testament and the New."
MAIDSTONE, Earl-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. SIDAWAY BRETTELL, M.A.
MANCHESTER, PLATT CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. T. POYNTING.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. E. PIKE.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. C. B. UPTON, B.A., B.Sc.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. W. BIRKS.
PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Mr. THOMAS BOND.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 7, Rev. G. ST. CLAIR, F.G.S.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 and 6.45, Rev. F. TEASDALE REED.
SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. AGAR.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FREDERICK B. MOTT.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TROWBRIDGE, Conigre Church, 11 and 6, Rev. J. WAIN.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 and 6.30.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 7, Rev. G. H. VANCE, D.D.

WALES.

ABERYSTWITH, New Market Hall, 11, Rev. LEWIS WILLIAMS, of Ciliau.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY SOUTH PLACE, FINSBURY.—June 19, at 11.15, HERBERT BURROWS, "Ethical Rocks Ahead."

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN SQ., W.—June 19, at 11.15, DR. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "Some Books that influenced Christ."

BANK STREET CHAPEL, BOLTON.

THE ANNIVERSARY SERVICES in connection with the Sunday School will be held on SUNDAY, JUNE 19th, 1904. Morning, 10.30; Evening, 6.30. Preacher: Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A. Afternoon at 2.30, a Special Service, conducted by Rev. JOHN EVANS, B.A. Collections at each Service.

INVALID CHILDREN'S CONVALESCENT NURSING HOME
(Mrs. Hampson's Memorial Home),
WINIFRED HOUSE, WRAY CRESCENT,
TOLLINGTON PARK, N.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at University Hall, Gordon-square. W.C., on Monday afternoon, June 20th, 1904, at 5 o'clock.
Mrs. W. Blake Odgers has kindly consented to preside.
Subscribers and Friends interested in the work are cordially invited to attend.

WILLASTON SCHOOL.—SPEECH DAY, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29TH.—The Governors will be obliged if anyone who has NOT RECEIVED an INVITATION, and who desires to be present, will send their name and address to the Clerk, 38, Barton Arcade, Manchester.

COTTAGE SETTLEMENT FOR LADIES.

New Laid Eggs, spring chickens, ducklings, &c.
Poultry Keeping taught in all branches, also fruit bottling, jam making.
General marketing and business methods.
LADIES RECEIVED AS PUPILS OR BOARDERS.
Terms on application to
MISSES YATES & GRUNDY, THE COTTAGE, ROYSTON, HERTS.

FREDK. LONG & SON,
AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS
Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.
Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

GOOSEBERRIES,
Green, for preserving, &c., 20 lbs., 3s. 6d.; 10 lbs., 2s. Carriage paid.
F. ROSCOE, Steeple Morden, Royston.

OLD FALSE TEETH.—We give highest possible price for above. Offers made, and, if not accepted, teeth returned. Dealers in old gold or silver in any form. Banker's references.—WOOLFALL & Co., Birkdale, Southport.

BIRTH.

FARLEY.—June 15th, at 54, Ampthill-road, Liverpool, to Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Farley a daughter.

MARRIAGE.

HICKS—ORMROD.—On Tuesday, June 7th, at Bank-street Chapel, Bolton, by the Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B., of Sheffield, assisted by the Rev. J. H. Weatherall, M.A., Rev. Ernest Savell Hicks, M.A., of Unity Church, Islington, London, to Mabel, youngest daughter of the late Mr. Joseph Ormrod and Mrs. Ormrod, Morelands, Heaton, Bolton.

DEATHS.

SQUIRE.—On the 8th inst., at Nipsells Farm, Mayland, Essex, Frank Squire, second surviving son of the late John William Squire, of Wareham, Dorset, and Elizabeth his wife, in the 60th year of his age.

READ.—On the 11th June, at Worcester, Isabel Margaret, wife of Mabyn Read, M.D., of Worcester, third daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. George Lawford, of Nightingale-lane, aged 41.

PAGE.—On June 13th, at 53, Court Hill-road, Lewisham, Mary Ann, widow of the late Jabez Page, formerly of Bermondsey-street, aged 76.

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A. Honours Lond. Preparation for London Matriculation, Trinity College, and Associated Board of Musicians, Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. Apply to the Head Mistress.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH
AN UNSECTARIAN PUBLIC SCHOOL.

Next Term opens SEPTEMBER 15TH. Admission Examination, July 5th.
For particulars apply HEAD MASTER.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE FOR GIRLS
198 & 227, BRISTOL ROAD.

Principal ... MARY E. BAILY.
Head Mistress ... ELEANOR MOSS, B.A. Hons.

Preparation for Matriculation, Senior, Junior Cambridge, Board of Education and Associated Board Examinations.
Trained Swedish Gymnastic and Games Mistress. Vacancy for Resident Pupil to help with music practice.

FRUITARIAN CAKES.
MADE ENTIRELY OF FRUIT AND NUTS.
Uncooked, Concentrated, Natural Food.
READY FOR USE WITHOUT PREPARATION.
For travelling they are ideal. A meal will go in pocket.

PEAR and WALNUT	7d.	per 8 oz. packet.
APRICOT and NUT	7d.	" "
MUSCATEL and ALMOND ...	6d.	" "
FRUIT and NUTS	6d.	" "
DATE and GINGER	4d.	" "
DATE and LEMON	4d.	" "
DATE and ORANGE	4d.	" "
FIG and CITRON	4d.	" "
DATE and NUT	3d.	" "
FIG and NUT	3d.	" "

Sample Box containing 14 varieties Fruitarian Cakes, 8d.; or with 3 varieties of Nut Butters, post free, 1s.

HUGH MAPLETON, Nut Food Manufacturer,
ARDWICK GREEN MANCHESTER.

Situations,
VACANT AND WANTED.

LADY (29), well educated, desires engagement as COMPANION to a lady who travels.—Address, A., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand.

WANTED, by Respectable and Trustworthy Couple, position as CARETAKERS.—Address, Rev. JOHN ELLIS, 117, Mansford-street, Bethnal Green, E.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY,
ADELAIDE PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.
Assets, £158,000.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., J.P. 17, Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W
Miss CECIL GRADWELL, 7, Victoria-street, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st. S.W
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham, S.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4 per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3 and 3½ per cent., withdrawable at short notice.
BORROWER'S INTEREST 4 per cent. Monthly Repayment, including Principal, Premium, and Interest for each £100.

10 years.	12 years.	15 years.	18 years.	21 years.
1 1 1	0 18 4	0 15 6	0 14 2	0 12 11

Compare the above rates with those of other Societies. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.
Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.
FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

PROVINCIAL FIRE INSURANCE Co LTD

HEAD OFFICE:—1, ACRESFIELD, BOLTON.

CAPITAL - - £250,000. PAID-UP CAPITAL - - £75,000.

DIRECTORS:

J. W. SCOTT. | GEORGE HESKETH.
WILLIAM HASLAM. | S. H. SCOTT.

APPLICATIONS FOR AGENCIES INVITED. - SPECIAL TERMS FOR SCHOOLS & CHAPELS.

MONTHLY. ILLUSTRATED. 24 PAGES.
ONE PENNY.

The Provincial Assembly Messenger
of
London & the South Eastern Counties.

JUNE NUMBER. Nine Illustrations.

London Road Church, Reading. Illustrated. Rev. F. K. Freeston.
Mead Row Chapel, Godalming. Illustrated. Rev. T. E. M. Edwards.
Hill Street Chapel, Saffron Walden. Illustrated. Rev. J. B. Brinkworth.
Monthly Letter. Assembly Sunday. S.E.S.S. Union. Preachers' Plan, &c.

To be had at ESSEX HALL, or from Rev. F. ALLEN, 5, Holland Grove, S.W.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKLETS.
By the REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

DAILY MEDITATIONS
(Fourth Edition Revised.)

NIGHT UNTO NIGHT.
Cloth, red edges, 6d.; roan gilt, 1s.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

"The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological Knowledge, without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological Doctrines."

The Annual Proceedings in connection with the closing of the Session will take place at the College on Thursday, June 23rd.

The Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., will deliver the address to the students at 11.30 a.m.

The Annual Meeting of Trustees will be held at 3.30 p.m.

A Valedictory Religious Service will be held in the College Chapel at 8 o'clock p.m. The Farewell on behalf of the College will be given by the Principal, and the welcome into the ministry by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong B.A.

A. H. WORTHINGTON, B.A., 1, St. James'-square, Manchester.
Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A., 3, John-street, Hampstead, London, N.W.
} Secs.

THE PRESBYTERIAN FUND.

The Managers desire to give notice of the following Scholarships which are open to Theological Students of all denominations:—

Two Graduate Scholarships of £40 for three years, with free instruction for the B.D. Degree of the University of Wales, tenable at the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen.

Applications must be in the hands of the Secretary before July 23rd, 1904.

For particulars and forms of application apply to G. HAROLD CLENNELL, Esq., Secretary to Presbyterian Fund, 6, Great James-street, Bedford Row, London, W.C.

Board and Residence.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH. — ARNEWOOD. Pension. Commanding position in the West Cliff-road; full South aspect; sea views and private grounds; close to Winter Gardens, Cliff Promenade, Square or Pier; moderate Tariff.—Apply, MANAGERESS.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE; most comfortable throughout. Sea View, excellent cuisine. billiard and smoke room, sanitary certificate. —Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

LANGLEY HOUSE, DAWLISH, DEVON.—A delightful HOLIDAY RESORT for Ladies and School-girls (Boys under 15). Beautiful country, bracing climate. Sea and Moorland. Prospectus from MISS N. JONES, Matron; or A. E. JONES, Esq., Proprietor.

FELIXSTOWE.—Comfortable HOME for Permanent BOARDERS, Adults or Scholars; also APARTMENTS on reasonable terms.—Apply, Mrs. ROBINSON, Kimberley, Ranelagh-road, Felixstowe.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea-level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort.

THE ABERYSTWYTH CONGREGATION will gladly assist Visitors to find Apartments.—Stamped envelope, A. JOINSON, Chairman, Pier-street.

SIDMOUTH.—A few paying Guests received in private family.—H., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

SOUTHPORT.—MISS BLAKEY, 12, Duke-street (established 16 years), is prepared to receive PATIENTS or VISITORS in need of rest, change, or treatment. The Red Cross system of Light Cure and fully qualified Massage carefully given, under medical advice. Situation central and pleasant.

KINGSLEY HOTEL
HART STREET, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, LONDON.

This well-appointed and commodious Temperance Hotel has passenger Lift; Electric Light in all Rooms: Bathrooms on every Floor; Spacious Dining, Drawing, Writing, Reading, Smoking and Billiard Rooms; All Floors Fireproof: Perfect Sanitation; Night Porter; Telephone.

Bedrooms from 3s. to 5s. per night.

Inclusive charge for Bedroom, Attendance, Table d'Hôte Breakfast and Dinner, from 8s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. per day. Full Tariff and Testimonials on application.

Telegraphic Address: "BOOKCRAFT," LONDON.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL
Enlarged, Remodelled, Refurnished.

PRONOUNCED BY THE PRESS TO BE THE BEST TEMPERANCE HOTEL IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Accommodation for about 250 Guests.

Highly commended by the Rev. Dr. Aked, Rev. Rowland Hill, Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. Alderman White, M.P., the Misses Cadbury and thousands of other guests.

Spacious Coffee, Reading & Drawing Rooms. Electric Light throughout.

Apartments, Service and Table d'Hote Breakfast from 5/- to 6/6 per day (with Dinner from 8/- to 9/6

77 & 101,
Southampton Row, London.
FREDERIC SMITH & SONS.

EATON'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL,
22, Guilford Street, Russell Square, LONDON.

Facing the Gardens of the Foundling Institution.

Central. Homelike. Beds from 1s. 6d. Breakfast and Tea from 1s. Patronized repeatedly by many visitors during the 30 years of its existence.

THE LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

The Aggregate Service for Teachers and Elder Scholars will be held at Essex Hall, on Sunday, 19th June, at 3.15. The Service will be conducted by the Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.

Friends are cordially invited.

A. BARNES, Hon. Sec.

Terms for Advertisements.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF-PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6

Special Terms for a Series.

Calendar Notices, 10s. per year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge 1/

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. 3 insertions charged as 2.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. The entire remittance should accompany all orders to insert Advertisements.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Sole Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 20 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale) JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, June 18, 1904

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3235. NEW SERIES, No. 339.] LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 25, 1904. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 401

LEADER—
American Unitarianism 408

ARTICLES—
The Situation of Liberal Protestantism in France 403
A French "Triennial" 404
The Church of the Wayfarers 406

MEETINGS—
The Provincial Assembly of Lancashire and Cheshire 409
Winifred House 412

CORRESPONDENCE—
The Essential Thing 413
Our Colleges 413

LITERATURE—
Romance and Pretence 405
Short Notices 405

OBITUARY—
Francis Henry Ellingham 407

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 407

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 414

OUR CALENDAR 415

ADVERTISEMENTS 415

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

IN our present issue will be found a valuable article by Professor Jean Réville, of Paris, on the present position of Liberal Protestantism in France, à propos of the Triennial Conference held last week in Paris. Of this the Rev. W. G. Tarrant also tells, who, with Mr. Ion Pritchard, was present, representing the British and Foreign Unitarian Association.

PROFESSOR RÉVILLE'S popular lectures on Liberal Protestantism, given originally at Geneva in November, 1902, and published by Fischbacher, of Paris, under the title, "Le Protestantisme libéral, ses Origines, sa Nature, sa Mission," are now translated into at least three other European languages. We have already welcomed the English translation in Messrs. Williams and Norgate's Crown Library, "Liberal Christianity: Its Origin, Nature, and Mission." There is also a Dutch translation, published by Van Holkema and Warendorf of Amsterdam, "Het Vrijzinnig Protestantisme," and more recently still a German translation, "Modernes Christentum, Ursprung, Wesen und Aufgabe," published by J. C. B. Mohr, of Tübingen and Leipzig.

WE hope to publish next week the first part of Mr. Rollo Russell's paper on the "Tendencies of Modern Religious Thought," read at the Conference of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, at Essex Hall in Whit-week.

THE Adelaide Register of April 25 records the death, on the previous Sunday morning, of Mr. Robert Kay, who had been for forty-five years connected with the public library of that city, first as secretary to the Board of Governors of the South Australian Institute, afterwards as General Director, Secretary, and Treasurer. Mr. Kay, who would have been seventy-nine this month, was a native of Newcastle-on-Tyne, but as a young man, after his father's death, emigrated to Australia, reaching Port Adelaide in January, 1851. He was one of the founders of the Adelaide Unitarian Church, and for over thirty years a member of the choir. He was a great lover of flowers, and of music, and was held in high esteem in the city which he served for so many years.

IN the remarkable series of articles on the Licensing Bill which Messrs. Rowntree and Sherwell have been contributing to the daily press the way is pointed to a department of licensing reform to which too little attention has hitherto been given. The Licensing Bill seeks to assure to the trade large money payments for every licence of which the renewal may be refused on public grounds—an assurance which in itself will double the market value of existing licensed property. Messrs. Rowntree and Sherwell point out that on the financial side of the question the path of licensing reform really lies in an exactly opposite direction. What is needed is not the further endowment of the trade but the exaction of a substantial toll on the enjoyment of the endowment already existing.

THE way has been pointed out in a remarkable manner by the practice in the United States. The population of New York City is only about one-tenth of that of England and Wales. Yet in New York City alone, the revenue from licences is £500,000 greater than that for the whole of our own country, and if the scale of charges prevailing in New York State were applied to England and Wales, the revenue would be £5,500,000, instead of the ridiculous £1,430,000 raised at present. Again, if the Massachusetts law on the subject were applied to our towns, we should multiply our licensing revenue there by thirteen, other things being equal. As a matter of fact, of course, the brewers would close a number of houses under such taxation which they now find it worth while to maintain for the retailing of their wares, but when every allowance is made under that head the monetary gain would still be enormous.

BY giving to the trade a guaranteed monopoly of steadily increasing value whilst maintaining the tribute exacted in return at a preposterous minimum, we have created fabulous riches, enabling the companies to continue to pay high dividends in spite of the over-capitalisation and constant watering of stock. In the past quarter of a century, while public-house values have increased, and the tied-house system has become almost universal, brewing materials have grown cheaper, and those which are taxed have become a smaller portion of the whole. It may be admitted that the brewer financiers have taken care by their operations that the bulk of this wealth shall go into the hands of comparatively few, and that large numbers of shareholders have very little to show in realisable assets for their scrip. But that is due to the gullibility of investors, and is not the fault of the community. The fact remains that enormous profits have been and are being made from a monopoly which is the virtual gift of the community. Equity demands—not that those profits should be made larger yet by granting security in the tenure of this gift—but that a reasonable share in the values created by the Act of the State should henceforth be diverted into the public treasury.

THE figures published by the Board of Trade show an increasing amount of unemployment in the country. These figures are based on returns from about a third of the Trade Unions, and probably indicate pretty closely the condition of things in the organised trades, but do not of course relate in any way to the larger mass of unorganised labour, much of which is always casual. They only show how great movements of the world market deprive skilled workers of the power of earning a livelihood. The percentage of unemployed at the end of May was 6·3 per cent. as compared with 4·0 per cent. last year, and 3·7 per cent., the mean percentage of unemployed for the last ten years. This represents a great deal of hardship and destitution, especially as in some trades the percentage is much higher. Thus, e.g., in shipbuilding one man in every eight is out of work.

SIDE by side with this increasing number of people out of work, we find diminished earnings for those who are employed. Changes in rates of wages took place in May affecting 113,900 persons. Five hundred only gained an increase. Of these 270 are labourers under the Manchester Corporation, whose pay is advanced from 23s. to 25s. a week. But 13,400 suffered a decrease of £2,846 a week. These figures are serious when we reflect that they mean the going without comforts or necessaries in many homes throughout the land.

THE hardship is suggested in another way. The figures just given refer to the higher grades of labour, to men and families who are normally free from actual physical want of necessary food and clothing. But we read the same story of increased stress when we turn to that more miserable class which is never far removed from poverty. The number of paupers has seriously increased as compared with a year ago—17,000 more persons relieved, which is equal to an increase of 8 per 10,000 in the pauperism rate. There are many habitual paupers. To these we have grown accustomed. We cannot so easily dismiss this surplus 17,000. They have sunk below the threshold of independence because life is growing harder and harsher for the poor this year. But for that they would have escaped the Poor Law as they did a year ago. This depression of life is working all through the world of those who toil, at the top through lessened comfort, at the bottom in pauperism. Everywhere less security, less ease. Such conditions should compel a more strenuous consideration of the great questions which affect our national prosperity, what war means to the people, and, particularly at the present moment, the whole question of the drink traffic.

THE outlook in South Africa over the introduction of Chinese labour grows steadily darker. The first shipload of indentured coolies reached Durban on Saturday, when it transpired that forty cases of beri-beri, with three deaths, had occurred on the voyage. No quarantine was imposed, however, and as the huts for their reception at the port were not completed, they were sent straight into the interior on Tuesday. Beri-beri is already rife on the Rand among the unfortunate blacks imported from Central Africa, which proves the truth of the statement that the high temperature, humidity, and bad ventilation of the mines is fatally favourable to the spread of the disease when once it has been introduced there. The present outbreak among the coolies, added to the existence of plague, both at the Chinese ports and in Johannesburg, makes the folly of persisting in the importation scheme nothing short of criminal.

MEANWHILE the wage question promises serious trouble, not only among the blacks, whose labour market the importation will depreciate, but among the Chinese themselves. Chinese officials are said to have declared that, in spite of the efforts of the Government to spread correct information among them, the coolies do not understand either the nature of the restrictions to be imposed upon them or what a very little way their wages will go.

As to the effect of the importation on Kaffir wages, any doubt which may have remained must surely have been disposed of by Mr. Lyttelton's statement this week that—

> The minimum wage for day work offered to the adult Kaffir labourer in the Transvaal is 45s. per month, and to the adult Chinese labourer, indentured under the Transvaal Labour Ordinance, 30s. a month.

Mr. Lyttelton explains that—

> It is anticipated that a certain percentage of Chinese labourers will be unable, and a certain percentage unwilling, to perform the work done by adult Kaffir labourers, and for these he understands that work such as is done by Kaffir youths and boys, and corresponding wages, will be provided. The arrangement made is such that average Kaffir wages will not be unfairly competed with or undercut.

No "arrangement" which leaves the minimum wage of the interlopers below that hitherto paid to the Kaffirs—whose minimum is merely established by the state of the market, and not by any Government guarantee—can possibly prevent the net result from being reduction of the average market price of the labour of the Kaffir.

IN the June Independent Review, Mr. G. Lowes Dickinson completes his study of "Religion and Revelation," the first part of which appeared last month. As in the writer's larger essay on "The Meaning of the Good," while we are left still asking for clearer light, there is much here that is helpful and stimulating to earnest thought. "Religion," Mr. Dickinson says, "is not a creed, it is a growing experience." It is "concerned with the place of our ideals in the structure of the universe."

> Religion, in the view of it which I now wish to develop, is a reaction of the highest inspiration of the best men upon life and the world, as far as we know them by experience and science: a passionate apprehension, from the point of view of ideals, of the general situation in which we find ourselves.

It is idle, he rightly says, to seek in "Revelation" a short cut to a satisfying knowledge of religion. What we would ask of him is a clearer and completer analysis of the "experience" from which religion arises, and a more convincing definition of the relation of science (in the largest sense, and in one sentence enlarged to include philosophy) to that experience.

THE address given by Dr. Read at the recent annual meeting of the National Unitarian Temperance Association is now published by Messrs. Gay & Bird as a penny pamphlet, with the title "A Protest against the Licensing Bill." Dr. Read martials a number of very striking medical and judicial opinions as to the evils wrought by drink, to emphasise his plea that the drink traffic must be controlled in the interest of the people. Thus he quotes the late Sir Andrew Clark, a great medical authority, and physician at the London Hospital, who said, in reference to this subject:—

> I do not wish to make out a strong case. I am speaking solemnly and carefully in the presence of truth, and I tell you I am considerably within the mark when I say to you that, going round my hospital wards to-day, seven out of every ten there (i.e., 70 per cent.) owed their ill-health to alcohol. . . . Certainly more than three-quarters of the disorders in what we call "fashionable life" arise from the use of this very drug of which I am now speaking. . . . When I think of the terrible effects of the abuse of alcohol, I am disposed to give up my profession—to give up everything—and to go forth upon a holy crusade preaching to all men: Beware of the enemy of the race.

And no less decided is the testimony of the late Sir Henry Thompson:—

> I have long had the conviction that there is no greater cause of evil moral and physical in this country than the use of alcoholic beverages. I do not mean by this that extreme indulgence which produces drunkenness. The habitual use of fermented liquors to an extent far short of what is necessary to produce that condition, and such as is quite common in all ranks of society, injures the body and diminishes the mental power to an extent which, I think, few people are aware of. I have no hesitation in attributing a very large proportion of some of the most painful and dangerous maladies which come under my notice, as well as those which every medical man has to treat, to the ordinary and daily use of fermented drink taken in the quantity which is conventionally deemed moderate.

The Judges are no less emphatic than the doctors, and the opinion of the London Coroner is also given. Crime, lunacy, pauperism, general misery and national inefficiency, these are the evils which the drinking habits of our people bring in their train, and in an appalling degree. Dr. Read therefore denounces the Licensing Bill as in the interests of the publican, not of the public, and therefore mischievous and immoral. His pamphlet, widely circulated, should be of great service. Special terms for distribution can be arranged.

WE referred last week to the article in the current Contemporary by the Rev. J. Verschoyle on "Frances Power Cobbe." Another very suggestive article in the same number consists of a series of letters by Professor C. Lloyd Morgan on Haeckel's "Riddle of the Universe" and the fundamental questions of religion which it raises. Faith in human freedom and immortality, it is cogently argued, is not to be set aside by the teachings of the agnostic scientist.

THIS month's Nineteenth Century and After contains a valuable article by Sir Harry H. Johnston on "The White Man's Place in Africa," suggesting a reasonable partition of the Continent, so that the greater part of it should be reserved for the indigenous black races. Mr. O. Eltzbacher, writing on "The Yellow Peril," argues that it is to be found neither in China nor Japan. Mr. Herbert Samuel, M.P., concludes his article on "The Cobden Centenary and Modern Liberalism" as follows:—

> Liberalism, which is the policy of change, cannot itself be unchanging. But when full allowance has been made for the altered views which a larger experience has brought, and when we have eliminated the subjects of those controversies which time has finally settled, there remains in our contemporary Liberalism a great body of doctrine of which Cobden was the originator or the zealous advocate. And the essence of his creed is still the essence of ours, as it was the essence of the creed of one who was not only the greatest poet, but was also among the greatest of the political philosophers of the Middle Age. "This, therefore," Dante wrote in his "De Monarchia," "is the mark at which he who is to care for the world must most chiefly aim, that in this little plot of earth belonging to mortal man life may pass in freedom and with peace."

THE SITUATION OF LIBERAL PROTESTANTISM IN FRANCE.

THE Triennial Conference of the delegates of Liberal Protestant churches in France assembled last week in Paris during three days. These meetings give me the opportunity to send to our Unitarian friends some information about our religious situation. If there are some amongst the readers of THE INQUIRER who are not acquainted with our denominations, I beg permission to refer them to the report I had the honour to read at the National Conference at Liverpool, and which was printed in THE INQUIRER of April 25, 1903.

The number of consistoires, i.e., of Protestant ecclesiastical subdivisions containing a more or less extensive group of parishes, which sent delegates (one pastor and one layman each) to our Conference, was thirty-four. About 150 congregations were represented. As there are 104 consistoires in France (including Algeria), the Liberal party comprises nearly a third part of the French Reformed Church, but most of its followers are in the mountains of the Cévennes or in the rural parishes of the south of France, where there is more goodwill than abundant means. Rev. E. Bost was in the chair. Pastor Gerold, of Strassburg, brought us the fraternal wishes of the Liberal Protestants of Alsace; Professor Balavoine, of Geneva, represented the "Union Suisse du Christianisme Libéral." And for the first time we had the pleasure to receive two delegates of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, MM. Pritchard and Tarrant. M. Pritchard delivered his address in French and was warmly cheered when he moved the resolution, already approved by the last Unitarian Conference, that this meeting should congratulate all those who contributed to the realisation of the Anglo-French accord.

The report of the honourable Professor Jalabert, secretary of the Délégation Libérale, gave a review of what has been done in the last three years, at once encouraging and alarming. Encouraging, for amongst Protestant people the liberal cause is in a good way. The Ecole Samuel Vincent at Nimes, the school for training young pupils to prepare them for theological studies and the ministry in our churches, has been prosperous during these last years. Whilst twenty years ago we had a lamentable want of candidates for our liberal parishes, all our churches are now provided, and the spirit of the young pastors is generally very good. The missionary work in the country is successful, especially is the department of the Charente, where Pastor Robert has created Protestant groups in thirty-four villages, and gained more than two thousand members of the church, and in St. Etienne, St. Chamond, and Rive de Gier amongst the miners of that industrious country. The old Mission Intérieure du Gard, which will celebrate in December the fiftieth anniversary of its creation, is also satisfied with the results of its activity.

Encouraging also is the development of a peaceful spirit in an ever increasing part of the orthodox churches. Two years ago, when the churches had to present a candidate for the chair of Reformed Dogmatics in the Theological School in Paris to succeed the late Auguste Sabatier, the moderate orthodox group united with the liberal consistoires in voting for the Rev. Jean Monnier. He obtained sixty-four suffrages. Professor Monnier does not, indeed, belong to the liberal organisation, but he is a broad-minded man. This experience shows that there are now in the orthodox organisation nearly as many consistoires who are inclined to live in fraternal relations with the liberals, as there are properly liberal consistoires in our own organisation. This new group is what we call "le centre droit" (the right centre). Its very active periodical is La Vie Nouvelle, whose chief editor is the Pastor Louis Lafon, of Montauban.

The ecclesiastical situation of this third party is curious. Its members belong still to the orthodox organisation which was established after the great scission of 1872. They take part in the synods of this strictly presbyterian organisation, which is not recognised by the Government, and which we call, therefore, "le synodalisme officieux." But they no longer share in the spirit which originally inspired this whole movement. They mean to keep up the presbyterian form of church government because it is the old traditional constitution of the French Reformed Church, but they reject the intolerance of its founders who, in 1872, excluded all the liberals and did not admit any other members than those who consented to subscribe an orthodox confession of faith. They think that all tendencies can live together in the same synods. Although most of them personally adhere still to a conservative theology, they believe that a common Christian faith does not consist in the profession of a uniform theology, but in communion in the same evangelical, religious and moral faith. And they acknowledge that such a faith is prevalent amongst pious liberals as well as amongst pious orthodox people.

The increasing influence of this new group has seriously changed our ecclesiastical situation. The orthodox organisation has still the majority, but the orthodox spirit no longer. Several committees have been founded where members of the different denominations are working together; for instance, the committee for moral and social action, which has undertaken a very active campaign against alcoholism, immorality, atheism, and other plagues of our democracy, as well amongst Catholic as Protestant people. And orthodox as well as liberal apostles find that they can very well fight together against the same enemies.

We Liberals have never thought otherwise. I mean that this new spirit amongst a part of our orthodox co-religionists is really nothing else than a diffusion of the liberal spirit. On our side we have no objection at all against the presbyterian form of church government. We know that this is the proper constitution of our church in the past. We were obliged after 1872 to create a separate organisation, because we were thrown out of the church of our forefathers. But as soon as we can re-enter in the synodal church without disowning our liberal faith, we are ready to do so. And now we are convinced, that if a general synod was called together by the Government, our right would be acknowledged by its majority, notwithstanding the strong opposition of the old orthodox party.

Last autumn an attempt was made to obtain from the Government the convocation of a new general synod, where all the official reformed churches would be represented. There has been nothing of the kind since 1872. But it is clear that the Government does not feel at all inclined to do so. The Minister of Public Worship remembers how much trouble his predecessor had with the several parties of the synod of 1872, and how he could not ratify its decisions. Moreover, in the direction of non-Catholic worship he is now quite sovereign in all ecclesiastical matters; the director prefers to enter into negotiations with unofficial delegates of the orthodox or of the liberal party, who possess no legal authority, rather than with the delegates of an official synod, who would be able to speak in the name of the whole Reformed Church. And, last not least, the Government does not wish to sanction a legal organisation of all the Protestant churches, because it would be very difficult to refuse to the Catholic Church a privilege which would have been conferred on the Protestant churches. Now, the Government is not at all in a mood to give such rights to the Catholics.

In this question as well as in all others, our relation with the State is quite subordinated to the relations of the Government with the Roman Catholic Church. We ought not to forget, that we Protestants are but a very little minority in the country. This same burden lies upon us, in the prospect of the separation of the Church and the State, of which so much is spoken now in France.

We have treated the question in all its aspects at the Conference, but without being able to form any decision, for we do not know if the separation will be effected by this Parliament or not, and still less, what would be the new legal conditions of the churches if the separation is voted. There are many amongst us who are favourable to the principle of separation. But we ask that the churches, when separated from the State, may be free. Now the Bill, which the Committee of Parliament is elaborating, is just the contrary of a law of freedom. It is wholly dominated by the necessity of preventing the constitution of a too powerful Roman Catholic Church under the direction of a foreign Pope, which would be much more dangerous for the Republic than the actual Roman Church, for now she is bound by the Concordat. According to the proposed Bill the churches would be bereft of all their temples; they would not be allowed to have a general or central fund; they would be subjected to all kinds of regulations, so that it would be impossible for them to have a strong organisation.

It does not, indeed, seem likely that the vote for separation will pass in the present Parliament. The Government does not wish it, and we do not think that the majority of the members in the Chamber of Deputies and in the Senate are prepared to hasten such a radical measure. Moreover, it is possible that, even if the Bill comes under discussion, the severe stipulations proposed by the Committee will not be voted without being modified.

Some people are of opinion that the Jesuits and the Ultramontane politicians in Rome desire separation, and that they will act so as to render it necessary, believing that such a radical change of the old order will certainly provoke a reaction. It would not take many mistakes such as the protestation of the Roman Court against the visit of the President Loubet in Rome to provoke in the whole country a movement of hostility against the Roman Church, that would end in separation. But, on the other hand, such a policy would be very dangerous for the Church. During the past thirty years the clerical party has often made a deal with the extreme political parties, hoping that the excess of radicalism would provoke a reaction favourable to itself. But it has always been disappointed. More prudent Catholics think it a great mistake to provoke separation.

For us the suppression of the State subsidies would create a very difficult situation, scanty though they be. In the country a great many of the village churches, perhaps one-third of them, would be unable to provide for their maintenance. In France country people are not accustomed to supply their churches with personal subscriptions, and the cities, at least in the first years, would have enough to do in providing for their own wants. Nevertheless we should accept separation, if we could only obtain sufficient freedom to be able to organise our churches strongly.

In France as perhaps in some other countries, wealth is easily conservative. Many orthodox Protestants are convinced that after separation only the orthodox churches will have sufficient subscriptions. But the general opinion among our Protestant people is that in case of separation the first duty of Protestant churches will be to remain united and not to divide themselves into a number of hostile denominations, so as to weaken still more our already so small minority in the struggle against Catholicism and also against atheism. Our Conference was unanimously of that opinion. We voted a plan for the federation of all Protestant churches, which was elaborated by the last meeting of the Free Churches—i.e., the small churches, which are already without any bond with the State. But the question is: Do the rich subscribers adhere to the same fraternal principles as the great mass of the Protestant people?

The situation, you see, is still very uncertain. JEAN RÉVILLE.

Paris, June 21, 1904.

A FRENCH "TRIENNIAL."

LAST week, from Tuesday to Thursday inclusive, the tenth General Assembly of representatives of Liberal Reformed Churches in France was held at Paris. Little more than a glimpse of its proceedings was possible to the two representatives of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association who attended in response to the cordial invitation of the Délégation Libérale, the permanent council of the Assembly. That little, however, was not only interesting in itself, but also opened up a suggestive view into the state of religious life and thought in the sister country. Happily both for the readers of THE INQUIRER and for the present writer, the duty of describing the situation at large is discharged by no less an authority than Professor Jean Réville. All that falls to one of last week's foreigners in Paris is to offer here a few notes in the hope of interesting friends on this side of the Channel.

In the first place, it was noticeable that the French "Triennial" was strictly limited, except for the service held on Tuesday evening at the Oratoire, to delegates, ministerial or lay, chosen by the local consistoires and councils, the twelve members of the Délégation itself being added. The meetings were held in a moderately large committee-room or vestry at the Oratoire, and probably eighty gentlemen were present as a rule, though the heat tended at times to lessen the attendance. Had the Assembly been held in Nîmes, where French Protestantism is at its strongest, the meetings would no doubt have been larger; but certainly the English visitor was struck with the absence of the crowd that usually accompanies our own Conference. The opening and closing of each sitting with prayer, the reading and approval of the preceding meeting's minutes with which business in each case began, the presence of men only, the animation that now and then brought up three or four speakers together with hands held up to secure the chairman's attention, and occasionally the ringing of the chairman's bell and his appeal for order, all reminded one that they manage these things otherwise in France.

And what do they talk of? Well, there are the reports of the Délégation itself, a very busy body, evidently, combining something of the duties of the executive of the B. and F. U. A. and the Committee of Manchester College with duties of a special nature rendered necessary by the peculiar relationship between Church and and State in France. One matter of prime importance is education, not only of ministers but also of lay students at l'Ecole Samuel Vincent. Another is the protection and extension, where possible, of the Protestant parish system; and it is here that the State's assistance and consequent interference came in. There are reports from committees on various subjects, propagandism, social questions, &c., and each constituent council or church is at liberty to send up for discussion proposals relative to the interests of its members. It was evident that in some cases at least this permission was eagerly seized, and questions more or less burning were thus submitted along with the reports sent in as to the condition of the churches. The subject of finance defies the bounds of nationality; how to raise funds for objects which piteously press appears to be a problem as ubiquitous as religion itself. One point of deepest concern to our French brethren has been, and doubtless long will be, the maintenance of as close a union as possible between the right and left wings of Protestantism. At the Wednesday morning meeting a break was made in the more domestic business in order to receive the foreign visitors. There should have been representatives of four countries, but Holland had to be content with sending a letter of cordial greeting. Then followed an address from a Strasburg minister, in which were blended pathos and courage, the story of struggle not only with the forces of irreligion but also with the adverse conditions imposed by the German Government on its subjects of French origin in Alsace. A lighter note was struck in the conversational remarks of Professor Balavoine, a colleague of Professor Montet, at Geneva, and a gentleman whose charming personality will doubtless become known to many English visitors at the "International" meeting next year, for which event Professor Balavoine is already busily preparing. Then came the address of Mr. Ion Pritchard, whose command of French enabled him easily to sustain the interest and evoke the continuous applause of his audience. He confined himself chiefly to an account of the operations of the B. and F. U. A., with a hint or two as to the latitude of the term "Unitarian." All was heard with ripples of laughter, clapping of hands, or grave attention, as the case might be; but the loudest applause was evoked when Mr. Pritchard, in conclusion, laid on the table a resolution approving the recent agreement between this country and France, which Baron F. de Schickler, President of the Délégation, promptly adopted and read to the meeting. The resolution was in identical terms with that proposed at the recent Whitsun meeting of our Association, and was carried by acclamation. It was a very happy thought of Mr. Pritchard's to suggest it to our French brethren.

In the evening an opportunity was afforded of more intimate fellowship at a dinner given by Baron de Schickler to the foreign representatives, followed by a largely attended soirée at his residence. Several of the more notable Protestant preachers in Paris were present, among them M. Wagner, whose books are widely known in the United States and ought to be so here.* The grace of French hospitality and compliment may be imagined, and need not be enlarged upon, though it will be long remembered. What did strike one as specially suggestive, however. was a feature unknown, I think, in our own meetings: A sonnet of elevated sentiment and felicitous in expression was offered to the President by one gentleman present; and another delegate, wearing a rustic dress with simple dignity, read in a strange dialect a further poetical address, enlarging on the cause of free faith and the rights of conscience and wishing well to its well-wishers. Even the native Parisian was glad to hear a translation of this poem into his proper speech. Thought travelled across the Channel and pictured one of our presidents being thus addressed in his drawing-room by a master of Gaelic or Welsh! But, once again, whatever the language used, the meaning was the same—love of the lovely, fidelity to truth, devotion to the highest. W. G. TARRANT.

* Perhaps the Editor will allow me another opportunity to refer to them.

LITERATURE.

ROMANCE AND PRETENCE.*

To the construction of such a volume as this there needs no more than some superficial study of the Flavian period, some acquaintance with fiction of the Quo Vadis type, and those gifts of sympathy and imagination which are an acknowledged part of Mrs. Campbell Praed's literary equipment. Hence the preface claiming the intervention of a spirit from the vasty deep, inspires us with less of pleasure in the suggestion of such a possibility than of renewed disappointment for the inadequacy of the result. Such a preface would be an excellent literary trick, jumping better with the prevalent humour of the circulating library public than the somewhat outworn discoveries of lost documents or clues to a family mystery. But we prefer to conclude that the preface is meant to mean all it seems to say rather than suppose verisimilitude carried to the point of impudent buffoonery; for which phrase there could be no milder substitute, where language is profaned to a juggle with the most potent and sensitive motives of human hope and awe. The author's good faith acknowledged, there remains only the question of her good sense.

The author takes to herself the credit for little more than the transcription of the memories of Nyria, a Roman slave-girl, now re-incarnate as a personal friend of her own. The action of the book is in and about Rome in the latter part of the reign of Domitian; and concerns itself with the fortunes of Nyria and those associated with her, first in the household of the imperial and imperious Julia, and latterly in that of Paulinus.

The narrative itself is commonplace enough, reiterating the wearisomely familiar types of Passion, Grace, Brutality, and that pathetic spectacle of the good reaching out to the sublime and only toppling into the ridiculous, with which we are somewhat over-sated in works of fiction which seek to find food for sensationalism in motives of faith and morals. But in its course the story introduces us to so many matters of detail which, if true, are not less than revolutionary, that we must turn the short space at our disposal to their statement.

Telescopes, we are told, were in use in the reign of Domitian (p. 35). Hitherto we have been living in forced content with the belief that none before Roger Bacon, save amongst certain obscure Arabians, gave hint of even such instruments as might by some stretch of courtesy bear that name.

"Vocal cords" (p. 172) is a phrase hitherto supposed due to Ferrein.

Spectacles (p. 92) were, it would seem, in use a thousand years before Alhazen, hitherto reputed the first of extant writers to allude to them.

Sheets (p. 132) were in use for bed-covering, we are told, without explanation whether the word is merely a very free rendering of peristromata, vestes stragulæ, or other terms familiar to the times.

Registration of doctors (p. 134 and other passages) was practised, which is a distinct gain to our knowledge, hitherto allowing only the existence of an Archiater without authority in respect of the medical fraternity as a whole.

These and other matters we should pass over as amusing anachronisms if they did not come to us in the guise of a historical revelation. We might forgive Nyria that in the course of more than eighteen centuries her memory has become a little hazy in such fine distinctions as those between the monetary value of a sestertius and a sestertium; but it is a confusion which has disastrous results upon the probabilities of the story; nor is it mended by a belated note from the publisher explaining that here and there, where the distinction has been correctly observed, it was due to a mere misprint! Some egregious mistakes in grammar the printer has unfortunately overlooked, while not sparing of slips of his own.

Of Clement, Bishop of Rome, we have many facts of interest beyond his physical peculiarity of pulsating veins (176). Not least that he was an intimate friend of the Apostle John, held High Church doctrine of baptism, and officiated in a church which becomes the earliest recorded instance of a building so used enclosing a baptistery within its walls. It is disappointing that the sentence of most significance that Nyria could recollect having ever heard fall from his lips was a quotation from his own so-called Second Epistle, which is pseudonymous, and was not written till some years after his death. Professor Harnack will learn with chagrin that his tentative identification of the Bishop with his supposed contemporary, Flavius Clemens, is finally disposed of. But the celebrity which our author claims for the Bishop's abilities as a hymn-writer, and the free use of hymns before the custom had (according to existing sources of knowledge) as yet become liturgical, suggests a gallant attempt on her part to identify the excellent man with another Flavius Clemens, of a later place and century, and usually distinguished by the adjective Alexandrinus.

It is interesting also to find that the aged Apostle John preached at Rome in the year 95, and (as perturbed theologians of the Keswick school will be relieved to read) modestly acknowledged the authorship of the Apocalypse. In fact, merely from gazing, perhaps too rapturously, at the figure of the saint, Nyria had some little apocalypse of her own, in which she "seemed to see him surrounded by a veil of milky fire, full of golden stars which rose around his head,"* and "for one dazzling moment a glimpse of two holy ones with radiant wings and mysterious sunshine on their gleaming brows, whose tender arms upheld him reverently." (P. 363.) Happily for the Apostle, history may yet be able to prove an alibi.

We would fain close with some good word for the book, for it is certainly not without evidence of pains and brains, and of its kind so much better than the worst, that we the more regret the use to which such goodly gifts are put. But what does it stand for? If for history or biography it lacks plausibility. If for psychology it fails of coherence. If for an ethical motive, we have failed to find one that will not crumble into laughter on analysis. If for amusement merely, how far can our womanhood be from those worst depravities of Roman taste, if, spared by a milder age the realities of Roman lusts, violence, and bloodshed, they turn for their amusement to their literary representation?

To all who would entertain us in this wise we would say in words which our authoress puts into the mouth of the Most Noble Julia: "Cease such sentimental drivel. Refrain from folly and proceed with thy dinner." H. A. R. J.

* "Nyria." By Mrs. Campbell Praed. (T. Fisher Unwin. 6s.)

* Cf. Asoka's vision of the Buddha "in the full perfection of beauty, surrounded by a halo of glory, and surmounted by the lambent flame of sanctity."

SHORT NOTICES.

From the Old Church to the New: a Personal Retrospect. By William Smith. The atmosphere indicated by this "Retrospect" is peculiarly Scottish, and rather close and dim as such. We move among the "Auld Lichts," and are shown the sort of severe doctrinal instruction to which children were subjected forty or fifty years ago. Evidently the period of Mr. Smith's Retrospect was that before free libraries and sixpenny reprints of theological works. He tells of his spiritual struggles while he was "poor, fatherless, and with few friends" in a "practical work-a-day sphere" over the dogmas presented to him as soul food; how unthinkable he found the doctrine of the Trinity, how crudely legal, commercial, unjust, and immoral. yet withal mysterious, the doctrine of the Atonement, &c. The goal at which he arrived is Swedenborgianism. He speaks of it as "the magnificent doctrinal system of the New Church." It may be fairly questioned whether "the New Church" appearing in the title of this booklet is the proper antithesis of the Old Church. The narrator says "the central idea of the (New) Church is the doctrine of the Divinity of the Lord's Glorified Humanity." It may be reasonably doubted whether a church that holds Jesus to be the only God is in anywise different from a church that regards Jesus as one of three deific Persons. If such be the New Church, a newer might well be suggested wherein is no dogma at all, nor any sort of creedalism. To the writer of this notice, who about the same time tried the clue of the Arcana Cœlestia as the narrator of the Retrospect did, the "New Church" seems but a sport of the Old, even more arbitrary and illusionary. But though the critic may stand abashed in humbled inability to understand "the principle of Divine spiritual influx, through discreet descending degrees, according to correspondence," which the narrator calls "one of the most magnificent generalisations now granted to the modern mind," he may all the while sympathise with one whose "quest has ever been for the highest and best," eager to "know the unseen causes and qualities of things, the why and the wherefore of human life, experience, and destiny." The "Retrospect," from a literary point of view, is well done, but while following it we have the feeling that we are in a small compartment with but a scanty inlet of light and air. We cannot help wishing that, in the midway stage of his struggle, the struggler had come upon the highly oxygenised writings of Theodore Parker. They would have shown him, what the Higher Criticism has since confirmed, that the idea of the "deep wisdom of the ages lying within and protected by the legends, forms, and histories" of the Bible is a fallacy. Swedenborg's treatment of Scripture is utterly disallowed by Biblical science. (The Scottish New Church Evidence Society, Paisley.)

Some Popular Philosophy, by George H. Long, is a brightly written little book, in which the author introduces the "man in the street" to some of the problems of metaphysics. He does not attempt any systematic or complete treatment, and skilfully avoids using technical language, but he knows his subject thoroughly, and not only will the "man in the street" find the volume instructive, but also the "man in the study" will like to run through its epigrammatic pages. In the main, it is a cursory exposition and examination of some leading types of philosophical speculation on the nature and destiny of humanity. Christian science is pressed into service as an illustration of a particular system. (Swan Sonnenschein & Co., 2s. 6d.)

The Tree in the Midst: a Contribution to the Study of Freedom, by Greville Macdonald, M.D. There are many good and true things in this book, which attempts to link up ethics with physical evolution. The writer is deeply earnest about his subject, and has a picturesque style to help him with various ingenious interpretations of Genesis, but it may be questioned whether readers who are serious students of these problems would not prefer the more scientific guidance of expressly philosophical works (against which the author protests too much when he rejects "academical" help), while others, who would take his assumptions on trust, would probably decline to wade through four hundred somewhat diffuse pages. The real significance of such books as this is that they show the extent to which contemporary popular thought is imbibing the results of modern philosophy. It is good to read the author's manly protests against the doctrine of original depravity (p. 235). His epigrammatic remarks upon this subject is a fair specimen of his manner: "Our instincts are no less from above, that we must put them below us." (Hodder & Stoughton, 10s. 6d. net.)

Snacks, by Esther Delaforce, is a small volume of short essays treating of subjects so widely different as Coronation tea parties, and the question whether all men, or only some, are possessed of souls. The author seems to claim to belong to Whitman's category of "powerful uneducated persons," for she discusses the soul without reference to psychology, and, indeed, with a playful pretence of doubt if the subject had been considered before. The result cannot be considered entirely satisfactory; but in the main the book is based on the obvious fact that our civilisation is full of anomalies, and some of these are pointed out in a vigorous manner. (Swan Sonnenschein. 1s.)

THE CHURCH OF THE WAYFARERS.

SOME passages in the recently published Letters of Emilia Russell Gurney serve to freshen our reminiscence of the beautiful idea which it was sought to embody in the Chapel of the Ascension, or, if we may choose the more significant earlier title, the Resting Place for Wayfarers, in Bayswater-road. The building is open and we may enter when we will, but the building is at best an imperfect reflection of the founder's mind. The story is not an old one, and has been told by the artist, Mr. Shields. What Mrs. Gurney's letters add to the record is not fresh information, but a winning simplicity of style, through which the fair, bright thought is able to shine more clearly. The record is in itself a familiar one. Many years ago Mrs. Gurney went into a small church in Florence, rarely used for public services but set apart as it were for secret meditation. This impression worked together with other memories of little churches in the Carrara hills into the bold purpose of erecting in London such another building. In the style of its architecture, in the paintings on the walls, in the silence to which it was consecrated, an active silence of breathing men and not of empty space, it was to be suggestive of religious ideas strange, if not alien, to our national character. The growth of this idea, and its carrying out through the difficulties of nearly ten years, are outlined in the letters.

The little church itself is hardly a suffiicient commentary. It interests us, seen from the park, across the turmoil of the Bayswater-road, or from the melancholy quiet of the open, disused burying ground of St. George. When we enter there is much to arrest the attention, to please the eye, and to keep the mill-stones of the mind busy. The Bible history is unfolded before us strikingly, sometimes with the power of beautiful imagination. As one of the minor show-places of London this church ranks high. But it was intended for something more worshipful than that—for rest, silence, prayer. Instead, we hear the sound of art prattle. Perhaps it would be better to take it exactly as it is, and be thankful for it, forgetting the original idea drawn from a foreign land. It is not easy to overthrow the long tradition which has come down from Jewish sources interpreted by Puritan theologians. This tradition supports, and again is strengthened by, the national depreciation of art. It has become difficult to think that God can be where pictures are. Now these pictures were intended both by Mrs. Gurney and Mr. Shields to be for the church, they were to be the handmaidens of the religious idea, a fit accompaniment of the act of devotion. For this they are well suited. Yet, in fact, it is obvious that the church is for the pictures, not they for it. This departure from the original intention is facilitated by the arrangement of the chairs, which are so set as to serve the convenience of visitors who come armed only with catalogue and opera glasses. And the worth of the place is shockingly spoilt by the appearance near the entrance of a tea tray and photographic album. It is a pity, for London has many picture galleries. This church of the wayfarers stands alone.

Mrs. Gurney's wish was to have two little halls. The first, adorned with pictured deeds of brotherly kindness, would be for sitting and resting in; the innermost hall should be a place of prayer, with pictures setting out the Biblical encouragement to prayer. And for this nothing less was needed than to portray the enduring power of the Divine Being in human, natural form. The incentive to prayer depicted in art would be the perception of the individual attachment to the pivot of the wheel of life. There should be no voice heard in this shrine of rest, only a penetrating silence. Again we feel the beauty of the idea, and again the difficulty of its achievement. We go to church, as we go everywhere else, for a practical purpose. But here there are no visible means of doing the external things appropriate to an ecclesiastical service. The idea of Mrs. Gurney's church for wayfarers is harder than that of a Friends' Meeting, and that is too stubborn a task for most of us. How happily suited had this place been for Walt Whitman, largely tolerant, at such times as he loved to loafe and hold his soul at ease; or for Wordsworth, sitting idly on his old grey stone, assured that something of itself would come. It enshrines the reflection of that older mystic, who warned men so busied with outward things as to have no time to recollect themselves that for every six steps they took outward in their daily duty, they should take one step inward, and observe their own hearts.

Silence is eloquent, rest is a eucharist, prayer rises beyond action into being; such is the lovely reminiscence freshened in our hearts when we see the church in the light of its idea. The thought may not be as clearly expressed as in some more usual forms of church buildings in town or country. Yet it is not wholly lost. On the other hand, it is sometimes nobly realised, as when some wayfarer pauses, stands cautiously by the doorway, doubtful of a welcome, then enters, unrebuked, steps timidly across the court, looks, loves, forgets the world in beautiful vision. Thus, and in such like ways, the costly labour of devout enthusiasm finds its justification. B. K. G.

ARE not many lives lost by useless repining after what they never had, or what is now past and gone? Some men seem to live useless lives in the mere murmuring memories of the dead yesterdays. It is folly. It is to seek the spring among the fallen and withered leaves of autumn.—F. W. Farrar.

CHRISTIANITY is a pledge of social order which none of us sufficiently prize. Weak as its influence seems to be, there are vast numbers into whom it has infused sentiments of justice, of kindness, of reverence for God, and of deep concern for the peace and order of the state. Rapine and bloodshed would awaken now a horror altogether unknown in ages in which this mild and divine truth had not exerted its power. Channing.

OBITUARY.

FRANCIS HENRY ELLINGHAM.

By the death of Francis Henry Ellingham the congregation of the Octagon Chapel at Norwich has lost one who had long served it faithfully and well. In his youth he was one who had the privilege of coming within the sphere of influence of the late John Withers Dowson and Travers Madge, the saintly example of whose lives and practical teaching made many men of mark at the old historic Norwich chapel.

There were few institutions there with which Mr. Ellingham had not been connected officially at some time or other, and for a period of ten years he filled the office of secretary to the chapel and congregation, and this, too, at a period when changes in the ministry and a vacant pulpit for over a year made the work more than usually arduous and exacting. A chat on chapel matters with Mr. Ellingham was always interesting, his reminiscences going back through many ministries to the early fifties, when the Rev. Joseph Crompton seceded from the Octagon pulpit, and took with him a large portion of the congregation.

Outside the sphere of chapel work also, his life was a busy one. For some years he was hon. secretary of that flourishing society, the Norwich Science Gossip Club, which originated with the late Dr. J. E. Taylor, F.G.S., and his appointment of secretary to the large business firm of Fletcher & Son, Ltd., brought him into contact with all sorts and conditions of men, amongst whom he made many friends, but never an enemy. His genial disposition, his cool, calm, and impartial judgment, his kindly manner, made the privilege of his friendship one to be appreciated during life, and his memory cherished as a lovely jewel after his death. His passing "across the bar" has left a gap in the ranks of Norwich workers and worshippers which will not easily be filled.

THERE is no more solemn thought for any man than that there is some one place in the world which is meant for him, which he is capable of filling, and nobody else can fill. And the universe is perpetually judging him by that vacant place, as to whether he is occupying it; and it is condemning or approving him as he does, or leaves undone, the part set for him to do among all the millions of mankind.—F. W. Farrar.

THE only God whom our thoughts can rest on, and our hearts can cling to, and our consciences can recognise, is the God whose image dwells in our own souls. The grand ideas of Power, Reason, Wisdom, Love, Rectitude, Holiness, Blessedness, that is, of all God's attributes, come from within, from the action of our own spiritual nature. Many indeed think that they learn God from marks of design and skill in the outward world; but our ideas of design and skill, of a determining cause, of an end or purpose, are derived from consciousness, from our own souls. Thus the soul is the spring of our knowledge of God." Channing.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

HOW THE WORLD WAKES.

"MIRIAM! Miriam!" I whispered, "it's time to wake up."

Two drowsy eyes blinked at the candle I held—blinked and shut again. A head in the midst of a cloud of wavy brown hair rolled over to the wall, and the dumpy nose and chubby cheeks disappeared under the counterpane. Miriam clung to a somewhat startling counterpane—a cotton print with small blue peacocks in the midst of a jungle of yellow moons and red tendrils. I know not where it came from. There is not another like it in the world, to my knowledge. It's only a bed-spread, but Miriam insists on sleeping under it; she says it gives her sweet dreams about white roses and haymaking. I can't see why, but I take her word for it, as there is no getting behind the scenes. Anyhow, I was not prepared for defeat, so I returned to the attack; for I was only carrying out the absolutely solemn pledge that Miriam had exacted from me the day before, and of which her open window and blind reefed to the top to let in the wakening rays served to remind me. This time, then, I folded back an inch or two of bed-clothes, and exposed that ripe pippin of a chin, at the same time laying my hand on her shoulder and rocking it to and fro.

"Wake up, Bunny! we shall be late for the sun." The last word was the magic. Little Miriam sat up in bed as if she had had an electric shock, with her big round eyes wide open. "What's the time?" she asked. "Ten past three; I shall be ready in five minutes."

She was ready as soon as I, and with nothing but sandals on her bare feet, she came patting along the passage to my door. She took my hand and we went out into the cool moist air, leaving the rest of the house asleep. It still wanted half an hour to sunrise, but on the north-eastern horizon lay a rich band of orange and a dreamy shadowless light lay over the earth. The flowers on the ground were closed in sleep—a mere host of nobbly buds. Our way lay by the field path where the long grass drenched our feet, and then beside the wood to Piper's Wait. Who the piper was, whether English or Scotch, or when he lived, I never heard. He is forgotten in name and fame except for the fact that when he came to this spot where the rough sandy road seems to twist itself up with an effort on to the shoulder of the hill, he waited. Miriam and I thought it very likely he did, for finding ourselves both out of breath we too waited a few seconds. Then, "Let's go on again," she said, and on we went until we reached the heathery top.

Far below us on the plain every hollow was a white lake of mist. The orange band in the sky broadened out and softened into pale yellow. The little fleecy clouds high overhead flushed with red and then glittered with gold. Good round sea-clouds travelled steadily up from the west as though they had business on hand, and in this they were not mistaken. The light wind helped the mist to break up. The trees were clear, but cast no shadows yet, and beneath and above and around on every side a ringing chorus of invisible singers.

You cannot tell when the dawn begins, but the birds can. For an hour before sunrise they practise every piece they know, and while the thrushes and blackbirds and larks and other musical folk sing, the people who have no ear for music, such as the starlings and sparrows, talk as loud and as fast as they can, just as ladies and gentlemen do when someone plays the piano. Anyhow, the sun was at the back of it all. He had sent the message on ahead both to sing and to talk, for he was coming.

But presently it seemed as if all the songs had been used up, for no sooner had the sun risen red and splendid over the edge of the world than all the singing ceased. The plain fact is the sun is the signal for breakfast. Down fly the hungry musicians to the ground to discover the early worm. There was not light enough to see him by before, but plenty to praise God and sing the grace by. There is mostly light enough in the world to be glad and thankful. So one by one obeyed—a blackbird one of the last—leaving only a tomtit, who seemed to be too small to remember the rules, trilling out his vigorous ditty to his pigmy wife and his still more pigmy babies.

And now we forgot the concert, as we watched the great sun rise. We fancied him a ship in full sail, a galleon such as Sir Francis Drake used to chase and capture, whose deck was piled with shining ingots of gold, sailing over the calm ocean to the islands with the shining sands. Miriam thought she would like to dig on that sparkling beach, and then, upsetting all our fine fancy, she likened the sun to the balloon at the Crystal Palace as it went up with the light shining on it.

"Is God in the sun?" she asked. "God is in everything beautiful, dear. We sing songs to Him in the sunshine, don't we? Long ago, people used to gather flowers and fruit and lay them before Him, as a present because He brought them the day." "I'll give Him a bunch of buttercups," she said, "and an apple when they 're ripe, but they are very small and green now."

We went home, trotting hand in hand down the hill, and as we came through the meadow a thousand thousand diamonds sparkled on the tips of the grass and the clover and sorrel, and fell as we brushed through. Miriam voted this lovely—"like paddling, but rather cold." She ran into the grassy forest, a very giant there, and laughed and kicked the diamonds off in showers. Before we reached the wicket I stooped down, and taking out my pocket lens bade her look through it at a dewdrop. "Why!" she exclaimed in astonishment, "I see a tiny little house and two trees and the sky, and all upside down, How funny! It's a little fairy looking-glass. All the world in a dew-drop!" "Like your little mind, Miriam, aye? Another crystal globule, with pictures in it of houses and trees, and birds and people, and blue sky; sometimes too, perhaps, rather upside-down."

"Home again!" she chirruped, as we went indoors. In ten minutes she was fast asleep in her cot, with the peacock counterpane over her, dreaming perhaps of how the world wakes.

H. M. LIVENS.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street Strand, London, W.C.

LONDON, JUNE 25, 1904.

AMERICAN UNITARIANISM.

THE anniversary meetings of the American Unitarian Association are held in Boston during Whitweek, at the same time as the meetings of our own Association in London, and the last numbers of the Christian Register which have reached us here, with the Association sermon and some of the chief addresses printed in full, bring to us, in the close bonds of our fellow-feeling and sympathy in common work, a rich store of interest and most welcome stimulus from our brethren's vigorous life.

We referred briefly last week to the address of the President, the Rev. SAMUEL A. ELIOT, D.D., with its survey over the Association's wide field of work. The concluding note of that address was taken up again and again by other speakers, and thus found manifold and very forcible expression, opening a wide outlook upon life, and laying stress upon the essential things of religious duty. "Has not the time come," asked Dr. ELIOT, "when these free churches of ours, acting through their national Association, may enter more directly and unitedly into tasks of education, of active charity, of social justice? Can we not work together for the coming of the kingdom of God and His righteousness in the so-called secular doings and relations of men? Can we not enter upon lines of co-operative endeavour by which our united churches may strive to diminish ignorance, crime, disease, and corruption, and every other evil that infects our modern life? Shall we not contribute to the upbuilding of social order and to the progress of timely reforms? Why should not this Association have committees or departments devoted to the study of the problems of the civil betterment and to guiding our united activities in practical affairs? Is our purpose to promote the interests of pure Christianity fulfilled when we have printed and distributed literature and planted churches? Unitarians, as individuals, have been the leaders of the American Commonwealth in all progressive reforms. Cannot the Unitarian body as a whole now assume that privilege of leadership which belongs to it by right of the labours and sacrifices of heroic men and women who have been trained in our principles? The fathers, faithful, public-spirited, and strong, who stood on the heights of personal influence and power, have laboured. Shall not we together take up their shields of faith and the swords wherewith they were girded by the spirit, and enter into their labours?"

Whether or no the PRESIDENT succeed in persuading his Association, or the churches it represents, to undertake any common action upon these lines, it is undoubtedly a noble ideal which sets concern for the Kingdom in our midst, the righteousness of social order in daily life, in the very fore-front of religious duty. It may be that the churches best fulfil their part in the great work indirectly, by furnishing the inspiration for faithful citizens, who go out from the fellowship of prayer to do the work and unite with others for the most effective advance against the powers of evil; but in any case no member of a church can be counted faithful to his high calling if he regard the claims on his devotion as confined within his own immediate circle and directed only to "church" purposes. Above all stands the claim of righteousness and the demand for faithful, God-fearing, humane, and brotherly men, amid the affairs of daily life.

So the Rev. J. W. CHADWICK, who preached the annual sermon, in his eloquent exposition of "Our Religious Obligations," amid much else that was admirable, rejoiced in the ever-widening sweep of human thought and feeling toward an ideal not only of intellectual freedom and inclusive fellowship, but of the supremacy of character above all the other great realities of life.

> To apprehend it, not merely as our right, but as our duty, to exercise our freest thought upon the highest themes, to recognise a high and kindling fellowship with all, however named, who seek the true and love the beautiful, and try to do the right; to acknowledge the transcendency of character to any doctrine that can be formulated by the human mind—here are privileges and exaltations that we cannot prize too much; here is a place so large that, by whatever way we have come into it, by whatever guides we have been led, we cannot rejoice too gratefully in its plenitude and peace.

And at the public meeting in Tremont Temple, which was devoted to addresses on "The Genius of the Unitarian Movement," more than one speaker took up this earnest plea.

Dr. CHARLES W. ELIOT, the President of Harvard, and father of the Association's President, speaking of what Unitarians teach their children, having referred to toleration and the "temperate-zone gospel—work, industry, and thrift—the very foundation of civilisation," added :—

> Again, they teach their children that the surest happiness is to be found not in the gratifications one seeks for one's self, but in the ameliorations and aids one procures for others. This is the moral source of the Anglo-Saxon virtue of public spirit, a virtue which the Unitarian membership has well illustrated wherever the denomination has taken root. This is a form of collectivisim which Unitarian parents can set before their children and illustrate from history without any fear of impairing their freedom of opinion or their love of liberty, and with full assurance that they are inculcating one of the fundamental doctrines of JESUS.

And Dr. EDWARD EVERETT HALE, in a characteristic address, preached once more a sermon on the one subject which, he said, was the subject of all his sermons—"The present God, the present truth, the real presence of God," "Our Father who art here in heaven." Every true Unitarian, he declared, was proclaiming that Gospel all the time; it was the gospel of life for everybody everywhere, life with God our Father, loving as He loves, working with Him in the world. "Now that is our felicity—that we can go about in that way. We do not have to ask anybody to interpret the past. We can forget the things that are behind; we can reach forward to the things that are before; we can do those things that the MASTER delights to have us do. Live with GOD, and GOD will live with you. This is the real presence of GOD in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries."

At another meeting the Rev. C. E. ST. JOHN, secretary of the Association, gave an address on the general character of their work, from which we must make one final quotation. The ultimate end of all their work, he said, was to deepen in men the sense of their immortal destiny and the consequent serious aspect of life. "The church is the army of the enlisted immortals, in motion and service doing the present work of the world. . . . By virtue of my Unitarianism I want to hold my place in the line, and that is the only aim of my Unitarianism—to make me a part of the army of the immortals."

That means that as Unitarians they work, and the churches work, for the true life now.

> The world needs to have the vision of the life eternal brought to it. So long as there are old men and women coming down to ugly graves, graves made ugly by their lack of conviction and want of righteousness, graves which ought to be brightened up and cleansed by our power to put the vision of the life eternal into those immortal but ignorant souls; so long as the generations of children come forth into our homes, ignorant of life's great things, not knowing what it means to be children of God, and, as we find, not able to avail themselves completely of the experience and knowledge of their fathers and mothers, and therefore obliged to fight their own battles with temptation, win their own victories, and find their own power of the spiritual life; so long as children are thus born into the world, so long will there be need of the marching a my of the immortals, to rally young and old one after another into a common work, which means everything for the dignity, the beauty, and the advancement of life.

No perfecting of machinery will be sufficient for that great work. It is not fresh organisation that is the supreme need, useful as that may be, but life.

We simply want more religion, more religious interest, more power of vision, more passion and earnestness in our speech, more consecration in our personal living; for without the power of the holy life our great vision does but mock humanity, and our words are but lies. We have got to live the things that we proclaim, and we have got to proclaim the vision of the growing consciousness of the immortal life that shall lead to a personal enlistment in the army of God, that on and on and on we may go for ever together.

Those are words which we may also take to heart, in our work and in our churches. It is more religion that we need, religion that is in daily life with clear vision of the things of GOD, and a passion of earnestness and pure unselfish love, to act and speak for the divine truth and righteousness in all the affairs of the world and in the brotherhood of man. To quicken that true spirit of life in us all, in abiding communion with our Father, is what the churches are for.

AMONG its cheap reprints of standard works now in hand, the British and Foreign Unitarian Association includes the late Francis William Newman's "The Soul," a little book that well deserves to be widely distributed in these days of religious unsettlement. The edition which is to be followed is the ninth, which, it is worthy to note, appeared some thirty years ago. The new issue will contain an introduction by the Rev. C. B. Upton, till last year professor of philosophy at Manchester College, Oxford.

PROFESSOR H. H. WENDT'S two lectures recently delivered in this country are to be issued in one book. It will be remembered that the first "Essex Hall Lecture" had for its subject "The Idea and Reality of Revelation"; the second, which was given at Manchester College, Oxford, upon the foundation of the Hibbert Trust, was upon "Typical Forms of Christianity." In Professor Wendt's own view the second lecture was really the completion of the first, and there can be no doubt that the advantages of publishing the two together will be many. The book will be ready in a few weeks.

ALL the truths of religion conspire to one end—spiritual liberty. All the objects which it offers to our thoughts are sublime, kindling, exalting. Its fundamental truth is the existence of one God, one Infinite and Everlasting Father; and it teaches us to look on the universe as pervaded, quickened, and vitally joined into one harmonious and beneficent whole by his ever-present and omnipotent love. By this truth it breaks the power of matter and sense, of present pleasure and pain, of anxiety and fear. It turns the mind from the visible, the outward and perishable, to the Unseen, Spiritual, and Eternal, and, allying it with pure and great objects, makes it free. Channing.

THE PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY OF LANCASHIRE AND CHESHIRE.

THE annual meetings of the Assembly were held at the Moss Side Unitarian Free Church, Manchester, on Thursday, June 16. The day was fine, and there was a large attendance of ministers and delegates. At the morning service the sermon was preached by the Rev. J. C. HIRST, and the devotions were conducted by the Rev. C. T. POYNTING, in the absence of the Rev. J. J. Wright through illness.

THE SERMON.

Mr. Hirst took as his text Psalm cxxxvii. 5, "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget its cunning." His object was to quicken in the freemen of our Jerusalem a love as ardent, a loyalty as determined, a remembrance as faithful, as the passionate devotion of the exile in Babylon for the centre of his national hopes and spiritual affections. Not that he doubted that love and loyalty at present exist, for their fruits were abundantly evident; but some, at least sometimes, did forget Jerusalem, feeling sometimes did become lukewarm, other interests and influences prevailed. All churches, however, sharply contrasted in other respects, have certain great purposes and aims in common. Each, in intention, is a witness for God in the world. Each is a standing reminder that man is a spiritual being, closely related to the things which are unseen and eternal. And behind all differences of theological belief, and of modes of worship, of ecclesiastical procedure, lies the desire, more or less clearly conceived, to win men to worship, to build them up in righteousness, to make them worthy members of the human brotherhood, to open their eyes to their dignity and privileges as sons of the living God. Why, then, claim that special loyalty should be given to one among the many churches which together constitute the Church Universal? Because in the Church with which we are associated there are present, in a degree we find nowhere else, conditions favourable—essential—to worship in spirit and in truth, to the increase of simple integrity, and of that love of one's neighbour which is the fulfilling of the law. The preacher dwelt upon only two of those conditions, namely, the freedom we enjoy and the largeness of our faith.

Spiritual Freedom.

Our freedom is not the freedom, merely, of Free Church Councils; not merely independence of State regulation and control. Its beginning is in the emancipation of the individual mind. The ministers of our Churches are free to preach the truth as God may manifest it to their hearts and minds; and the people in the pews are free to receive or reject it according to their own reason and conscience. Those who glory in the name of Unitarian insist upon no doctrines as a condition and test of membership. Their community is an Open Brotherhood. As they themselves are free, they will never forge fetters for those who come after them. Hence their open trusts. Dr. Torrey, the Evangelist, says that people become Unitarians because "they love sin," and that they may "lead a more loose life." No Unitarian could ever be tempted to make such an infamous charge against a theological opponent. He who is free learns to respect others' freedom; and he charges no man with sin on the ground of intellectual conclusions he has honestly reached. Furthermore, the acknowledgment of the principle of freedom removes the temptation to hide one's convictions, to juggle with words, to use them with a non-natural meaning, to be unveracious in the worship of God. The strict regulation of belief turns men into dissemblers; the bold, who retain their places, it forces into rebellion. Men in creed-bound Churches who speak out take liberties; men in our pulpits use their liberties. In the one case they are acting against a principle to which they are pledged; in the other they are exercising a privilege which is their acknowledged right. The Bishops of the Northern Province, in a recent report to Convocation in York, declare that the recitation of the Athanasian Creed in public worship "has long caused pain and distress to many of the faithful, and that this distress is spreading and deepening in our own time." The Bishops further state that the impression conveyed by the minority clauses of the creed "is at variance with our fundamental belief in God as the God of righteousness and love." The preacher asserted that any man who pronounces the clauses in question, or any man who explicitly or implicitly sanctions and endorses them, while he feels that they are at variance with his fundamental belief in God as a God of righteousness and love, is actually committing blasphemy. For what is blasphemy if it be not saying to God or about God what one feels and knows to be an insult to His moral perfection? Do we always appreciate our freedom at its true worth? In many ways we are undoubtedly at a disadvantage, socially and otherwise. But this freedom to think and to love, and to be true to the best and highest, is an inestimable privilege which only those who do not realise its priceless worth would barter away for any worldly advantage.

The Largeness of their Faith.

Then, with regard to the largeness o our faith, it is not true, as some suppose that the religion on which our souls subsist, and which we offer for the acceptance of our brethren, is a meagre remainder from fuller and more life-giving creeds. If we deny, it is in order to affirm some wider and deeper thought concerning the divine wisdom and righteousness, and the relationship of human souls to the Eternal Father; if from the windows of the spiritual temple we rub off some pictures traced thereon by speculative system-makers, it is that we may let in the heavenly sunshine and open a prospect of the everlasting hills and the star-lit skies.

Practical Loyalty.

As to the ways in which we may display our loyalty. First of all there was regular attendance at service, for the purpose of giving as well as getting, to strengthen the devotion of our fellows by the power of sympathy, to add our warmth to the glow of devotion, and to encourage the faithful by our visible interest and allegiance. Let our attendance be not as spectators, but as worshippers. Our Sunday School Associations and District Missionary Societies need to be backed up and strengthened. Their effectiveness is limited by want of men and means. Fields white unto harvest await them; but opportunities are lost which greater working power could have seized. More liberal money contributions to denominational efforts ought to be among the results of increased loyalty. In almost every large town where our churches have been favoured by the ministry of strong and lofty-minded teachers, men are found who have been nurtured in those churches who are among the most trusted and respected leaders in philanthropy, education and municipal work. They will labour for, and they will give with the utmost generosity to hospitals, universities and suchlike general objects. But in many cases they do not give to the religious fraternity of which they form a part with corresponding open-handedness. No one would wish less to be done for higher education or for the sick poor; but one would like to see more done for the spread of that form of Christianity in which these good men were nurtured and to which they owe in no small degree, as many of them readily confess, their charitable impulses, their public spirit, their love of intellectual light. The loyal mayor would attend in state his own chapel, the loyal bride would be married in her own dissenting conventicle.

Train the Young People.

Finally, young people are, in too many instances, allowed to grow up with a very imperfect acquaintance with the contents and the grounds of their father's faith. The fathers will not bias them, not even by giving them the most elementary knowledge concerning their own distinctive beliefs. They are often sent to schools where orthodoxy, frequently of the High Church variety, pervades the atmosphere. Even when we establish a public school for the education of our sons, we make its relation to our churches as little obvious as possible. It is founded with money left by a pronounced Unitarian who kept up an open connection with his local chapel to his life's end, and who made bequests for the support of more congregations than one. True, "there is daily morning prayer and a religious service in the school on Sunday." True, "the history of religious liberty and rational faith receive attention," this instruction being "in the hands of teachers free from tests." But the boys are not taken to worship in the place where their founder worshipped; no sense of being part of a religious community is fostered in them; no sense of a life in common with a wide-spread brotherhood is cultivated; no allegiance to a particular Jerusalem is encouraged. The preacher did not question the loyalty of those who are responsible; but he doubted the wisdom of their action if it were desired that in the future the lads who are thus dealt with should be faithful and attached members of any of our churches, zealous co-workers for the spread of spiritual freedom and the larger faith. We Englishmen hold that in striving to make our nation strong and righteous and free we are doing a service to our race; and, in like manner, in loving our spiritual Jerusalem, in standing by it and seeking its honour, we are doing nothing less, according to the light that has been given us, and in the place to which we have been called, than striving to extend the Kingdom of God.

THE BUSINESS MEETING.

The afternoon business meeting was presided over by the Rev. Dendy Agate, the retiring President.

The PRESIDENT, in his address, sympathetically referred to the dreadful calamity which had occurred in America, and also to the serious illness of Dr. Mackennal, a Congregational minister highly honoured in the Manchester district. He also spoke of the losses sustained by the Assembly in the deaths during the past year of Alderman Harry Rawson, the Revs. Dr. Brooke Herford, C. H. Wellbeloved, Joseph Freeston, and T. R. Elliott. He noted the publication, during the last few months, of two books of conspicuous scholarship by members of that Assembly: Dr. Drummond's "Enquiry into the Character and Authorship of the Fourth Gospel," and the Rev. Travers Herford's "Talmud and Midrash," as the fruit of many years of thought and labour. He also referred to the special efforts to raise money for much-needed work by the East Cheshire Christian Union, the Manchester District Association, and the Manchester Domestic Missions, and also of the North and East Lancashire Mission. The proposal to commemorate the Jubilee of the Unitarian Home Missionary College by raising a large sum of money with which to provide the College with a permanent home and its students with a residence was set forth by some 95 per cent. of its past and present students, who, with splendid generosity, were prepared to show their faith by their works, and, out of incomes none of them large and most of them scanty, to provide £1,000 towards the cost. The Unitarian Home Missionary College was deeply rooted in the affections of its students, many of whom could not have entered the ministry without its aid. He desired to point out to those who might view the maintenance of two colleges on English soil doing largely the same work for the same group of churches as savouriug of extravagance, that Manchester College, Oxford, and the Unitarian Home Missionary College were not rival institutions. As to amalgamation or absorption, whether desirable or not, it is not at present practicable; for it has formally to be recognised that they did not all see things from the same point of view, or lay the same emphasis on the same considerations. But it was not the first time in history that that kind of thing had happened. In the eyes of some of its chief supporters, M.C.O. stands primarily as a school of free theology; in the eyes of some of its chief supporters the U.H.M.C. stands primarily as a place of education for ministers for Unitarian congregations. He for one could not see any incompatibility between the two aims—if their Unitarianism was as free in origin as they believed it to be, and as large in spirit as it ought to be. For, as a matter of fact, M.C.O. has for more than a hundred years trained ministers for our pulpits; that has been its chief practical work; and, as a matter of fact, the U.H.M.C. has for fifty years trained ministers for their pulpits, and all its principals, tutors, and clerical secretaries have been M.C. men. Moreover, that the two institutions do not differ in principle is shown in this way—if words are to be taken in their natural sense—that fourteen years ago, the U.H.M.C., when it entered on its new order of things under its present Principal, deliberately announced as part of its preamble words from the front page of the M.C. report, and has ever since affirmed that it "adheres to the principle of freely imparting Theological Knowledge without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological doctrines." That means that in both Colleges alike students are asked to come, not without personal convictions, but with open minds; and that while their teachers gave them of their best, the students are not bound to any particular conclusions. Why, then, some ask, a Unitarian College at all? Because your dear brother who worships by your side, rightly or wrongly, sets great store by the name; though you conceivably do not like it or do not wish to see it, as you think, misapplied, and because "Unitarian" College means a college supported by the people, some of whom call themselves and are called by others Unitarians; and because Unitarianism is the truest, freest, most open-minded and large-hearted form of religion of which he knew anything; and because, if it were not, some of them would not have anything more to do with it. He believed that closer co-operation between the two colleges was both practicable and desirable. No wise person proposed to label Manchester College Unitarian; no wise person proposed to *un*label the Unitarian Home Missionary College. Indeed, there are few occupations which tended less to harmony, however temporarily exhilarating they may be, than the occupation of sticking labels on those who do not wish to have them, or pulling them off those who do. He desired a future of constantly growing honour and usefulness for Manchester College, the institution that trained him; if, as he hoped, the Unitarian Home Mission College enters on a new lease of life in this her year of jubilee, her work will be strengthened not only by co-operation with Manchester College, but by being brought into close touch with the new free Faculty of Theology established in the Victoria University of Manchester. In a reference to the Education Act the President said he imagined most of them were clear as to the points on which they ought to press for amendment when the opportunity came. The Education Committee on which he himself served was Church and Conservative in the proportion of about three to one as compared with Liberals and Nonconformists, but he had been struck by the evident desire of all members to work fairly all round, and he was glad to bear public testimony to that fact.

PUBLIC QUESTIONS.

The Committee's report on public questions referred to the Education Act, the licensing question, the housing problem, the love of sport and pleasure, the treatment of natives in the Congo Free State, and the Chinese Labour Ordinance. The Education Act, it was stated, was no settlement of the question, and had only aggravated past grievances. It was framed in ecclesiastical interests, and mainly in those of a single denomination. No compromise must be thought of which conflicted with the principles of public management of all State-paid schools, direct election of education authorities, the abolition of all sectarian tests, national training colleges free from all denominational control, and the general application of the conscience and Cowper-Temple clauses. The views of the Committee on the Licensing Bill were summed up in a resolution submitted subsequently to the Assembly. The Committee saw cause for joy at the awakening of public interest in the housing question and the increasing efforts towards amelioration by municipal and other authorities. As to the love of sport and pleasure, the Committee, while acknowledging that the true love of sport bred a wonderful keenness and the ambition to excel which was the secret of all success in life, expressed the opinion that inordinate attention was given to sports and games, often to the almost entire exclusion of other interests. Condemning the Chinese Labour Ordinance, the Committee considered that if the terms were not those of slavery they were terms of a condition of service very much akin to slavery and entirely opposed to all conceptions of freedom.

Mr. H. P. GREG, who moved the reception of the report, said there were two things to be borne in mind with regard to the Education Act. First, that the establishment of the County Council educational authority had come to stay, and for the next thirty years they must endeavour to make the very best of that authority. Secondly, it was equally clear that the Act must be amended on the very first possible opportunity. As to the Licensing Bill, under it the local magistrates would be deprived of all their influence at the Brewster Sessions. The publican would no longer have daily and nightly before him the fear of those annual sessions. The removal of that moral influence he considered to be one of the biggest blots in the Bill. The introduction of Chinese labour into South Africa, he said, was one of the most retrograde and infamous steps this country had ever taken.

The Rev. C. PEACH seconded the motion. Mention should have been made, he said, of the "peaceful" mission to Thibet. The whole business was supposed to be the reconstruction of the broken threads of commerce between two peoples, but we were engaged in it at the present moment by a process of bloodshed and animosity, with all the shocking misunderstandings and ill-feeling that must result from the forcing of our ideals upon a people who had a perfect right to live a secluded life if they chose. Mr. Peach said the Education Act was to be condemned for the opportunities which it gave—opportunities which were being largely used—for the extension of sectarian centres of influence, and especially for Roman Catholic propaganda in this country. While, however, they condemned the Act, they appreciated the spirit in which it had been administered in many districts. The establishment of a free faculty of theology at Manchester University was a vindication of truths for which that Assembly had stood through 200 years.

The Rev. J. J. SHAW protested against that portion of the report which referred to sport and pleasure. It seemed to him, he said, that the report commended what it ought to condemn and condemned what it ought to commend. If it was intended for the great masses of non-church going people he feared it would be abortive. If their sport were stopped it did not follow that people would go to church. So far as their own young people were concerned, the way to get them to take an interest in serious and important matters was to sympathise with them in their lighter moods and moments.

After others had spoken the motion for the adoption of the report was carried.

The Licensing Bill.

The Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL, on behalf of the Committee, proposed a resolution which called upon the Assembly to offer strenuous opposition to the Licensing Bill, for the reasons that it took from the licensing justices powers which they had exercised for more than 400 years, and, in part, replaced their jurisdiction by that of the quarter sessions; made the refusal of licences dependent upon the payment of compensation to be drawn from a fund so insignificant as to postpone indefinitely any adequate reduction in the number of licences; gave to the drink trade a freehold in licences which were only annual grants, and established a vested interest where none had hitherto existed; would render further amendment of the licensing law more difficult than at present, and would be an obstacle to all social, moral, and religious improvement.

The resolution was passed, and it was resolved to send copies of it to the Prime Minister and the Home Secretary, Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman and other Liberal leaders, and to the local members of Parliament.

The Advisory Committee.

The Committee's report referred with pleasure to the welcoming of the Rev. Charles Craddock, formerly Congregationalist minister, of Congleton, into the province, and to his appointment as minister of the ancient chapel of Toxteth, Liverpool. The Committee, in common with the Assembly, of which Mr. Rawson was one of the oldest and most revered members, its first lay president, and long its treasurer, deplored the irreparable loss sustained in his death. From the date of the Committee's first establishment, he gave to its service the invaluable benefit of his wise counsel, his judicial impartiality, and his unsurpassed knowledge of the congregations in the province, and of the qualifications needed in those who should fitly occupy their pulpits. Inspired by his life-long affection for the religious community which finds its collective representative in Lancashire and Cheshire in this Assembly, he gave to its Advisory Committee all his best thought under a deep sense of the responsibility he incurred as a member of a body to whom was committed the custody of the highest interests of its congregations in the preservation of the character of their ministry.

Mr. G. W. R. Wood was elected President of the Assembly for the ensuing year, and the Rev. Charles Roper was elected Supporter. Mr. John Dendy was re-elected Treasurer, and the Revs. H. E. Dowson and R. T. Herford secretaries.

The following were elected members of the General Committee:—The Revs. G. Evans, T. B. Evans, A. W. Fox, C. Peach, C. Roper, T. P. Spedding, S. A. Steinthal, and J. J. Wright, Messrs. J. R. Beard, H. P. Greg, P. Leigh, D. A. Little, J. H. Pimley, R. Robinson, S. B. Worthington, and Mrs. G. E. Heape.

A cordial invitation was extended by the Monton congregation for the Assembly to hold its next Annual Meetings in Monton, and was gladly accepted. The local arrangements at Moss Side, including lunch and tea, were most satisfactory, and were highly appreciated. At intervals during the day selections were played on the church organ by Mr. Rufus R. Burgess, the local organist.

EVENING MEETING.

The evening meeting was presided over by Mr. J. H. PIMLEY, a member of the Moss Side Church, who extended a hearty welcome to the ministers and friends. Those meetings, he said, must be a source of help and encouragement to all who were privileged to attend. It was an opportunity of hearing words of wisdom from wise counsellors, to send out to the world at large their own message, and to take their stand on the great questions affecting the public welfare. It was also a time for renewing friendships. As to their faith, he said there were thousands of worshippers in other churches, members of other denominations, who believed as they believed, who were entirely in sympathy with them, but who, from some cause or other, whether from lack of courage or moral strength, did not join them. There were also many who, driven from other churches by their intolerance, had lost heart, and drifted away from worship altogether. There must be many such, who, if they only knew of our simple and tolerant and Christlike faith, would find a haven of rest and peace amongst us.

The Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS gave an address on "Old Insight and New Outlook." Its purport was that the expectations with which men had looked out upon the new age had been largely disappointed. They had mistaken the sunset glow of the nineteenth century, in which some of the greatest men had sunk to their rest, for the dawn of the New Age. The New Age opened grey and stormily. Men remembering the great achievements of the nineteenth century in physical research, in historical criticism, and in attempts at social amelioration, were looking for a different harvest. They looked for peace and were offered war; they looked for the methods of arbitration and were offered militarism; they looked for constitutional and rationa government and were confronted with Imperialism; they looked for a simpler Christianity and a disappearance of sectarianism, and were confronted with the ancient spirit of domination. The strenuousness of the nineteenth century had passed into an age of unsettled convictions, a lowering of moral and spiritual standards, an age largely of vanities. Science had in some directions drifted from its old insight and its assured method by way of facts and generalisations from facts. The atom was again playing a large part in the realm of speculation, and had been likened to the Sheldonian Theatre full of highly charged electrified bodies clashing in all directions, a description reminding one of the Sheldonian Theatre during a recent state of excitement. Reference was made to futile attempts at organisation. Organisation, like the poet, was born, and not made. Old insight and respect for the law of liberty would also probably lead to complete surcease of the worry around the names Presbyterian and Unitarian. They had been likened to Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, the same person seen from different points of view. Some allusion was made to the college controversy. The old insight of Manchester College, Oxford, had not hitherto been at fault. The new outlook of the Manchester Unitarian Home Missionary College was hopeful insomuch as the scheme for residential and collegiate buildings was born of the enthusiasm of the students, carrying with it committees and subscribers, tutors and spectators. It was hoped that the new enthusiasm for university movements in large towns would deepen the seriousness of this new movement of the Unitarian Missionary College; that it would inspire to combine the chivalrous culture of Penshurst, Sir Philip Sidney's house, "a college situated in a purer air, so that his house was a university in a less volume," and Port Royal, with its severe self-examination and care for the poor.

Mr. C. B. BYLES spoke on "The Need of a Message." He referred to a sense of disappointment and of failure in our Churches. The present generation must not take credit for the triumphs of the past, but rather for the failures of the present. It was difficult to maintain enthusiasm and energy in favour of a negative position. There was a lack of enthusiasm among the churches as a whole. It was said that Unitarianism was a convenient religion which made few demands. A religion which made no demands was no religion. Some seemed to think it was respectable to have a religion, and that they might just as well have the most convenient. Respectability was a sign of decay, and was the reason of the lack of enthusiasm. There was need of a message, for a church without a message was no church. Churches were confusing the issues of life and death, and needed a simple message. There was an increasing power over the forces of nature, but no corresponding increase of the sense of responsibility. The duty of the Church was to teach of the divinity within man. Such an urgent message would itself solve many of the problems and perplexities of to-day.

The Rev. M. R. SCOTT gave an address on "Unitarianism and the Devotional Spirit." He said there was a contention that Unitarianism was not spiritual enough, and many reasons were given. There was a good deal of weak rationalism in the churches. In the past they had had much critical and negative work to do, and a great deal still remained to be done, but it must be done in the right spirit. The best men in the churches were of devotional spirit. The clinging of men to what they wished to be truth was a worship which needed scrutiny. The real destruction of worship was not in open criticism, for there could not be worship of God in the true spirit without it. Not by closing their lips and minds against any negation could they arrive at a more worshipful spirit, but by opening every window of the spirit to the light of heaven.

On the motion of the Rev. DENDY AGATE, a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the Moss Side friends for the excellent provision they had made for the comfort of their visitors, and was responded to by the Rev. CHARLES ROPER.

WINIFRED HOUSE.

ANNUAL MEETING.

THE annual meeting of Winifred House Invalid Children's Convalescent Nursing Home was held on Monday afternoon at University Hall, Gordon-square, the chair being taken by Mrs. W. Blake Odgers.

Mr. W. M. BLYTH, the treasurer, presented the accounts for the year ending April, 1904, which showed receipts from subscriptions £328 and donations £155; from the Hospital Saturday Fund £35 and obligatory payments on behalf of patients £165. Total ordinary income for the thirteenth year £718 3s. 9d., with a balance of £210 14s. 7d. in hand, reduced to £124 10s. The payments included £289 for provisions and £15 for drugs and dressings, £131 for domestic expenses, and £111 for establishment charges; ground-rent, £20; honorarium, salaries, and wages, £212; making, with miscellaneous and administration charges, a total of £806 2s. 11d.

Miss MARIAN PRITCHARD read the annual report; first giving a warm message of greeting from Mr. Hampson, her co hon. secretary, who was prevented by ill-health from being present.

The report stated that the work of the Home in its thirteenth year had been fully maintained, and in some respects slightly surpassed that of other years. The average number of beds used was 17½ (19 being the full number), more than ever before. The reason that the number of children was fewer was the feeling of the committee that it was better to do lasting good to a rather smaller number, and not risk relapses by too short a stay. 41 children had been received, of whom 12 remained more than a year, 16 from three to six months, the other 13 for periods averaging five weeks. They came from all parts of London, and in almost every instance excellent results have been attained. Careful feeding and mothering had worked wonders. The report of the honorary medical officers was most satisfactory. The finances were not so satisfactory, for there had been a serious falling off in subscriptions. For some years they had received a generous anonymous donation of £25, but this year it had not been received.* The increase in donations was due to the prompt response to a special appeal last autumn, when repairs in the buildings had to be attended to at once, and £104 was quickly given. The higher expenditure was due to more efficient work, and the report made warm acknowledgment of Miss Hope's most thorough and capable management of the Home, and also of the help rendered by the three young nurses. The report closed with a reference to the Home's thirteen years, which was the same time for which Mrs. Hampson had carried on her own special work, and with the aspiration that the Home might be worthy of her, to whose beloved memory it had been dedicated.

Mrs. BLAKE ODGERS, in moving the adoption of the report, referred to the valuable address given by Mr. Loch as chairman of the last annual meeting. To one point on which he laid stress she could bear testimony, and that was to the homelike character of the Home; there was not only perfect cleanliness and order, but a real home atmosphere which was of the utmost benefit; it made their stay in the home a time of mental and moral uplifting to the boys and girls who were received there. She was sure they must take its influence back with them to their own homes, and a lasting impression was often made. She heartily agreed with the feeling of the committee that it was better to do lasting good to comparatively few rather than attempt too much. She urged that they should interest their young people in the work, and encourage them to give small subscriptions, so that in time they might come to take the place of the elders as they dropped away. It might be a good thing to appoint one of the young people as collector for the Home in each of their congregations, and let the management of the work be in their own hands. They could have no hope for the future, if they failed to interest their young people. She had great pleasure in moving the adoption of the report.

The Rev. W. WOODING seconded, and said there could be nothing more perfectly Christian than that attempt, even in so small and humble a way, to do such personal loving work for weak and ailing children. He congratulated the managers on what they achieved.

The report having been unanimously adopted, the officers and committee were elected, on the motion of Mr. T. P. YOUNG, seconded by Miss TITFORD.

A vote of thanks to the honorary medical officers, the lady superintendent, and the nurses was passed on the motion of Miss THORNHILL, seconded by Mrs. HOWARD YOUNG, and a vote of thanks to Mrs. Odgers for presiding, moved by Miss PRITCHARD, brought the meeting to a close.

* It is pleasant to be able to announce that since the meeting Miss Pritchard has received that £25 from the unknown donor.

COUNTRY HOLIDAY MOVEMENT. — Miss Lawrence, 23, Campden House-chambers, Campden Hill, London, W., acknowledges with thanks receipt for this fund of the following sums:—Miss Stainbank, 10s. 6d.; G. F. T., 10s.; Mr. Ronald Jones, £1 1s.; Elgin, 5s; Miss White, £1 1s.

THE remedy against the extension of pauperism does not lie in the liberalities of the rich. It lies in the hearts and habits of the poor.—Chalmers.

DRAW the curtain of night upon injuries, shut them up in the tower of oblivion, and let them be as though they had not been.—Sir Thomas Browne.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

THE ESSENTIAL THING.

SIR,—There are, I suppose, few, if any, of us who do not deeply lament the controversies which from time to time arise among us, especially when they tend to develop personal animosities and mutual suspicion. That we who, alike by inheritance and profession, stand pledged to a perfect liberty of thought, should nevertheless find the occasion of serious trouble in matters of opinion, and in the names which we give and the institutions we found to propagate opinions, is indeed a melancholy thing. It seems to be a crucial instance of the curse which has been upon the Christian Church since very early days. Provided by its founder with a bond of unity in the spheres of duty and affection, it has, with a marvellous perverseness, been ever ready to find and magnify causes of dissension in matters of opinion on subjects necessarily of a more or less speculative and uncertain nature. Passing by the possibilities of union on matters which directly concern the daily life of men, it has magnified into occasions of discord differences which are inevitable in the consideration of subjects more remote and less capable of being really understood. The tendency seems ineradicable to attach more importance to what men think about difficult and doubtful questions, than to what they should do in matters where the call to action is clear, and feel where the claim for sympathy is strong. Yet so long as this tendency prevails, so long will divisions multiply, and the unity of the Kingdom be sacrificed to the assertiveness of the individual.

For the right of the individual to think freely on these difficult questions and hold his own opinions unmolested, it was necessary and inevitable that a fight, strong and determined, should be made; but when that liberty has been won, it is quite another thing to pit his own opinions against those of another, and make it a first duty to wage war on their behalf.

It is vain to look for a formula which will reconcile all such opinions and facilitate a unity on such lines. If such a formula could be found to-day, it would be useless to-morrow. The remedy must surely be sought in another direction, namely, in relegating all such matters of opinion to the secondary place which is properly theirs, and in concentrating attention on those essentials of religion which are common to all schools of thought. As the occasion of some great calamity which calls for immediate action and help shames into silence all animosities, and for the time obliterates all dissensions and distinctions in the witnesses, so the perpetual shipwreck of humanity ought to appeal to all followers of the Master, and furnish them with a firm bond of unity. We need, indeed, "to go out of ourselves to find ourselves." After all, what we think matters so little compared with what we feel and do. The saints are of every church and clime, and it is to be saints, not theologians, that we are called. The world needs as much as ever it did that a body of men should stand strongly together pledged to resist its cruelty, its grossness, its materialism, and to exemplify in action the love which was in Jesus. If we could find our recognised bond of union on these lines we should also soon find that we held our opinions on abstruse and difficult questions with more humility, attaching to them less importance; and, to borrow an expression from a recent speaker, be less anxious to affix labels to ourselves or others. They would cease to have that fatal power of division which they now have. We should learn to hold them in suspense, provisionally, waiting for the further light; for the individual who holds them no doubt important, but not to be so pressed as to endanger that co-operation in Christian work and that Christian good feeling which have the first claim upon us.

It sometimes looks as though the true Church were slowly forming itself anew outside all organised churches, in the bodies of men and women who are patiently devoting themselves to work essentially Christian and of many kinds, without any reference to their theological opinions, and that the time would come when religious communities, as we now know them, paralysed by their perpetual tendency to disputation, will have to give place to some new, more vital, and more practical organisation of the kingdom.

JOHN DENDY.

OUR COLLEGES.

SIR,—The central factor in the discussion of the above grave subject is the fact that two colleges, for a small body like ours, are one too many; and, thus far, no correspondent in your columns has ventured to deny that central fact on its own merits. To me, the fact itself is by no means a new revelation, for, more than ten years since, there appeared a letter of mine in THE INQUIRER, in which I insisted on the fact and suggested it as an all-sufficient reason why the two Colleges should become one; and all that has happened since has more than confirmed me in what I then said. I was, in that far off time, it is true, as "the voice of one crying in the wilderness," though my letter at once called forth the cordial thanks of not a few readers, including, at least, one of our most distinguished ministers; but, in contending for the like vital significance of the same fact within these last few weeks, in signing the memorial to the two College Committees, I found myself in extremely good and decidedly numerous company. I see, from the report of the annual meeting of the Union of our Yorkshire churches, in your issue of last week, that I am credited with appealing to "the denomination not to throw away its money," by thoughtlessly going on in the maintenance of two colleges where one was more than ample. "The order," as thus set forth, is rather too large; for, while the meeting at Sheffield was distinctly larger than usual at the anniversary of our Union, it yet did not occur to me to take it either as "the denomination" or as an adequate representation of "the denomination," and my actual appeal, therefore, was simply to the meeting itself, and to such local churches as it represented. None the less, however, I hold that, so long as it seeks to maintain two colleges where one would be quite enough, "the denomination" is "throwing away its money," wasting the energies of some of its best men, and squandering precious means in every possible direction. To me it seems perfectly clear that, whether or not there ever was a time when two colleges, in our small body, were needed, there certainly is no need for two now, when both, by the gradual revolution of the younger, have come to be recognised each as, in all essential respects, equal to the other, and not a word has yet been said to prove the contrary.

Moreover, if we, as a denomination, do not need two colleges when both are taken on their own merits, much less do we need two for such sectional ends in our churches as have recently been suggested to us. I have seen and heard many rather astonishing things in our churches and our denominational papers, but I have never either seen or heard anything more astonishing than Mr. J. R. Beard's declaration that, "after eight years' experience" on its committee, he was convinced that the maintenance of Manchester College was "not in the interests of our churches," and that the real reason for the perpetuation and renewal of the Home Missionary College was that we needed "at least one college" for the study of "Unitarianism as a concrete body of religious faith," centring in "the unity of God and the brotherhood of man," that what are quite wrongfully called "our Unitarian churches" need "a Unitarian College," for the training of what, with equal incorrectness, are called "Unitarian ministers." We are thus logically either to be committed, on sectional grounds, to the abandonment of the open trust of our churches, with its natural and inevitable accompaniment of "free teaching and free learning" in our colleges, and to the consequent ousting of Manchester College in favour of the Home Missionary College, "in the interest of our churches," or to the re-establishment of the younger college on a sectarian basis, in ceaseless antagonism to the unsectarian basis of the elder. When the highly esteemed President of the Home Missionary College goes on, quite inconsistently, to talk of "the body of doctrine" to the teaching of which that College is to be re-dedicated, as "varying in form, open to development," he simply gives away his special reason for the perpetuation of the College; for how, without the free use of the very principle of "free teaching and free learning," which, in the case of Manchester College, he so gravely discounts, can he guarantee the periodic and timely revision of "the body of doctrine" for which the Home Missionary College, on his own hypothesis, is to stand? Meanwhile, it is only too evident that other advocates of the burdensome and needless perpetuation of the two-college system on the sectional basis, following Mr. Beard's example, have bettered his instructions. We were some of us told, for instance, the other week, from one of our open trust pulpits, that the principle of "free teaching and free learning" brought on "creeping paralysis," while a little later on, in another place, we learned that it was to be more than ever regarded as the special recommendation of the Home Missionary College that it bore "on its forefront the Unitarian name." Are we really thus still doomed, not simply to have two colleges where one alone would be quite enough, but also two sets of ministers, two classes of congregations, and, therefore, to all intents and purposes, two denominations in one? For quite thirty years of the fifty during which the Home Missionary College has existed, we were dual in all these respects, because of differences, or supposed differences, in ministerial training. Are we now, when those differences have been gradually eliminated, to remain dual, in all the same invidious and disastrous ways, in obedience to a miserable sectionalism that ought never to be heard of in our ranks? The more one considers these grave aspects of one of the gravest questions that ever came denominationally before us, the more impossible does it become to accept the alleged sectional reason for the otherwise needless perpetuation of two colleges.

Looking at all the facts and principles involved as fully and as fairly as I can, I am only able to see one possible basis on which we could maintain, or attempt to maintain, two colleges, instead of wisely entering upon a friendly arrangement by which the two could virtually become one. Resolutely keeping both colleges in full harmony with all the theologically free traditions of our churches, whatever differences of name might be thus perpetuated, we might possibly go on in steady hope of the time when our small body might actually become large enough to find as much room for two as there is now for one only. When, some little time since, I ventured to say, in a mixed company, that we were "too small a body for two colleges," two of my ministerial brethren quite startled me by the vigour of their "No! no!" Let all such bold brethren rest assured that nothing would please me more than that they should prove to be right and I wrong on that point. They must, however, forgive me for asking for, at least, a little semblance of proof in favour of their contention as against mine. If they can and will prove that, having two colleges, doing the same work, on the same free principles for the same free churches, we can, say within the next fifty years or so, easily make ample room for both of them, I will give up my case against them, and undertake to pay down a reasonably good subscription to the new venture, some time between now and the completed enterprise. For the rest, we must all keep our tempers, and agree to differ, if differ we still must.

W. MELLOR.

Huddersfield, June 20, 1904.

To CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from J. T. D., L. D., T. J. H., J. A. K., G. A. P., P. P., W. W. C. P., P. E. R., M. J. S. (Thanks), E. L. H. T., J. W.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Wednesday, or Thursday Morning at latest.]

Bolton: Bank-street.—The annual Sunday-school sermons were preached on Sunday last, both in the morning and evening, by the Rev. J. H. Weatherall, and in the afternoon there was a special scholars' service, conducted by the Rev. John Evans. Throughout the day the congregations were large, and the collections amounted to over £101, being an increase of £17 over last year.

East Cheshire Christian Union Bazaar.—A very successful garden fête was held in the parsonage grounds and cricket field, Gee Cross, last Saturday. Fair weather favoured the occasion, and the arrangements were admirably carried out by the local friends. The Hyde Borough Band, which had offered its services gratuitously, was in attendance, and gave selections during the afternoon and evening. For the children, races and games were provided, while their seniors indulged in tennis, croquet, bowls, and other forms of recreation. Stalls for the sale of flowers, fruit, sweets, and dairy produce were in charge of ladies of the Gee Cross congregation. Tea was provided in a large marquee, where also action dances were performed by children of the Sunday-school, and humorous sketches by members of the dramatic society. The Hyde Chapel singing class rendered glees and part songs. The fête was attended by 700 persons, including parties from Ashton, Dunkinfield, Flowery Field, Glossop, Knutsford, and Stockport, and realised upwards of £50. It was a matter of great regret to all present that the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson, through whose kindness the fete had been organised, was unable to take an active part in the proceedings. His present indisposition compelled him to remain indoors. He was able, however, to see the party from his window, and right heartily he seemed to enjoy it. His early restoration to complete physical vigour is earnestly desired by his many friends in East Cheshire, who hold him in the deepest admiration and affection.

Evesham.—On June 15 a garden fête and sale of work, in aid of incidental expenses in connection with the Unitarian Chapel, were held in Greenhill Park, by kind permission of Mr. Geoffrey New. The receipts were about £60; the expenses are expected to amount to about £10.

Glasgow (South St. Mungo-street).—The first of a series of open-air lectures was delivered by the Rev. E. T. Russell on Sunday, June 19, on Glasgow Green. Mr. Russell's subject was "Unitarianism, its Principles and Ethics." An audience of between two and three hundred persons listened very patiently and attentively to an exposition of views concerning religious beliefs, which were evidently quite novel to most of them. A large quantity of Unitarian pamphlets and tracts were distributed among the crowd, and it is to be hoped that some good will come out of this effort to popularise our faith in the east-end of Glasgow.

Glossop.—The anniversary services were held last Sunday (June 19), and were in every respect a noteworthy and inspiriting success. Splendid congregations assembled at both services to welcome the preacher, the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, an old friend, and one of the pioneers of the mission of 1871 which led to the establishment of the Church. The music was excellent, the singing hearty, and the discourses earnest, vigorous, and stimulating. The collections amounted to £56, the largest sum taken in the church, and more than £15 in advance of last year. The last financial year, ending on April 30, has also been one of the most successful for a long time past. After paying off a number of outstanding debts of the previous year, and meeting several items of extraordinary expenditure, the congregation on its current account owes no man anything, and begins its new year with a fair balance to the good. And this in spite of the recent prolonged and severe depression in the local industry of cotton.

Guildford.—The annual flower services were held at the Ward-street Church on June 12, when the Rev. E. Rattenbury Hodges preached appropriate sermons. At the afternoon service he addressed a gathering of young people (about thirty of whom had come over from Meadrow, Godalming) with a plain talk on some elementary truths concerning plant life. At both morning and evening services the choir sang effectively Hatton's fine anthem "Consider the lilies;" the singing was especially good in the evening, when there was a large congregation.

Hinckley.—On Saturday, June 19, the Rev. W. G. Price concluded his ministry here. Large congregations assembled for these farewell services, as Mr. Price is highly respected by the inhabitants for his interest and work in town affairs. On Saturday, June 18, the young people and members of the congregation met for tea. Afterwards Mr. S. Good, J.P., on behalf of the young people and members of the Church, presented Mr. Price with a purse containing fifty guineas, and to Mrs. Price a silver tea service in recognition of the splendid work done during his ministry. Mr. and Mrs. Price thanked their friends for the kindness they had received during their ten years in Hinckley. It had been a happy period for them.

London: Hackney.—On Sunday last the Rev. R. H. U. Bloor, B.A., preached his farewell sermons at the New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, Hackney. Mr. Bloor has been minister of this historic Unitarian Church for five years, and there was much regret when he decided to accept the ministry of the Unitarian Church, Reading. As a mark of their esteem the congregation of the New Gravel Pit Church and some friends subscribed towards a handsome presentation to Mr. and Mrs. Bloor. It took the form of a beautiful framed engraving of Seader's famous picture, "Carting Timber," a purse of money, and an illuminated list of contributors. Mr. Bowles, the church treasurer, made the presentation in the schoolroom on Thursday evening, June 16, in a neat little speech, remarking that there were two engravings—one permanent, which would always remind him of his Hackney friends; the other equally useful, although not so permanent. The Rev. R. H. U. Bloor made a very feeling response on behalf of Mrs. Bloor and himself expressing their great regret at leaving so many friends, and saying the five years spent at Hackney had been the happiest of their lives. In addition to his ministerial work, in which he achieved great success, Mr. Bloor will be remembered in Hackney as a very able lecturer. His last series at the Town Hall, on Dr. Johnson, were largely attended, and the lecturer showed considerable critical acumen as well as a wide acquaintance with the state of literature at the time of the great doctor. Mr. Bloor's successor has not yet been appointed, but the Rev. J. Page Hopps will conduct a series of services at the church in the autumn.—Hackney and Kingsland Gazette.

London Sunday School Society.—The united service for teachers and elder scholars was held at Essex Hall on Sunday afternoon, nine of the schools of the district sending contingents. The Rev. W. Wooding was the preacher.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—The annual floral festival of the Church of the Divine Unity Sunday-school was held last Sunday. The children occupied the gallery of the church, and joined heartily in the singing. Contingents from the Byker and Gateshead schools took part in the service, and the Rev. Frank Walters preached morning and evening.

Oldbury.—A coffee-supper and social gathering in connection with the Unitarian Meeting House took place on Monday week in the Free School, for the purpose of giving a welcome home to Mr. Josiah Baker, one of the congregation, who has been to California for three years for the benefit of his health. The Rev. H. McKean, who presided, cordially welcomed the guest of the evening, and congratulated him on his restoratian to health, also presenting him on behalf of the congregation with a handsome book. Mr. Baker acknowledged the gift, and gave an interesting account of his American experiences.

Reading (Presentation).—On Thursday evening, June 16, the congregation of the Unitarian Church presented to Mr. O. A. Shrubsole a beautiful silver rose bowl and fruit dishes, and a petrological microscope, in grateful recognition of his services to the Church. Mrs. Bailey occupied the chair, and Mr. G. R. Smith, on behalf of some hundred subscribers, presented the testimonial. Mr. Smith gave a brief history of the church in Reading, and during the whole of its existence, he said, Mr. Shrubsole had been closely identified with it, and always strenuously worked for its maintenance and progress. He had filled every possible office in the Church, and for nearly four and a half years past he had been the hon. minister as well as the hon. secretary. He had laboured most unselfishly and assiduously, and had shown great ability and power, especially in the pulpit. Many improvements had been made in the church building, and the Church Hall in which they were assembled had been rendered possible by Mr. Shrubsole's gratuitous services. Mrs. Shrubsole, who had been hon. treasurer of the church for thirteen years, was associated with the presentation. Appreciative remarks were made by Mr. Councillor Frame and others, and Mr. Shrubsole, who closed his ministry last Sunday, acknowledged with much feeling the kindness shown him and his wife. The Rev. R. H. U. Bloor enters on his ministry to-morrow (Sunday) June 26.

Sheffield District Unitarian Sunday-school Union.—The first quarterly meeting for 1904 was held on Saturday, June 18. The teachers of the various schools met at the Walkley tram terminus, and proceeded via Little Matlock to Stannington, where tea was partaken of. After tea the Rev. A. H. Dolphin gave a paper entitled, "The Sunday-school a Religious Institution." The following gentlemen took part in the discussion:—The Revs. Iden Payne, W. Stephens, and E. E. Jenkins, Messrs. C. R. Webster, Billcliff, Short, and Smith. The meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman, Rev. Iden Payne, and to the Rev. A. H. Dolphin for the paper. The party then enjoyed a splendid walk back by way of Rivelin Valley.

Shrewsbury.—The 114th anniversary services in connection with the High-street Church Sunday-school were held on June 19th, when two impressive sermons were preached by the Rev. J. C. Street to large and appreciative audiences. Special hymns were well rendered by the scholars, who had been carefully trained by the organist, Mr. Silverthorn.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

SUNDAY, June 26.

Acton, Central Auction Room, Market-place, High-street, 7, Rev. J. H. WICKSTEED, M.A.
Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Rev. EUSTACE THOMPSON.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Mr. J. T. SALT.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON, and 7, Rev F. W. STANLEY.
Child's Hill, All Souls' Free Church, corner of Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., 11, Rev. W. J. JUPP, and 7, Rev. H. M. LIVENS.
Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11, Rev. F. W. STANLEY, and 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. PERRIS.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 and 7, Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. H. Gow, B.A.
Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 7, Rev. R. H. GREAVES.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.
Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11.15 and 7, Rev. G. CRITCHLEY, B.A.
Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. J. E. STRONGE.
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11, Mr. EBENEZER HOWARD, and 7, Rev. S. BAART DE LA FAILLE, D.D.
Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. JOHN ELLIS.
Peckham, Avondale-road, 11, Rev. J. H. WICKSTEED, M.A., and 6.30, Mr. T. ELLIOT.
Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. F. H. JONES, B.A.
Stepney Green, College Chapel, 11 and 7, Mr. C. A. GINEVER.
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 and 7, Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
Stratford, Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS.
Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, Easthill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. McDOWELL.
BLACKPOOL, Dickson-road, North Shore, 10.45 and 6.30, PULPIT VACANT.
BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Church, The Hall, Lytham-road, 11 and 6.30.
BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 and 7, Rev. ALFRED HOOD.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church, New-road, North-street, 11 and 7, Rev. OTTWELL BINNS.
BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 7, Rev. GEORGE STREET.
CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11, Rev. SILAS FARRINGTON.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
GUILDFORD, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. RATTENBURY HODGES.
HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. J. MARTEN.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. WARSCHAUER.
LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11, Rev. H. D. ROBERTS, and 6.30, Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11 and 6 30, Rev. J. COLLINS ODGERS, B.A.; Evening subject: "The Vengeance of God not the Infliction of Cruelty but the Victory of Love."
MAIDSTONE, Earl-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. SIDAWAY BRETTELL, M.A.
MANCHESTER, PLATT CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. T. POYNTING.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. E. PIKE.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. C. B. UPTON, B.A., B.Sc.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Mr. C. F. DEAR.
PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Mr. THOMAS BOND.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 7, Rev. G. ST. CLAIR, F.G.S.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 and 6.45, Rev. F. TEASDALE REED.
SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. AGAR.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FREDERICK B. MOTT.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TROWBRIDGE, Conigre Church, 11 and 6, Rev. J. WAIN.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 and 6.30.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12, noon, Rev. G. H. VANCE, B.D.

WALES.

ABERYSTWITH, New Market Hall, 11, Rev. T. J. JENKINS, of Gellionen.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY SOUTH PLACE, FINSBURY.—June 26, at 11.15, JOSEPH McCABE, "The Moral Influence of Europe in Asia."

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN SQ., W.—June 26, at 11.15, DR. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The Virgin Birth."

Situations,

VACANT AND WANTED.

LADY (29), well educated, desires engagement as COMPANION to a lady who travels.—Address, A., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand.

WANTED, by a middle-aged Lady, a SITUATION as useful COMPANION or MOTHER'S HELP. Small salary. References to former situation and to Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, 5, Marmion-road, Liverpool, of whom inquiries may be made.

HOLIDAY ENGAGEMENT, August, desired by well-educated Lady, as Companion to invalid or otherwise. Very strong and capable. Good reader. Musical. Unitarian. Travelling and laundry expenses.—Address, A. H., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand.

MANSFORD STREET CHURCH AND MISSION.

The Committee have decided to appoint a LADY ASSISTANT MISSIONARY who would be required to devote a portion of her time to the work of the institution. Applications should be sent to Mr. S. W. PRESTON, 7, Eldon-road, Hampstead.

S. W. PRESTON.
J. C. DRUMMOND, } Hon. Secs.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
ADELAIDE PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Assets, £158,000.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., J.P. 17 Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W
Miss CECIL GRADWELL, 7, Victoria-street, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st. S.W
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham, S.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4 per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3 and 3½ per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

BORROWER'S INTEREST 4 per cent. Monthly Repayment, including Principal, Premium, and Interest for each £100.

10 years.	12 years.	15 years.	18 years.	21 years.
1 1 1	0 18 4	0 15 6	0 14 2	0 12 11

Compare the above rates with those of other Societies. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

BIRTH.

TAYLOR.—On the 22nd inst., at Chapel House, St. Thomas's-square, Hackney, N.E., the wife of Lincoln Taylor, of a daughter.

DEATHS.

ELLINGHAM.—On June 10th, at Hill Crest, Thorpe St. Andrew, Norwich, Francis Henry Ellingham, aged 59 years.

STARLING.—On Sunday, 19th inst., C. May Starling, only daughter of Charles Grey and Caroline Starling, of Barnes Park, London, late of Bradford and Norwich. Cremated at Golders Green on Wednesday, the 22nd.

GREEN.—On the 20th inst., suddenly, Henry Green, of Filstone, Addiscombe Grove, Croydon, in his 64th year.

Annual Subscription by Post, One Copy, 1s.

UNITY

An Organ of Reasonable Religion for Unitarian Propaganda.

NEXT MONTH'S ISSUE NOW READY.

Unitarian Doctrines Explained; Trinitarian Orthodoxy Refuted; the Christianity of Jesus advocated.

"UNITY" contains Thoughts from Unitarian Leaders and Advanced Thinkers, Poetry, Incidents, Special Articles of Congregational Interest, and Light for the Perplexed.

Good for Church Members, Sunday School Teachers, Adult Classes, and Home Reading.

Adopted by Churches for Sale or Free Distribution with Printed Calendar Page or without.

Single copies, by post, 1d.; 1s. a year; 5d. per doz.; 3s. per 100; Calendar Page extra.

Published every month by the EDITOR, Ivy House, Mottram, Manchester.

Just published, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

THE FIRST CONDITIONS OF HUMAN PROSPERITY.

By the Hon. R. RUSSELL.

 This is an examination of the chief elements of national stability and of the conditions favourable to happiness in the human race, with special regard to urban overcrowding and questions of diet.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.,
39, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKLETS.

By the REV. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

DAILY MEDITATIONS

(Fourth Edition Revised.)

NIGHT UNTO NIGHT.

Cloth, red edges, 6d.; roan gilt, 1s.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C.

BERNESE OBERLAND.—Two Vacancies in a select party, leaving August 19th. Fifteen days for 10½ guineas inclusive.—Particulars from the Rev. Dr. WARSCHAUER, 50, Apsley-road, Clifton, Bristol.

WALMSLEY UNITARIAN CHAPEL.

The ANNUAL SERMONS will be preached on Sunday, June 26th, 1904, by the Rev. J. C. STREET, of Shrewsbury. Afternoon at 3. Evening at 6.30.

FRUITARIAN CAKES.

MADE ENTIRELY OF FRUIT AND NUTS.

Uncooked, Concentrated, Natural Food.

READY FOR USE WITHOUT PREPARATION.
For travelling they are ideal. A meal will go in pocket.

PEAR and WALNUT	7d.	per 8 oz. packet.
APRICOT and NUT	7d.	,, ,,
MUSCATEL and ALMOND ...	6d.	,, ,,
FRUIT and NUTS	5d.	,, ,,
DATE and GINGER	4d.	,, ,,
DATE and LEMON	4d.	,, ,,
DATE and ORANGE	4d.	,, ,,
FIG and CITRON	4d.	,, ,,
DATE and NUT	3d.	,, ,,
FIG and NUT	3d.	,, ,,

Sample Box containing 14 varieties Fruitarian Cakes, 8d.; or with 3 varieties of Nut Butters, post free, 1s.

HUGH MAPLETON, Nut Food Manufacturer,
ARDWICK GREEN MANCHESTER.

No more Headache

on ironing days—no heat of ironing room. No noxious fumes when using the "Dalli" which is self-heating with smokelesss fuel and entirely free from smell. Can be used indoors or out of doors without interr uption. Heat always intense and continuous. Does double the work in half the time. Price of the "Dalli" is 6/-. Price of the "Dalli" Fuel 1/9 per box of 128 blocks. To be had of all Ironmongers. If any difficulty apply to the DALLI SMOKELESS FUEL CO., 27, Milton St., London, E.C. Beware of worthless imitations.

OLD FALSE TEETH.—We give highest possible price for above. Offers made, and, if not accepted, teeth returned. Dealers in old gold or silver in any form. Banker's references.—WOOLFALL & CO., Birkdale, Southport.

Board and Residence.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH. — ARNEWOOD. Pension. Commanding position in the West Cliff-road; full South aspect; sea views and private grounds; close to Winter Gardens, Cliff Promenade, Square or Pier; moderate Tariff.—Apply, MANAGERESS.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE; most comfortable throughout. Sea View, excellent cuisine. billiard and smoke room, sanitary certificate —Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

LANGLEY HOUSE, DAWLISH, DEVON.—A delightful HOLIDAY RESORT for Ladies and School-girls (Boys under 15). Beautiful country, bracing climate. Sea and Moorland. Prospectus from MISS N. JONES, Matron; or A. E. JONES, Esq., Proprietor.

SOUTHPORT.—MISS BLAKEY, 12, Duke-street (established 16 years), is prepared to receive PATIENTS or VISITORS in need of rest, change, or treatment. The Red Cross system of Light Cure and fully qualified Massage carefully given, under medical advice. Situation central and pleasant.

LAKE DISTRICT.—FURNISHED HOUSE at Hawkshead to be Let for season. Ten minutes from shops and Lake. Seven miles from station. Two sitting, four bedrooms, garden, fruit. From 50/- weekly. Also, till August, THREE-ROOMED COTTAGE, near Embleton Station, Cumberland, 17/6.—Please state requirements to Miss NEWLING, Hawkshead, Lancashire.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Enlarged, Remodelled, Refurnished.

PRONOUNCED BY THE PRESS TO BE THE BEST TEMPERANCE HOTEL IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Accommodation for about 250 Guests.

Highly commended by the Rev. Dr. Aked, Rev. Rowland Hill, Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. Alderman White, M.P., the Misses Cadbury and thousands of other guests.

Spacious Coffee, Reading & Drawing Rooms. Electric Light throughout.

Apartments, Service and Table d'Hote Breakfast from 5/- to 6/6 per day (with Dinner from 8/- to 9/6

77 & 101,

Southampton Row, London.

FREDERIC SMITH & SONS.

Opposite the British Museum.

THACKERAY HOTEL,

GREAT RUSSELL STREET, LONDON.

This large and well-appointed Temperance Hotel has Passenger Lift; Bathrooms on every Floor; Electric Light throughout; Spacious Dining, Drawing, Writing, Reading, and Smoking Rooms; Fireproof Floors; Perfect Sanitation; Telephone; Night Porter.

Bedrooms from 2s. 6d. to 5s. 6d.

Inclusive charge for Bedroom, Attendance, Table d'Hôte Breakfast and Dinner, from 8s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. per day. Full Tariff and Testimonials on application.

Telegraphic Address: "THACKERAY, LONDON."

EATON'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL,

22, Guilford Street, Russell Square, LONDON.

Facing the Gardens of the Foundling Institution.

Central. Homelike. Beds from 1s. 6d. Breakfast and Tea from 1s. Patronized repeatedly by many visitors during the 30 years of its existence.

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A. Honours Lond. Preparation for London Matriculation, Trinity College, and Associated Board of Musicians, Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. Apply to the Head Mistress.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH

AN UNSECTARIAN PUBLIC SCHOOL.

Next Term opens SEPTEMBER 15TH. Admission Examination, July 5th.
For particulars apply HEAD MASTER.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE FOR GIRLS
198 & 227, BRISTOL ROAD.

Principal ... MARY E. BAILY.
Head Mistress ... ELEANOR MOSS, B.A. Hons.

Preparation for Matriculation, Senior, Junior Cambridge. Board of Education and Associated Board Examinations.

Trained Swedish Gymnastic and Games Mistress. Vacancy for Resident Pupil to help with music practice.

WAVERLEY SCHOOL, 24, HAMILTON ROAD, SHERWOOD RISE, NOTTINGHAM.

PREPARATORY TO THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.
HEAD MASTER Mr. H. T. FACON, B.A.(Lond.).
Prospectus on application. BOARDERS received. Reference kindly permitted to the Rev. Frank K. Freeston, Essex House, Campden-hill, W.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
14 & 15, SOUTH MARINE TERRACE, ABERYSTWYTH.

PRINCIPAL ... MISS MARLES-THOMAS.

This School is splendidly situated in one of the healthiest parts of Wales, overlooking Cardigan Bay, and close to excellent golf links. Pupils have passed the London and Welsh Matriculation; Cambridge Higher Local; Senior and Junior Cambridge Locals, besides the usual Theoretical and Practical Music Examinations. Scholarships have also been obtained at the Welsh University Colleges.

Gymnasium, Swimming, and excellent Hockey Club.

WILLASTON SCHOOL.—SPEECH DAY, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29TH.—The Governors will be obliged if anyone who has NOT RECEIVED an INVITATION, and who desires to be present, will send their name and address to the Clerk, 38, Barton Arcade, Manchester.

DOMESTIC MISSION, GEORGE'S ROW, ST. LUKE'S, E.C.

A BAZAAR in aid of the funds of the LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION will be held on TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY next, JUNE 28th and 29th. Opened at Three o'clock on Tuesday by LADY DURNING-LAWRENCE, introduced by P. M. MARTINEAU, Esq., B.A., LL.B., J.P.; and on Wednesday by Mrs. W. WALLACE BRUCE, introduced by Rev. H. GOW, B.A. Friends are invited. Admission Free.

Terms for Advertisements.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF-PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6

Special Terms for a Series.

Calendar Notices, 10s. per year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge 1/6.

Situations Vacant and Wanted,
20 words, 1s. 3 insertions charged as 2.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Sole Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 20 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, June 25, 1904.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3236. NEW SERIES, No. 340.] LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 2, 1904. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 417

LEADER—
Student and Prophet 424

ARTICLES—
The Tendencies of Modern Religious Thought 419
The Human Side of Literature 421
Women in Oxford 421

MEETINGS—
Manchester College, Oxford 424
Remonstrant Synod of Ulster 427
Association of Non-Subscribing Presbyterians 428

CORRESPONDENCE—
A Tribute to Frances Power Cobbe ... 419
Animal Suffering 428
Mr. Philip Green 428

OBITUARY—
The Rev. Henry McKean... 422
Mr. Henry Green 422
The Rev. Dr. Mackennal 422

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 423

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 429

OUR CALENDAR 430

ADVERTISEMENTS 430

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE first part of Mr. Rollo Russell's paper on the "Tendencies of Modern Religious Thought" appears in our present issue. It will be concluded next week.

THE fourth Summer Session for Sunday-school teachers is being held this week and next at Manchester College, Oxford. The Session opened on Friday morning with a religious service, and address by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, President of the Sunday School Association. Among the promised lectures is one by Miss Mossel, of Amsterdam, on "Systematic Religious Teaching in Holland."

A HANDSOME illustrated booklet of twenty-four pages has been issued in connection with the Unitarian Home Missionary College Jubilee. The booklet gives full particulars of all the meetings, and contains some interesting historical notes by the Rev. W. H. Burgess. Details of the meetings will be found in our advertising columns. The illustrations of the newly acquired collegiate premises give a good idea of the Residence, well set in spacious wooded grounds.

JULY 4 is the Centenary of the birth of Nathaniel Hawthorne. A biographical article on Hawthorne, by the Rev. Priestley Prime, we are obliged to hold over until next week. It will be followed by a further article on Hawthorne's Puritanism.

WE have heard much of the extraordinary self-devotion of the Japanese of all grades and ranks in their determination to win victory from the Russians; of fortunes poured voluntarily into the national coffers, of starvation looked straight in the face for the same end, of suicides of dependent mothers in order that their sons may feel no division of duty in volunteering for forlorn hopes, as well as of the joyous rushing in thousands upon certain death in order that those behind may capture otherwise impregnable fortifications. Given the belief that these people are fighting against a deliberately planned attack on their national existence, it is all, beyond doubt, very fine and very inspiring.

BUT this week we have been given the other side of the picture. Count Tolstoy has drawn for us the Russian peasant asking dully:

"What do we want with this Manchuria? There is sufficient land here. And what a lot of people and property have been destroyed!" He tells us of his conversation with a conscript "off to the Far East":

"Well, art thou going to fight?"
"Well, someone has to fight!"
"No one need fight!"
He reflected for a moment. "But what is one to do? Where can one escape?"

And Tolstoy comments:

"Where can one escape!" That is the precise expression of that mental condition which, in the official and journalistic world, is translated into the words, "For the Faith, the Tsar, and the Fatherland."

He tells, too, of the conscript who assures him:

"I was not able to resist the summons, but I say beforehand that through me not one Japanese family shall be orphaned. My God! how dreadful is all this—how distressing and painful, to abandon all by which one lives!"

The object of Count Tolstoy is, of course, to preach the doctrine of non-resistance among nations, as among men. But one may surely use his story incidentally as illustrating, by its contrast with the attitude of the Japanese, the difference between the way a nation goes to war when its enfranchised people believe the Fatherland to be in danger, and the attitude of a people whipped by autocratic rulers into a war in which they have no stake.

THE ideal anarchism to which Tolstoy's gospel of consistent non-resistance leads him would dispense with the arbitrament of law, both as between individuals and as between nations. Those of us who believe in the ultimate right of the community to coerce individual wrong-doers into conformity with the interest of the community, cannot accept his doctrine of complete non-resistance for nations, rejecting not only war as a last resort but even international arbitration, which depends upon war for the ultimate enforcement of its decrees. All of us, however, can joyfully accept his denunciation of war in so far as it relates to the insensate resort to violence by governments or peoples for selfish ends, and in substitution for the rule of law in international affairs.

Is it only of autocracies that this scathing denunciation is true?—

The Government incites and encourages crowds of idlers, who walk about the streets with the Tsar's portrait, singing, shouting hurrah! and who, under pretext of patriotism, are licensed in all kinds of excess. All over Russia, from the palace to the remotest village, the pastors of churches, calling themselves Christians, appeal to that God who has enjoined love to one's enemies—to the God of Love Himself—to help the work of the devil, to further the slaughter of men. All this is not only regarded as the manifestation of elevated feeling, but those who refrain from such manifestations, if they endeavour to disabuse men, are deemed traitors and betrayers, are in danger of being abused and beaten by a brutalised crowd which, in defence of its insanity and cruelty, can possess no other weapon than brute force.

AT the International Conference held on Wednesday at the Westminster Palace Hotel, under the presidency of Mr. James Bryce, M.P., a resolution was unanimously passed commending to the Cabinets of Paris, Rome, and London "the duty of adopting effective measures for advancing the cause of just and humane government throughout every province of the Turkish Empire." M. Francis de Pressensé, who moved the resolution, said that at the time of the Armenian massacres of 1894-5 Europe committed a moral bankruptcy. It was the unanimous feeling of the Conference that the position both in Armenia and in Macedonia was intolerable, and that the only remedy was either to end the despotic rule of an incorrigible Sultan altogether or take the suffering provinces out of his control. No question of Western bias or party policy, said M. de Pressensé, should stand in the way of this work of humanity, which was based not merely on the moral law but on the fulfilment of definite treaty obligations.

THIS has been a great week for the Salvation Army. The opening meeting of the International Congress was held on Friday week at the Albert Hall, when some 6,000 representatives of every race and nation crowded to the General's reception. He himself had previously been most kindly received by the King at Buckingham Palace, who evinced a genuine interest in the work of the Army, and a cordial greeting was also received from the Lord Mayor. During the week the huge temporary "fort" in the Strand —a hall which is said to hold easily 6,000 people—has been the rallying point; and even Essex Hall has been invaded by the commissariat department, and from 500 to 1,000 hungry Salvationists have been fed there every day.

It is ten years' since the Army's last International Congress, and the General in his opening address last Saturday gave some interesting figures to show the progress that had been made. Ten years ago the Army was at work in 42 different countries and colonies, speaking 29 different languages. Now it works in 49 different lands, and speaks 31 languages. The variety has been seen this week in the picturesque costumes and countenances of every shade met with in the Strand. At the first great meeting, General Booth gave out the hymn "Oh, for a thousand tongues to sing," the hymn that he gave out sixty years ago in Nottingham market place, at his first open-air meeting. "All sing in your own tongues!" he cried, and so they did with the heartiest goodwill. At that same meeting the General referred to the time when the public were scandalised by the Army's methods, and told of a sympathetic parson who complained to a Salvation girl that he did not like the drum. "And I don't like your bell," she said. "But the bell says 'Come, come,'" argued the parson. "Ah," said the girl, "but our drum says 'Fetch 'em, fetch em.'" That was the secret of the Army's success, and what has chiefly won the sympathy of the people of this country has been its devoted social work.

The movement for the union of three of the Methodist organisations—the New Connexion, Free Methodists, and Bible Christians—is making steady progress. No hurry is being shown, and no loosening of conviction or slackening of endeavour. The greatest temptation to slackness comes from the appeals that are made by one and another to wait to see whether the Wesleyans will not join, and the Primitives; to consider whether by longer patience and greater caution a still larger Union might not be found possible. But the practical men of the three denominations clearly perceive that the best way of working for Union is to unite; that the way to to bring about co-operation on a vast scale is to co-operate as early as may be with just those who are ready to begin, and who are willing to make some sacrifices for the common good. The resolution to continue negotiations with a view to Methodist Union was carried in the New Connexion Conference by an overwhelming majority, only four voting against it.

The Labour Convention recently concluded between the French and Italian Governments is a small but interesting step in the movement of internationalism, or, may it be said, towards the United States of Europe. We have long been accustomed to commercial treaties, more recently we hear of agreements as to the arbitration of certain classes of disputes between nations. It is true that the Concert of Europe has been chiefly active in protecting Turkish misrule in the east of Europe and in Asia. But even in this case it is permissible to hope that the framework of the joint agreement may at some future time facilitate a more honourable policy. And since the time of the Berlin Conference labour questions also have become increasingly the subject of international consideration. The Franco-Italian Convention is intended to assure to the labourers in the two countries guarantees analogous to those which commercial treaties provide for the products of labour. It deals largely with the matter of savings banks. Under this treaty the Frenchman in Italy, the Italian in France, may have his savings bank account transferred to his place of residence, and will continue to enjoy the advantages to which he would have been entitled in his own country. The Italian Government also undertakes to improve its system of factory inspection up to the French level; and to consider the need for a reduction in the hours of labour for women.

It is obvious that the conditions of modern industry are such that a large measure of international reciprocity is necessary. The market, whether for products or for labour, knows little of geographical frontiers. The movement towards internationalism on the part of the workers has long been going on. There have been such workings of a great ideal as The International inspired by Marx. There are also indications of more detailed operation. Take for example the case of the French Typographers' Union. One of the benefits enjoyed by members of this Trade Union is that of the viaticum, or allowance to men journeying in search of work. The amount spent in this way is small if compared with the whole revenue; it is less than one and a half francs a year per head of the membership. But it is important and useful to many individual workmen. The arrangement for this allowance is not comfined to France, but is available for members travelling for work in Italy, Austria-Hungary, Germany, and even as far abroad as Norway and Sweden. In all these and other countries members of the French Typographers' Union are to be found. In France, too, are many foreigners. There is possibility of much intellectual gain in this familiarity of the workers of one land with the life of another. And international agreements, whether of people with people, or government with government, are fit to be noted. From these small beginnings we may hope to move to the end of international peace, founded on a consciousness of the common interests of the toilers in different countries. It is in the growing solidarity of international labour councils that this result is to be expected.

The first British National Peace Congress was held at Manchester on June 22 and 23, and was thoroughly successful, over 200 delegates being in attendance. Resolutions were agreed to, rejoicing in the various Arbitration Treaties and Agreements which have recently been concluded and the successful operation of the Hague Court in several recent disputes, regretting the Russo-Japanese War, and appealing to his Majesty's Ministers to endeavour to bring about peace in accordance with the provisions of the Hague Convention, and against "punitive" or other aggressive military expeditions against weaker races, the Thibetan expedition being emphatically condemned. There was an enthusiastic expression of opinion against conscription, and in favour of a reduction of armaments, in which it was urged that England should lead the way, having gone further than other nations in their increase. The teaching and training of the young in nobler ideals than those of military heroism received a large amount of attention, especially the unsatisfactory spirit fostered frequently by Boys' Brigades. The effort to reintroduce Protection in place of Free Trade was recognised as due to the revival of Imperialistic aggrandisement and warlike methods.

Mr. Leonard Courtney, in his Presidential address, traced the growth, now recorded in history, of law in place of strife, between individuals, and between one chief or baron and his retainers and another, by slow development of a higher spirit among men, and dwelt on the beginnings of the growth of international law, produced by a juster spirit in international relationships, so that now there are limits to what the stronger nation will do, or would be allowed to do, to the weaker. Recent indications of a better feeling between nations, expressed in Arbitration agreements, are steps toward the enlargement of the area and efficiency of international law. The Conference took action towards the federation of British societies, not only those organised with the expressed object of furthering peace principles, but those also which are banded together for other purposes, but which accept peace as an essential part of their object.

A writer in the Methodist Times praises Dr. Warschauer's "Anti-Nunquam" in these decisive words: "The book impresses me as being in every way excellent. It is written in a popular style. It can be understood of the people. It is bold and strong but never offensive. It never makes an attack that even 'Nunquam' could call personal, and yet it effectively reveals the superficialities and contradictions of 'Nunquam's' work. It is evidently written by a liberal-minded Christian who really knows the subject he is writing about."

The Holiday Home established by the Manchester District Sunday School Association has fallen into line with the prevailing fashion and issued a series of picture post-cards. The cards, which are well produced, give views of the Home, the village where it is established, Great Hucklow, and many others showing bits of typical Derbyshire scenery. Another publication issued by the Home's Committee is a charming little Road and song book, containing besides hymns and songs, half a dozen sketch maps. The Home is as popular as ever, and this season some eleven hundred of the scholars of our Northern Schools are spending a week's holiday there.

A TRIBUTE TO FRANCES POWER COBBE.

SIR,—May I ask you to publish this letter, to make known to those who take an interest in humane progress, that a committee has been formed to set on foot a fund as a tribute to the good work of my friend Frances Power Cobbe as a teacher of duty towards the animal world, particularly with regard to vivisection?

The fund will go to the support of the monthly journal which she founded, and in which she carried on this teaching to the time of her death. Those who give to this fund will offer, as a remembrance of her work, the tribute she would have liked best. They will be aiding the carrying out of her last wish—the completion of the work she began. The Committee includes the Princess Mele Barese, the Countess of Shaftesbury, the Earl and Countess of Aylesford, the Lady Victoria Campbell, Lord Leigh, the Lady Windsor, the Lady Battersea, Lady Paget, the Bishop of Durham, Bishop Bromby, the Dean of Durham, Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., Principal Story, and Mr. Herbert Philips. I write as Chairman of the Committee. Subscriptions may be sent to Mrs. Roscoe, Poston House, Peterchurch, Heredfordshire, who is Hon. Treasurer of "A Tribute to Frances Power Cobbe," as the fund is named. Miss Helen and Miss Frances Conway Cobbe are trustees of the fund.

J. W. LEIGH,
Dean of Hereford.

The Deanery, Hereford, June 25.

IN the June Abolitionist Lady Battersea writes with much feeling a memorial article on Miss Cobbe, whose acquaintance she first made in May, 1875. She tells of her surprise on that occasion, to find that Miss Cobbe knew the little book she had written on the Bible for Jewish children. Speaking of her great thirst for knowledge for its own sake, Lady Battersea quotes the following passage from one of her last letters from Miss Cobbe:—

I think the two sentiments (they may amount to passions) of desire of knowledge, or as we may dignify it, by calling it thirst for truth and hunger for mental food—in youth though wholly personal, is to be reckoned on a par with the social desire to help others. The one the love of le vrai, the other of le bien, and altogether with the love of le beau, constitute the great trinity of noble human aims. I should never like to represent the study of truth as merely or chiefly undertaken for the sake of fitting ourselves to teach and help others. Knowledge is an end in itself and a most noble one, and I think the more of it as knowledge pur et simple, without any extraneous reward as consequence, either of personal worldly ambition or even of power to do good to others, is scarcely enough cherished, at all events in these days, amongst women. We recognise disinterested devotion to any art with respect, but hardly perhaps enough pure devotion to truth, to knowledge, of what the highest minds have thought and written, and of the wonders of God's universe. The pure joy of it for its own sake and the ennobling thirst for it, apart from all public recognition or advantage to be gained thereby, seem hardly recognised.

THE mind is the man. If that be kept pure a man signifies somewhat; if not, I would very fain see what difference there is between him and a beast. Cromwell.

THE TENDENCIES OF MODERN RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.*

BY THE HON. ROLLO RUSSELL.

I.

IN view of the narrow limits of time I will proceed straight to the heart of the subject. I must ask your indulgence for the elementary character of my observations. It is practice above all in which nations are weak, and therefore to the practical side I appeal, believing in assimilation of the elements of religion as the chief object of all endeavour. We ought to realise, and act upon the realisation, that we live in an age of enlightenment. We may think we do, but as a nation we do not act with the light; we preserve the bungling habits of twilight and darkness. If we acted in accordance with knowledge many of our common practices would immediately become impossible.

True Science and Religion at One.

Science is commonly spoken of and treated as if opposed to religion. Both science and religion are misunderstood. Science, that is the truthful study of nature, and reason, the intelligent interpretation of evidence, are both with religion. True science and true religion, as Huxley said, are twin sisters, and nine out of ten men of science of last century would have agreed with him. To hate reason, in Plato's opinion, is the greatest evil which can befall us.

With advancing comprehension, and with the casting off of the inhumanities which have ever been associated with religion in the persecuting organisations, belief in reason joins itself to the ideals of the prophet and the poet. Religion and science intensify each other, and both will be necessary to the man of the future. Materialism was only a passing phase following the discovery of the processes by which force and matter, in ever-changing aspects, seemed to be powers in themselves, capable of producing not only all phenomena, but the consciousness of phenomena. In recent years matter has been taking a subordinate, but really more honourable place, or is coming to be regarded as an actual part of that spiritual and formative energy which is the essential maker of the Universe. It is recognised that Mind is no less real than Matter, and philosophy finds less difficulty in regarding energy as the Evolver of all things in orderly sequence than in placing matter first as supreme promise, potency, cause, and accomplisher. The idea of matter is, in fact, raised by later research into an intimate relationship with the idea of life, consciousness, spirit.

The Divine Unity.

Giordano Bruno, who was burnt for his high thoughts 304 years ago, declared that the soul of the world includes the universal intellect, is the universal efficient cause, makes, guides and governs. He was fascinated with the idea of the unity of God. All nature, he said, is one, infinite, divine; "a spirit exists in all things, and no body is so small but it contains a part of the divine substance within itself, by which it is animated." And now Weissmann, a materialist, admits that the materialistic explanation of the universe only applies to its external forms, and that, unless we assume the ultimate atom or molecule to have some inner qualities analogous to those we call mental, there is no explaining how the mental universe is developed out of the physical.

The recent researches of a very distinguished Indian man of science on the "response of matter," of an Italian on the growth of crystals, and of French, English and Canadian discoverers on radio-activity, have some bearing on this speculation. We are beginning to think not only as the Latin poet (Ovid) thought in his time, that "Est Deus in nobis," and as the Roman Emperor thought, "this universe is one living Being, with one material substance and one spirit," but that every atom or inconceivably smaller particle, every electron, may be, is, in some sense, alive, instinct with the power of building up crystals and bodies.

We know with certainty that the greatest things in the world are not the obvious, but have to be searched out and brought into mortal ken—gravitation, ether, electricity, the nature of the stars, of matter, of force; and in human society, the value of free thought and of free religion.

The All-Pervading Presence.

Scientific thought has recently led us to the knowledge that every star and particle has relations with every other star and particle in the universe, and that the whole creation is in a medium of quick, lively and almost instant communication. Not a sparrow falls without at that moment a very trembling of the stars. There is a physical response to every act done on earth.

Ancient prophets and psalmists have expressed in religious enthusiasm the spiritual faith of which the parallel truth has been proved by Science. The Deity, they felt, is omnipresent and conscious of all our thoughts and acts. The incredible has certainly proved itself to be eternal fact in relation to matter, and who will say that it cannot be equally true in relation to mind? Science has inexpressibly exalted the mystery of the world; the commonest particle is to us endlessly wonderful, and the common, before unnoticed, force of gravitation has, when realised, become profoundly interesting.

No one has stated the general tendency of thought better than Dr. Martineau. "This last and most refined generalisation of science justifies the sublime faith that the sole power in the phenomenal universe is the Divine Intellect and Will, eternally transmuting itself into the cosmical order and assuming the phases of natural force as modes of manifestation and paths of progression to ends of beauty and of good."

The Outward and the Inward Law.

Science, in these transcendental views, has certainly no dispute with religion. Nor has it any dispute with religion in the common affairs of life, in all that is vital to the happiness of families and of nations.

---

* An Address given at Essex Hall on Thursday morning, May 26, at the Conference of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, after the paper by the Rev. L. P. Jacks.

There is the commandment which Christ said contained the whole Law and the Prophets; there is the saying of Zechariah: "Speak every man the truth, execute the judgment of truth and peace; let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against your neighbour; love truth and peace."

There is the word of Micah that God requires not more than that a man should do justice and love compassion and live humbly with God in his heart. And of Christ: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, that ye love one another."

There are the passage of St. Paul on charity, the blessings of the Sermon on the Mount, not on a chain of beliefs but on right living, the injunction to be merciful rather than invoke mercy, not vainly to petition but to do the will of God.

The Essential Things of Religion.

It is these thoughts, this spirit which are religion, and they are worth more than all the libraries of dry theology in the world. The subtleties of metaphysics are superfluous for common life in comparison with these homely truths. But the dogmas of churches and the conceits of hairsplitters have succeeded in dividing the world up into opposing sects, speculating on unknown mysteries which they materialise and fix up to be worshipped in shrines, while burying truth and peace deep in unconsecrated earth.

Truth and Peace! If the bodies called religious organisations cared for truth and peace, the whole condition of the world would be immediately transformed. Some of the heaviest burdens of mankind would disappear as if by magic.

Disregard for truth is a primary cause of superstition, ignorance, disease, war, pessimism, degradation, apathy. The proof of truthfulness is action in accordance with our highest beliefs.

Things that do not make for Peace.

Peace does not come to mankind because mankind, including churches and missionaries, choose material objects, land, gold, diamonds, or tyrannical power, luxury, and vested interests, instead of human brotherhood. Foundations of belief must have foundations of truth in character.

In the sense of these passages the religious man is the man who is true, just, righteous, and humble in thought and conduct, considerate towards living creatures, full of sympathy as a child of the Divine Love.

Now science, well understood, is not this man's enemy, but his unswerving friend. Science has not touched the validity of any of these great sayings. With fuller knowledge they become more and more certainly the true guides towards the happiness of the race. Professionalism in science, like ecclesiasticism in religion, has sometimes sought its ends by cruel and mistaken means, not perceiving the way of life, but in the long run the best ends can only be gained by the best means Beneficent Law.

The two principles which I think ought to have the strongest influence upon the destiny of man in connection with religious belief are the prevalence of law and the power of the human will in union with the Divine.

The fair exercise of reason in the reasonably informed soul, or, otherwise stated, that faith in the intellectual conscience which produces science, has brought us to the conclusion that the law of the Universe is one, unaltering, uncapricious, equal to all, accessible and kind to the world which accepts it with heart and mind and strength. There is no such thing as chance. There is no room for fatalism, that evil spell which now paralyses half the world. The word inevitable should be banished from our language, yet it appears on nearly every twentieth century journalistic page. Speaking as mortals, all things are possible to the believing. A wise and understanding nation, not swerving from its vocation, loving truth, justice, righteousness, will be happy and of long life, dwelling in peace and joy itself and bringing peace, joy, and sympathy to others, free from jealousy free from fear.

The power of mere justice, sympathetic, humane helpfulness, even among children, and among primitive races over the whole globe, is almost unbounded, and supersedes methods of force. A Livingstone may pass unarmed through the heart of the darkest continent. Rebellions or recurring seditions and hostilities are the expression of a sense of injustice, which may always be removed; most wars are the natural outcome of combined ambition, malice, and folly. Christian humanity, if believed in, would do away with arrogance, luxury, famine, sectarian bitterness, and that lying spirit, which is the cause of multifarious evil.

Duty in face of Evil.

It is not necessary for us to know the origin of evil. It is necessary to know that our duty is to destroy it.

The full acceptance of that law of nature, which in the widest sense enjoins clean living, would abolish nearly all the chief diseases which afflict humanity, and in the coming of health much of the gloom and pessimism of the age would vanish.

This is not a fancy but a fact. Already there are communities which, by consent to the wholesome rules of life eternally fixed, and by spiritual activity, attain a happiness undreamt of in the common mire of the outer world. On the other hand, the condition of the city in which we are assembled proclaims in a thousand ways two unbeliefs: aversion from God and distrust of man; its disease and its misery are therefore stupendous; it has gone far on the way of decline; in spite of the splendid energy of a host of its citizens, as an organism it has the apathy of a condemned prisoner; its indigenous population rapidly dies out. But it is reforming itself.

Trust Law, not Miracle.

The knowledge of the thought of God revealed to us in His works, has assured us that we may rely on Nature never to deceive or paralyse us by capricious action, and always to respond to our endeavours. What we sow we reap. This faith of man in God's eternal energy makes possible the greatest advancement not only in the products of skill, but also in the growth of ethical wisdom and strength. So long as law was unappreciated, and miracle awaited, there was no adequate inducement to inventive industry or intellectual perseverance or spiritual robustness or widely beneficent humanity. Men had the tendency to turn weak like Peter, or treacherous like Judas, expecting miracles, but never satisfied, unless they should be sure of thrones of glory.

Plagues were regarded as mere punishments for sin, to be removed often by miraculous intervention when the divine anger was appeased. Now they are known to be the natural consequence of ignorance and vice, to be removed by intelligence, order, and intolerance of dirt. Much the same is true of many infections of the mind. Faith and action in knowledge can do more than any miracles ever claimed.

The Work that is Prayer.

We have power in ourselves to help ourselves. The power we have to call upon is not outside us, an inscrutable Providence, as the old books say, but within. It is a Litany of faithful work with which we have to pray, and by work, bodily, mental, spiritual, we shall be saved. We must be in true relation with the boundless source of Energy from which we are filled. This will must be ours, to whom we shall be not as slaves, but as friends. Prayer will become instead of a thing of set seasons, an unceasing communion with the Most High, by whom thought and deed will be inspired. Causes and consequences of every kind of evil will be traced out, and all the common troubles of life found to be reducible. Our destiny is in our own keeping, our own making. Let us make it. This is emancipation.

The emperor-philosopher has well stated this creed, now commonly neglected. "Hourly and earnestly strive as a Roman and as a man to do what falls to your hand, with kindliness, freedom, justice, and free your soul from every other imagination . . . without passionate aversion to what reason approves, without hypocrisy or selfishness. You see how few things it is necessary to master in order that a man may live an even God-fearing life." Yet when we look at what is hourly done by this Empire in our name, we feel that far as the East is from the West, so far is present conduct from present duty.

To be concluded.

"Honour all men!" Had that rule been followed what a different world we should have seen in the past! Every great crime of governments and of nations has been a crime against the inherent rights of the human race. Slavery, with its corruptions and cruelties; despotism, trampling on helpless populations; priestcraft, usurping man's indefeasible privilege of immediate access to God; inquisitors, fettering the inherent and eternal freedom of human souls; conquerors, leading myriads of human beings to be slaughtered at their will—have but committed these crimes because they honoured not men, but only their own boundless pride and brutal selfishness.—F. W. Farrar.

THE HUMAN SIDE OF LITERATURE.

IN my ear there is a lingering murmur of "art for art's sake," the echoing word of men who were clamorous over their labour. They had withdrawn from the world, some because they half despised it, the most because they feared it, and, in their retirement, cried, "There is nought beyond us: lo, here in our secluded tasks is life only." I could not away with their utterance. And I am left to criticise.

Before me the rose that was beautiful yesterday is dying; its scent is out, its colour has deepened, and some of its petals have fallen. I shall know it no more, which once existed for me—as all things.

A sentence of criticism is enough, for the rest is plain. Nothing exists for its own sake; all things exist for the sake of life.

Such a reflection were a sufficient text for perpetual sermons in eternity—supposing that beyond the grave are pulpits—and would leave one over for the day that comes after. But I am to preach on literature.

"Art for art's sake." Forsooth, that is to say, "literature for style." And style, ever since an iron point could scratch wax, has been wonderful. But it was ever a mark, and never a message. Deeper you shall hear something, not the "S is S" of modern logic—five blue beans make five blue beans—but the dictum of a grandiloquent Gaul, "Le style est l'homme." Wherefrom I infer that literature is human.

One of the most eloquent passages in that very familiar discourse of Ruskin's on "King's Treasuries," an exceptional instance of his remarkable faculty of writing audibly, helps us to realise that behind a book there is a man, to find the living accent of dead print, to hear a voice, and see a countenance. And for this, as all who have read it will avow, many have been able the more easily to steal behind the study of books into the spiritual presence of their authors. "Ces choses sont hors de l'homme, le style est l'homme même."

And yet I have a notion that literature has an object vaster than merely to bring us into the company, that we may hear the conversation of other men. One would infer Carlyle from his writings, the rugged Teuton with the leer of pain; but it is not Carlyle I want to know. I want to find and know myself, to do more than Ruskin says I may, even this, to go to a book, thence to a man, and to come back. Ah, there's the rub. Until we can so read the words of authors as practically to write them we can never properly read them. The meaning of a poem is never in itself, and the poet, approach him however closely, cannot explain it to us any more than he can define his soul: while other commentators, lords of the sapient footnote, shall only bewilder us. It is in ourselves, there only to be found, as the existence of such as Browning societies is an everlasting testimony. The other day I was perplexed over a few verses which invited me to understand them. The more I tried the more helplessly I failed. Then, afterwards, in the hurly-burly of other matters their meaning dawned and shone clear. I went back to them. Yes, that was exactly what they meant. Their meaning? No, mine. O my subconscious self, my broader soul, what had I done but read myself into them! So it is always. We understand in literature just what we bring to it, no more. Arrant nonsense? No, Sir, it is the Berkeleian doctrine applied to books.

"Art for art's sake" and "literature for style." It cannot be while in these matters we are dealing solely with ourselves.

WILLIAM C. HALL.

WOMEN IN OXFORD.

Two events of the close of the summer term are worthy of some notice before they pass among the shadows of things bygone. Both mark steps onward in the reasonable and honourable development of the powers of women, in which all who are friends to the higher education may rejoice.

At Manchester College on Thursday week Miss Gertrud von Petzold received her certificate at the hands of the President, the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, which, exactly as in the case of the men, declares that she has completed the full course of three years' study and training in the College, in preparation for the ministry of religion. This lady had previously prepared herself by several years of unremitting study at St. Andrews and Edinburgh, of which latter university she holds the M.A. degree, and while at Oxford she has during part of the long vacations also continued her philosophical studies in Germany. She has thus shown that she enters upon her chosen calling with a befitting sense of its dignity; and the touching and sympathetic words of the venerable President in welcoming "our sister" to the band of those who devote themselves to the ministry of souls must have cheered the heart of the woman as much as the high note of the impressive advice given by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong in the last part of the "Valedictory Service" must have strengthened the intentions of the young minister starting forth on her untrodden path. That suitable women might undertake the noble duties of the Christian ministry as they have the profession of medicine, there is no reason to doubt; the spiritual insight, true conscience, devotion, and quick sympathy belonging to the best members of the sex, point them out as fitting for the career; the sense of due proportion and a wise judgment will come with experience as they do to many a mother. Several ladies, both in England and in America, have been occasionally heard in the pulpit: Miss von Petzold is the first to have gone through the regular course of training and to have been appointed to a charge in this country. She has accepted the pastorate of the Narborough-road Church at Leicester, and we rejoice that the liberal principles of religion, the spread of which in her Fatherland she has warmly at heart, should have given her the opportunity of service among us here.

Among colleges for women in Oxford, Somerville is not unknown to readers of THE INQUIRER; she has many friendly links with Manchester College in spirit and in principle, being quite open, without restriction to sect. Saturday, June 11, was a day to be remembered in her annals, a day which in the twenty-fifth year of her existence crowned the aspirations and the patient, energetic efforts of several years. A beautiful library, the long-desired fulfilment of a dream, was opened by Mr. John Morley in the presence of the Vice-Chancellor and proctors of the University, who thus at length officially proclaimed their countenance of the higher education of women. The Council of the College, including the Bishop of Hereford, the Presidents of Trinity and Magdalen, the Master of Balliol, Professor A. Dicey, and Miss Shaw Lefevre, were all there; many visitors, the staff with the honoured Principal Miss Maitland at their head, and last but not least, old and new students were disposed in the limited space so as to see and hear in a most skilful manner—worthy of the women's wits which directed the arrangements. Old alumni had obeyed the call with alacrity, Somervillians yield to none in their love for Alma Mater; the eagerness and enthusiasm were great as they sat or stood listening to the words of wisdom which fell from the lips of the accomplished speaker. Many true and appreciative things were said by others, marking the progress made by the College.

But a poetical treat awaited the company in the grounds below, who, meeting several hundreds more visitors, after tea and friendly greetings betook themselves to the amphitheatre of chairs on the greensward in front of the logia which occupies the middle front of the new building. The logia and the steps descending from it formed the stage on which eighteen of the ladies performed a masque on the subject of Demeter and Persephone, composed for the occasion by the poet Mr. Robert Bridges, and, however criticised, it must be said that it was worthy of the occasion and of the young womanhood for whose behoof it was written. A fine poem, containing many noble passages in eloquent language, dealing with the ancient strife of good and evil, leading to the redemption of a mother's torn heart through the care of a little child; the happy touch which shows purity taking no harm from evil though growing wiser and better; the great humanity of the legend interwoven with the sense of the powers of nature on man, and the eternal resurrection of the spring-time; such were some of the impressions which this beautiful production left on the beholder.

The chorus of sea-nymphs played an effective part, winding in and out between the columns with graceful movements in diaphanous dresses, twining wreaths of flowers or waiting on the great Mother Demeter, whose part was exquisitely and impressively delivered. Songs of woe and of joy were sung by the chorus with most appropriate movements to lovely music by Professor Hadow; and the whole performance was one not to be soon forgotten. It is to be hoped that the author will consent to the publication of "Demeter" at no distant date, the four songs only being printed on the programme.

L. TOULMIN SMITH.

OBITUARY.

THE REV. HENRY McKEAN.

A LIFE of great public usefulness was brought to a close on Friday week at Oldbury, when the Rev. Henry McKean passed away at his residence, The Dingle, Rounds Green, in his sixty-ninth year. For forty-six years Mr. McKean had been Unitarian minister at Oldbury, as his father was before him, and they both also held for many years the post of Master of the Free School. Henry McKean was a most capable man of business, and in the local government of the district held a prominent position. As a trusted adviser he was able to secure many benefactions for the public good, and he held a high place in the esteem of the community.

His father, the Rev. William McKean (1787-1869), was a native of Paisley, who hearing the Rev. George Harris preach in Glasgow, like many others found that he was a Unitarian. After working for some time under the direction of the leader whom he always regarded as his spiritual father, he became in 1835 minister at Alnwick, and there Henry McKean was born. After brief pastorates at Sunderland and Walsall, he settled in 1845 at Olbury, which was to be henceforth his son's home. Henry McKean was one of the first students of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, entering in 1854, with William Binns and others, at its foundation. Four years later he joined his father in the ministry at Oldbury, and in 1864, on his father's retirement on account of blindness and failing health, he entered on the sole charge.

Some thirty years ago Mr. McKean became a member of the old Local Board, and in 1892 was elected chairman, and three years later was unanimously chosen first chairman of the newly constituted Urban District Council. He rendered special services in connection with the supply of Oldbury with gas, and the sanitation of the town had his constant attention. For some years he was chairman of the Public Works Committee, and took special interest in the Library Committee. In 1893 he was elected also a member of the Worcester County Council. He was a prominent Free Mason, and as a minister of religion exercised a peaceable and harmonising influence, doing much to keep the spirit of sectarian bitterness and bigotry out of the town.

Many years ago Mr. McKean induced the schoolmasters of Oldbury to join him in founding the Weekly News and this paper, beginning in a small way, attained considerable local influence, and led to the inauguration of the Midland Printing Company. Mr. McKean acted from the first as chairman of the directors and editor of the paper, which afterwards extended to the series of similar papers issued in West Bromwich, Smethwick, Oldbury, and the surrounding districts. He was also a director of the Midland Educational Company in Birmingham. It was in his capacity of business manager and publisher that Mr. McKean was associated with the issue of the valuable series of Handbooks of Religion, in which Dr. M. J. Savage's "Christianity the Science of Manhood," and Mr. Armstrong's "Man's Knowledge of God" appeared.

With the District Hospital and other local charities Mr. McKean was closely associated, and another service he rendered, of inestimable benefit to the public health, was through the quiet influence he exerted towards securing public parks for the town. For many years a leader of the Liberal party in Oldbury, at the time of the division over Home Rule he became a Unionist. His love of Oldbury he marked by publishing in 1900 a book with the title "Picturesque Oldbury, Past and Present."

In the work of the Midland Christian Union and Sunday School Association, Mr. McKean took an hereditary and a warm personal interest. At ministers' meetings in the district his was one of the most familiar figures, and he was also closely associated with the Ministers' Benevolent Society.

Last year Mr. McKean suffered from a serious accident, being run over on his way home at night. He lay for some time in a very critical condition, and never fully regained his strength. He attended the May Ministers' Meeting at Evesham, but was then evidently failing; and after a week's serious illness he passed peacefully away on the morning of June 24.

The funeral at the Oldbury Cemetery on Tuesday afternoon was of a public character, and the manifestations of universal sympathy and regard were very impressive. As the cortege passed through the town many hundreds of the houses had their blinds drawn, flags were half-mast on the public buildings, and crowds of people lined the streets. The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. Rudolf Davis, of Evesham, earlier in the afternoon a service for members of the congregation and representatives of public bodies having been held in the chapel, conducted by the Rev. W. F. Turland. Most of those present afterwards joined the funeral procession.

MR. HENRY GREEN.

THE death of Mr. Henry Green, of Croydon, which took place suddenly at the City of London Liberal Club on Monday, June 20, deprives the congregation at Wellesley-road, and particularly the Domestic Mission at Dennett Hall, of an able, generous, and devoted worker. Born at Weston, near Bath, Dec. 30, 1840, he came to London, along with his parents and two brothers, in 1852. He lived at Sevenoaks for a time and was connected with the little chapel at Bessels Green before removing to the neighbourhood of Croydon. Mr. Green took a warm interest in the Domestic Mission, founded by the Rev. C. J. Street, of which he was treasurer for seventeen years. Sunday-school work also attracted him, and he served for a brief period on the Committee of the Sunday School Association. In connection with the meetings of the International Council he induced his brother, the late Sir Frank Green, Bart., to give a reception to the foreign delegates and other visitors as Lord Mayor at the Mansion House. In our denominational work generally he always took an intelligent interest. In public affairs he had occupied the position of Chairman of the Croydon Liberal Association, and was its treasurer at the time of his death. In October, 1903, he was elected a member of the Town Council, where he soon made his mark by his ability and high character. On the Education Committee he did admirable service. In all his business, public and private relationships he was highly esteemed, and his loss will be keenly felt by a large circle of friends. Mr. Green leaves a widow and a family of ten to mourn his death. The funeral took place at Bessels Green on Friday, June 24, when the Rev. W. J. Jupp conducted the service.

THE REV. DR. MACKENNAL.

MEN of all denominations, and of all classes in society, unite in deploring the death of Dr. Mackennal, which took place at Highgate on the evening of Thursday, June 23. About three months ago he went to take service at Highgate, and was taken ill at the house at which he was staying for the Sunday. He never returned to Bowdon, the scene of his long pastorate. An immense gathering of mourners filled the Downs Chapel at the memorial service on Tuesday last, when Dr. Fairbairn gave an address full of eloquent eulogy and just appreciation of his deceased friend and fellow-worker.

Alexander Mackennal was born at Truro in 1835: his ancestry was certainly Scottish, and so was his aspect. Indeed, one was surprised at first to hear a soft West-country voice proceeding from the lips of a man who looked such a veritable Mac. When (about 1855) he entered Hackney College to study for the Congregational ministry he had already spent three sessions at the University of Glasgow, where John Nichol was his fellow-student and particular friend. While at Hackney he took the degree of B.A. in the University of London; and thirty years later, when chairman of the Congregational Union, he received from Glasgow the degree of D.D. After periods of pastoral work at Burton-on-Trent and Surbiton, he put forth the full vigour of his mature work at Leicester (1870) and Bowdon (1877). In his last pastorate he was among friends wise and generous enough to know that he must not "give up to party what was meant for mankind." He had liberty for public duty, and for the discharge of administrative functions, in which his sagacity and tact (a tact that was never time-serving and never merely evasive) have rendered conspicuous service to the churches and institutions with which he was associated. But at the same time, Mackennal was the very pattern of what a "suburban pastor" should be. He never found, as some have professed to find, that to Christianise the "villa-dom" is an insuperably hard task. His personality was a bond of union between the people who spend their days in the suburban district and the city men who only sleep in it. And, further, we suppose that no man so strongly held together the various, even divergent, tendencies of modern evangelical Nonconformity. In the wide circle through which his influence ran, he was equally the inspirer of the man who worked at a Gospel mission in the slums of Manchester, and of the man whose chief interest lay, perhaps, in the new academic life which is becoming a powerful factor in English Congregationalism, especially in connection with Mansfield College.

Dr. Fairbairn said on Tuesday last "Dr. Mackennal was essentially a Broad Churchman in the wisest and most generous sense. His education fell at a time when thought was narrow and churches were hard, but narrowness could never claim him, nor could hardness call him her own." These words recall Mackennal's own, when he is speaking (Memoir of G. J. Proctor) of the churches to which he and other Hackney students occasionally ministered. He speaks of a type of Calvinism then rampant as "Antinomianism with a strong assurance of personal salvation," "not softened by any truly evangelical influence." "Men who urged their hearers to repentance and faith were 'freewillers'": to arouse the conscience was to be a "duty-faith" man, or a "morality-monger." He was shocked at the rigour and cruelty of the creed he heard professed: but we do not take it that he ever passed through any period of strong revolt, or any crisis of anxiety as to the main tenets of evangelical orthodoxy. His views "broadened slowly down," no doubt; but he was not a "Broad Churchman" in the sense of being an exponent of any vague or molluscous liberalism. Not liberalism, but liberality, was the mark of the man. He could not be churlish; he could not be uncharitable in judgment, just as he could not be discourteous in manner. But as to his personal theology, he was rather conservative than progressive; not that he contended for doctrinal formulæ, or ever desired to close inquiry or discussion. But long before the view of the validity of the Christian consciousness, of which we now hear so much, had become prevalent in England, Mackennal seemed to be prepared to stake everything, or nearly everything, upon the testimony of the believer's experience, upon the historical verification of New Testament language, as to the relation of man to God in Christ, in the souls and lives of men in every subquent age. He was consequently more ready to justify an old sentiment, and a time-honoured expression of it, than to seek for novelties in the contents, or in the language, of religion. A wide acquaintance with literature and with some branches of science gave him a repertory of language (often remarkable for curiosa felicitas) and of apt illustration. A thoroughly modern man, he possessed all those endowments of character which Christian imagination has delighted to regard as those of the "Primitive Bishop." While cultivating sympathetic relations with men of all churches, he was never ashamed of being earnestly denominational. "Let each of us make his own note speak," he would say, "it takes them all to make a harmony." And close upon this would come the quotation, so dear to his heart of cheerful, much-tried faith:—

There shall never be one lost good! What was, shall live as before;
The evil is null, is nought, is silence implying sound:
What was good shall be good, with, for evil, so much good more:
On the earth the broken arcs; in the heaven, a perfect round.

J. E. O.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

LET'S BE BEES.

"GOOD morning, Miriam."

She ran into my arms and gave me a kiss. "Shall we have a game?" "I'm afraid I must get to work." "Then let's be bees," she said. "Right: what kind?" "Why honey-bees, of course!" "Queens, drones, or workers?" "Not drones; I couldn't be a drone; they're lazy men-bees" (a gentle hint for me). Nor did we feel quite at liberty to take upon us (especially myself) the solitary and dignified character of a queen. So we both agreed to be working-bees, and such we immediately became.

Now I should like to tell you what happened, because such a transformation does not come off every day. Dressed, as it seemed, in tiny suits of armour, with immense oval eyes, and with wings which we laid on our backs for dust-cloaks, we found ourselves crawling about on our six legs in the streets of a great walled city. There were throngs of people wherever we went, and they were all on the move. Here a gang of masons were at work on some new buildings, there a line of scavengers were sweeping the road. Some were on sentry-go, and a gang of police were hustling an intruder out of the gates. A few were lounging about and getting in other people's ways—fat, fashionable-looking fellows. A large part of the city seemed to be given over to what looked like a huge treacle factory, and hundreds of busy toilers were filling the treacle tubs with clear golden syrup. There were other buildings which we took for a great hospital, and we thought that there must either have been a war which had brought these lines of wounded people to bed, or else that the plague was raging. But on inquiry we found that this was not exactly a hospital, but what you call a crêche, or place for nursing babies. And there they were, little wee babies and great helpless lubbering babies all in their cribs in their white night-gowns, being watched and fed by a small army of nurses. As one of the nurses told us, a few fine large cradles were reserved for the little princesses who were fed on special food. Miriam asked if it were Mellin's, but the nurse made no reply. She did not seem to understand. Throughout the city there was a constant busy roar like what you hear in the streets of London. But the strangest thing of all is that the city is so completely walled and roofed in that, except just at the gates (and there is only one entrance), not a ray of light can enter. Nor is there a single street lamp, not a farthing dip candle in the whole place; and yet there are no accidents or collisions, and we found our way about as naturally as if it were broad daylight. In fact, to us, now we were bees, darkness did not seem darkness. But the orders for the day were given out, and there was no time for further sight-seeing or loitering about. Bees' morning is a busy one. Miriam and I were parted. We bees always go to work by ourselves so as not to waste time over talking, and then it's so pleasant when two friends chance to light on the same flower and you can say "How do?" pass the time of day, and give one another a feeler—or, as you would say, a nod.

Miriam was despatched to collect honey and I to bring in flour for bread-making. Later in the day we got leave for a short rest, and as we sat on the sill in the sunshine, brushing our hair and stroking our feelers we compared notes.

"Well, where have you been this morning?" I asked. "Any adventures?"

"First of all," she said, "I flew down the lane, because one can always find flowers at the roadside. But I remembered that I must not stop there, or in the neighbouring cottage gardens, although they looked very tempting; for being so near home it's only fair to leave them for the young bees who can't fly so far as we. Besides, they're almost treading on one another's toes for numbers." "Humph," I thought, and "Hum" I softly answered with my wings. "So leaving those youngsters behind you?" "I flew right away over the cornfields which are no good for honey, until I saw a glorious patch of red flowers. 'What luck!' I said to myself. 'I shall fill my pouch in about no time, and be back and out again before you have filled your baskets once.' Alack! no such good fortune. It was red clover, and the tubes of the flowers, you know, are so long that I could not reach the syrup with my trunk. I didn't like being beaten, so I bit through one or two of the flowers at the bottom, and so sucked the syrup out. But this was rather slow work, so I gave it up, and leaving the red clover for old Mrs. Bumble with her long proboscis, I went on to the white clover on my favourite hunting grounds, about two miles away. You can smell the blossom a mile off. I've made several journeys there this morning, and filled up a whole honey-pot by myself, so I'm rather tired."

"Well," said I, in my turn, "I've been at my old game of dusty-miller. Red flour, white flour, blue flour, yellow flour. 'Once more for the yellow,' I said to myself, for it's the most abundant, and I've brought home eight baskets full."

"Where from?" "Why, the parson's garden. He keeps bees too, but there are so many flowers that there is enough for us all, and his bees and ours are very good friends. And then the parson has a glorious bed of Shirley poppies, scarlet and crimson, and pink and white, and in the middle of every blossom there is a cluster of knobsticks with bags full of yellow flour. I just plunged head first into one after another, rolling and rollicking round until my clothes were as yellow as if I had been buzzing about in a mustard box. There were lots of our fellows at the same game, for it was more play than work. We were like sparrows rolling in the dust. Afterwards we sat down and got our breath, and brushed the flour carefully off our jackets into our baskets."

Miriam says when I'm toiling home with a basket full of gold dust on each thigh that I look like a little flying donkey going to market with a pair of panniers stuffed full of butter and cheese. But to-day my comrade thought I had done a good morning's work and hummed her approval.

H. M. LIVENS.

ONLY he who lives a life of his own can help the lives of other men. P. Brooks.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street Strand, London, W.C.

LONDON, JULY 2, 1904.

STUDENT AND PROPHET.

THE close of the session at Manchester College, Oxford, the proceedings of which we report this week, afforded an opportunity, such as is always welcome, for wise and helpful words both as to the true spirit of the student and scholar and as to the ideal of the ministry, for which the students while at college are making preparation. This year, as it happened, a double duty fell to one old student of the College, and we have from Mr. ARMSTRONG, who forty years ago as a student was admonished and encouraged by the Visitors of those days, the public address to the students, in his capacity of Visitor, and also at the Valedictory service the welcome into the ministry of the students who have completed their course.

The Visitor's Address is to be separately published, and we can only echo here the wish expressed by Mr. DARBISHIRE at the Trustees' meeting, that effectual steps may be taken to secure for it a wide publicity. The Address of Welcome into the ministry we are glad to be allowed to print here in full. An added interest attaches to it, from the fact that now for the first time in this country a woman, having completed a full college course, is welcomed into the ministry of our churches, and has, in fact, already accepted a call to her first pastorate.

We are grateful to Mr. ARMSTRONG for his clear exposition of the true ideal of the scholar who is also a student for the ministry. It was a timely warning he uttered to the student, not to be content even with the widest knowledge of what other men have thought, but to see to it that he has thought of his own, a genuine grip of truth, which shall send him out from college not a scholar only, but a man with a message.

There is inspiration in the thought that truth is indeed of GOD, and that he who is to be a preacher of the living word in his reverent study and search for truth is in fact giving himself to GOD. The fact that our knowledge of truth is progressive, and that, as Mr. ARMSTRONG said, a graduate in the world's work may find his thought taking very different shape from that which he brought with him from college, by no means invalidates that conviction, and ought not to weaken in the least his hold upon the truth to which he has attained.

When we rejoice, even with passionate conviction, in the message of life which has possessed our soul, there is yet deeper gladness in the thought that even this is not the full measure of attainment, while yet it is what GOD gives us now. In His own good time the clearer light, the larger vision will be granted, and then we may see, perchance, how crude and even childish is our present thought. But none the less, if it is now the full measure of our own manhood, it is Divine truth, and GOD's gift to us. Unless we rejoice in it now and hold firmly to what has so far been granted, we shall not be ready for the next onward step.

The student for the ministry is poor indeed if he is entirely lacking in prophetic insight. His knowledge of the truth must be blended with the ardour of self-sacrifice. The knowledge that he seeks is to be found above all at the sources of the deeper life with GOD, where through the revealing of duty he comes into actual contact with the strength of the ETERNAL. And as with the student, so with the preacher. In this service he is to give himself, and he must see to it, therefore, that in that self there is, in fact, a strength greater than his own. So only can the prophetic word burn upon his lips, and he become in very truth a minister of GOD.

The three years of special theological study are all too short for the work of preparation, when one remembers all that there is to be known, what wealth of wisdom and of life to be gathered in. Often the young minister in the strenuous years that follow, amid the ceaseless claims of his active work, looks back with a great longing to that time of comparative seclusion and quiet concentration of purpose, wishing that such leisure might be his again, and, as that for the most part is impossible, that he had used to better purpose the golden opportunity, while it was his.

For each new generation of students our desire is that the College training may be more perfectly adapted to their needs, and that they may enter with fuller appreciation into the privileges thus afforded, in preparation for the noblest calling to which a man can dedicate his life.

IT is folly to believe that one can faithfully love who does not love faithfulness.

Sir Philip Sidney.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

THE annual proceedings at the close of the session took place at the College on Thursday, June 23, the whole of the proceedings being for the first time compressed into a single day. Two hours were devoted in the morning to the reading of passages from essays by the leaving students and sermons preached by two of their number, Mr. J. Islan Jones and Mr. H. Dawtrey. Then came the Visitor's Address and, after lunch, the Trustees' Meeting, while in the evening the Valedictory Service was held.

The Visitor's Address was given by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, who with the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed was last year appointed to the office. The Master of Balliol, the senior Visitor, was also present at the evening service.

THE VISITOR'S ADDRESS.

Glancing back over many Visitors' Addresses which had been offered to successive generations of students, Mr. Armstrong said, he might well be reduced to silence by despair of offering them any fresh matter for consideration. But new generations of learners might still ask questions which had been answered over and over again, and experiences old as the hills might be new to the minds of fresh generations. Thus it might be possible for him, who was a student in that College forty years ago, to have a word to speak to the students of to-day, which might have a chance of going home and setting up some process of thought and meditation.

The root principle and characteristic of Manchester College, "Free Teaching and Free Learning in Theology," was a formula which they had heard and read and repeated possibly even to weariness, a formula, nevertheless, which he hoped had come to mean the more to them with the years, and with the years yet to come would unfold to them still more largely its wisdom and sanctity. Into what modes and methods, he asked, had the tuition to which they had been subjected fallen under the inspiration of that supreme controlling principle? Their studies had tended to the historic and the comparative. They had been shown the growth of doctrines and the conditions under which they had developed, and had compared together the doctrines and modes of thought of widely severed ages and races. They had been initiated into the study of the dynamics rather than the statics of theology. The word, which in his own college days had only just been uttered, and was tentatively asserting a modest footing in such realms as biology and sociology, Evolution, had been the master-word of their whole range of studies.

Such a method of study marked a great deliverance. It killed the very roots of bigotry. It exhibited all humanity, through the ages and the climes, as one vast brotherhood for ever moving forward, with various step and by various ways, indeed, yet ever moving forward, in the supreme quest of truth. It tended to soften prejudice, to minimise bias, to correct insular error, to lift the spirit above the low jealousies of the narrower ecclesiasticisms. Nor could they be too grateful to the men who in the old days set the face of their College in that direction, nor to the contemporary teachers who had with unflinching faithfulness upheld the high tradition.

Yet there were dangers and drawbacks involved in their great principle, against which they ought to be on their guard. The historic and comparative method of imparting theologic, philosophic, and religious knowledge, carried with it the danger that the student might become content with knowing what other men had thought on the supreme facts and problems of life and of eternity. They might be led to forget that to know what Paul or Athanasius or Augustine thought concerning the relations of God and Christ and Man, was not in itself to know anything of those relations. Yet in truth, to have the theology of Apostle or of Father pat, was not to have one tittle of theology. They might drop into the illusion that to know what Kant or Hegel or Martineau thought concerning the moral imperative or being and not being, was to have for themselves some acquaintance with the nature of the meaning covered by the monosyllables ought and be. Yet in truth to have the philosophy of German or English masters at their fingers' ends was not to have a jot of actual philosophy. It was one thing to learn what had been thought, another thing to think. And a very little very clumsy thinking went further in the making of a man than large measures of information about the thinking of the very giants of the human race. It was a more educative thing for one hour to be in contact alone with God, with Christ, with Humanity, with Duty, with Life, with Being, than to look on with the very best binoculars at the battle waged with those great entities by the master-minds of all the ages. That looking on, indeed, was one condition of anything like culture and breadth of mind; but the little pinch of personal experience was the salt that gave the whole mass all its savour.

"It is very bad," he said, "to be opinionated, but it is of the essence of healthy life to have opinions. It is essential to bear it in mind that you may be wrong; but it is a wholesome thing deeply to desire to be right. Openness of mind is the condition of wisdom; but never to be certain is the consummation of folly. It is a grave and responsible thing to register a conviction; but a sliding scale of opinions is a witless device. The wiser and truer opinion of to-morrow must be built up on the earnestly thought-out opinion of to-day. The man who thinks that every man may be right will not recognise the man who is right when he comes across him. You are to move on from thought to thought, from conception to conception, from conviction to conviction; but at each onward leap you must have solid ground from which to spring. The search for truth is a business to which a man may well dedicate a life. But the assimilation of truth belongs to the beginning of the search as well as to the end."

They must not be content, he proceeded, with mere passive receptivity in learning, but must assimilate the truth. By the living fire of the will, information must be soldered to knowledge, knowledge fused to wisdom, and wisdom touched to life throbbing with the potencies of faith and love, that so they might come forth from the college class-room not mere scholars—though it was great to be a scholar—but men, each with his message, his own personal conviction glowing at his heart, touching the problems which engage and absorb afresh every generation possessing the earth, problems of life, of duty, of humanity, of God.

In thus warning them of a danger in the purely historical and comparative study of human thinking and of the subject-matter of thought, which might leave the student in the end without a thought-life of his own, it might seem that he invited them to the brink of an opposite danger, that of too rashly forming opinions, without adequate consideration and equipment. Nor did he believe that the best students of Manchester College left its walls with a set of opinions so tempered as to be proof against the experiences of the years. After all, the school of books was followed by the school of life, and it was there that the education must be perfected, and the highest degrees—Master and Doctor—be won in the university of mankind. Opinions were modified with the years, and it might well be that at the last their deepest conviction would be that they had as yet hardly begun to know. But, none the less, he held that students gave the best promise of future virile effectiveness, if already they were not only able to distinguish with accurate knowledge between rival schools of theology or philosophy, but were also led, with some strength of assurance and glow of sentiment, to attach themselves to some one among the several competitors.

They could have no thought of abandoning their fundamental principle of free teaching and free learning, even while they saw what advantages accrued to the thoroughly convinced dogmatist, and to the training which on such a principle might be given to young men. The young priest who went forth with a conviction burning at his heart, which no wind of heresy could ever quench, who never doubted or hesitated, was, at least, a force with which the world would have to make its reckoning. If, on the other hand, a contemporary youth went forth with only an open mind, one in whom inquiry was still a more prevailing temper than the passion of conviction, who was furnished with the literatures and the philosophies of the ages, but had grappled to his soul with hooks of steel no absolute assurance concerning how it ultimately is between a human being and God—what chance was there for him in that great arena where the two were to wrestle for the suffrages of men? God had given no more potent instrumentality for the making of men, virile, effective, of the stuff of which victors are compacted, than contact with individuals of intense conviction. It was less the validity of men's beliefs than their intensity which told. Augustine, Luther, Calvin, Wesley, Gladstone, what was it that wrought in them with power on whole masses of mankind? The glow, the fire, the white-heat of their conviction, witnessed by pen or tongue. There was no spiritual force exceeding in its might the force which flowed out from such as in their heart of hearts were verily persuaded. While, therefore, they were inalienably bound to the principle of their College, and to the wide outlook, the open mind, the scrupulous historic fairness, the free and moving air, were triply and irrevocably pledged by tradition, association, and conviction, none the less should they pray God so to enter by His Holy Spirit into the minds and hearts of those who were to minister in their churches, that they might be alive with a message which they could not but speak, eager with a witness which they could not but bear. And the address concluded:—

"Fellow students of the ways and the truths of God, bethink you what it all means, this college training of yours, often, no doubt, wearisome, sometimes dry, sometime seeming to tangle you in a network of trivial minutiæ. Bethink you of what it all means, and take heart of grace. You are taught here how to search after truth—the spirit and the mode in which to conduct inquiry. But the very search for truth implies that truth is greater and more sacred than the searching. The search is sacred solely because the truth sought is more sacred still. And why is the truth so sacred, so well worth the long, the patient, the laborious, the never-ending search? Because truth, real truth and actual, is no other than the thought and act of God. Whatever is true to fact—be it much or little, a rounded orb or a broken fragment—in our science or philosophy or theology, is part and parcel of the fact of God. It is of the eternal, of the only real, the enduring, when all the evanescent shall vanish away like smoke. Yes, and why are we to care so much for that? Why stretch and strain our souls to grasp some fragment of that truth? Because to think the truth is to think something of the thought of God, and to think the thought of God is to enter in part into the very life of God, to be shaped and moulded into God-likeness, to enter indeed in part into the image of Him, the Ineffable. And he who has in any faintest measure entered into that life divine has that to give to his fellow-men which is more precious than all the wealth of all the myriad worlds. It is to the ministering of this gift to your fellow-men that you are to press on with a consecrated diligence which shall never flag, with a dauntless courage which no hardness shall ever avail to shake."

THE TRUSTEES' MEETING.

The annual Summer Meeting of Trustees was held in the library, the President, the Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL, in the chair.

The minutes of the annual meeting in January, and the catch words of the minutes of subsequent committee meetings, were read by Mr. A. H. Worthington, the lay secretary.

The Rev. JOSEPH WOOD moved, and Mr. THOMAS WORTHINGTON seconded, a resolution of grateful acknowledgment to the Principal, Professors, and Lecturers, for their services to the College, which was acknowledged by the Principal.

Mr. CHARLES W. JONES moved, and Mr. J. W. SCOTT seconded, a resolution of thanks to the Visitors for their services, and to the Rev. R. A. Armstrong for his address, with the request that he would allow it to be printed for circulation among the Trustees.

Mr. R. D. DARBISHIRE supported the resolution, and asked for an extension of its terms to secure a much wider circulation for the address. They could not too warmly express their thanks to Mr. Armstrong for his exposition of their great principle of "Free Teaching and Free Learning." He recalled how he had himself introduced that phrase in connection with their publications, while he was secretary with the late Charles Beard, having found the suggestion of it in a German book. As bearing on the principle of freedom, he also read the following passage from a report of the recent annual meeting of the Churchmen's Union for the Advancement of Liberal Religious Thought:—

Canon Henson said he had been called a stone of stumbling and rock of offence. He was sorry to hear it; but a religious teacher was beyond all others under an obligation to be absolutely honest in thought and speech. He protested against men who endeavoured to do their duty being paraded as traitors and infidels. It was a very familiar method at the earliest stages of a controversy to create an atmosphere of prejudice and unreasoning opposition. That method was now, it seemed, being pursued in the Church of England by highly-placed individuals who were their natural protectors against waves of unreasoning prejudice, and by the clerical press almost without exception. There was a real danger lest a wave of obscurantism should be worked up, which would do infinite damage to religion in this country. Every English Churchman who cared for honesty, for liberty of thought, and for the future of Christianity in England should come forward and oppose this danger.

Mr. ARMSTRONG having acknowledged the resolution, the students same in, and the PRESIDENT presented their certificates to the four who had completed their course, and also the essay prizes and Daniel Jones grants.

Of the four leaving students, Mr. J. Islan Jones, B.A., who obtained first-class honours in both Old and New Testament, is going to Germany to continue his studies as a Hibbert Scholar. Mr. Henry Dawtrey, B.A., goes to Sheffield, as assistant to the Rev. C. J. Street at the Upper Chapel. Mr. F. Hankinson is about to enter on a ministerial engagement, and Miss Gertrud von Petzold, M.A., to whom the President offered a special word of cordial welcome into the ministry, is to enter on the charge of the Free Christian Church, Leicester.

Of the remaining students, Mr. J. P. Davies, B.A., to whom the Russell Martineau prize for Old Testament was awarded, is to be senior student. The other third year men will be Messrs. A. Golland, M.A., Albert Thornhill, B.A., and C. M. Wright, B.A., while Mr. J. Yoshimoto (Japan), Mr. V. A. Sukhtankar (India), and Dr. J. György (Hungary), will enter on their second year as special students. The list of first year's men is expected to be as follows: Mr. Frederick Sinclaire, M.A. (who is coming from New Zealand for a full theological course), Messrs. Stanley Mellor, Bertram Lister, M. Rowe, and W. E. Williams. There will also be nine external students preparing for graduation, before entering upon the theological course.

The PRINCIPAL having announced that the students would reassemble for the new session at 9 a.m. on Saturday, October 15, a vote of thanks to the President, moved by the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter and seconded by Mr. William Long, brought the meeting to a close.

VALEDICTORY SERVICE.

WELCOME INTO THE MINISTRY.

The Valedictory Service for the students leaving College was held in the evening, in the chapel. The devotional part of the service was conducted by the Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, who read as lessons the passages beginning Isaiah l. 4 and Matthew x. 34, and a selection from St. Paul, concluding with 2 Cor. vi. 10.

Dr. DRUMMOND gave the address of farewell on behalf of the College. Speaking of the relation between intellectual enlightenment and the law of love, he uttered a warning against the conceit of knowledge. If by the advance of thought they were puffed up and their sympathy was narrowed, it was a lamentable thing. St. Paul thought little of knowledge, as something not to be boasted of. It was on account of the sincerity of their love that they were known and received of God. Almost the last words he heard from the lips of the late Master of Balliol were, "How little we know." Yes, how little, even of their own tiny planet; how much less of the millions of suns their telescopes revealed! Through infinite ages they might pass from realm to realm and find ever increasing cause for adoration before Him who knew them all.

Knowledge, if pursued in the right spirit, would not puff them up or cut them off from sympathy with God's lowliest creatures. Yet the great achievements of the intellect impelled them to go forward. Though faith, hope, and love would abide, while knowledge passed away, those great spiritual principles must still clothe themselves in a body of thought, and while the old vesture decayed, take to themselves a more ethereal dress.

They were going forth from college to a task where all their knowledge and powers of thought would be strained to the utmost, but where nevertheless those powers must drop into a secondary place, wholly subservient to spiritual sympathy. "Take with you," he said, "that love which Christ brought to our world, and let his cross be the measure of your duty and self-denial for others."

The Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG then gave the welcome into the ministry, and spoke as follows:—

Miss von Petzold and Gentlemen, you, the four retiring students of Manchester College, have invited me to voice that welcome with which the brotherhood of the ministers of our Free Churches greet you on your joining their ranks equipped and eager for service. That welcome is earnest, hearty, and sincere. For we need the strengthening of our ranks by the enthusiastic and the young. I shall be forgiven if I utter, on behalf of my colleagues all over the country, one word of special welcome to our sister. Many of us, at any rate, believe that womanhood has an influence to exercise in the religious life of the community at least as wholesome and as sacred as manhood, and feel that the calling and status of the minister has too long been held the province of the man exclusively. And it is with very warm and cordial sympathy that we recognise the courage of her who to-night breaks a perverse and mischievous tradition, and wish for her the fruition of her highest hopes and purposes.

And now what is this stated ministry at the entrance-gate of which I extend to you the right hand of ministerial fellowship? First of all, it is not a ministry that is to separate you by a hair's breadth from the common interests and duties of humanity. You enter to-night no segregated class. You merely seek a position in which you shall be free to give your time, your talent, your strength, your life to the discharge of certain functions aiming at the higher welfare of the community. Those functions are somewhat multitudinous, and there is always danger of drifting into such a variety of purposes, that no one purpose shall be strongly and efficiently carried through. And so at the outset I would urge you to fix your thoughts on two functions as central and supreme—the function of the preacher and the function of the pastor. Do those things which pertain to the preacher, and to the pastor well, and your ministry will make for the kingdom of God. Dishonour either calling, and it were better you had never entered the ministerial ranks.

Let me at the first ask you to consider with me the function of the preacher. Why preach in such days as these? Has not all you can say been said already? Has it not all been put down in books by men of master mind and skill? Poets, philosophers, historians, prophets, are not their words there ready to every willing hand? Which of you can say the great and best things which the souls of men most need, as well, or half as well, as they have been said already a hundred times? Then why preach? Meet together for prayers and hymns, yes; but why not in the sermon half-hour place a book in each man's hands and bid him read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest? Why preach? Because from the beginning until now and on to the end of human tenancy of earth, the power of the living voice of a living man straight to living men is a power for the moving, the stirring, the quickening, the strengthening of souls which has not its rival or its peer. It is the direct appeal which sets the energies of spiritual life astir, as the printed word but rarely can. In calling you to be preachers, God calls you to wield a weapon which can conquer the world.

But then you must preach. It must be a live message that you speak. The thought, the emotion, the sentiment, the aspiration which it voices, must be beating strongly within you. There must be nothing perfunctory, nothing official, nothing which you have not made your own; and you must go straight with it to the minds and consciences of the people. Not the whole sermon, indeed, can often be of this calibre. But you have not preached a sermon, only delivered an essay, if somewhere in its course you have not struck the spark, and set the fire that is in you leaping up in the waiting hearts around.

And if preaching is thus to be alive, what is the primary condition? There is much discussion as to the topics suitable for pulpit handling. The one law for every preacher is, preach the thing which is alive to you. If Christ stirs your heart and makes alive your soul, preach Christ. If Gladstone moves you with a mighty moral power, preach Gladstone. If the Bible is to you a well of living water, preach the Bible. If the literatures of other than the Hebrew race have brought you spiritual regeneration, preach these. If it is in the secret recesses of solitary souls that you find the speech of God, let that quiet teaching pass your lips. If it is in the clash or harmonies of vast movements of men that the appeal comes to your conscience, let that appeal ring again from your echoing voice. Your self may be a poor self, but let it be a true self; and then remember that it is yourself alone that you can give to your listening people.

Indeed, I must lay on you one strong if strange injunction. In your preaching do not be afraid to be dogmatic. If dogma is doctrine declared with confidence, yet unsupported by proofs or demonstrations, in your preaching do not be afraid to be dogmatic. The religious service is not the occasion for buttressing up opinions with elaborately reasoned arguments—save in exceptional cases. All real preaching is confident, unhesitating declaration of conviction. Your main task in the pulpit is not to prove that it is reasonable to believe in God; your main task is to make the God in whom you live and move and have your being felt as a living presence, instant, urgent, in the souls and consciences of your brother men. Not argument, not testimony is your business. "Thus saith the Lord" is to be your message. Not the school-master, but the prophet, is to be your type.

There is, then, no topic—if it moves yourself—which is to be barred out from the pulpit; there is no conviction—if it lives in you—which is to be erased from the sermon page. Only always speak and feel with sympathetic consideration. Remember the variety of association, training, temperament, mental constitution, spiritual need, within the limits even of the smallest congregation. If you treat topics which rouse conflicting opinions—war, temperance, great public principles—be absolutely clear and true, but never cease to be tender or courteous or considerate towards those who look at the matter in another way. The preacher must now and then rebuke, perhaps even denounce; but let him neither scold nor sneer. Bear your witness; yes, never flinch, but always as one who from his heart loves his fellow men.

All these, my friends, are counsels of perfection, of which we who are old hands at preaching have failed again and again. We are often dry. We are often didactic. We are not always quite fair, but we know what the ideal is; and we pray that you may reach it more nearly than we.

I have spoken of the function of the preacher, permit me a few words on the function of the pastor. The ministers sent forth from this college fifty or a hundred years ago had a very definite conception, I suppose, of the functions of the pastor. In some Christian communities to-day those functions are still very definitely conceived. With us the formal pastorate is almost a thing of the past. When I entered on my first pastorate in 1866 my predecessor gave me a list of the members of the congregation, with a capital P set opposite the names of such of my flock as I should be expected to pray with when I called. The pastoral visit in those days was a formal and a formidable thing. Now it has in most of our circles lost its definite and punctilious character. And, in my opinion, it is well that that is so. For the less there is a consciousness between you and one of your congregation of a professional relation between you, and the more you are just a friend among other friends, the happier and the wholesomer will the whole connection be. You are a friend, that is all; only you are to be a true friend, a loyal friend, a friend who sympathises, and understands, and cares; a friend who can forget himself and give himself for his friend; a friend whose friendship counts as one of the assets of life; a friend who cannot be shaken off by trivial fault or offence; a friend who does not blow hot and cold; a friend who can, if real occasion be, speak the word of quiet, straight rebuke; a friend to whom a secret can be told with absolute assurance that it will be a secret still; a friend who bears with weakness or perversity, and in his heart is a friend still. I hope that most of us can think of some one man or woman who is that sort of friend to us. The pastoral relation resolves itself into being ourselves that kind of friend to such of our people as will admit us to the relation I have described.

Once more, this is a counsel of perfection. Rare is the minister who can feel that he has realised the type. But the ideal sometimes reveals itself to us in the moments of our self-examination. And we may well pray that you may realise the ideal as we have failed to realise it.

It is not for me to-night to enumerate the manifold ways in which the work of the pastor may be done. Schools, classes, institutions, societies, committees, they will all have their place, and their legitimate and necessary place, in the round of your days and weeks and years. All kinds of interests, high and noble interests, outside your strictly ministerial duties will importune you. There is a constant danger of being carried away in the stream of these things. It is of supreme importance always to hold fast by the cardinal duties which you have deliberately selected for your life work. Let nothing else hustle them off the stage. You are to be preachers, you are to be pastors. Keep these things central in all your plans of life.

And as the years go by keep your ideal pure and high. Cleave to principle in all the problems of life. You enter a life task than which none has loftier ideals. You will often meet influences calculated to drag you down, to tempt you to causes which make compromise with the lower expediencies. Even then be courteous, self-controlled. Do not readily flame out into denunciation. But in your own heart and mind keep principle clear and true; and though all the world be against you be loyal to it to the end.

Comrades, it is no easy calling into which I welcome you this night. You are weak, fallible, imperfect mortals. Your task is difficult and long. Oh, never drift away from prayer and touch with God. Drink often at the wells of life. Let no hurry and no pressure beguile you to think that you can do God's work without renewing your souls perpetually by withdrawing a little while from the strife and the strain. Be every day a little while alone with God. Do not trust your own strength. Be very humble, very mindful that only in the strength of God can you minister well and wisely to your fellow men. And now and through the years may He bless you with the consecration of His Holy Spirit!

And so I proffer you the hand of fellowship and the heart of comradeship.

REMONSTRANT SYNOD OF ULSTER.

THE annual meeting of the Synod was held on June 21, in the First Presbyterian Church, Belfast. The Rev. T. DUNKERLEY, the outgoing Moderator, having preached a sermon from John vi. 18, delivered his valedictory address, in the course of which he referred to the loss they had sustained through the death of the Rev. James Hall, and welcomed the Rev. G. V. Crook into their fellowship. During the past year, he said, the churches had as a rule faithfully and peacefully borne their witness. In several there were signs of renewed activity and increasing life. The Synod had held more meetings than usual for the purpose of revising their code of discipline. Amid activities of thought and healthy differences in minor matters, he might speak for all in one respect—that never had the members of the Synod been more devoted to the principle of non-subscription than to-day. They were at one in admiring the wisdom of their fathers' protest against subscription. Time only deepened their conviction of its worth; and, as now and again, here and there, and with growing power as time proceeded, they witnessed in other churches difficulties arising from that which they deemed a wrong to the human soul, they were encouraged to hope that the day was coming when they, too, would see the wrong of imposing other than Divine conditions, and trust not to human creeds and confessions of faith, but to the free breathing of the Holy Spirit to lead men into all truth. He concluded with a sentence of one of their own leaders, spoken seventy years ago:—"Let but the diversities which separate Christians retire and the truths which they all profess to love advance to prominence, and, whatever may become of party names, our aims are fulfilled, and our satisfaction is complete."

The Rev. Frederick Thomas was then unanimously elected Moderator for the ensuing year, the Rev. W. E. Mellone as clerk, and the Rev. J. A. Miskimmin assistant clerk.

The report of the Finance Committee, presented by the Rev. J. A. Kelly, the convener, showed that £60 each had been paid to ten congregations on the Sustentation Fund.

On the motion of the Rev. T. DUNKERLEY a resolution was passed warmly congratulating the Unitarian Home Missionary College on its approaching Jubilee, and commending its appeal for support to the generous consideration of the churches.

Rev. J. J. MAGILL moved :—

That in view of the widespread evil and suffering caused by the excessive use of alcoholic liquors, and having regard to the danger to all classes, but especially to the young and inexperienced, arising from the prevalence of the drinking customs of society, this Synod strongly recommends to the congregations connected therewith the desirability of adopting total abstinence, both as the safest attitude for themselves and as that which will make their influence most beneficial to the general community.

Mr. JOHN SMYTH seconded the motion.

The Rev. W. E. MELLONE said Mr. Magill had urged the setting of a very high example, but the moderate drinkers contended that they also were setting a high example in resisting excess.

The Rev. T. DUNKERLEY, in supporting the motion, said he was pleased that the Moderator had permitted the resolution to be brought before the Synod, as that and other matters lay in the hands of the Association. He agreed that moderation was a high principle, but there was a far higher one, which was that of self-sacrifice.

The Rev. G. V. CROOK said the weakness of Unitarianism lay in thinking that human nature was better than it was. He believed total abstinence was the only safe course, especially for ministers of religion, if they were to have any power and influence in the matter with their congregations.

The resolution was passed, and after the transaction of other business the Synod adjourned.

ASSOCIATION OF NON-SUBSCRIBING PRESBYTERIANS.

THE annual meeting of this Association was held on June 22, in All Souls' Church, Belfast. The preacher at the religious service was the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, of Nottingham, whose subject was "The Supernatural Possibility," showing how fuller knowledge and profounder thought passed beyond a bald materialism, and recognised the larger spiritual truths, culminating in a living communion of the soul of man with the Eternal.

Mr. JOHN ROGERS, the outgoing President, took the chair after lunch, and, the roll having been called, delivered his address. He noted with satisfaction an increase of £148 in the funds of the Orphan Society, and a growing activity in their Sunday-schools. He urged a greater loyalty on the part of congregations in the support of their ministers, and especially by regular attendances at the services.

On the motion of the Rev. JAMES KENNEDY, seconded by the Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND, the Rev. Principal Gordon was then elected President, and took the chair.

PRINCIPAL GORDON gratefully acknowledged his election, and in the course of his address referred with appreciation to the somewhat new movement of the Sunday afternoon gatherings held by the Rev. W. H. Drummond in All Souls' Church, and recently described by him in these columns.

The Rev. James Kennedy was unanimously re-elected clerk, and the Rev. J. A. Kelly treasurer. It was agreed that the place of meeting for next year should be fixed by the General Purposes Committee, in April, and that it should be not necessarily in Belfast.

The following resolution, moved by the Rev. D. Walmsley, seconded by Mr. John Smyth, and supported by the Revs. R. M. King, R. Lyttle, and J. M. Lloyd Thomas, was unanimously passed :—

That this meeting earnestly trusts that Parliament will refuse to pass the Licensing Bill for England now in consideration, believing that the measure would seriously interfere with the responsibilities of local justices in meeting local needs, would tend to thwart and discourage the efforts of all who are working to promote the habits of sobriety among the people, and would create a rule of proprietorship in licences which would go far beyond the demands of right and justice; that copies of this resolution be sent to the Prime Minister, to the Right Hon. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman; Messrs. T. W. Russell, M.P.; John Redmond, M.P.; Colonel Saunderson, M.P.; and the members for Belfast.

The Rev. W. NAPIER moved and Mr. JOHN ROGERS seconded a resolution of congratulation to the Unitarian Home Missionary College on the occasion of its jubilee, and warmly commending its appeal for £20,000 to the generosity of their congregations. The Revs. James Kennedy, W. H. Drummond, R. Lyttle, and A. Turner spoke to the resolution, which was passed.

Reports of the Temperance Committee and of the Sunday-schools were adopted, and votes of thanks brought the business meeting to a close.

The annual dinner was afterwards held at Ye Olde Castle Restaurant, under the presidency of Principal Gordon.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

ANIMAL SUFFERING.

SIR,—I owe an apology to Miss Frances Lee for having allowed last week to slip by without acknowledging her interesting criticism of a sentence in the Preface to the new edition of my essay on "God and the Soul." She thinks, I understand, that the consolation which I derive from learning that, in the opinion of recent observers, the animal world generally lives rather in an atmosphere of happiness than in one of pain, is "sentimental rather than ethical."

I do not quite catch the point of the remark. I am told that multitudes of my fellow-creatures live in joy; accordingly I rejoice with those that rejoice. That is sentiment, no doubt. But so is three-fourths of the Christian spirit. Moreover, I am quite sure that it is sentiment which Miss Lee's kind heart will share with me if she is convinced of the facts.

Quite apart from "ethical" satisfaction, it is good to be led to believe that there is widespread gladness where we had been taught that there was chiefly pain and terror, and I for one am deeply thankful for the brightness of this light on the field of nature.

It is, of course, quite true that this revelation does not solve the ethical problem—the problem how the suffering of the innocent comes to be permitted at all in a world controlled by a good and just God. But even this also is touched, is it not, by the exhibition of a teeming life in wood and glade and river which rejoices always? The more bounteously we discover the Eternal Power scattering the largesse of gladness through the world of sentient beings, the more difficult it seems to refuse our trust that, behind the fact of pain, there must be some explanation compatible with the goodness of the sum of things. If you ask me: "How can a good God allow evil in the world?" I answer, "I do not know; but do you tell me how could a God who was not good pour out such wealth of joy and love on creatures of every grade?" Although bewildering questions may remain, the transference of a vast mass of animal sentience out of the scale of pain into the scale of joy, indefinitely strengthens the assurance that the Power at the back of things is good and not evil, and that to perfect knowledge perfect goodness would be revealed.

RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG.

Liverpool, June 27, 1904.

MR. PHILIP GREEN.

SIR,—Mr. Philip Green has been, since February, 1878, in the employment of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and during this long period he has efficiently discharged the duties of his position in the Book Room and as accountant.

Failing health compelled him, in October last, to give up work; and now that nine months have gone by, without permanent improvement, the Committee, although with regret, have felt that it was necessary to relieve him of further service.

In arriving at this decision, the Committee were of opinion that his twenty-six years' service constituted a claim upon the Unitarian public, and that some acknowledgment should be made; and further, that this should take the form of a retiring allowance.

We are now endeavouring to raise a fund to enable us to do this, and we shall be glad to receive contributions from those of your readers who may wish to assist.

C. F. PEARSON, Chairman of the Finance Committee.
ION PRICHARD, Chairman of the General Purposes Committee.

Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, June 28th, 1904.

THE heroes of mankind are the mountains, the highlands of the moral world. They diversify its monotony, they furnish the watershed of its history, as the Grampians, or the Alps, or the Andes, which tower over the lowlands and fertilise the plains and divide the basins of the world of nature. They are the "full-welling fountain-heads of change," as well as the serene heights of repose.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Wednesday, or Thursday Morning at latest.]

Appeal.

Manchester Domestic Mission: Willert-street.—The Rev. J. W. Bishop appeals for help in a work which has grown up of late years in connection with this Mission, to provide a short holiday for some of those who most sorely need it. Five years ago some thirty of the scholars of the Sunday-school were sent into Derbyshire for a week. This has been continued year by year, and the number sent has so increased, until this year he hopes to be able to send 150. The Manchester District Sunday-school Association has now an excellent holiday home at Great Hucklow, to which they can be sent at a cost of about 10s. each, including railway fare, &c. About half this sum is paid by the children in pence during the year. To meet the remaining cost this appe l is made. The Sunday-school Association also offers special facilities for sending some of the mothers to Great Hucklow for a week; these have also been accepted for the past two years, the cost for each person being 10s. 9d. Of this the women pay 5s., a few pence being collected from them each week by the Savings Bank collector. It is felt, also, that something in this way should be done for some of the older deserving men whose incomes are inadequate. One was sent to a cottage in Great Hucklow for a week lately who had not had a week's holiday for thirty years. All this makes it very evident that thoroughly good work can be done by such an agency as this. Donations would be thankfully received by the Rev. J. W. Bishop, 79, Smedley-road, Cheetham Hill, Manchester.

Birmingham: Kingswood.—The recent sale of work and jumble sale, in aid of the chapel and parsonage repairing fund, realised about £70. Another similar effort will be made about the first week in September.

Chester.—On attaining his eighty-third birthday on Thursday, the Rev. J. K. Montgomery, the veteran ex-minister of Matthew Henry's Chapel, was presented by the managers, subscribers, teachers, and scholars of the Victoria-road British Schools with a portrait of himself and a congratulatory address. Mr. Montgomery had been for thirty-seven years actively associated with the work of the school. In acknowledging the presentation, which came to him as a great surprise, Mr. Montgomery gave an interesting account of the progress of British schools in Chester, in which he had always taken a deep interest.

Great Yarmouth.—The Old Meeting Social Union had their summer outing on Thursday week to Filby Broad. The weather was fine, and a large number of members and friends assembled at the Town Hall, whence they much enjoyed the drive to Filby. A short service, conducted by the Rev. John Birks, F.G.S., was first held in the Filby Unitarian Chapel, which was well filled on the occasion. After tea in the Broad Gardens, boating, and rambling along the country lanes, and various good old-fashioned games occupied the time, which all too soon came to an end. The drive home, with a bright, beautiful sunset, brought a happy and successful outing to a close.

Hinckley.—On last Sunday, June 26, the Sunday-school anniversary sermons were preached by the Rev. E. W. Lummis, of Leicester, to full and appreciative congregations. A beautiful day gave an added brightness to the happy faces of the school children, whose singing was of the heartiest and best. The collections fell a little below those of recent years.

Hull.—The annual meeting of the congregation was held on Wednesday, June 8, Councillor Hanger presiding. Various reports, including that of the minister, the Rev. F. Heming Vaughan, were passed. They evinced a healthy state of activity and usefulness, and a growing interest in the work of the Church. The abstract of accounts showed a considerable balance due to the treasurer. Mr. T. Hirst, who has been church secretary for seven years, resigned, on account of change of residence, much to the regret of the congregation, Mr. E. G. Rymer being elected in his place. The Sunday-school anniversary sermons were preached on June 12, by the Rev. W. L. Schroder, of Sale, the prizes to the scholars being distributed by Mrs. Vaughan. The scholars and parents attended in large numbers.

London Domestic Mission (Bazaar and Presentation).—On Tuesday and Wednesday a bazaar in aid of the funds of the Society was held at the George's Row Mission. It was mainly the effort of the Mission people themselves, under the leadership of the Rev. F. Summers and Mrs. Summers, in commemoration of the fact that they have now completed twenty-five years of service at the Mission. On Tuesday the bazaar was opened by Lady Durning-Lawrence, who was introduced by Mr. P. M. Martineau. She expressed her pleasure at being present, and spoke of the good work carried on at the Mission, and especially of the school with its upwards of 300 scholars and 25 teachers. Mr. Summers, she noticed, had said that he regarded his mission work as first of all religious. That, she thought, was the best way of looking at it. Dr. Martineau had said that if they wanted to make people clean they should first of all make them Christian. When that had been accomplished many other things followed. At the conclusion of her speech a bouquet was presented to Lady Durning-Lawrence, and the Rev. F. Summers moved, and the Rev. F. K. Freeston seconded, a vote of thanks, which was carried by acclamation. Then followed another ceremony, which to Mr. and Mrs. Summers came as a complete surprise. They had been working to mark the completion of their twenty-five years at George's Row by doing something for the Mission, but meanwhile the committee and friends of the Mission had determined to make some public recognition of the admirable work done by Mr. and Mrs. Summers. Response had come from some 250 friends, and on their behalf Mr. P. M. Martineau presented a cheque for £240 to Mr. Summers, and Mrs. H. J. Evelegh presented a gold watch and chain to Mrs. Summers. In acknowledging the gifts, Mr. Summers said the secret had been well kept. He could not find many words, but on his own and his wife's behalf he thanked them one and all from the bottom of his heart. Mrs. Summers, with much feeling, also added her own word of thanks. On Wednesday the bazaar was opened by Mrs. W. Wallace Bruce. The Rev. Henry Gow, who acted as chairman, congratulated Mr. and Mrs. Summers and their workers on the bazaar. It was a fine thought of theirs so to commemorate their twenty-five years of hard, faithful work. It reminded him of the custom of some families, in which the boy or girl whose birthday it was gave presents to all the rest, though it did not prevent presents being given to the birthday child as well, and yesterday they had the pleasure of giving a birthday present to Mr. and Mrs. Summers. In introducing Mrs. Wallace Bruce he spoke of the admirable work done by her husband as member of the County Council for the effective and good government of London, and her own keen interest in all such work. Mrs. Wallace Bruce said she was grateful to have been asked to take some little part in that celebration, and spoke of the untold good represented by the work of such a Mission. Looking back on twenty five years, during which Mr. and Mrs. Summers had been brought into contact with so much intense human interest in the joy and sorrow of their people, it must seem to them more like fifty years. In reading the report she had been struck by one fact of difficulty and discouragement, which was confirmed by what she had seen of many Missions in Bow and Bromley, viz., that the better people, those whom the Mission helped most, and who might in their turn help the Mission, left for more desirable neighbourhoods. That was a difficulty, and it took on the guise of failure, but of course it really marked the success of their work. She spoke also with admiration of the great number of practical and good works centred in the Mission, and referred in conclusion to what Tolstoy said in his recent letter, that things cannot be reorganised unless there is first a change of thought and feeling. Religion was at the bottom of it all. The Rev. F. Summers proposed, and Mr. Councillor Shaw seconded a vote of thanks to Mrs. Wallace Bruce and Mr. Gow, and and a tiny girl presented a bouquet, after which business proceeded. The stalls were well filled, and the room was prettily decorated. The bazaar realised, with donations, on the first day about £100.

Moretonhampstead.—Sunday-school anniversary services were conducted on June 26, by the Rev. A. Lancaster. In the afternoon a Flower Service was held. The scholars assembled in the old Fore-street Chapel (our school-room being used on Sundays by the Church of England for services during the alteration of the Parish Church), and marched in procession to Cross Chapel. The voluntary was played as they proceeded up the aisle to a table, where Mrs. Lancaster received a bouquet of flowers from each scholar. These offerings to the sick were, at the close of the service, taken by two of the scholars to the Cottage Hospital. A congregation of one hundred people was present, and special hymns, taken from the new hymn-book of the Manchester Sunday-school Association, were sung. Collections were made on behalf of the funds of the Sunday-school. This, the second anniversary held, proved a great success.

Norwich.—A very beautiful memorial brass has recently been placed on the walls of the Octagon Chapel in memory of the Misses Louisa and Maria Cooper, two ladies who will be long remembered by the worshippers at the Octagon for their generosity, their piety, and their strength and sweetness of character. Miss Maria Cooper, who survived her sister, was most active even in her old age in maintaining by personal service some of the most important institutions that cluster around the chapel. The girls' and infants' day schools, to which many women of this city are indebted for their education, were chiefly under her care. She served on the management of the former for fifty-nine years, and on the management of the latter throughout the whole period of its existence. She was also superintendent of the girls' Sunday-school for many years. The tablet, which is mounted on a slab of black Belgian marble, bears the following inscription:—"In affectionate remembrance of Louisa Cooper, born July 8, 1819, died June 26, 1898; and Maria Cooper, born July 29, 1821, died June £9, 1903. Buried in the Rosary. Life long friends to the Octagon Chapel and schools. This tablet is erected by their nephews and nieces."

Stalybridge (Presentation).—On Tuesday evening, June 21, a meeting was held in the Hob Hill Sunday-school of the Young Women's Class, which the Rev. W. Harrison has taught for the past fifteen years. About 80 past and present members of the class were there, and the object of the meeting was to present to Mr. Harrison, on his retirement, a large platinotppe photograph of the class. Miss M. H. Hall presided, and the presentation was made by Miss Shepley in an address of much feeling. Mr. Harrison gratefully acknowledged the gift, and recalled memories of the happy years he had spent with the class, and what it had been his endeavour to teach. On Sunday evening, June 26, Mr. Harrison preached his farewell sermon, closing what he said was his longest and happiest pastorate. The text was John iv. 7, "One soweth, and another reapeth." Minister and people alike were moved by deep feeling.

Walmsley.—The annual sermons were preached on Sunday afternoon and evening, June 26, by the Rev. J. C. Street, of Shrewsbury. In the morning Mr. J. Barrow, of Westhoughton, addressed the teachers and scholars. The collections amounted to over £49, a slight decrease on last year.

Walthamstow.—Sunday-school anniversaries were held on Sunday, June 26, the Rev. W. H. Rose, being the morning preacher. In the afternoon, Mr. G. Skelt gave the address, and in the evening the Rev. R. H. Greaves took the service, and preached a stirring sermon on the duty of Unitarians.

West of England.—The Assembly of West of England Presbyterian Divines met at George's Meeting, Exeter, on Wednesday, June 22. The proceedings, which were of a private nature, were opened by the retiring Moderator, Rev. Jeffery Worthington. The dinner was at the Royal Clarence Hotel, the Rev. J. M. Connell, of Exeter, presiding. The Rev. A. E. O'Connor, of Torquay, was elected Moderator for the ensuing year.

Yorkshire Unitarian Lay Preachers' Union.—On Saturday, June 18, a Conference was held at Lydgate. The proceedings opened in the afternoon at 3.15, with hymn and prayer, after which the Rev. J. Hanson Green welcomed the members, and Dr. Warschauer gave a most interesting address, including many words of practical guidance in the work which lay preachers had at heart, and encouraging them in the cause for which they stood shoulder to shoulder. The business of the Conference was then entered into, and considerable discussion arose relative to the work of the Union. Mr. D. B. Foster, of Leeds, presided, and in the absence of Mr. F. Clayton, who was in London, the secretarial duties were undertaken by Mr. T. G. Turton, the secretary of the Sheffield branch of the Yorkshire Lay Preachers' Union. Tea followed the business meeting, and in the evening a public meeting, at which addresses were given by Revs. J. Hanson Green, Dr. Warschauer, Henry D. B. Foster, J. Durgworth, and others. These Conference meetings are to be held half-yearly, and Sheffield was chosen as the next place of meeting in January next.

BETWEEN simple and noble persons there is always a quick intelligence; they recognise at sight, and meet on a better ground than the talents and skills they may chance to possess, namely, on sincerity and uprightness. For it is not what talents or genius a man has, but how he is to his talents, that constitutes friendship and duration. The man that stands by himself, the universe stands by him also.—R. W. Emerson.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

SUNDAY, July 3.

Acton, Central Auction Room, Market-place, High-street, 7, Rev. R. H. GREAVES.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Rev. EUSTACE THOMPSON.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. L. TUCKER, M.A.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev F. W. STANLEY.

Child's Hill, All Souls' Free Church, corner of Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., 11 and 7, Mr. HERBERT RIX, B.A.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 and 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON. Flower Service at 3.15.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. PERRIS.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11.15 and 6.45, Rev. J PAGE HOPPS.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. H. GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11, Rev. R. H. GREAVES, and 7.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11.15 and 7, Rev. G. CRITCHLEY, B.A.

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. J. E. STRONGE.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. W. C. POPE.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15, Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, M.A., and 7, Mr. G. WARD.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. JOHN ELLIS.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 and 6.30.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. SILAS FARRINGTON.

Stepney Green, College Chapel, 11 and 7, Mr. C. A. GINEVER.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 and 7, Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.

Stratford, Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. C. PAIN, and 6.30, Mr. A. B. MIDLANE.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MCDOWELL.

BLACKPOOL, Dickson-road, North Shore, 10.45 and 6.30, PULPIT VACANT.

BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Church, The Hall, Lytham-road, 11 and 6.30.

BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 and 7, Rev. C. C. COE.

BRIGHTON, Christ Church, New-road, North-street, 11, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.

BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 7, Rev. GEORGE STREET.

CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11, Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.

DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.

GUILDFORD, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. RATTENBURY HODGES.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. J. MARTEN.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. G. DAWES HICKS.

LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. HAWKES.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11, Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., and 6.30, Rev. H. D. ROBERTS.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11 and 6 30, Rev. J. COLLINS ODGERS, B.A.; Evening subject: "Persistence in Good Works."

MAIDSTONE, Earl-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. SIDAWAY BRETTELL, M.A.

MANCHESTER, PLATT CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. E. JENKINS, of Padiham.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. E. PIKE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND.

PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Mr. C. F. DEAR.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Mr. THOMAS BOND.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 7, Rev. OTTWELL BINNS.

SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 and 6.45, Rev. F. TEASDALE REED.

SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. AGAR.

SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FREDERICK B. MOTT.

TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.

TROWBRIDGE, Conigre Church, 11 and 6, Rev. J. WAIN.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 and 6.30.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12, noon, Rev. G. H. VANCE, B.D.

WALES.

ABERYSTWITH, New Market Hall, 11, Mr. J. DANIEL JONES, of Manchester College.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN SQ., W.—July 3, at 11.15, DR. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "How Buddha became a Catholic Saint."

FRUITARIAN CAKES.

MADE ENTIRELY OF FRUIT AND NUTS.

Uncooked, Concentrated, Natural Food.

READY FOR USE WITHOUT PREPARATION.

For travelling they are ideal. A meal will go in pocket.

PEAR and WALNUT	7d.	per 8 oz. packet.
APRICOT and NUT	7d.	" "
MUSCATEL and ALMOND ...	6d.	" "
FRUIT and NUTS	5d.	" "
DATE and GINGER	4d.	" "
DATE and LEMON	4d.	" "
DATE and ORANGE	4d.	" "
FIG and CITRON	4d.	" "
DATE and NUT	3d.	" "
FIG and NUT	3d.	" "

Sample Box containing 14 varieties Fruitarian Cakes, 8d.; or with 3 varieties of Nut Butters, post free, 1s.

HUGH MAPLETON, Nut Food Manufacturer,
ARDWICK GREEN MANCHESTER.

GENERAL BAPTIST (UNITARIAN) CHAPEL, LONG SUTTON, LINCOLNSHIRE.

This Chapel, erected in 1700, is in a serious state of dilapidation.

One of the ends of the building is subsiding, and the pulpit, flooring, window frames, and seats are in an advanced state of decay.

To remedy all structural defects, and to make requisite provision for the comfort of the congregation, will necessitate an expenditure of £100.

As this amount is beyond the means of the congregation, which chiefly consists of agricultural labourers, they are compelled to appeal for assistance to enable them to accomplish the needful work. They have raised £10, and guarantee another £10 after Harvest.

This appeal has the approval of the General Baptist Assembly and the Eastern Union (the B. & F. U. A. Committee have not yet been appealed to).

Amongst other Unitarian friends, whose names will appear in a list later on, Miss E. SHARPE has given £3.

Contributions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by F. W. FLETCHER, Esq., Bank Manager, Long Sutton, Lincolnshire, Treasurer; Mr. H. BOLTZ, Gedney, Holbeach, Secretary; or to the Minister, Rev. W. J. POND, Long Sutton, Lincolnshire.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY, ADELAIDE PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Assets, £158,000.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., J.P. 17, Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W

Miss CECIL GRADWELL, 7, Victoria-street, S.W.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st. S.W

Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.

STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham, S.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4 per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3 and 3½ per cent withdrawable at short notice.

BORROWER'S INTEREST 4 per cent. Monthly Repayment, including Principal, Premium, and Interest for each £100.

10 years.	12 years.	15 years.	18 years.	21 years
1 1 1	0 18 4	0 15 6	0 14 2	0 12 11

Compare the above rates with those of other Societies. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

BIRTHS.

ANDERTON.—On June 23rd, at Alresford-road, Irlams o'th'Height, to Rev. and Mrs. Neander Anderton, a daughter CARTER.—On the 18th inst., to Mr. and Mrs. Herbert S. Carter, of Parkstone, Dorset, a daughter (Joan).

WICKSTEED.—On the 22nd inst., at Southleigh, Roundhill-road, Kettering, to Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Wicksteed, a son.

MARRIAGE.

ARMSTRONG—BRADLEY.—On the 29th inst., at St. John's Church, Mansfield, by the Rev. W. Maples, Vicar, assisted by the Rev. G. Oliver, Vicar of St. John's Church, Longston, Staffordshire, cousin of the bridegroom, Frank Armstrong, of The Cedars, Mansfield Woodhouse, to Phyllis, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bradley, of West Lodge, Mansfield.

DEATH.

MCKEAN.—On June 24th, at The Dingle, Oldbury, Rev. Henry McKean, youngest son of the late Rev. William McKean and Jean Coats, both of Paisley, in his 69th year. No cards.

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A. Honours Lond. Preparation for London Matriculation, Trinity College, and Associated Board of Musicians, Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. Apply to the Head Mistress.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH

AN UNSECTARIAN PUBLIC SCHOOL.

Next Term opens SEPTEMBER 15TH. Admission Examination, July 5th.

For particulars apply HEAD MASTER.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE FOR GIRLS, 198 & 227, BRISTOL ROAD.

Principal ... MARY E. BAILY.
Head Mistress ... ELEANOR MOSS, B.A. Hons.

Preparation for Matriculation, Senior, Junior Cambridge, Board of Education and Associated Board Examinations.

Trained Swedish Gymnastic and Games Mistress. Vacancy for Resident Pupil to help with music practice.

UNDERBANK UNITARIAN CHAPEL, STANNINGTON.

MINISTER, REV. IDEN PAYNE.

This old cause at a village on the hills near Sheffield, which has existed for 250 years, is almost entirely dependent for its support on the income derived from farms in the locality constituting the endowment. Latterly two good-sized Cowhouses have had to be rebuilt, at a total cost of £450, and the Trustees find themselves nearly £300 in debt.

The salary which they are able to pay to the Minister is a very low one, and even a slight augmentation would be a very material aid.

Subscriptions to the extent of £154 1s. have been already received (mainly from Sheffield), as per list at foot.

The members of the Congregation are not in a position to do much. Unitarian friends at a distance are now appealed to.

Donations should be by Cheque or Postal Order, made payable to Mr. EDWARD BRAMLEY, and sent to him at 6, Paradise-square, Sheffield.

JOHN STEVENSON,
Chairman of Trustees.
MICHAEL J. HUNTER,
Vice-Chairman of Trustees.
EDWARD BRAMLEY,
Hon. Treasurer.

LIST OF DONATIONS RECEVED.

	£	s.	d.
Amount previously advertised ...	152	1	0
Rev. Iden Payne	1	0	0
Mrs. Suffield, Reading	1	0	0
	£154	1	0

THE PRESBYTERIAN FUND.

The Managers desire to give notice of the following Scholarships which are open to Theological Students of all denominations:—

Two Graduate Scholarships of £40 for three years, with free instruction for the B.D. Degree of the University of Wales, tenable at the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen.

Applications must be in the hands of the Secretary before July 23rd, 1904.

For particulars and forms of application apply to G. HAROLD CLENNELL, Esq., Secretary to Presbyterian Fund, 6, Great James-street, Bedford Row, London, W.C.

OLD FALSE TEETH.—We give highest possible price for above. Offers made, and, if not accepted, teeth returned. Dealers in old gold or silver in any form. Banker's references.—WOOLFALL & CO., Birkdale, Southport.

MARTINEAU MEMORIAL HALL AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS, NORWICH.

FRIENDS are earnestly appealed to for the remaining £400 required for SITE of above. The need is Urgent, and the smallest help welcome. Cheques payable to Mrs. MOTTRAM, The Birches, Bracondale, Norwich; or to Mr. W. N. LADELL, 69, Grove-road, Lakenham, Norwich.

FIRST LIST.

	£	s.	d.
Mrs. and Miss Holt	500	0	0
Mr. J. Estlin Carpenter	100	0	0
Mrs. Worthington	100	0	0
The British and Foreign Unitarian Association, being part of their grant of £250, of which £150 is for Buildings	100	0	0
Mr. F. Nettlefold	100	0	0
Miss S. S. Dowson	50	0	0
Mrs. Buckton	50	0	0
Rev. P. M. Higginson	25	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. H. Enfield Dowson ...	25	0	0
Mr. and Miss Lister	21	0	0
Miss M. C. Martineau	20	0	0
Miss Taylor	20	0	0
Mr. F. M. Lupton	20	0	0
Mr. Robert Norton	20	0	0
Miss Norton	20	0	0
In memory of H. E. Blazeby ...	10	0	0
Rev. William Blazeby	10	0	0
Mr. W. Long	20	0	0
In memory of Mr. I. M. Wade ...	20	0	0
Mrs. I. M. Wade and Mr. Harold Wade	20	0	0
Miss H. E. Higginson	20	0	0
Dr. Drummond	20	0	0
Mr. E. B. Squire	20	0	0
Miss Valentine...	20	0	0
From bequest of the late Mrs. M. E. Tayler...	20	0	0
Mr. W. B. Bowring	20	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Worsley	15	0	0
Miss Preston	10	10	0
Dr. W. Blake Odgers, K.C.	10	10	0
Mr. Joseph Broome	10	10	0
Mr. Henry Lupton	10	10	0
Mr. W. Colfox	10	0	0
Mrs. Flower	10	0	0
Miss Clara and Mr. Ernest Martineau	5	0	0
Mr. P. Meadows Martineau ...	5	0	0
Miss Shaen	5	0	0
Miss H. E. Booth	5	0	0
Mr. S. S. Tayler	5	0	0
Mr. David Martineau	5	0	0
Mrs. Rutt	5	5	0
Miss Jane Martineau	3	3	0
Rev. J. E. Odgers	3	3	0
Mrs. Sydney Courtauld	2	2	0
Miss Mary Martineau	1	1	0
Miss Lucy Martineau	1	1	0
Mr. E. A. Grundy	1	0	0
"A Widow's Mite"	1	0	0
Mr. T. P. Young	0	10	0
Mr. Charles Jecks	0	10	0
Mrs. Nettlefold	20	0	0
Mr. J. W. Scott	20	0	0
Mr. Hugh Martineau	10	10	0
Miss Booth	10	0	0
Mrs. L. M. Aspland	5	5	0
Mrs. Marriott	5	5	0
Miss Thornely	5	0	0
Mr. Russell Scott	3	3	0
Mrs. Currer Briggs	2	2	0
Miss E. Byfield Hall	2	2	0
Miss F. White	1	1	0
Miss Smith	1	0	0
Mrs. Berry	1	0	0
Mrs. Nellen	0	10	6
Miss Jennett Humphreys	0	5	0

COTTAGE SETTLEMENT FOR LADIES.

New Laid Eggs, spring chickens, ducklings, &c.

Poultry Keeping taught in all branches, also fruit bottling, jam making.

General marketing and business methods.

LADIES RECEIVED AS PUPILS OR BOARDERS.

Terms on application to
MISSES YATES & GRUNDY, THE COTTAGE, ROYSTON, HERTS.

Situations.

VACANT AND WANTED.

WANTED, by a middle-aged Lady, a SITUATION as useful COMPANION or MOTHER'S HELP. Small salary. References to former situation and to Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, 5, Marmion-road, Liverpool, of whom inquiries may be made.

HOLIDAY ENGAGEMENT, August, desired by well-educated Lady, as Companion to invalid or otherwise. Very strong and capable. Good reader. Musical. Unitarian. Travelling and laundry expenses.—Address, A. H., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand.

BOARD and LODGING is offered for a year to a LADY desiring experience in Social Work. University qualifications preferred.—Full particulars on application to the WARDEN, The Settlement, Chesterfield.

MANSFORD STREET CHURCH AND MISSION.

The Committee have decided to appoint a LADY ASSISTANT MISSIONARY who would be required to devote a portion of her time to the work of the institution. Applications should be sent to Mr. S. W. PRESTON, 7, Eldon-road, Hampstead.

S. W. PRESTON,
J. C. DRUMMOND, } Hon. Secs.

THE ANNUAL MEETING and SUMMER FESTIVAL of the EASTERN UNION OF UNITARIAN CHURCHES will be held at the Old Meeting Chapel, Middlegate-street, Yarmouth, on Thursday, July 7th. President, Mr. Councillor A. M. STEVENS (of Norwich). 11.30, Sermon by Rev. LUCKING TAVENER (of Ipswich); 5.30, Public Meeting, to be addressed by Rev. F. W. STANLEY (of Buxton) and others. The Norwich Octagon Chapel Choir will render Gaul's "Ruth."

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

ANNUAL EXAMINATIONS AND JUBILEE GATHERINGS.

TUESDAY, JULY 5TH, 1904.

10.30 and 3.0.—Papers selected from the work of the Session.

5.0.—Visitor's Address and Valedictory, Rev. J. E. ODGERS, M.A., D.D. Principal's Remarks and Prizegiving.

7.0.—Old Students' Annual Dinner, Mosley Hotel.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 6TH.

3.30.—Jubilee Memorial Service at Cross-street Chapel, Revs. J. C. STREET and J. A. KELLY.

7.30.—Conversazione, Midland Hotel. Tickets, 2s. each.

THURSDAY, JULY 7TH.

3.30.—Garden Party to View the New Collegiate Premises and Grounds, "Summerville," Victoria Park. Ardwick Band. Afternoon Tea. Admission by Invitation, to be had from the Secretaries.

7.0.—Public Meeting, Memorial Hall. Chairman: JAS. R. BEARD, Esq., J.P. Speakers: Sir E. DURNING-LAWRENCE, Bart., M.P., Revs. A. GORDON, M.A., PH. MOORE, B.A., J. E. MANNING, M.A., W. C. BOWIE, W. G. TARRANT, B.A., DENDY AGATE, B.A., and R. LYTTLE.

CHARLES PEACH,
68, Richmond-grove, Manchester.
T. P. SPEDDING,
91, Tweedale-street, Rochdale.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS.

Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken, Valuations for Probate, &c.

NOW READY. JULY NUMBER.

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL

A Quarterly Review of Religion, Theology, and Philosophy.

2s. 6d. per number, net; Subscriptions, which may commence with any number, 10s. per annum, post free.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

Sir Oliver Lodge on "The Re-Interpretation of Christian Doctrine." The Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP OF ROCHESTER.
Hegel's Theory of Tragedy. A. C. BRADLEY, Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford.
Herder. T. BAILEY SAUNDERS.
The Two Idealisms. W. R. SORLEY, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Cambridge.
Present Aspects of the Problem of Immortality. S. H. MELLONE, M.A., D.Sc., Examiner in Mental and Moral Science in the University of London.
L'Hypocrisie Biblique Britannique. The Rev. W. F. COBB, D.D., Rector of St. Ethelburga's, London.
Value of the Historical Method in Philosophy. Professor WILLIAM KNIGHT, LL.D.
The Problem of Evil. ST. GEORGE STOCK.
Art and Ideals. CHARLES MONTAGUE BAKEWELL, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Philosophy, University of California.
And a Number of Discussions and Signed Reviews, and also a Bibliography of Recent Books and Articles.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, London, W.C.

JOHN PAGE HOPPS' MONTHLY.

THE COMING DAY.

ENLARGED. PRICE THREEPENCE.

Contents for JULY.

The Father Revealed by the Son.
St. Paul and the Theatre Hat.
Queer Company in Westminster Abbey.
English Devilry (Rabbit Worrying).
Tariffs and Corruption.
Australia Sick.
The Established Church and Fighting Men.
A Coming Storm in America.
Concerning India.
The Czar.
What the Spiritualists Teach.
Good Manners in Japan.
Notes by the Way, &c.

London, Edinburgh, and Oxford: WILLIAMS and NORGATE, and all Booksellers.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT S.S. ASSOCIATION.

NOW READY.

Most useful books for all Sunday School occasions.

Hymns and Choral Songs. Music Vol., containing 412 tunes in both notations. 2s. 6d. net.
HYMNS AND CHORAL SONGS. Hymn Book. Words of the above, 6d. net.

MESSRS. H. RAWSON & CO., New Brown-street, Manchester.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKLETS

By the REV. W. G. TARRANT B.A.

DAILY MEDITATIONS

(Fourth Edition Revised.)

NIGHT UNTO NIGHT.

Cloth, red edges, 6d.; roan gilt, 1s.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C.

BERNESE OBERLAND. — A few Vacancies in a select party, leaving August 19th. Fifteen days for 10½ guineas inclusive.—Particulars from the Rev. Dr. WARSCHAUER, 50, Apsley-road, Clifton, Bristol.

Board and Residence.

BOURNEMOUTH.— Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH. — ARNEWOOD. Pension. Commanding position in the West Cliff-road; full South aspect; sea views and private grounds; close to Winter Gardens, Cliff Promenade, Square or Pier; moderate Tariff.—Apply, MANAGERESS.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—"Cranbrook," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE; most comfortable throughout. Sea View, excellent cuisine. billiard and smoke room, sanitary certificate —Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

LANGLEY HOUSE, DAWLISH, DEVON.—A delightful HOLIDAY RESORT for Ladies and School-girls (Boys under 15). Beautiful country, bracing climate. Sea and Moorland. Prospectus from MISS N. JONES, Matron; or A. E. JONES, Esq., Proprietor.

SOUTHPORT.—MISS BLAKEY, 12, Duke-street (established 16 years), is prepared to receive PATIENTS or VISITORS in need of rest, change, or treatment. The Red Cross system of Light Cure and fully qualified Massage carefully given, under medical advice. Situation central and pleasant.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea-level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort.

FURNISHED FLAT, airy and light, to be Let in HAMPSTEAD, quite near the Heath, between end of July and beginning of September. Two large sitting and three or four bedrooms. Terms moderate.—For full particulars, apply Mrs. J. H. WICKSTEED, Pear Tree Cottage, Chapel, Lincolnshire.

THORPE VILLAGE, NORWICH, for the River, Broads, and Sea.—A FURNISHED HOUSE to Let for six or seven weeks. Two reception, six bedrooms, good kitchens, and pleasant garden.—Apply, ELLINGHAM, Thorpe, Norwich.

LADY, living at EALING, wishes to meet with another to share House. Garden. Trams. &c.—Particulars to T., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

THE ABERYSTWYTH CONGREGATION will gladly assist Visitors to find Apartments.—Stamped envelope, A. JOHNSON, Chairman, Pier-street.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Enlarged, Remodelled, Refurnished.

PRONOUNCED BY THE PRESS TO BE THE BEST TEMPERANCE HOTEL IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Accommodation for about 250 Guests.

Highly commended by the Rev. Dr. Aked, Rev. Rowland Hill, Rev. J. H Jowett, M.A., Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. Alderman White, M.P., the Misses Cadbury and thousands of other guests.

Spacious Coffee, Reading & Drawing Rooms. Electric Light throughout.

Apartments, Service and Table d'Hote Breakfast from 5/- to 6/6 per day (with Dinner from 8/- to 9/6

77 & 101,

Southampton Row, London.

FREDERIC SMITH & SONS.

Near the British Museum.

KINGSLEY HOTEL

HART STREET, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, LONDON.

This well-appointed and commodious Temperance Hotel has passenger Lift; Electric Light in all Rooms; Bathrooms on every Floor; Spacious Dining, Drawing, Writing, Reading, Smoking and Billiard Rooms; All Floors Fireproof; Perfect Sanitation; Night Porter; Telephone.

Bedrooms from 3s. to 5s. per night.

Inclusive charge for Bedroom, Attendance, Table d'Hôte Breakfast and Dinner, from 8s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. per day. Full Tariff and Testimonials on application.

Telegraphic Address: "BOOKCRAFT," LONDON.

EATON'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL,

22, Guilford Street, Russell Square, LONDON.

Facing the Gardens of the Foundling Institution.

Central. Homelike. Beds from 1s. 6d. Breakfast and Tea from 1s. Patronized repeatedly by many visitors during the 30 years of its existence.

Terms for Advertisements.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF-PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6

Special Terms for a Series.

Calendar Notices, 10s. per year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge 1/6.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. 3 insertions charged as 2.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. The entire remittance should accompany all orders to insert Advertisements.

ROBIN

The New

Starch

MAKES LINEN GLOSSY, STIFF & FLEXIBLE.

Is the Best for Hot or Cold Water.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Sole Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 20 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, July 2, 1904.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3237. NEW SERIES, No. 341.] LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 9, 1904. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 433

LEADERS—
George Frederick Watts 440
The Home Missionary College Jubilee . 440

ARTICLES—
The Rev. Charles Hargrove's Mission to Australasia 435
The Tendencies of Modern Religious Thought 436
The Hawthorne Centenary 437
A Meditation 439
Systematic Religious Teaching in Holland 444

MEETINGS—
Oxford Summer Session for Sunday-School Teachers 441
Lampeter 445

POETRY—
The Sun has Risen... 437

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 439

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 445

OUR CALENDAR 447

ADVERTISEMENTS 447

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE publisher of THE INQUIRER will be greatly obliged if secretaries of congregations will forward a copy of their Monthly Calendar to the office immediately on publication.

INTERESTS are divided this week. The Jubilee of the Unitarian Home Missionary College in Manchester has been the great event in the north, and of this we hope to publish a complete report next week. Meanwhile our Summer School for Teachers at Manchester College, Oxford, has been once more the centre of interest for Sunday-school workers from all parts of the country, and has made the past nine days memorable to not a few who came to Oxford for the first time. Some record of the proceedings will be found in our present issue.

THE Jubilee celebrations in Manchester began on Tuesday with the usual public examinations, and the Visitor's Address, with which was combined a Valedictory to the leaving student, delivered by the Rev. J. Edwin Odgers, D.D. On Wednesday afternoon a Jubilee memorial service was held in Cross-street Chapel, conducted by the Rev. J. A. Kelly, the sermon being preached by the Rev. James C. Street, both old students of the College. In the evening a conversazione was held at the Midland Hotel, when the guests were received by Mr. James R. Beard, J.P., President of the College, and Mrs. Beard, and Lieut.-Colonel J. Pilcher, chairman of the Committee. A garden party at "Summerville," the new residence in Victoria Park, and a public meeting in the Memorial Hall in the evening, concluded the celebrations.

THE University world is slowly opening its doors to women, but a great step in advance was made on Thursday, June 30, when Dublin University for the first time conferred the honorary degree of D.Litt. on Miss Jane Barlow, the Irish novelist, and Mrs. Sophie Bryant, D.Sc., headmistress of the North London Collegiate School for Girls; and that of LL.D. on Miss Mulvaney, head mistress of the Alexandra Schools in Dublin. At the same time Miss Helen Bartram, daughter of the late Richard Bartram, took her degree of B.A. with five other women graduates of Cambridge.

THE reports of outrage and murder among the Armenians become daily more persistent and specific. We are told that Ambassadors of the Powers—especially of the Western Powers — are convinced of the necessity of active intervention if a repetition of the horrors of ten years ago in all their completeness is to be avoided. At present, however, they are apparently confined to ascertaining the the facts and offering remonstrances. The Constantinople correspondent of the Daily News justly points out the ascertained futility of this procedure in relation to Abdul Hamid:—

> The word has not yet been spoken which will stop the outrages. France, which took possession of Mitylene in order to secure payment of a debt, has shown a much more effectual way of bringing Turkey to reason. There is danger in the present method of negotiation, which amounts merely to telling the Turk what he should or should not do. . . . If the Western Powers were to say that if massacres were commenced, the Government would be held responsible, the Turk has the power to prevent them. In this way, and in this way only, lies salvation.

IT is, perhaps, not necessary to assume that the failure of Ministerial speakers to meet the arguments advanced in opposition to the closure of the Licensing Bill was due to real inability to grasp their purport. No mere tu quoque argument could possibly avail in the defence of a procedure which has none but superficial precedents, and is unique in every essential feature. In 1900 voters of all parties were told that they could safely give their support to Government candidates, whatever their views and desires with regard to domestic legislation, because the only issue then before the country was the conclusion of the war in South Africa and the settlement to follow it. Since then up to within the last few months the only licensing legislation proposed has been of a non-controversial character, and has been passed with the approval of all parties. It was only when the trade itself began to demand protection from the newly awakened sense of responsibility on the part of the magistracy that Ministers began to talk of the necessity of doing something.

FROM the production of the Bill onward the signs of popular opposition have been quite unmistakable, and it is admitted on all hands that a general election now would result in the defeat of the Government. Yet the Bill is persevered with. A leading member for the trade organisation said before the Bill was introduced, "I do not think the Government will go against the trade, for we put them in power, and if they treat us properly we will keep them in power. But if they do not we will chuck them out." It would be wrong, no doubt, to say that the Prime Minister himself is directly influenced in his action by vulgar threats like this. But it is beyond doubt that they have had decisive influence with men whose duty it is to keep him advised of the state of opinion among his supporters. The popular opposition, however, and the innate dislike of the measure among the more thoughtful Ministerialists have been so strong, that it has become doubtful whether a majority could be maintained through the remaining stages of the Bill by ordinary means. If the Bill is to be got through at all it must be got through quickly.

AND so we have the spectacle of a Government which knows itself to be in a minority in the country determined to pass into law a measure to which it knows the country is vehemently opposed, on a subject which it expressly withheld from the judgment of the country when it secured its majority, and resorting to the virtual suppression of debate and the exclusion of obviously necessary amendment in order to get the Bill through before its inevitable destruction comes upon it. Is it possible on any theory of representative government which has proper regard for the spirit as well as the letter, to justify such procedure as this? It is quite certain that that procedure robs the measure of any kind of moral authority, and that the next Government will be justified in repealing the measure forthwith on coming into office. Dealers in brewery shares and others interested would do well to bear this in mind lest they find themselves losers.

THE imminence of loss of office is the only kind of urgency which can be pleaded in justification of the form of closure Mr. Balfour has adopted. The zeal of the magistracy has been effectually checked by the mere announcement of the measure. The tax upon members during the present session cannot be said to have been so great as to make a demand for a late rising for the vacation or an autumn session unreasonable. There never was a measure with regard to which ample consideration of details was more clearly demanded by the vast importance and complexity of the problem it attempts to solve. Ministers do not allege that there has been undue debate hitherto. A glance at the list of amendments shows clearly that there is reasonable subject-matter of debate to occupy many times over as much space as Mr. Balfour has allotted.

WITH the efficient control and regulation of the drink traffic is admittedly bound up one of the greatest social interests of our people, and no amount of anxious consideration and care would be misspent in arriving at the very best possible methods of dealing with the problem. Yet the Government has deliberately used its majority to secure that legislation shall be passed to which neither it nor anyone else has given adequate consideration, and it has deliberately excluded from the consideration of Parliament amendments which everyone who has given the subject any thought at all, knows to be of the utmost importance. Even while it is doing so it shows its sense of the justice of many of the criticisms levelled against its scheme by itself putting down amendments radically altering some of its provisions. These amendments may be divided upon, and will doubtless be carried, but discussion or amendment of the bulk of them will be excluded. Yet these amendments are, in their turn, as full of anomalies as any part of the Bill in its original form, and as greatly in need of amendment.

To take one instance only, it is now proposed that a licensee who is the tenant only of his house is to share the compensation given with his landlord, the number of years he has held his tenancy being taken into consideration in apportioning his share. Obviously this provision is a direct invitation to the landlord to change his tenant as often as he can, and it leaves the tenant free to take situations as manager of successive public-houses and stand in for a share of compensation every time. A Government which permits such slovenly drafting as this is not a Government which should have its work exempted from criticism and amendment by the House of Commons. Further amendment in the Lords and a consequent return to the House of Commons will be an inevitable result of the present procedure, even if the necessity of an amending Act can be avoided. In any case the right and duty of the next Government to proceed to the instant repeal of a measure placed on the statute book by such methods and in such circumstances as this, is beyond all dispute.

THE valuable series of articles on "The Licensing Bill, 1904," separately issued by Messrs. Rowntree & Sherwell, are now published as a shilling book (by post 1s. 2½d.), with the title, "Public Interests or Trade Aggrandisement?" (P. S. King & Son, Orchard House, Great Smith-street, Westminster). The twelfth and last article is a "Summary and Conclusion," ending with the authors' view of the true foundations of a settlement. Taking it for granted that the object of the present legislation is to assist reform, and not, as the Home Secretary suggested, to give "safeguards to the trade," the following are the points suggested:—

(1) Let a time-notice of, say, ten years be given to all holders of existing licences in final and definitive settlement of all claims to "equitable consideration."

(2) Let there be attached to such time-notice a power of graduated commutation under which localities shall be free to anticipate the expiry of the time-notice by payment of a sum equivalent to the average annual profits of the preceding three years for every year of unexpired notice.

(3) Let the commutation fund be a national and not a local fund.

(4) Let the liquor licence duties be at once revised and considerably increased, so as to secure (a) a licence-rental sufficient to provide the commutation fund, and (b) increased revenue to the State; and let the incidence of the taxation be equitably adjusted between the smaller and the larger houses.

(5) Let all new licences granted after the passing of the Act, and during the period of the statutory time-notice, be specifically excluded from all claims to "equitable consideration" for non-renewal and be charged a sum approximately equivalent to the value of the monopoly.

(6) At the end of the time-notice let the maximum number of licences to be issued in each locality be determined by the local licensing authority within limits fixed by the State; the number to be open to reduction at recurring intervals.

(7) Let all licences issued after the expiry of the time-notice be submitted to public tender, and be issued for a period of, say, three years, subject to a power of earlier suppression in the event of misconduct, and with a provision under which a tender for the whole of the licences in a locality made by a disinterested company could be accepted by the licensing justices. At the end of the period of three years let the licences be re-submitted to public tender for a further period of three years, and in like manner for every recurring period of three years, so long as licences shall continue to be required.

In these ways, they hold, all "equitable interests" will be fully met, the public interest will be safeguarded, and a real liberation will be given to the forces upon which progress depends.

AT the Annual Presentation Day of the Manchester Victoria University on July 2, the degree of Litt. D. was conferred upon Professor G. Dawes Hicks, of University College, London.

THE question of its relation to its Standards, raised acutely by the action against it brought before the House of Lords, is causing the United Free Church very serious thought. Professor Dods delivered a noteworthy pronouncement in Edinburgh when, in place of Principal Rainy, he welcomed Dr. Macintosh to the Chair of Systematic Theology in the New College. In the course of his remarks he said:—

I cannot suppose that you have been influenced in opinion, though you cannot fail to have been much impressed by recent utterances in high places regarding the relation of a Church to her Confession. Come what will, a church is bound to maintain her right to alter her Confession. It is essential to the very nature of a confession that a church has a right to change it. A Church's Confession must be the real expression of the mind of the church as at present existing. A church cannot merely say, "This was the Confession of the Church established by law on this basis, and whose emoluments we are inheriting." It cannot merely say, "This Confession was received from our fathers, and we have accommodated ourselves to it until now. We are quite cast in its mould, and have got all our beliefs squared with its form, and have abandoned whatever would not be restricted by its bounds." If the Confession of a Church is to be true, it must be the free utterance of their actual belief. The Confession, in short, must be the Confession of the Church, and not the Church the Church of the Confession. She must make it, and not it her. . . . It is vain to suppose that while all other sciences are advancing by leaps and bounds, theology is to stand still a discreditable and discredited exception. If we believe exactly what our fathers believed, we should be unworthy of them. If the reformers had dreaded to take the step in advance their age demanded—if they had thought it a sin to break with tradition and follow what they discoverd to be the truth—how pitiable would be our condition. Is it in religion alone that men are to be tied up in benumbing, crippling, deadening bonds? And what would we say of the country that added nothing to its legislation and neglected to alter its statutes as the new conditions required? The Church must press on where truth leads, and to affirm or imply that the troubled and controversial age out of which our Confession sprang was able to see the full significance of Christian revelation is little short of blasphemy—a blasphemy which the Confession itself was careful to avoid.

The statement seems to have a repentant and reluctant air about it when we think of the persistent persecutions instituted by the Church against the pioneermen who sought to let in the newer light on the Standards. It reads like a condemnation of the decisions which deposed from its service such men as Professor Robertson Smith. After this avowed change of front, we may expect to see a strong movement for the remaking of the Standards. Will the United Free Church abandon its creedal position altogether? The futility of dogma as a ground of property has been brought home to it.

THE date for publication (simultaneously in this country and the United States) of the extra volume of "Dr. Hastings' Bible Dictionary" is now definitely fixed for July 20.

YOU must, for wisdom, for sanity, have some access to the mind and heart of the common humanity. The exclusive excludes himself.—Emerson.

NO man or woman of the humblest sort can really be strong, pure, and good without the world being better for it, without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of that goodwill.

Phillips Brooks.

THE REV. CHARLES HARGROVE'S MISSION TO AUSTRALASIA.

LETTERS EN ROUTE.—II.

Adelaide, South Australia.

IT was certainly discouraging to find a smaller attendance at my second Sunday's service at the Town Hall of Perth than I had at the first, but it was easily enough accounted for. People had come the first time to hear a new man about a new faith. They found the new man nothing wonderful, and the new faith as expounded by him to be the oldest of all religions and the common ground of all. But the smaller congregation was, I think, worth the more, and gave more reason to hope for some permanent result of my short visit.

On the following morning I passed the Salvation Army barracks, and went in to see their hall. The day before they too had an English visitor, a commissioner from London. They managed to pack 900 into the space seated for 720, and then had to shut the doors upon a crowd eager to come in. Their band accounts for a good deal, their message for a good deal more: "Sinner, choose which you will have, Heaven or Hell" was printed in large letters upon the wall. We had no attractions to offer and no excitement, and no music except a piano. Perhaps, under the circumstances, we did well to get as many as 150, a larger congregation, from all I heard, than most of the churches were used to.

I invited any who were disposed to help in make arrangements for a regular meeting for worship after our manner to meet me on the following Wednesday evening; and I found some eighteen persons assembled when I went to the appointed place. This was my last meeting at Perth, and it gave me more encouragement than any I had had. They were men and women in earnest, and if they can get over the curious dislike which so many Unitarians have to worship conducted by other than the regular minister, I have no doubt they will begin a congregation with good promise of success.

West Australia has advanced in the last ten years from being the most backward to being the most thriving and progressive of the States. This is, of course, due to the discovery of gold in the interior, but along with the gold has come the awakening to the many other possibilities of wealth which the development of so vast a territory offers. The supreme difficulty is the scarcity and dearness of labour. The immigration of Chinese and other coloured people is strictly forbidden here as throughout Australasia, and so wages are maintained at a high level. Consequently, everything is dear. The working man must pay from fifteen shillings to a pound a week for a small house, and provisions of all kinds, even apples, are not to be had below English prices, and often—in the case of imported and, therefore, duty-paying goods—at considerably more.

The climate, though perhaps somewhat relaxing in summer, seemed to me delightful, and certainly it must be so in the hills. Life is simpler than in England, and it is rare for well-to-do people to keep more than one servant, whose wage will be at least £1 a week. The community consists largely of young people; I found myself quite a patriarch among them. They are not given to church-going, and if we had a church here we should have to be satisfied with small congregations, and rely a good deal on outside sympathy, which, from all I heard, would not be wanting.

I left Perth on May 18, Mr. Campbell and Mrs. Macdonald, those faithful supporters of the cause who first gave me a welcome, accompanying us to Fremantle, and bidding us farewell only when the boat left.

On Whit Sunday we anchored in the afternoon off Largs Bay, the roadstead of Adelaide. The tug put off from the shore to meet us, and I was cheered by the welcome of a dozen or more members of the congregation who had come down some ten miles by rail to meet the representative of the British and Foreign Association. It was about four o'clock, and we were conducted to the house of our kind hostess, Mrs. Kay, who as a girl was a member of Mr. Turner's congregation at Newcastle. After tea we went to the church, where I conducted the service, and preached. It was very much such a congregation as I should have expected to meet at home, and there was nothing to remind me that I was so far away, except, perhaps, that they were evidently unaware that it was Whit Sunday, which people who keep Whit Monday as a Bank Holiday could not be oblivious of, however devoid they might be of any ecclesiastical proclivities. And my first impressions have been confirmed by all I have seen and heard since. They are eminently respectable, thriving people of all classes, merchants, manufacturers, shopkeepers; some of them holding a high position in the community. Were it possible to transport a few of the elders to Perth we should very soon be assured of a settled church there.

I lectured on Wednesday evening in the schoolroom, and was flattered by an audience of over eighty in number; a good attendance we should consider it at home when the lecture had been advertised as free, but here it is not the custom to give lectures free any more than entertainments, and a charge of a shilling was made for admission.

On Saturday afternoon the Rev. J. C. Woods and Mrs. Woods gave a garden party in their grounds at Burnside, to which all persons connected with the congregation were invited, and over 160 were present. The Australian May answers in the calendar to our November, but in character it much more resembles a fine September. There are very few decidious trees, all of them importations from colder climates, and they drop their leaves late, and, as it were, unwillingly. Crysanthemums, roses, salvia, bougainvillea, and other flowering plants made a gay show; and a gay party of young folks walked among them holding forth promise of a good Unitarian congregation when the present supporters of the cause shall have passed away. A sight doubtless never seen before here, or, perhaps, in the Southern Hemisphere, was the group of four Unitarian ministers. Mr. Whitham, who is now the Assistant Inspector-General of Education, came out as a minister in 1874, and still frequently acts in that capacity. Mr. Reid, who was once a Presbyterian, and then, like myself, a University Extension Lecturer, has been minister of the congregation at Adelaide since 1902, and the only fault I can find with him, or can hear brought to his charge, is that he has just kept his golden wedding, and must needs plead guilty to old age, although, indeed, his activity and the amount of work he does for religion and education would seem to indicate a man in the prime of life. Then there was our host, the Rev. J. C. Woods, whose infirmities of body do indeed accuse him of his fourscore years; but in mind and temperament he continues young, and enjoys the meed of old age in the reverence which all pay to him and the affectionate regard which was shown by younger members of his connection. He came out here as minister of the church in 1855, when the congregation was founded, and resigned in 1889, but continued taking occasional services as long his health permitted. By some accident his name has dropped out of our Essex Hall list of ministers, a mistake which, I hope, will be corrected in the next issue. It was indeed a happy gathering of all ages from three to eighty-three, and I trust that I shall be able to bring home a record of it, as a photographer, coming past the house by chance, or sent providentially, took the large group as best he could.

On the Sunday I preached morning and evening. The evening congregation was really the better of the two, though only half that of the morning, for the conditions were such as to deter all but the most zealous. The rain came down in torrents, and the ways were dark, and the distances long, and the gutters overflowing. For myself, I went into the pulpit with shoes full of water, but I quickly had them off without attracting attention, and preached very comfortably in my stockings. I was sorry for those who could not take the same liberty, and worship for once after the fashion of Mahometans.

So far I have met with nothing but an excess of kindness. I am mindful that it is not Mr. Hargrove, a stranger who has no claim upon them, to whom they show such flattering attentions and respect. It is in my official capacity as representative of English Unitarians and their Association that I am honoured and fêted. And I entertain the hope that this visit may have a lasting effect in drawing the Church of Adelaide into closer fellowship with our churches at home. We are very far apart by measurement of distances, but we hold the same faith, stand by the same principles, use the same books, and, indeed, I could easily forget, as I stood yesterday at the Communion-table between Mr. Reid and Mr. Whitham, that I was in a far-away land, and imagine myself among English friends in body as I truly was in spirit.

I leave here next week for Melbourne, and after a fortnight there go on to Sydney by way of Tasmania. I hope from thence to pay a visit to Brisbane, and try what I can do to gather together the homeless Unitarians of that city. Returning to Sydney, I shall take the boat then for Auckland, to which letters may safely be sent to me till the middle of August.

May 30, 1904. CHARLES HARGROVE.

THE TENDENCIES OF MODERN RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.*

BY THE HON. ROLLO RUSSELL.

II.

THE prevalence of law by no means does away with the need for prayer. On the contrary, the understanding of the laws of the Universe raises the character of prayer and worship above the grovelling arts of the level of selfishness, and suffuses the whole of our lives and all our energies with the spirit of devotion. Religion is the spiritual life of man in responsible relation to the highest Good, full of sympathy, full of admiration. Light without heat gives no life. Prayer, instead of a petition to a tyrant, as of old, becomes a collaboration with God, a joining of frailty to strength against evil, a union of the soul of man in aspiration and act with the Spirit of the Universe, the Eternal Energy.

The bead-counting, the paternosters, the incessant slavish cries for mercy become impossible, but the longing for the growth of the kingdom of God, the hunger and thirst for righteousness, for a forgiving spirit, for mastery over temptation, for daily sustenance from on high, remain and find expression as long as the human heart beats and the sun rises.

The Universal Prayer.

The Lord's Prayer is of every century, for all time. The Beatitudes are valid. Music, with or without words, both expresses and increases endeavour, and makes us feel in unison with the Soul of Creation.

Prayer, which is true-minded, is really a raising of the human into accord with the Divine, to will and to do all possible good, to share in the diffusion of light, warmth, and regenerative energy over the world. The realisation of our capacity, as units and as nations, not as mere receivers of mercy and miserable sinners, to make our prayers come true by our own rightfulness and our own exertions, will show us that Christ did not exaggerate when he said that faith would remove mountains, that the little seed would grow into a great tree, that good measure pressed down and overflowing would be returned to the giver.

Unreal Petitions.

The nations have long been, and still are, under a black cloud of error in public worship. In our thousands of churches, favoured by the State and riveted upon the land by statecraft, twelve or fifteen generations ago, appeals for pity are turned off as from a wheel every seventh day, utter want of health is confessed, and a perfectly godly life is asked for. There is immense confusion in these contradictions repeated every Sunday during the term of a man's sojourn upon this globe, a confusion bringing unconscious dilapidation to the structure of religious life in the mind.

Jehovah and Jove are alike gone. The Spirit of Eternal Love is for ever with us. All have a part in the sunshine and the rain—there is no exclusion—and all may help towards bringing the kingdom of God upon earth. The old religious scheme of which we know most, for it was grafted upon us in childhood, misrepresented the Deity as a tyrant, fond, impetuous, fatherly to some, but wrathful, and sometimes savage, towards most, delighting in slaughter, favouring treachery, sending both evil and good, holding gifts in one band and terrors in the other. He was to he concilated by endless prostrations, sacrifices, and emoluments, perpetual appeals to his mercy to spare his bondsmen perpetually prone to rebellion. Present theology and present conduct in the Christian nations is the result of the mixture of these obsessions with Christianity and with a little rudimentary science, much misunderstood.

Truer Conceptions of the Divine.

Reason and right feeling in our own time admit that there is no favouritism nor lobbying in the Court of the Eternal, such as the largest Church in Christendom and others teach. The saints do not intercede, nor do mere prayers and praises of the lips move a grain of sand for us, but our own efforts, here at home, under law, and with faith in law, make us strong to prevail.

Moreover, some of the sentiments still uttered habitually in worship are now rightly abhorred in the kinder atmosphere outside. In all our cathedral and national churches, and some others, we find, together with the beauty of Christian teaching, crimes of a horrible character besought with musical honours by old and young, simply because some old sinner in Syria ejaculated the sentences in anger. God is asked by millions to destroy and smite and plague—"the righteous shall rejoice when he seeth vengeance" (Ps. xlviii.); "Let them fall from one wickedness to another, and not come into thy righteousness; let them be wiped out of the book of the living" (Ps. lxix.); "Let there be no man to pity him, or have compassion on his fatherless children"; "Let his prayer be turned into sin."

It is an awful thing for us who have the light, who rejoice in the gospel of Love and Law, to compel the young of our time, and the unlettered multitude who depend on the learned, habitually to adopt the language of hate into their hearts within what should be the sanctuary of universal goodwill. I know that it does untold harm and discredits piety. The New Testament ought to have caused such sentiments to be clean gone for ever from the region of worship. They are almost fiendish. Why must they darken the purer skies of Christendom? Only a week ago I heard of a child of eight who was driven into religious mania by the Bible stories of God's vengeance and cruelty.

Put away the False.

The Bible is the grandest book in the world, but it contains much that should be forgotten like the graves that mark the ravages of some ancient pestilence.

The child should have nothing brought into the hour of religious aspiration which is not sound and beautiful and wholehearted. For example, why should not every child be taught that science, not less than St. Francis, asks us to realise our kinship with the animal world, and gives us reason to feel bound to spare them needless suffering?

For most of us of the twentieth century it would be almost pure gain to blot out all ancient history bearing on religion, except the record of saviours, heretics, and martyrs, and to begin afresh with our own times. It is wholly out of harmony with religion to declare as in the presence of God, on great feast days, including the birthday of Christ, that all who do not believe faithfully in an abstruse metaphysical proposition, composed in an ignorant age, without doubt perish everlastingly. It is a tremendous conceit, a tremendous usurpation of divine mysteries, unworthy to be entertained for a single moment. Not only science, not only reason, but religion condemns it. It is a direct denial of the goodness of God and of the loving universality of Christ. Believing in the illumination of our own age, far larger than any that ever went before, it is our happy duty to discard the sputtering torches of the age of stone and brass with their hideous phantoms. But here they are, still with us, blasting goodwill, countermining charity.

Our present Light.

Our great men of the Victorian age have been equal to the best Hebrews. Our high literature of the nineteenth century is of far wider scope than all the literature of Judea and Rome together, incomparably nobler than the theologic controversies of the early centuries of our era. We have more to learn from Boston than from Babylon. Much of religious worship is repugnant to the truer feeling of our day. Sunday is too much a day for the opening of museums of ancient armour. The best of the Bible, which might be contained in 50 pages, ought to become a part of our very being. The rest is for the student.

Sincerity in Prayer.

Further, the belief is silently growing that public prayer, even for the highest objects, may not be right unless, out of church, we are striving with energy to attain them. It would be a great gain to religion if all who attend public worship were asked not to pray unless they were taking active part, publicly and privately, in movements towards the desired good. Christ condemned prayer which was not heartfelt, and seemed to disapprove of public supplications. First be reconciled, he said, to thy brother, and then offer thy gift. As a nation we show no repentance, and continue to offer vain gifts.

Consider the multitudes of the religious in church and chapel who have for centuries prayed for truth and justice, peace and happiness, and consider further what those multitudes have done in their lives, especially in public affairs, towards the fulfilment of their petitions. Few have exerted themselves for the extension of goodwill, opposed organised robbery, fraud, and manslaughter on a large scale undertaken by their servants, or protested against slandering and plotting contrived in their name for some unjust gain. Yet they pray continually that God may have mercy upon them and incline their hearts to keep the commandments. Few have worked for justice in the distribution of land, a main element of welfare, or in the processes of trading in food and drink, which are vitally important, or in the treatment of subject races. Few refuse to feed upon and support a newspaper which with knowledge promotes falsehood, covetousness, and luxury. In France it was the orthodox who revelled in the slander of Dreyfus; in England the orthodox who revelled in the slander of neighbours. Few regard their votes on which national happiness depends as a religious and sacred trust to be governed by conscience.

* An Address given at Essex Hall on Thursday morning, May 26, at the Conference of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, after the paper by the Rev. L. P. Jacks.

On the contrary, it is among the less punctilious in attending worship that we find many of the most active promoters of general welfare, the most ready to sacrifice ignoble interests to duty.

Week-day Denials.

The public prayers of Sunday are almost with ostentation obliterated by public conduct on weekdays. We see huge edifices rising up in Christian countries under the name of War Office, not the humblest building devoted by State or people specially to the cause of concord. Only a hundredth part of the amount spent on the mere ornaments of bellicosity, such as braid and feathers, would go far in promoting international understanding. In the matter of health, public authorities, orthodox in dogma, purposely minimise their powers of averting illness in their district, and appoint inefficient officers. Sources of crime, poverty, and disorders of body and mind, scattered far and wide over the land, are specially favoured and endowed by the State. In this and in other matters of great moment it is clear that either the solemn prayers in divine service are empty words, or that they take the place of effectual sympathy.

When the truth becomes commonly acknowledged that peace, truth, and conditions of happiness will no more come in answer to verbal prayer without prayer in action than a house, or ship, or clothing, or a wheatfield, or an electric light and power installation, then we may hope that, becoming co-workers with God, the world will transform itself into an abode whose builder and maker is the Divine Spirit Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect; these are not foolish rhapsodies, but practical, wise, prophetic principles.

The Will for Progress.

The power of the human will is great. With a noble object, and steady enthusiasm, what wonders have been accomplished by men of common clay, and what wonders may yet be done by the high spirit of a people bent on transformation!

The astonishing advance of mankind in material things is the result of faith in science and in work. Nothing could have been done by reliance on prescribed verbal prayer. Philosophy, too, which relies on intellect and logic, the reasonable constitution of the mind has in its sphere achieved great progress with exceeding ability. Abstract science has notably advanced. In these the mind has been full of the enthusiasm which in affairs of character and of common life can also do great things. If we gave to the human organism the care which we give to a steam-engine, most of the troubles of life would cease to spring up and confound us.

Popular ethics, on the other hand, if they can be said to exist, religious forms, and all that is expressed by the word conduct, are far behind, in a condition of almost barbarous incompetence. There is no incandescent light commonly used in the house of the soul. There is no perfectly-fitted passenger ship, open to all and accepted, between the high thoughts of nations. The spell of incantations holds them fast. The old traditions, the old navigation laws have succeeded in locking out the spirit of growth. The controlling authorities will not remove the hard-set errors into which most souls are prisoned. They are responsible for much of the negation of religion now existing. Their drill and their instruments of compulsion are not for this age. But a tide is rising which on some bright day will go further than they imagine.

We are enabled to realise by the cogent evidence of reason, if not by a little-respected text of St. Paul, that all nations are of one blood, and ought to live as a united society, making war on evil, cherishing all things honest and productive. The religious forces have been distrusted in the past, with good reason; we may hope that in the future they will deserve to be trusted. There is complete agreement between the teaching of the wisest science in relation to ethics and the teaching of essential Christianity. The objects of science and of Christianity, with the highest human welfare of the future in view, are the same. Let them be combined for the regeneration of the world.

THE SUN HAS RISEN.

THE Sun has risen; the day is born,
The world is filled with light;
And all the fields in all the lands
Beneath the heavens are bright.
The flowers awake to greet the day,
The birds their carols sing.
How welcome is the happy light
To every living thing.

And as the sunlight everywhere
A gladsome beauty brings,
So in our lives the light of God
Reveals all lovely things.
Truth, like a flower, within our souls
Its purest brightness shows,
Love carols sweetly in our hearts,
And ever sweeter grows.

Praise to Our Father, who has set
His sun on high to shine,
And praise to Him that He doth fill
Our souls with light divine.
All Nature welcomes with new joy
The bright returning day;
So may we welcome with one voice
The light that lights our way.

To us be faith and hope and love
The sunlight of our life,
Sweetening all labour with true joy,
Ennobling all our strife.
And when on earth our tasks are done,
And outer darkness falls,
How lovely shines the inner light
To greet us when God calls.

NEANDER ANDERTON.

THE HAWTHORNE CENTENARY.

NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE was born at Salem, Massachusetts, a hundred years ago—on July 4th, 1804, the twenty-eighth anniversary of American independence. His forefathers were of Puritan race. The head of the American branch of the family went over with Winthrop and his company in 1630: while in office as magistrate he ordered the whipping of five Quaker women through Salem, Boston, and Dedham, because of their heresy, a kind of religious propaganda which was in favour among his contemporaries. Another ancestor, Colonel John Hawthorne, who died in 1717, during his magistracy presided at witchcraft trials, and was severe, bigoted, and unrelenting: the curse of a man whose wife had been tortured as a witch was supposed to have clung to the family.

Be that as it may, the Hawthornes soon afterwards lost their important place at the head of Salem affairs, and became, many of them, seafaring men, poverty-stricken and obscure. Nathaniel's father died abroad while his little son was but four years old. The widowed mother lived a retired life. Poor and lonely, she found her comfort in her children. Nathaniel had little companionship save that of books. Of these he had free choice among a large collection. Among books whose influence can be most readily traced in his stories are the "Newgate Calendar," which he read through before he was fourteen, and Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress."

A lovely Youth.

Such isolation of the family from the world, together with the traditionary supposition that its members were under a ban, had something to do with the shyness and brooding loneliness in which Nathaniel lived for many years. But there were quiet pleasures and amusements and some fun in the home life. He published a weekly manuscript journal called the Spectator, and at sixteen expressed in a letter to his mother his desire to be a literary man. When he was fourteen his mother had moved to Raymond, on Sebago lake, where, though in robust and, on the whole, happy companionship with nature, his habit of solitude was intensified.

With the help of his uncle, William Manning, he was able to go to Bowdoin College, where he studied during four years without distinction, and, when twenty-one, returned to the old family house at Salem, where his mother again resided, and there commenced a long period of retirement. With a natural tendency to seclusion, increased by circumstances, for months together he scarcely held human intercourse outside his family. When he went out of doors it was usually at twilight. This way of living continued with few breaks for about 12 years; but they were not idle years. He was reading, thinking, and writing. That which he wrote was sometimes printed in obscure journals and annuals of no great renown, and towards the end of this period he was engaged by S. G. Goodrich to go to Boston to edit the American Magazine of Useful and Entertaining Knowledge. Very little money or advantage came from this source, and several other literary projects failed. "Fanshawe" he had published in the early part of his retirement, and, dissatisfied with it, almost succeeded in exterminating it.

At last his college friend, Horatio Bridge, secured for him, without his knowing through whose influence it came, the offer to republish in a collected form some of his stories, the "Twice-Told Tales," as they were therefore called.

Sophia Peabody.

The most powerful influence in drawing Nathaniel forth from his seclusion was the Peabody family, who lived a cultured life on modest means in a house near to the Hawthornes, or rather, as it soon appeared, it was Miss Sophia Peabody who was the principal agent. The family had admired certain short stories in the papers, and conjectured that they were written by one of the Hawthornes, probably, they thought, by Miss Hawthorne; and they sought them out, convinced that it was wrong for these gifted people to keep themselves to themselves as they did. Then Sophia Peabody and Nathaniel Hawthorne found one another and became engaged.

Nathaniel received a Government appointment as weigher and gauger at the Boston Custom House at $1,200 (£235) a year, which, after two years, he lost again when his party, the Democrats, went out of office. The money he had saved—he was always very careful in money matters, and needed to be careful—he invested in the social experiment of Brook Farm, to which he himself went for a while, and had thoughts of establishing a home there to which to bring Sophia. But, apart from other considerations, the lack of opportunity for retirement for solitary work, an essential of Hawthorne's literary life, made the place unsuitable, as Sophia soon perceived. They married in 1842, when Nathaniel was about thirty-eight years old, and settled down, not at Brook Farm, but at Concord, at the Old Manse. The Manse had been formerly occupied by Dr. Ripley, who had left a chest full of sermons in the garret, so that though Hawthorne seldom went to church he had much divinity at hand. They expected to have to live frugally on narrow means, and their poverty was quite as severe as they anticipated.

Early Married Life.

But yet it was a happy time, perhaps the happiest of their whole life to both of them. The wife, who had been an invalid in her maidenhood, became much more strong and capable as a happy wife, and Hawthorne's strong physique and splendid health supported him. He grew vegetables and wrote stories, the latter in quiet and seclusion, deliberately, and the "Mosses from an Old Manse" contains some of them, and one of the most delightful bits of autobiography in literature as its Introduction. For the evening hours wife and husband, together with Shakespeare or some other author, were sufficient company for complete happiness. But Hawthorne was promised little and received less for his work, and despite the most careful management and frugality, he was getting into debt.

One passes with regret from the charming record of these charming days to that of the appointment, in 1846, to the surveyorship of the Salem Custom House, for which he received about £240 a year. He paid off his debts, attended to the duties for which he was paid, and did no literary work, not having a study in which to be quiet, nor daytime free from his office.

Successful Books.

As soon as he was dismissed from this uncongenial post, on change of Government again, though in sad uncertainty as to future means of subsistence, he wrote the "Scarlet Letter," with an introductory chapter on the Salem Custom House, which gave considerable offence in Salem.

In this time of stress the loving care, sympathetic comprehension, and unbounded admiration of Sophia Hawthorne for her husband were as marked as in the early days at the Concord Manse. They were his throughout life, and helped him beyond measure in his literary work.

Friendly aid given with remarkable considerateness, and repaid at the earliest opportunity, helped to tide over a difficult time. Hawthorne was despondent; but his novel was a success and began to produce money. At the Red House (or Scarlet Letter, as the author sometimes called it) at Lenox he worked quietly and steadily, and produced "The House of the Seven Gables," and some of the stories for children, including the "Wonder Book," in which his life with his children is to some extent reflected—a happy life in a pleasant country—but Hawthorne longed for the seaside.

For a short time he was at West Newton to renew his impressions of the scenery of Brook Farm while writing "The Blithedale Romance." This story, which takes the so-called "Socialist" colony—though it was not in any strict sense Socialistic—as the background of a human tragedy, is not to be considered as the judgment of the author on the experiment or the people who took part in it—so he himself explicitly tells his readers.

At last Hawthorne was to have a house of his own, but not by the sea. He purchased the dwelling at Concord called "The Hillside," which he renamed "The Wayside," both names being suitable, and returned to the society, so far as he needed it and accepted it, of Emerson, Alcott, and other great and good people. This was in 1852. But, again, a Government appointment interrupted his work, and he accepted it, but not this time from necessity, for his books had begun to produce an income on which he might hope, with strict economy, to maintain his family.

Liverpool Consulate.

He had written the life of his old friend and college classmate, Franklin Pierce, an electioneering tract of no great value save for its temporary purpose of assisting him to the Presidency. On his election he repaid Hawthorne by offering him the most remunerative foreign appointment—that of the Liverpool Consulate. Probably Hawthorne did not expect this, and at one time thought he would not take any recompense for the service he willingly did to his friend, but when it was offered he took it, and set sail with his family to England a few months after they had removed to "The Wayside."

The four years of the Liverpool appointment (1853-1857) produced no literary work save entries in the Note Books which were in part transferred to his volume on "Our Old Home" published after his return to America. He did not become intimate with any of the famous Englishmen of the day, though he met the Martineaus, the Brownings, Monckton Milnes, Douglas Jerrold and some others. He travelled much about the country and spent some months at Leamington, for which and its neighbourhood he had a great liking.

Rome.

In January, 1858, he went to Rome, moved to Florence for the summer and returned for another winter in Rome. His Note Books, remarkable for their genuine record of impressions while fresh and vivid, contains also many descriptions and some pregnant suggestions which were afterwards embodied in his last completed romance, "The Marble Faun." He did some work on this book at Florence, but on the second visit to Rome, the serious illness of his eldest daughter, Una, distracted him from any literary work—he ceased the careful entries in his Note Book which for over five years he had regularly made. When Una was able to travel with safety the family, after a short sojourn in France and Switzerland, spent one year more in England, and the Italian romance received its author's undivided literary attention, first at Redcar, in Yorkshire, and then at Leamington, where it was completed and published in 1860, with the title, in England, "Transformation," and, in America, "The Marble Faun."

Home Again.

Returning to America he went to "The Wayside" at Concord, so unobtrusively that the villagers did not know for several days that he was there. He published "Our Old Home," and was at work on a mass of material suggested in part by a Lancashire legend of the Bloody Footstep at Smithell's Hall. The first form in which he completed it, "Septimus Felton," did not satisfy him, and he began writing "The Dolliver Romance" for publication in the "Atlantic Monthly."

Of this only five chapters were completed. He had hardly known illness for sixty years of his life, but he was ill now—his first real illness killed him. The Civil War troubled him deeply. Though one may be unable to sympathise with his position in relation to that war, one must sympathise with his sorrow and perturbation over it. Una fell ill again, and Hawthorne expected the death of this, his much-loved child, oldest of the three—the baby born to them at the Concord Manse.

Sophia began to fear for her husband's life. He went South for the benefit of his health, with his friend the publisher, W. D. Ticknor. At Philadelphia Ticknor suddenly died. This was a great shock to a man already ill. He started on another journey with his old comrade, Franklin Pierce, and at Plymouth, New Hampshire, himself died in the night at the hotel, May 18, 1864, in his sixtieth year.

His faithful, ever-loving wife, wrote to dear friends, just after his death, a letter which I wish I could quote in full:—

There can be no death nor loss for me for evermore. I stand so far within the veil that the light from God's countenance can never be hidden from me for one moment of the eternal day, now nor then. . . . God has satisfied wholly my insatiable heart with a perfect love that transcends my dreams. . . . I have no more to ask but that I may be able to comfort all who mourn as I am comforted. If I could bear all sorrow I would be glad, because God has turned for me the silver lining, and for me the darkest cloud has broken into ten thousand singing birds.

PRIESTLEY PRIME.

A MEDITATION.

MY soul! why prayest thou to the Unseen; why dost thou breathe thy petitions into the spaces of Immensity and into the moments of Eternity? Can Infinity hear the Finite, and care for its beseechings?

In olden days it was said upon the Mount, "Ask, and ye shall receive," and untold millions have believed and obeyed. Yet there be those who affirm that it is foolishness to pray.

"Behold," say they, "all things are ruled by law. From farthest star to tiniest mote dancing in the sunbeam; yea, down to each and every atom, small beyond man's discerning, law rules and is unbroken.

Why pester the unknown Power with thy petty needs and desires, born of weakness and ignorance? If there be a God (and who knoweth or can know the ultimate life?) He is Himself the law that ruleth all creation. He cannot change Himself. Why ask Him to bow to thy impotence?

Yet they that so speak belie their own hard creed from day to day.

Do they not ask of what they call Nature that she yield her secrets to their quest? Do they not beat with strong, insistent hands upon the portals of her treasure-house, and lo! the gates swing wide?

Yea! ever since primeval man emerged and trod an unknown earth has he not asked, and sought, and knocked, and the unknown has become knowledge. In time he turned his gaze within, and cried, "What then am I, and what my destiny?" and lo, the soul was born and lifted eyes of wonder to the mysteries of the inner life. Nature put on divinity and became God.

And still the Soul seeks to know that Higher Soul and His will, and in the seeking asks for light and truth.

Cease then to scoff at prayer, all ye who practise it in your search for knowledge. Widen your universe till it comprehends Spirit as well as law, and ye too will pray the higher prayers.

And thou, my soul, pray on!

THE tale of the Divine Pity was never yet believed from lips that were not felt to be moved by human pity.

George Eliot.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

THE SWARMING.

"HAVE you ever swarmed?" asked Miriam after we had been sitting at the hive door for a few minutes soaking in the sunshine after a hard morning's work, for we were still bees.

"Yes," I said, "and it was the most out and out gay time I ever had in my life. The whole city was crazy with joy. There was only one rule for the swarmers—'Be happy and follow the Queen'! So we did. That day you're allowed to knock in the top of any honey-pot you come across and help yourself to your heart's content. So we feasted, we ran about and greeted, we clung together in a living curtain about the doorway, we got hungry and feasted again, and sang with delight. No work is to be done on swarming day by order of the queen. It is a national holiday. Of course it is impossible to be anything but perfectly good-natured all day long, and when Mr. Big Man came along smiling under his broad-brimmed straw hat, we let him take us up in handfuls. It was just one glorious gambol. Presently there was a cry, 'The Queen's coming!' Everybody in the line of march stood to attention, and then, as she and her guard passed along we presented arms, that is trunks, offering her majesty a sip of honey to refresh her, and fanning her with our wings. She smiled most graciously. What a grand old queen she is! and how young and active she keeps in spite of her years! Advancing to the gates with stately step she stopped a moment, then spread her beautiful gauzy wings, and rose into the air. Out we streamed, company after company, regiment after regiment. We followed her, we danced around her, we made the air alive with our merry wings. Presently she descended towards an apple tree and settled on a branch. We did the same; and then, when she was covered over and over with hosts of her loyal children, the rest of us clung to one another so as to form a great drooping cluster of bees. And then what do you think happened? Mr. Big Man came along and gave the branch a rude shake. We all fell down flop, one great lump of bees. But no one was hurt, and we laughed at the joke. The Queen was with us, and that was the only thing we were concerned about.

"When we came to our senses a bit we found ourselves in a great empty cavern. There was no comb, no food, no eggs to guard, no babies to nurse—nothing but this vast dome of black emptiness and our merry selves, some 20,000 in number, and the queen. There was nothing for it but to set to work as hard as ever we could to build a new city. We did not stop to lament over the old home we had left behind, and which had become very much overcrowded. We felt the honour of having been chosen as pioneers, and we gladly accepted the hardships connected with the founding of a new colony. We meant to show what great things can be done by all pulling together with one end in view. That is so important, and that is why swarming is celebrated as it is, and why it has gained the name of the Festival of Good Temper.

"So now, when in proper bee style our chief engineer had made a careful inspection of the site, and had decided on the most suitable spot to commence operations, we began by making some pearly-white bricks, and with these and the finest cement we laid the foundations of our future city on the ceiling of the cavern. Then how we laboured day and night! It's funny that men and bees build their houses in opposite ways. They begin on the ground and build upwards, climbing up scaffolding and ladders. That seems strange to us bees, who begin on the roof and work downwards, hanging on to one another while we are brick-making and building. Surely that's the more reasonable way, for it's easier to come down than to go up. But then men and bees are so different. There's gold-dust again; we make ours into loaves of bread and eat it. They make theirs into rings and coins and even into chains. They do say (though I have never seen one) that men sometimes get their hands and feet entangled in gold chains so that they cannot move. But this is by the way.

"Gradually a fine piece of masonry began to appear—as white as marble. Day by day and hour by hour it grew until we saw once again the familiar sight which cheers the hearts of bees, rows of cradles, and barrels of bread and flour and honey, piled up high in the national stores. New streets were laid out, new blocks of buildings grew into shape, and at last we found ourselves in possession of a large and beautiful city."

"Well, I think we bees are very clever," said Miriam. "We mustn't be vain," I remarked; "but what do you think the Queen told us one day? You know that the philosophers say that it was the bees who found out the grand secret how to make the flowers so beautiful. Yes, our great-grandfathers and great-grandmothers discovered the way to colour the petals more richly, and alter their shapes and increase their perfume, and persuaded them to give them more honey. I cannot tell you how they did it, but I know it's true because the philosophers, who are the very wise people, say it is; and the Queen believes it, and this is what she said—that it was the people who cared most about their own homes indoors who did most to make the world beautiful out of doors; for the builders of the hive are the artists of the garden. And now let's have a song. So we sang—

THE SONG OF THE BEE.

I gambol and sing in the pride of my wing,
For the heather I scent from afar;
I'm as rich as a king when homeward I bring
A bag full of purest nectar.

For this is of old a saying well told,
If you'd be as blithe as a bee,
You must eyelids unfold when the sunshine is gold,
And e'en be as busy as he.

Do you wonder for why 'neath the dome of the sky
Far over the meadows we roam;
It is not for self that we gather the pelf,
But for love of our comrades at home."

H. M. LIVENS.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C.

LONDON, JULY 9, 1904.

GEORGE FREDERICK WATTS.

MARTINEAU, RUSKIN, SPENCER, WATTS —how rich a harvest of our greatest has eternity gathered in, in how short a time! In their own several ways all strenuous men, who helped to shape the century in which they lived. The common characteristic of this last group of the giants was their seriousness. One and all, they strove to use their gifts for the intepretation or the exposition of life in its wholeness. The all of things was their interest, no mere detached and disconnected detail. They knew that the whole of things was a cosmos, not a chaos, and they set themselves to read, so far as might be, and to expound that unity.

It is said that there are no serious men left now, that literature and art are given over to the men who do not stand for any supreme and all embracing truth, but rather play on the surface of life. It is a somewhat insular verdict. While TOLSTOY and BJÖRNSON live and write, Europe is not without its prophet voices, though IBSEN has laid down his pen and JOKAÏ has passed from the strife. Yet we must, it is to be feared, acknowledge that a mood of comparative frivolity is passing over the minds of men, and that for the moment the mighty ministries of letters and of art are not at their loftiest and greatest.

The more earnestly and the more gratefully do we turn to the noble and gracious personality of GEORGE FREDERICK WATTS. Mr. CHESTERTON, in his charming little volume on the great artist, does not escape from his trick of saying anything for the sake of a Chestertonian paradox, but he nevertheless says many things that are thoughtful and illuminating. And he says nothing more arresting than that WATTS was among those who rediscovered "the great truth that purity is the only atmosphere for passion." Of course that is put in the Chestertonian way, and is not true as it stands. But it is true that all the noblest passion needs purity for its atmosphere, and that the art of WATTS impresses the soul with that momentous verity. And perhaps one could not find a more characteristic mark of the great master who is never again to wield for us brush or chisel, than this expression of noble passion compassed always by an atmosphere of fleckless purity.

They who have had the high fortune to meet the veteran artist face to face, to look on his gracious countenance and person, to listen to his talk of his own work and purposes, must always carry with them an impression of this permeating purity of soul, and recall it over and over again as they gaze on his manifold creations. When he paints high and noble things the purity of his spirit seems to shine lucent from the silent canvas. And when he paints the hideous lust or greed of Minotaur or Mammon it is the horrible negation of purity that revolts.

Mr. WATTS never had any hesitation in his view of the place of art in the economy of spiritual forces. "Art for art's sake" would have been as unmeaning to him as "eating for eating's sake." Art was a mighty power given of GOD to certain of His sons for the sake of teaching righteousness and truth. Righteousness and truth are absolutely the only ultimate ends known to the consciousness of man. All other things are good only as they are means to righteousness and truth. The artist is not to plume himself before the preacher or the prophet. He is a true artist only in so far as he is himself a preacher and a prophet. The comparison of his own calling with that of MICAH or ISAIAH was a constant element of WATTS's own consciousness. He cared to paint only as he could be their allies.

He is therefore often stern. But he believed that life is good and that the world is beautiful. His prophecy was sometimes a prophecy of woe; but more often it was a psalm of joy. No Hebrew ever had a more intense conviction that sin inevitably brings its scourge. But neither had any man ever a more full persuasion that the great, silent, perpetual forces which control the sum of things are kindly, beautiful, divine. And so his legend of death is not as other men's. He stretches hands across the sea to WALT WHITMAN. Death is a gentle mother, a protecting nurse, a crown and triumph of life. Even when love passionately protests, none can behold Death pressing to the threshold without feeling that this is, after all, a benignant guest. When the babe lies gathered to the bosom of death, whose sable and purple plumes circle the bending form, we long that we too might know the embrace of those gentle arms.

But one might preach whole sermons out of almost every picture of the great master. Well advanced in the ninth decade of his age, he still with steadfast hand wrought his sermons out, and he has left them a precious heritage to the nation. They register for future generations much of the profoundest thought and noblest aspiration of the century in which he lived. Those who have left us printed books may fail in their appeal to the children of another epoch, speaking a language which is not theirs. One can hardly conceive that, while the pigments retain their tints and the canvas holds together, the pictures of FREDERICK WATTS can cease to speak or to quicken drowsy consciences and waken slumbering faith.

What is the secret of the eloquence of these masterpieces of a hand that is stilled? Genius accounts for much. And that there was genius, in spite of obvious faults—genius ample, generous, and strong—no competent judge will be found to deny. But genius alone could not engrave upon the public mind the lessons which Mr. WATTS has graven there. It is the man behind the painter that preaches with so masterly and massive a power. The private life can be touched with only the most reverent and tender hand. But they who know the most know the best and holiest. Never was there a truer Sir GALAHAD among men. No saint ever made more CHRIST-like renunciation. To him whose hand painted Love leading Life up the stony stairway, the hearts of all men who revere pure and undiluted goodness must for ever go out in homage. It is a benediction to have been brought even once into contact with his gracious and beautiful spirit.

R. A. A.

THE HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE JUBILEE.

THIS has been a great week in Manchester. The Unitarian Home Missionary College is a very popular institution, not only in Manchester, but in the northern counties generally. This is its year of Jubilee, and celebrations befitting the occasion have been held. A programme, in book form, as we noted last week, has been published, and in it is included a concise historic sketch of the rise and progress of the College. The institution, first called the Unitarian Home Missionary Board, was formally established at a meeting of ministers and laymen in the Cross-street Chapel room on Wednesday, May 31, 1854, at which the late IVIE MACKIE presided. A sympathetic and helpful letter was read from the Rev. JOHN JAMES TAYLER, Principal of Manchester New College, then at London. The Rev. J. R. BEARD, D.D., who was the life and soul of the movement, explained the objects of the proposed Board, and afterwards set them forth in brief form, thus:—

(1) The establishment of Unitarian congregations in places where there are none,

(2) The supply of an existing and growing demand for Unitarian ministers in churches among "The Christian Brethren," and other liberal and progressive bodies.

(3) The supply of an existing and growing demand for domestic missionaries and ministers to the poor.

(4) The supply of ministers to smaller Presbyterian and Unitarian congregations now, or likely soon to be, without ministers.

Resolutions were passed constituting the Board, and its object was tersely expressed as being "to assist in the education of young men for the work of preaching and diffusing the Gospel among the people, especially the poor, the untaught, and the neglected." Dr. BEARD was appointed Principal and Theological Tutor, and the Rev. WILLIAM GASKELL Literary Tutor. Soon afterwards the Rev. FRANCIS BISHOP was appointed Missionary Tutor.

The first term opened with ten students on Monday, Dec. 4, 1854, and the teaching was conducted at the residences of the Tutors. A room was afterwards rented in Marsden-street, and when the Memorial Hall was opened, one of its main purposes was to provide a home for the new institution, and the work of the Board was transferred thither. In 1873 the practice commenced of sending the students to Owens College for instruction in logic, mental science, and political economy; while three scholarships (the "Owens," founded 1865; the "Tate," founded 1877; and the "Gaskell," founded 1878), enabled the students of the Board to take further terms of study at the Owens College. More recently another scholarship, the "Durning-Smith," was added. Latterly the institution has been known as the Unitarian Home Missionary College, and its present Principal, the Rev. ALEXANDER GORDON, was appointed in 1890, being joined in 1894 by the Rev. J. E. MANNING as Tutor in Hebrew and Philosophy. In past years there have been as tutors such honoured men as the Revs. JOHN WRIGHT, BROOKE HERFORD, T. E. POYNTING, J. EDWIN ODGERS, and C. T. POYNTING.

And now with the establishment of a Free Faculty in Theology at the Manchester Victoria University a further advantage is furnished for the College, which is recognised as one of the teaching centres in certain subjects qualifying students to enter for a theological degree. Principal GORDON is not only a member of the Advisory Committee of the University, but has also been appointed Lecturer in Modern Ecclesiastical History.

The scheme for celebrating the Jubilee of the College is to house it in suitable collegiate and residential buildings. The purpose is thus described in the sketch above referred to :—

This is something urgently needed. The Unitarians have fallen far behind all other denominations in the kind of provision they have afforded for their theological students in the Manchester district. The Memorial Hall was an improvement upon Marsden-street, but it was an indirect and roundabout way of providing accommodation for the work of the College. The Hall is conveniently situated for meetings of societies and associations connected with religious, philanthropic, or educational purposes, but is hardly suited to academic pursuits. The extreme noisiness of the locality (the great tide of traffic is at its highest in lecture hours), and the poorness of the light, frequently necessitating the use of gas for half the morning, is most trying. . . . Acting with splendid faith and reliance upon the generosity of the Unitarian public, the Committee have now secured an excellent plot of ground in Victoria Park, with ample space for all requirements, and a capital house (Summerville) into the bargain. This has been secured in the faith that the whole of the proposed Jubilee Fund of £20,009 will be raised. There is need for generous contributions from all who have the welfare of the College at heart. One more point: the Owens College is not a residential college, and numbers of laymen come up to study there to whom a Hall of Residence affords a welcome home. Among such lay students there are always some from Unitarian families, to whom the opportunity of residence in fellowship with Unitarian divinity students, under a sympathetic warden, and with some prospect of tutorial assistance, would be extremely welcome. The success of Hulme Hall and Dalton Hall in this direction encourages one to expect a good response, in course of time, to such a development. The association of lay and divinity students would give opportunity for forming lasting friendships, and bring our laity and ministry into closer touch. If our people respond to the appeal now made with their accustomed generosity, we shall soon have the satisfaction of seeing the Unitarian College fittingly housed in a suitable hall of residence, and taking its place on an equal footing with the other theological colleges in Manchester. The account of the origin of the College given in the Christian Reformer for 1855, ends with the expression of a sentiment which may well be repeated at the opening of this new stage of its life: "May the highest expectations of its supporters be fulfilled by its success, and by the usefulness of those whom it may send out nto the world!"

The Jubilee has been the occasion of a happy reunion for a large number of old students of the College from all parts of the kingdom. A complete report of the proceedings we must reserve until next week.

IT was estimated, says the Daily News, that 100,000 Salvationists attended the Army's "Thanksgiving Celebration" at the Crystal Palace on Tuesday. "A long way over 50,000," says the Christian World. In any case it was an immense gathering, the climax of the present series of International meetings. The old General reviewed the work of the Army "from its first Hallelujah in East London thirty-nine years ago." They were, he said, a "Hallelujah people," and that was the one word which was the same in all languages. The penitents' form has played its accustomed part in the meetings, and there have been a good number of conversions. What the Army achieves has been largely seen in London during these days, in the faces of the people, gathered from all parts of the world, and picked up, many of them, out of the lowest depth.

COUNTRY HOLIDAY MOVEMENT.—Miss Lawrence, 23, Campden House-chambers, Campden-hill, London, W., acknowledges with thanks receipts for this fund of the following sums :—K., £2; Mrs. Boys, 10s.; The Misses Boys, £1.

OXFORD SUMMER SESSION FOR SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS.

THE fourth Summer Session for Sunday-school teachers has been held during the past week at Manchester College, Oxford. The numbers attending were not so large as in previous years, but about eighty teachers from some thirty schools were present, gathered from places as far apart as Belfast, Portsmouth, Scarborough, and Bolton. London, Manchester, and Hull were well represented, and there were teachers from Leicester, Nottingham, Northampton, Bath, Bridport, Tenterden, Horsham, Norwich, Holywood, Horwich, and Oldham. Among the lecturers were Dr. W. H. Lyon, of Brookline, Mass., and Miss Mossel, of Amsterdam. Among those attending the Session were the Hungarian, the Japanese, and the Indian students at Manchester College.

THE OPENING SERVICE.

The Session opened on Friday morning, July 1, with a religious service in the College chapel, conducted by the Rev. W. G. TARRANT, President of the Sunday-school Association. Mr. Tarrant was only able to remain for the first two days of the session, but the ex-president, Miss Marian Pritchard, and Mr. Ion Pritchard, the hon. secretary, were present throughout.

Friday was a beautiful, sunny day, and the service opened very happily with the hymn by C. T. Brooks :—

Great Lord of all! Our Father, God!
Sweet summer's hymn ascends to thee;
Her beauty breathes thy joy abroad,
And love's warm tide flows full and free.

* * * * *

But not in realms dim sense can sound
The fountain springs that life imparts;
That blessed source alone is found
In loving and believing hearts.

The other hymns were Lynch's "Dismiss me not thy service, Lord," and at the close Hosmer's "Not always on the mount," with the last verse :—

The mount for vision,—but below
The paths of daily duty go,
And nobler life therein shall own,
The pattern on the mountain shown.

In the course of the service Mr. TARRANT gave an address of welcome and encouragement to the assembled teachers. "Welcome," he said, "welcome into rest, after what has been, to many, a toilsome time. Welcome to this College, which stands as a monument representing generations of struggle after truth and liberty, such as, happily, we now enjoy, to teach and hear the truth." Imagination was stirred, he added, when they tried to recall the two and a half centuries since the first representative of the life still flowing full and strong in that College first made its appearance in the land, and remembered the illustrious sons both of the past and the present, who had been their teachers. And, further, he bid them welcome to Oxford, that wonderful scene of beauty and inspiration, the like of which they could hardly find within the borders of their land, filled the more with beauty, more eloquent of history, more suggestive of inspiration, the more they understood what had been the life and the potentialities of life within the University. There was splendour in the buildings, but still more in the lives of those who for many centuries gathered there, seeking truth, and larger life, and going down from that centre of instruction and inspiration to their appointed fields of labour. There were the great preachers, from Wiclif to Wesley, the men who tried to solve the problems of Church and State, from Hooker to Newman, from Chillingworth to Robertson, of Brighton, from Laud to the Arnolds, Thomas and Matthew; among the philosophers, Locke and Butler and T. H. Green; and on the practical side of life Hampden and Pym, and other patriots, down to Gladstone. In literature the names were legion, of poets, essayists, historians, among them Sir Philip Sidney, Addison, Steele, Selden, Johnson, Keble, Heber, Shelley, and Clough. They ought not to speak of such men as dead, so long as they had power to touch their hearts. He welcomed them not to the grave of their dust, but to the cradle of their spirit. And from such memories they must gather fresh impulse to go down to their own sequestered scenes of service and do some good to their kind before they passed away.

They were living in the present, and their heritage was in the past, but the future was theirs also. They must think of the potentialities of the living, of the children, and the possibilities in them. It was a great responsibility placed in their hands. They as teachers were come together for that brief session, to be better instructed for their work, to be kindled to deeper feeling and earnestness, to life and love and hope, and the unseen stirrings of the spirit. They were to be shown how wide was the range of thought and knowledge, to be led to the uplands, to breathe the purer air, and gain a wider horizon. If there was some climbing to be done, to follow the lead of the informed minds, the effort would be well repaid. What were they, if they told the children to strive to enter in at the strait gate and themselves shrank from effort? Only by such striving could they find the path of life. They must be not only awakened, but kindled, to feel that life had opened one door more into the inexhaustible possibilities of their own nature and of the children, whose interests were so closely bound up with their own. God had given them so much, He asked something of them in return, and they would fain give it. Such were the kindling thoughts that would be awakened in them during the coming week, so that they might feel, in the language of the disciples on the Mount of Transfiguration, "It is good to be here."

The Sunday Morning Service.

Before telling of the rest of the session some notes may be added here of the Sunday morning service. As in former years, the goodly company of teachers thronged the College chapel, and the singing of the hymns was a great delight. The service was conducted by the Rev. Dr. Drummond, who preached from Romans viii. 2, "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus made me free from the law of sin and death."

Those words, he said, were the expression of a remarkable experience in the mind of one of the greatest religious teachers of our race. That was the core and centre of Paul's thought, the gospel he continually preached. It penetrated his whole soul, moulded his life, governed his thought, and directed all his missionary activity. It would be well for them if they too had one such central thought, and they might find it in the text. It was a truth which did not create any narrowness of mind, while it led to concentration of effort. Knowledge of Christ's spirit they gained from his recorded teachings in the Gospels, which came as from one speaking with authority, out of the fulness of his own heart, and the completeness of his own communion with God; teaching which was the immediate offspring of his spirit; and, further, from the record of his life. The power of Christ's personality, the depth of love within his heart, combined with that profound sense of duty, which ended in his tragic death, added enormously to the power of his spoken word. To this was added the impression made upon his followers, the record of which they found in the New Testament, and saw through the long succession of the generations. They still learnt most, perhaps, of Christ's spirit when they saw its reflection in some beloved human form. They each received a clear impression of that spirit according to the measure of grace given to them. So far as they knew it, so far as it swayed their own lives, checked their sin, inspired their better thought, they felt that it was the highest and grandest spirit they could cherish. Still, therefore, they made it central in their teaching. They could not have the same absolute assurance as to any of the various doctrines, as they felt in regard to the purity and exaltation of the spirit of life, which had come to them through Christ.

That spirit they might describe a little more nearly as moral idealism founded on profound religious faith. A large part of the teaching of Jesus they saw was simply moral, yet morality penetrated with a pure and beautiful spirit, glorified by a faith resting with absolute trust and simplicity in the inspiration of God. If they tried to enter into the spirit of that moral teaching it became in them a spirit of purity and love, and they no longer required special precepts, the heart itself became a well-spring of righteousness, and they had moral freedom through that inward sanctifying power. Every pure heart would respond at once to the appeal of Jesus. By his faith theirs was quickened. He did not stand as a mediator between them and God, to act in their place, but as a mediator to take them by the hand, and bring them up to sit on his throne, to kneel with his adoration, to hold communion with God close and filial as his own.

There, as it seemed to him, they had the great central principle of Christianity, to be impressed through all their forms and methods of teaching on the minds of the young. They wished to stir in them that moral idealism. The age was terribly in need of it, and it was still possible to appeal to young admiration and awaken love of what is beautiful and good. If they failed in that, whatever useful things they might teach, they failed in the one essential thing. They must never be satisfied until those who learnt from them entered for themselves into the holy of holies, till they felt the personal contact of the Spirit with their spirit, till with chosen self-surrender they gave themselves to God and to His righteousness. So only could they, teacher and taught alike, be worthy of their Christian calling.

Turning to another aspect of his subject, Dr. Drummond showed how that same spirit was the source of their religious freedom; doctrine must always be secondary to that Spirit of Life, which determined also the true character of their fellowship in the church. Tested by that Spirit true Christians were to be found in every church, and beyond the borders of all the churches. Though they were a small company, excommunicated by the great body of Christendom, they must not retaliate by any exclusiveness of spirit, but be enlarged by the indwelling spirit of the Master and sympathy wide as the world, and enter into the great invisible communion of the faithful of every age and land. Cleansed of all uncharitableness, clothed in the spirit of consecrated duty, while here below they must take up the cross and go forth with mighty power to speak to the hearts of their fellows, and tell them what they had found in the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, which had made them free from the lower law and was lifting them towards that high communion which, when the shadows of mortality were cleared away, they would enter into and rejoice with all the saints in praise and adoration and loving service for ever.

In the afternoon a number of the teachers specially interested took part in a helpful conference on guild work, at which Mr. Prime, of the Octagon Guild of Service, Norwich, presided. In the evening an hour was spent in the library, when a party of children came from the Charles-street School and sang the parables of the Sower and the Lost Sheep, as set to music by Mr. Hugh Atkins, of Hinckley, while a number of the teachers gave several other pieces out of Mr. J. L. Haigh's Service of Song, "The Story of Joseph." These and the children's singing were greatly enjoyed. Mr. Atkins has set other of the parables to music, and these are to be published in a little book by the Sunday School Association. They will be welcome in congregations as well as schools, as musical renderings in true feeling of the familiar words. There were other items in the Sunday evening programme, and Miss Pritchard, besides thanking the children very warmly for their part, gave a brief address, in which she referred to the death of Mr. G. F. Watts. She recalled the address given in 1899 at the first summer session by Mr. Lucking Tavener on the work of the great artist seer, and then spoke of his having passed on to the communion of the Unseen. She told how she had recently had the privilege of a long and intimate talk with Mr. Watts, the opportunity having arisen out of his interest in her version of the Book of Job; she described his noble simplicity, and told of his profound interest in the Bible, the independence and breadth of his thought, and his special admiration for Mr. Montefiore's "Bible for Home Reading." He confessed to her his desire to paint one more picture, to embody the thought of his motto, "The Utmost for the Highest." That desire was not to be fulfilled, but more perfectly than any picture, she said, his life had been an expression of that thought.

THE MORNING LECTURES.

After the opening service on Friday, the first hour each morning was devoted to an academic lecture, preceded by a brief devotional service, while the second lecture, after an interval, was of a more practical kind, dealing with some aspect of Sunday-school work.

On Saturday, July 2, and Monday, the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter gave two lectures on the Book of Revelation, of which a full report will appear, probably next week. On Tuesday, Dr. Drummond lectured on "The Early MSS. of the New Testament," showing a volume of the famous Codex Sinaiticus, as published in reproduction by Tischendorf, from the College Library, and a number of most interesting facsimile specimens of ancient MSS. The Wednesday lecture was by the Rev. J. H. Weatherall, on "The Period of Ezra." Thursday and Friday Dr. J. Edwin Odgers lectured on "Sacraments in the Early Church."

Sunday-schools in America.

The first of the practical lectures was given on Friday, July 1, by Dr. W. H. Lyon, of Brookline, Mass. In their public schools, he said, there was no religious teaching, though they were opened with hymn and the Lord's Prayer; so if there was to be teaching of the Bible and church history, and the tenets of the sect, it must be in the Sunday-school. The first object was to train the religious spirit in the child; which was done by the opening exercises and the teacher's prayers and personal influence more than any special teaching. This was the more necessary because habits of family devotion had so largely been abandoned. The object of the Sunday-school was further, to strengthen moral character, and to teach the Bible, as the greatest book ever compiled, of the loftiest spirit and most far-reaching influence. He gave instances of an appalling ignorance of the Bible in people supposed to be educated, and showed how merely for an ordinary literary education such knowledge was essential. Referring to methods, he said that the younger children should first be familiarised with the stories of the Bible, told in the teacher's own words. They should be encouraged to pass moral judgment on what they heard, as, indeed, they were always ready to do; but questions of historical truth should not be dealt with until raised by the children themselves. Only with the elder classes the higher criticism came in. They should also teach in school the doctrines of the body to which they belonged; they, as Unitarians, should make the children understand especially their broad principles of toleration and sympathy, and the battle they had fought for freedom. The minister should seperintend the teaching done in the school. In teaching the teachers he would gain much insight into the minds of young people, from which his public teaching would greatly benefit.

Essentials of Good Teaching.

The second lecture, on Saturday, July 2, was given by Miss Marian Pritchard, on "Some of the Essentials." A first essential for good teaching, she said, was to get into sympathy with the children, and sympathy was only produced by love, quickened by imagination. They could not help the children unless they understood them; they must have imagination to put themselves in their place. A careful recalling of their own childhood would help; then they should mix with the children and watch them, when not under supervision; and they should read stories about children by good writers, with insight into character. She instanced Mrs. Molesworth's "Carrots, just a Little Boy," whose experience with the "yellow sixpenny" was so suggestive of the care with which they should judge children who seemed to have done wrong. Often their only fault was that they did not understand what their elders were talking about. Kenneth Graham's "Golden Days" she also mentioned as admirable. In school teaching there was nothing better than picturing the life of some good man or woman. Thus, for a class of elder girls, the life of Florence Nightingale might be full of inspiration if told with sympathy. They should always remember that the aim was to give not so much information as inspiration.

Imagination was needed not only to understand the lives of people, but to enter into truths, as it helped Newton, when he saw the apple fall, and in a flash understood the law of gravitation. So with spiritual truths, and she referred to Wasson's "Poet's Vision," with its lesson,

The basest man is better than his act.

A third essential for the teacher was sincerity in word and deed, and she instanced the wonderful sincerity of Francis of Assisi as the secret of his charm, which made his life speak, as it did, to them. They must remember that to their children they stood in the same relation as Francis to his followers; they must make their own lives as true as possible, so as not to lower the children's ideal of a true life.

A Superintendent's Experience.

Mr. J. WIGLEY, of Manchester, lectured on Monday, wearing his long-service medal, received four years ago, as a teacher of forty years' standing. The Sunday-school, he said, filled a place in their religious and social life which nothing else could adequately fill. It was an outcome of the very central truth of the life of Christ, the thought of service. He recalled memories of his early years in a Congregational School in Manchester, with its dominant religious purpose, leading up the children to join the church, and then told how, at the age of thirty, compelled by divergence of thought to separate from his old friends, he came to Brooke Herford at Strangeways, and at once was cordially welcomed, and threw himself into the work of that school. As well describing the aim of the Sunday-school, he quoted a sentence of the Rev. J. J. Wright's in the Helper, "The task of the Sunday-school to-day is to teach the art of life." It must be based on a recognition of God and His all-pervading presence, and His law throughout their life in all its conditions, social, moral, and physical. Robert Owen's words, on his grave at Newtown in Montgomery, also expressed a great thought for the Sunday-school teacher: "It is the one great universal interest of the human race to be cordially united, and to aid each other to the full extent of their capacities." Mr. Wigley then noted some qualities which should be found in a superintendent. He should have a quiet and thoughtful, yet cheerful disposition. A loud and commanding voice was rarely effective, and was out of harmony with the true spirit of the school. He should have a quiet dignity, and should exercise control by the strength of his personality. Punctuality was essential, and a real devotion in the prayer at the opening of school. He should be familiar with Sunday-school literature—in which connection Mr. Wigley warmly commended the Association's books—and should see that classes had the best books for their purpose. He should keep a vigilant eye on the whole school, and be ready to go to the help of any class where he saw there was difficulty. He would best help, not by direct reproof or interference, but by turning the thoughts of the class in a better dircetion, asking questions, and leading on to some object lesson. The laudable desire for promotion on the part of both scholars and teachers should not be overlooked. He himself as head of the school should be the impersonation of the spirit of love and sacrifice. In conclusion, Mr. Wigley referred to the great importance of the better training of teachers, towards which such a session as that in which they were met was of the utmost value.

Nature Study.

The second lectures on Tuesday and Wednesday were of a somewhat different kind. They were a practical demonstration by the Rev. Thomas Robinson, in his own delightful manner, of how the study of nature should be carried on, and of the earnest, reverent, and happy spirit that must pervade such study. On Tuesday, his subject was ants, and on Wednesday flowers and bees and their co-operation in fertilisation. Mr. Robinson's skill with the blackboard is well known, and on Wednesday, which was a glorious summer day, after a preliminary talk at the college, the whole company with their teacher adjourned to the Botanical Gardens, and there, passing from flower to flower, completed the lecture in the midst of those beautiful surroundings.

A Greeting to Fellow-Teachers in Holland.

Earlier in the morning Mr. Ion Pritchard reminded the assembled teachers that the Sunday School Union of the Dutch Protestantenbond, of which Professor Oort, of Leiden, is President, was at the same time holding its biennial meeting at The Hague, and he proposed that they should send to Dr. Oort a telegram of fraternal greetings and good wishes to their fellow-workers in Holland, of whom they were delighted to have in Miss Mossel a representative with them there. The whole company rose to signify their assent to the sending of this message, which was accordingly done.

Two more Lectures.

Of the second lecture on Thursday, by Miss Mossel, on "Systematic Religious Teaching in Holland," a full abstract will be found in another column. Of the Rev. J. L. Haigh's lecture on "Literature in the Sunday-school" we reserve our report for another occasion.

Conferences.

One great advantage of the Summer Session is that it affords opportunity for informal conferences of the teachers gathered from all parts of the country on special aspects of their work.

The first of these meetings of "Teachers in Council" was held on Saturday evening, July 21, Mr. J. Wigley in the chair, and was opened by Mr. Ion Pritchard, who made a plea for an annual meeting to review the routine and methods of the Sunday-school. In the same way as business houses take stock annually to enable the proprietors by reviewing the year's work to ascertain what progress or what failure has been made, so Sunday-school teachers should pass in review their methods and mode of working at meetings held for that purpose.

An agenda should be prepared from suggestions sent in by the teachers beforehand to the superintendent. The following classified list, copies of which were distributed among the students, would suggest the subjects of a selection from which such an agenda might consist :—

1. Superintendents' Methods.—The Routine : (a) Punctuality ; late children. (b) Opening service. (c) Singing. (d) Registration of scholars. Roll call by superintendent, by card. (e) Dismissal. (f) Rewards or prizes. (g) New scholars. Entered. Attracted.
2. Teachers' Methods.—(a) New departures. (b) Scholars not interested. (c) Helpers. Blackboard. Pictures. (d) Oxford session.
3. Schoolroom.—Arrangement of classes. Ventilation. Warmth. Decoration.
4. Minister and Congregation.—Support.
5. Literature.—Class-books on table : (a) Worn, shabby, torn books. (b) New books published by S.S.A. (c) The Bible. Revised. Small print. (d) Hymn-books. How provided. (e) Antiquated theological teaching.

The second conference on Monday evening was on temperance, introduced by Mr. A. H. Biggs; the third, on Wednesday evening, on Bible teaching.

Excursions and At-Homes.

The first day of the session concluded with a reception given at Manchester College by the Principal and Mrs. Drummond, when a very pleasant evening was spent, and during the week houses and gardens in Oxford and at Littlemore were hospitably opened to the teachers. Visits to colleges, cycling and boating parties, and excursions to Blenheim, and to Nuneham by river, were also greatly enjoyed in the week of, for the most part, beautiful weather. The members lunched together in college every day, except Sunday, and all the arrangements, as in other years, were most admirably made. To Mr. J. W. Cock, the local hon. secretary, as well as to the officers of the Sunday School Association, and the authorities of Manchester College, the thanks of the teachers are specially due.

SYSTEMATIC RELIGIOUS TEACHING IN HOLLAND.

Miss Jacoba F. D. Mossel, of Amsterdam, who is Docent, a recognised religious teacher, in connection with the Free Congregation of which the Rev. P. H. Hugenholtz is minister, gave the second lecture on Thursday at the Summer Session for Sunday-school teachers at Manchester College, Oxford.

Miss Mossel gave a most interesting account of the conditions of religious teaching in Holland. Referring at the outset to the ecclesiastical situation, she said that the proportion of Protestants to Catholics in Holland was as 15.5 to 9, and that the great majority of Protestants belonged to the Dutch Reformed Church, which was formerly the Established Church of the country. It alone of the Protestant Churches remained a confessional church, while the differences which separated the Mennonites, Lutherans, and Remonstrants were growing less and less. In all the Protestant Churches there were Orthodox and Modern or Liberal parties. The majority in the three smaller communities were Moderns, but in the Dutch Reformed Church the Orthodox party was dominant. The ultra-Orthodox had at various times seceded from the Reformed Church, and now formed a separate community, of some 700 congregations, and had the Prime Minister, Dr. Kuyper, as their chief leader. On the other hand, the Free Congregation of Amsterdam, led by the brothers Hugenholtz, seceded in 1877, and took up an independent position. The position of the Moderns in the Dutch Reformed Church, which was a Confessional Church, was difficult, but they, with the rest of the Moderns, were united in the Protestantenbond, a union which numbered 19,000 members in all parts of the country, and was actively concerned in the religious education of Liberal Protestants. The situation was accentuated by the alienation of a large number of people in every rank from all church connection and a widespread indifference to religion, but the gloom of what might appear a hopeless situation she regarded as the precursor of a fuller light, which was already dawning.

Turning to the special subject of religious education, Miss Mossel pointed out that as there was now no Established Church in Holland, the State did not take any direct part in the teaching of religion. In the public schools the teaching of religious doctrine was forbidden, but it was directed that the children should be educated in "every Christian and social virtue." The schools were open to Jews and Roman Catholics as well as Protestants, and as to religious teaching were neutral; but though at one time there had been even a certain amount of hostility to religion, a wiser and better generation of teachers had now grown up in the schools, convinced that a school without religious teaching was not the same as an irreligious school. Besides the public schools there were two other classes of school supported by voluntary effort, Sectarian Protestant and Roman Catholic schools. Their teachers had to pass the same examinations as the teachers in the public schools, and all alike were submitted to the same inspection.

Religious instruction was left in the hands of the churches, which had Sunday-schools for children from 6 to 13, and gratuitous courses for young people from 13 to 18. The instruction in these latter, in week-day classes, was given by ministers and other recognised teachers of religion, who had passed a prescribed examination, and received certificates as "Docenten." For instance, in the Free Congregation at Amsterdam, there was a regular five years' course for the young people in their school for religion, the instruction being given by three "Docenten," the Rev. P. H. Hugenholtz, minister of the congregation, being the senior, the Rev. Willem Jesse the second, and she herself the third. The suggestion of their Sunday-schools came from England, and the name of Robert Raikes was honoured also in Holland. Their first Protestant schools were established in 1805. In 1868 the Moderns began to organise schools of their own, and now both Orthodox and Moderns taught an enormous number of children in the schools, and might have still more if there were more teachers available. Seven-eighths of the work in the Sunday-schools was in the hands of well-educated women, who were not required to pass through any special training, and worked gratuitously, while the ministers and specially trained religious teachers (the Docenten) exercised a friendly supervision over the work of the schools. The Protestantenbond had established several schools, and every other year held a meeting in the first week in July for Sunday-school workers. Professor Oort, of Leiden, who was president of the International Council at Amsterdam, was chairman of the Central Committee.

In the "Modern" Sunday-schools the course of instruction covered a wider field than in the Orthodox. The Bible was taught, and especially the New Testament, familiarising the children with its stories. The dominant aim in the schools was to prepare the ground for reverence and devotion, and to make the influence of religion felt. No creed was taught, but religious teachers set noble examples before the children's eyes, sought to keep their imaginations pure, and not merely to repeat words of prayer to them, but to pray with them. Matter for instruction was gathered from the past and the present, from history and from nature. A monthly magazine, Vrij en Vroom (of which Miss Mossel is the editor), supplied helpful articles and matter for lessons. They had also a children's hymn-book, a central library and children's library, and a holiday home.

The children's literature of recent years had been enriched by a number of admirable stories. They had also their well-known, "Aunt Li" in Holland, like "Aunt Amy" in England. In Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and the Hague the children in the "Modern" Sunday-schools came chiefly from the lower and middle classes ; in the smaller towns and villages children from all classes sat together in the schools. In several towns the Protestantenbond also held special children's services for those who did not attend the schools.

In the further five years' course for the young people weekly lessons were given in the Bible, the history of the religion of Israel, and of non-Christian religions, the history of Christianity, with instruction in doctrine, faith, and ethics. At the end of the five years' course the young people were examined by their teachers in the presence of the elders of the congregation, and on Palm Sunday were, as a rule, introduced with a solemn service into the congregation in which they were baptized or registered in the children's book. Then on Good Friday they received the holy communion for the first time.

Women as well as men might go through the two years' course of study to become a recognised teacher of religion, and then receive the certificate as "Docent" from the Protentantenbond on passing the examination of its Committee for Instruction in Religion and Divine Worship. She herself was the first woman in Holland to attain that rank, which gave the full right to teach religion and lead the worship in the Free Congregation in Amsterdam, the Mennonite congregations, and those of the Protestantenbond. For twenty years she had been preaching or giving a religious address on every third Sunday, and for all that time she had about 250 pupils, divided into twenty classes, boys and girls between thirteen and eighteen, of every rank, to whom she gave an hour's religious instruction every week. There were at present three young women studying for a degree in theology at Dutch universities, but it would probably be another fifty years before they would be allowed as ministers to be at the head of a congregation.

Referring, again, in conclusion, to the discouraging outlook for religion, Miss Mossel attributed it to conditions which were passing away, and thought there was good reason to hope that a third Reformation was at hand. The Reformation of Luther, Zwingli, and Calvin had liberated from the Roman Pope; that of Lessing and Schleiermacher from a "paper" Pope, though it conceded too much to rationalism. The third would give back devotion and reverence, the true foundation of religion. There was now a genuine hunger and thirst for religion. Literature and art were overflowing with noble religious feeling, and humanism went hand in hand with the desire for living religion. Knowledge and criticism were necessary, but they did their part best in the light of the essential spirit of Christianity. "Back to Jesus, and onwards to God;" so the paper concluded: "Only he who lives a true religious life can move the hearts, not to church or congregation, but to the Kingdom of God. And to do this is the end-purpose of the systematic teaching of religion and the ideal of every devoted teacher of religion at the present time in Holland."

IN such an age earnestness should characterise the ministry; and by this I mean not a louder voice or a more vehement gesture; I mean no tricks of oratory: but a solemn conviction that religion is a great concern, and a solemn purpose that its claims shall be felt by others. To suit such an age a minister must communicate religion—not only as a result of reasoning but as a matter of experience—with that inexpressible character of reality, that life and power which accompany truths drawn from a man's own soul. Channing.

LAMPETER.

OPENING SERVICES AT BRONDEIFI.

Last week was a memorable one to Lampeter Unitarians and to lovers of religious liberty and free thought in the Principality. On Tuesday and Wednesday, June 28 and 29, services were held to open the new Brondeifi Chapel, which stands on the hill near Brongest Farm, and overlooks the beautiful valley of the Tivy. The congregation at Brondeifi is the direct outcome of the efforts of some members of the older church, Caeronnen, Cellan, who, living at Lampeter and in the vicinity, and feeling it somewhat far to go up to the old church at Cellan more than once a Sunday, instituted a Sunday-school at Ty'nrheol, near Ram, and subsequently occasionally in their humble way held divine service in the same place. Those were the days of small things. Since then the congregation has developed to be a more or less important one amongst the Unitarian congregations of Cardiganshire, and the members rejoiced last week on the completion of the new chapel (for they had had to abandon their old meeting-place in little more than twenty years after its erection), and on the prospects of again having a religious home for divine worship. It was indeed an inspiring spectacle to see five or six young ministers, who had been nurtured in the old church, returning once more from their various spheres of labour to join other members of the flock in praise on such a happy occasion.

To celebrate the occasion, the 102nd annual meetings of the South Wales Unitarian Association were held in the new chapel, and delegates were present to represent the B. & F. U. A. and the South-East Wales Unitarian Association. The series of services began with a temperance address by the Rev. J. Hathren Davies. At this meeting a resolution was unanimously passed protesting against the Government Licensing Bill, the Revs. J. H. Davies, Evan Jenkins, and James Harwood taking part in the discussion. At the close of this meeting the finance committee met, and later in the evening divine service was held, the Rev. D. Rhoslwyn Davies taking the introductory portion of the service, and the Revs. D. Evans and T. J. Jenkins following with two powerful sermons.

On Wednesday morning a meeting of the Association was held, when, after the Rev. D. J. Williams had led the congregation in prayer, the Rev. D. Evans, President, delivered his address on "The Tendencies and Needs of the Age," before vacating the chair for the President-elect, the Rev. E. Ceredig Jones, of Bradford. A vote of thanks was unanimously accorded to the retiring president. He then acknowledged the thanks, and extended a hearty welcome and the right hand of fellowship to the delegates of the B. & F. U. A. and S. E. W. U. A. Mr. Grosvenor Lee, of Birmingham, was the first to acknowledge. He expressed his pleasure on being able to attend the meetings as a representative of the B. & F. U. A. He added that the unfortunate circumstances connected with the failure of the original building constituted a claim on English Unitarians for some assistance to the congregation towards the cost of re-building. The term co-religionist must mean a great deal more to Unitarians on account of their being fewer in number than to almost any other religious body. The Rev. James Harwood then spoke, and expressed his pleasure in seeing the beautiful surroundings of Lampeter, the earnest spirit which characterised the meetings, and the hearing of such excellent singing. Without understanding anything of the Welsh language, he felt himself impressed and inspired by the tone of the proceedings. He offered his congratulations and best wishes to the Rev. R. C. Jones and his people on the completion of their new church. He assured the meeting of the warm interest the B. & F. U. A. took in the work of the Cardiganshire churches, and of their readiness and desire to promote and extend the limits of free thought as opportunity afforded itself. The Rev. W. J. Phillips then briefly responded on his own behalf and that of the S. E. W. U. A.

In the afternoon divine service was preceded by a Sunday-school convention. The Rev. D. Rees conducted the introductory portion of the meeting, and then a paper was read by the Rev. D. Evans, president of the Sunday-school section, and other addresses followed. Two sermons were then delivered, one in Welsh by the Rev. W. James, the appointed preacher, taking the "Loneliness of Christ" as subject, and the other in English by the Rev. James Harwood from Hebrews iv. 15. The last meeting of the series was held in the evening, and the Rev. Lewis Williams conducted the devotional portion of the service, and two sermons were delivered, one by the Rev. E. Ceredig Jones, and the other by the Rev. J. Hathren Davies.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Wednesday, or Thursday Morning at latest.]

Alltyplaca (Presentation).—It is a very unusual event for a minister to celebrate the completion of forty years' service with one congregation, though this has happened three times recently in the history of our Welsh churches. The Rev. Thomas Thomas, J.P., Green Park, who is still hale and hearty, walks regularly a distance of three miles to the Bethel he ministered to for forty-seven years. Early this year the Rev. R. J. Jones, of Aberdare, celebrated the completion of forty years; and now we have the pleasure to chronicle a similar event in the person of the ever faithful Rev. John Davies, of Alltyplaca. On Thursday, June 30, the congregation celebrated the occasion by presenting their minister with a beautiful illuminated address and a purse of gold. The presentations were made on behalf of the congregation by Mr. Daniel Jones, Drefach, and Mrs. Jones, Rhandir. The address was couched in affectionate terms of gratitude for the noble service rendered and the good work accomplished by Mr. Davies as minister of religion and public man. The afternoon meeting was presided over by the Rev. T. Thomas, J.P., Green Park, Mr. Davies' old schoolmaster. The address was read by the Rev. W. James, J.P., and eulogistic addresses were delivered by the Revs. James Harwood, who was on a visit to the district, R. C. Jones, Dr. J. Gwenogfryn Evans, who had specially travelled from Oxford to pay his old friend and minister his tribute of respect, T. Arthur Thomas, David Rees, and others. In the evening preaching services were held, when the Rev. Lewis Williams led the devotional part, and two of Mr. Davies' old pupils, the Revs. T. Arthur Thomas and David Rees, preached to large congregations.

Ainsworth.—The annual Sunday-school sermons were preached in the Presbyterian Chapel, on Sunday last, by the Rev. W. J. Jupp, of Croydon. The congregations were very large, and special music was rendered at both services. The Rev. M. R. Scott assisted in the service by reading some of the lessons. The collections amounted to £40 1s., which was an increase on previous years.

Belfast: Mountpottinger.—A Flower Service of Praise and Prayer (taken from The Helper) was held on Suuday, June 26, conducted by the Rev. W. H. Drummond, who, at the close, gave an impressive address. Choir and children both took part, and the service was much appreciated. On Friday next, July 15, a service will be held for the induction of Mr. Joseph Worthington, of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, as minister of the church. Principal Gordon and others are to take part.

Cardiff.—Successful school anniversary services were held on Sunday, July 3, the sermons being preached by the Rev. W. Whitaker. The church was prettily decorated with flowers, and special hymns were sung by the children, under the able leadership of Mr. W. A. Moore. One of the tunes was composed by the organist, Mr. Rendell, L.R.A.M.

Ditchling.—On Sunday last the anniversary services were held, and in spite of the unpropituous weather, friends gathered from various parts of Sussex to join with the little band of the faithful who worship Sunday after Sunday in this "haven of rest," nestling so peacably under the South Downs. The Rev. E. M. Daplyn was the preacher, and in the afternoon the choir of Westgate Chapel, Lewes, very ably rendered a programme of solos and choruses. At the evening service considerably over 100 were present. Luncheon and tea were provided at the neighbouring hostelry, and as the evening was beautifully fine the visiting friends were able to reach their respective homes in comfort.

Hyde: Flowery Field (Presentation).—The Rev. W. L. Tucker preached his farewell sermons on Sunday, June 19, thus concluding a ministry of eight years at Flowery Field, having accepted an invitation to Stamford-street Chapel and the Blackfriars Mission. On Saturday evening, June 25, a farewell meeting was held in the school, when an illuminated address, together with a purse of gold, was presented to Mr. Tucker. Mr. Aaron Cresswell presided, in the regretted absence through illness of Mr. Mark Warrington. The presentation was made by Mr. Mark Barnes, who spoke very warmly of the work Mr. Tucker had done in church and school, and read the address, which also bore testimony to the high esteem in which he and Mrs. Tucker were held. Mr. Wyatt, who had worked in the school for thirty-two years, offered the tribute and good wishes of the Sunday-school, and Mr. T. Brownson, town clerk of Hyde, a leading temperance worker, and member of a Congregational church, also spoke with special gratitude for the public work Mrs. Tucker had done in the town. Mrs. Enfield Dowson expressed Mr. Dowson's regret at being unable to be there, and said that they both regretted Mr. and Mrs. Tucker's departure very much. She wished that more ladies would take up such work as Mrs. Tucker had done. Mr. Tucker warmly acknowledged the gift and the kindness of the things said of his work, and made an earnest appeal, especially to the young people, to be loyal to church and school. Mrs. Tucker also spoke in acknowledgment, and thanked Mr. Brownson and Mrs. Dowson especially for their kind words.

Leeds: Holbeck.—The Sunday-school-anniversary services, held on June 26, were well attended, and proved more than usually interesting. The efforts of the preacher, the Rev. F. H. Vaughan, met with much appreciation. The service of song, "Consider the Lilies," compiled by the Rev. W. R. Shanks, drew a large congregation in the afternoon, and the story was effectively rendered by Miss Blanche Kitchen. A selected number of girl scholars sang special hymns, and the choir rendered appropriate anthems. The collections were an improvement on last year.

London: Islington.—On Wednesday, June 29, a very pleasant meeting was held in the schoolroom at Unity Church, to welcome the Rev. E. Saville Hicks and Mrs. Hicks home after their marriage, and to present a wedding gift from the congregation, consisting of a case of cutlery and plate. The presentation was made by Mr. Alfred Wilson, with warm expressions of goodwill and good wishes, and confidence in the future of their work together. Mr. Hicks, in acknowledging the gift on his own and his wife's behalf, spoke with great happiness of the good feeling which prevailed throughout the congregation, and hoped that the coming years would witness a revival of interest in the doings of Unity Church, and the wider diffusion of the ideals for which it stood. It would be his earnest endeavour to secure that end.

London: Kentish Town.—On Sunday evening last the 49th anniversary service was held at the Free Christian Church. There was special music by the choir, and an eloquent sermon on "Scepticism" was preached by the Rev. Henry Gow. Anniversary services will be continued to-morrow (Sunday), when the preacher will be the Rev. George Critchley, the minister of the church.

London: Stamford Street.—The Rev. W. L. Tucker has entered on his ministry, preaching last Sunday, and on Monday making acquaintance with the work of the Provident Society.

Manchester: Bradford (Stonelaying).—It is only ten years ago that the Manchester District Association opened up new ground in Bradford, a densely populated and somewhat poor neighbourhood, where real, uplifting, practical Christian work was sorely needed. The Rev. Dendy Agate was at that time missionary of the Association, and he, together with his assistant missionary, the Rev. W. H. Burgess, laid the solid foundations upon which during more recent years the present missionary, the Rev. W. E. Attack, has so largely aud successfully built. For about six years the work was carried on in a public hall, under many difficulties and inconveniences. The Sunday-school, staffed at first mainly by teachers from the Brookfield School, Gorton, grew rapidly, and became very popular in the district, so that there was great rejoicing when, in 1900, the commodious building in Mill-street was opened. Very soon all sorts of activities were introduced, all calculated to influence the people of the neighbourhood morally and religiously. The number of scholars continued to increase, and for some time past the Association has had to recognise the urgent necessity for extending the premises. During his term of office as President, Mr. Percy H. Leigh, together with an anonymous donor, started very handsomely a building fund, and the extension, which, with furniture &c., is to cost about £1,200, is making rapid progress. Towards the cost £200 is still required. On Wednesday, June 29, a memorial stone was laid by this year's President of the Association, the Rev. Dendy Agate. The day proved fine, and a fair number of the members of the district churches were present. Tea was provided at six o'clock, and at seven o'clock the ceremony took place. The Rev. W. E. Atack conducted a short devotional service, assisted by the Rev. H. J. Rossington. Mr. Percy H. Leigh, on behalf of the builders, Messrs. Macfarlane, presented a silver trowel to Mr. Agate, who, in declaring the stone well and truly laid, spoke of the progress of events at Bradford, and said it gave him great satisfaction that the extension should be made during his year of presidency. It had been made largely possible by the generosity and enthusiasm of his predecessor in office, Mr. Percy H. Leigh. He was sure that there were many living in Bradford who could sincerely testify to the value of the work already done, and he believed that under the energetic and devoted supervision of the present missionary the value and extension of the work would be assured. The Rev. T. P. Spedding, President of the Manchester District Sunday-school Association, added his congratulations, and said that he regarded the success of Sunday-school work as even more desirable than the success of the church. A meeting was afterwards held in the school, presided over by the Rev. Charles Roper. Mr. A. Leat, a teacher in the Sunday-school, spoke a few earnest words of welcome. The other speakers were the Revs. R. Travers Herford, W. H. Burgess, J. Arthur Pearson, and Dendy Agate. Mr. Fred Whittaker's orchestral band led the singing, and played selections during the evening, and the choir rendered several glees.

Nelson.—On Monday evening, July 4, a meeting of Unitarians resident in Nelson and the district was held in Thomas's Restaurant, Leeds-road, with a view to the establishment in Nelson of a Unitarian congregation. The meeting was convened by a committee appointed by the North and East Lancashire Unitarian Mission. The gathering was not large, but it was enthusiastic and encouraging. The chair was occupied by the Rev. Robert McGee, of Colne, and he was supported by the Revs. E. Allen, W. H. Burgess, and J. E. Jenkins and Messrs. Blezard (Padiham), Mackie and Jackson (Burnley), and French (Colne). Addresses bearing on the object of the meeting were given by the ministers above named, and by Messrs. S. Holden and P. J. Hargreaves, of Burnley, and Mr. J. T. Mosedale, of Nelson. It was unanimously resolved that Unitarian services should be commenced in the town early in the coming autumn.

Newtownards.—The seventh annual Floral Service was held on Sunday afternoon, June 26. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers, and special hymns were sung by an augmented choir, which had been trained by the minister, the Rev. R. M. King, who also presided at the harmonium. A beautiful and helpful address from Canticles ii. 12, was given by the Rev. G. J. Slipper, of the Belfast Domestic Mission. The day being exceptionally fine the congregation was not so large as on previous occasions, but the offertory was better. The local press very favourably reported the service.

North Cheshire Unitarian Sunday School Union.—The annual picnic was held at Mottram on Saturday, July 2. About 250 teachers and friends sat down to tea, and, after a brief committee meeting in connection with the E.C.C.U. Bazaar Stall, a ramble was taken through the woods and over the hills round Hollingworth Hall. Rev. H. Bodell Smith and Mr. I. Swindells acted as conductors. A halt was made in Swallows Wood, and several hymns were sung, Mr. Woolley conducting; after which Mr. A. Slater took the improvised chair, and a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the Mottram friends for their arrangements for tea and ramble. The Rev. H. B. Smith responded, after which a resolution was passed expressing regret at the absence through illness of the Rev. H. E. Dowson. The whole of the speeches were very appropriate, and the gathering was a very pleasant and successful one.

Norwich.—The Annual Service of Dedication was held last Sunday evening at the Octagon Chapel, when nine young people were formally welcomed into Church Fellowship by the minister, the Rev. Alfred Hall. The sermon was based on Eph. vi. 13. An appropriate lesson was read, and dedicatory hymns were sung. The young people had previously attended four preparatory classes held by the minister, and were welcomed with the words "Since you have resolved to live noble lives, and to follow to the best of your ability in the footsteps of our Master, Jesus, I welcome you into the fellowship of this Church, which is devoted to the worship af the Almighty God and the service of man." Each of the young people then shook hands with the minister before the congregation. This service has always been the most inspiring and impressive one of the year. The young people are urged to make the month previous to their induction a time of private preparation, and are asked not to take part in the service unless they have determined to live Christian lives. During the last four years 48 have been thus welcomed, and form the nucleus of what promises to be a great strength to the congregation in the future. In those years the subscribing membership has increased from 136 to 190, although the losses sustained by the deaths of the older members have been sad and numerous. The members of the Young People's Guild of Service decided twelve months ago to subscribe a penny each weekly towards the fund being raised for building the Martineau Hall and Sunday-schools, and by this means they have been able to hand to the secretary of the fund the sum of £25 14s. 6½d.

South Cheshire and District Association.—The annual meeting was held on Wednesday, June 29, at Whitchurch. In the afternoon divine worship was conducted by the Rev. Joseph Wood, of Birmingham, who preached an eloquent and inspiring sermon on "What Don Quixote has done for the World." After tea the business meeting was held under the presidency of the Rev. J. C. Street. The secretary read the report, which referred with satisfaction to the re-opening of the chapel at Crewe and to the general condition of the schools and congregations in the district. The financial statement read by the treasurer showed a small balance in hand. The officers for the ensuing year were elected, with Miss Montgomery, of Chester, as president, and the Rev. H. E. Hayoock, secretary,

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

SUNDAY, July 10.

Acton, Central Auction Room, Market-place, High-street, 7, Rev. R. H. GREAVES.
Bermondsey, Fort-road, 7, Rev. EUSTACE THOMPSON.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 and 7, Rev. W. L. TUCKER, M.A.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 and 7, Rev F. W. STANLEY.
Child's Hill, All Souls' Free Church, corner of Weech-road, Finchley-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., 11 and 7, Rev. W. J. JUPP.
Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 and 7, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. W. PERRIS.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11.15 and 6.45, Rev. W. C. HALL, M.A., of Ashton-under-Lyne.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11, Rev. Dr. MUMMERY, and 7, Rev. B. KIRKMAN GRAY.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 and 7, Rev. J. MASON BASS, M.A.
Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11.15 and 7, Rev. G. CRITCHLEY, B.A.
Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 and 7, Rev. JOHN PAGE HOPPS.
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 and 7, Rev. W. W. C. POPE.
Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 and 7, Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7, Rev. JOHN ELLIS.
Peckham, Avondale-road, 11, 3, and 6.30, Mr. C. A. GINEVER, B.A. Sunday School Anniversary and Flower Services.
Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 and 7, Rev. SILAS FARRINGTON.
Stepney Green, College Chapel, 11 and 7.
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 and 7, Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
Stratford, Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. C. PAIN, and 6.30, Mr. A. E. ELDERKIN.
Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, Eastfhill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Wood Green, Unity Church, 11, Rev. R. H. GREAVES, and 7, Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. McDOWELL.
BLACKPOOL, Dickson-road, North Shore, 10.45 and 6.30, PULPIT VACANT.
BLACKPOOL, South Shore Unitarian Church, The Hall, Lytham-road, 11 and 6.30.
BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 and 7, Rev. C. C. COE.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church, New-road, North-street, 11 and 7, Rev. T. R. SKEMP.
BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 and 7, Rev. GEORGE STREET.
CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11, Rev. J. E. STRONGE.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.
GUILDFORD, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. RATTENBURY HODGES.
HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. J. MARTEN.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. G. DAWES HICKS.
LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CHARLES CRADDOCK.
LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11, Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., and 6.30, Rev. H. D. ROBERTS.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton-park, 11 and 6 30, Rev. J. COLLINS ODGERS, B.A.; Evening subject: "The Lord's Prayer."
MAIDSTONE, Earl-street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS.
MANCHESTER, PLATT CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. T. POYNTING. 11, Service for Young People. 12, Service of Lord's Supper.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. E. PIKE.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. J. E. CARPENTER, M.A.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Mr. C. F. DEAR.
PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas-street, 6.45, Mr THOMAS BOND.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 7, Rev. OTTWELL BINNS.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 and 6.45, Rev. F. TEASDALE REED.
SHEFFIELD, Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. AGAR.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. FREDERICK B. MOTT.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TROWBRIDGE, Conigre Church, 11 and 6, Rev. J. WAIN.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 and 6.30.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12, noon, Rev. G. H. VANCE, B.D.

WALES.

ABERYSTWITH, New Market Hall, 11.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45, Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN SQ., W.—July 10, at 11.15, DR. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "Reincarnation."

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY SOUTH PLACE, FINSBURY.—July 10, at 11.15, JOHN A. HOBSON, M.A., "The Moral Struggle."

Situations, VACANT AND WANTED.

HOLIDAY ENGAGEMENT, August, desired by well-educated Lady, as Companion to invalid or otherwise. Very strong and capable. Good reader. Musical. Unitarian. Travelling and laundry expenses.—Address, A. H., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand.

GOVERNESS for the Country.—One pupil. Good music essential. A Lady bright and companionable.—Address, B., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand.

RE-ENGAGEMENT, by Widow as WORKING HOUSEKEEPER to gentlemen in flats or chambers. Good plain cook. Excellent reference. Disengaged August 7th.—M. RANWELL, 92, Brecknock-road, Camden-road, N.

MANSFORD STREET CHURCH AND MISSION.

The Committee have decided to appoint a LADY ASSISTANT MISSIONARY who would be required to devote a portion of her time to the work of the institution. Applications should be sent to Mr. S. W. PRESTON, 7, Eldon-road, Hampstead.

S. W. PRESTON, J. C. DRUMMOND, } Hon. Secs.

OLD FALSE TEETH.—We give highest possible price for above. Offers made, and, if not accepted, teeth returned. Dealers in old gold or silver in any form. Banker's references.—WOOLFALL & Co., Birkdale, Southport.

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress: Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A. Honours Lond. Preparation for London Matriculation, Trinity College, and Associated Board of Musicians, Healthy situation, Hockey, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. Apply to the Head Mistress.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE FOR GIRLS, 198 & 227, BRISTOL ROAD.

Principal ... MARY E. BAILY.
Head Mistress ... ELEANOR MOSS, B.A. Hons.

Preparation for Matriculation, Senior, Junior Cambridge, Board of Education and Associated Board Examinations.
Trained Swedish Gymnastic and Games Mistress. Vacancy for Resident Pupil to help with music practice.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, 14 & 15, SOUTH MARINE TERRACE, ABERYSTWYTH.

PRINCIPAL ... MISS MARLES-THOMAS.

This School is splendidly situated in one of the healthiest parts of Wales, overlooking Cardigan Bay, and close to excellent golf links. Pupils have passed the London and Welsh Matriculation; Cambridge Higher Local; Senior and Junior Cambridge Locals, besides the usual Theoretical and Practical Music Examinations. Scholarships have also been obtained at the Welsh University Colleges.
Gymnasium, Swimming, and excellent Hockey Club.

WAVERLEY SCHOOL, 24, HAMILTON ROAD, SHERWOOD RISE, NOTTINGHAM.

PREPARATORY TO THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.
HEAD MASTER, Mr. H. T. FACON, B.A.(Lond.).
Next Term begins Wednesday, September 14th.
Prospectus on application. BOARDERS received. Reference kindly permitted to the Rev. Frank K. Freeston, Essex House, Campden-hill, W.

FRUITARIAN CAKES.
MADE ENTIRELY OF FRUIT AND NUTS.
Uncooked, Concentrated, Natural Food.
READY FOR USE WITHOUT PREPARATION.
For travelling they are ideal. A meal will go in pocket.

PEAR and WALNUT	7d.	per 8 oz. packet.
APRICOT and NUT	7d.	" "
MUSCATEL and ALMOND ...	6d.	" "
FRUIT and NUTS	8d.	" "
DATE and GINGER	4d.	" "
DATE and LEMON	4d.	" "
DATE and ORANGE	4d.	" "
FIG and CITRON	4d.	" "
DATE and NUT	3d.	" "
FIG and NUT	3d.	" "

Sample Box containing 14 varieties Fruitarian Cakes, 8d.; or with 3 varieties of Nut Butters, post free, 1s.

HUGH MAPLETON, Nut Food Manufacturer,
ARDWICK GREEN MANCHESTER.

FREDK. LONG & SON,
AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS.
Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

BIRTH.

PEDDER.—On July 6th, at 20A, Cheyne-walk, Chelsea, S.W., the wife of John Pedder, Esq., of a son.

MARRIAGE.

BURROWS—WALLIS.—On the 5th July, at Adrian-street Church, Dover, by the Rev. T. B. Evans, M.A., assisted by the Rev. J. H. Smith, Samuel, the only son of the late S. Burrows, of Clapton, to Emily, the eldest daughter of the late J. Wallis of Deal.

DEATHS.

GREGG.—On July 3rd, at Dulwich, Mary Elizabeth, the beloved wife of Robert John Gregg, aged 46.

GRUNEISEN.—On the 6th July, at 52, Spaisholt-road, Crouch-hill, John Gruneisen, aged 59. Service at Highgate-hill Unitarian Church, 2.30 Saturday, July 9th.

NOW READY. JULY NUMBER.

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL

A Quarterly Review of Religion, Theology, and Philosophy.

2s. 6d. per number, net; Subscriptions, which may commence with any number, 10s. per annum, post free.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

Sir Oliver Lodge on "The Re-Interpretation of Christian Doctrine." The Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP OF ROCHESTER.
Hegel's Theory of Tragedy. A. C. BRADLEY, Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford.
Herder. T. BAILEY SAUNDERS.
The Two Idealisms. W. R. SORLEY, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Cambridge.
Present Aspects of the Problem of Immortality. S. H. MELLONE, M.A., D.Sc., Examiner in Mental and Moral Science in the University of London.
L'Hypocrisie Biblique Britannique. The Rev. W. F. COBB, D.D., Rector of St. Ethelburga's, London.
Value of the Historical Method in Philosophy. Professor WILLIAM KNIGHT, LL.D.
The Problem of Evil. ST. GEORGE STOCK.
Art and Ideals. CHARLES MONTAGUE BAKEWELL, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Philosophy, University of California.
And a Number of Discussions and Signed Reviews, and also a Bibliography of Recent Books and Articles.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, London, W.C.

Just published, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

THE FIRST CONDITIONS OF HUMAN PROSPERITY.

By the Hon. R. RUSSELL.

 This is an examination of the chief elements of national stability and of the conditions favourable to happiness in the human race, with special regard to urban overcrowding and questions of diet.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.,
39, Paternoster-row, London, E.C

DEVOTIONAL BOOKLETS

By the REV. W. G. TARRANT B.A.

DAILY MEDITATIONS

(Fourth Edition Revised.)

NIGHT UNTO NIGHT.

Cloth, red edges, 6d.; roan gilt, 1s.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C.

SOUTHERN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING at Bournemouth, Wednesday, July 20th, 1904.

Service in West Hill Church at 12 noon. Preacher, Rev. H. GOW, B.A. (of Hampstead).

Luncheon and Tea in Lecture Hall.

Public Meeting in the evening. Speakers: Rev. H. GOW, B.A., W. COPELAND BOWIE (Deputation from British and Foreign Unitarian Association), J. EWART, M.A., and Ministers of the District.

E. J. WILKINS, Acting Hon. Sec.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY, ADELAIDE PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Assets, £158,000.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., J.P. 17, Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W
Miss CECIL GRADWELL, 7, Victoria-street, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st. S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham, S.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4 per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3 and 3½ per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

BORROWER'S INTEREST 4 per cent. Monthly Repayment, including Principal, Premium, and Interest for each £100.

10 years.	12 years.	15 years.	18 years.	21 years
1 1 1	0 18 4	0 15 6	0 14 2	0 12 11

Compare the above rates with those of other Societies. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

Board and Residence.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH. — ARNEWOOD. Pension. Commanding position in the West Cliff-road; full South aspect; sea views and private grounds; close to Winter Gardens, Cliff Promenade, Square or Pier; moderate Tariff.—Apply, MANAGERESS.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—"Cranbrook," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE; most comfortable throughout. Sea View, excellent cuisine. billiard and smoke room, sanitary certificate —Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

LANGLEY HOUSE, DAWLISH, DEVON.—A delightful HOLIDAY RESORT for Ladies and School-girls (Boys under 15). Beautiful country, bracing climate. Sea and Moorland. Prospectus from Miss N. JONES, Matron; or A. E. JONES, Esq., Proprietor.

SOUTHPORT.—MISS BLAKEY, 12, Duke-street (established 16 years), is prepared to receive PATIENTS or VISITORS in need of rest, change, or treatment. The Red Cross system of Light Cure and fully qualified Massage carefully given, under medical advice. Situation central and pleasant.

GRANDPARENTS warmly recommend a charming COUNTRY HOME for YOUNG CHILDREN.—Most careful character-training and highest educational advantages. Two vacancies shortly. Four elder children can be received for the coming vacation. Picnics and holiday pleasures.—F. G. H., care of STREET'S, 164, Piccadilly, W.

LAKE DISTRICT.—FURNISHED HOUSE at Hawkshead to be Let for season. Ten minutes from shops and Lake. Seven miles from station. Two sitting, four bedrooms, garden, fruit. From 50/- weekly. —Miss NEWLING, Hawkshead, Lancashire.

FURNISHED FLAT, airy and light, to be Let in HAMPSTEAD, quite near the Heath, between end of July and beginning of September. Two large sitting and three or four bedrooms. Terms moderate.—For full particulars, apply Mrs. J. H. WICKSTEED, Pear Tree Cottage, Chapel, Lincolnshire.

FURNISHED COUNTRY COTTAGE to Let—Three bedrooms, two sitting-rooms, garden. 24 miles north of London. Situation high. Golf.—Apply E. L., 18, Harborne-road, Birmingham.

FURNISHED HOUSE.—In Lake District.—No reasonable offer refused.—Address, B., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand.

YORKSHIRE MOORS.—Furnished House to Let for August and part Sept. Two large sitting-rooms, two pianos, seven bedrooms, bath, ground floor kitchens. Plate and linen left. Five guineas weekly. Close to station and Moors.—Apply "C.," Southfield, Burley-in-Wharfdale.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Enlarged, Remodelled, Refurnished.

PRONOUNCED BY THE PRESS TO BE THE BEST TEMPERANCE HOTEL IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Accommodation for about 250 Guests.

Highly commended by the Rev. Dr. Aked, Rev. Rowland Hill, Rev. J. H Jowett, M.A., Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. Alderman White, M.P., the Misses Cadbury and thousands of other guests.

Spacious Coffee, Reading & Drawing Rooms. Electric Light throughout.

Apartments, Service and Table d'Hote Breakfast from 5/- to 6/6 per day (with Dinner from 8/- to 9/6

77 & 101,
Southampton Row, London.
FREDERIC SMITH & SONS.

Opposite the British Museum.

THACKERAY HOTEL,
GREAT RUSSELL STREET,
LONDON.

This large and well-appointed Temperance Hotel has Passenger Lift; Bathrooms on every Floor; Electric Light throughout; Spacious Dining, Drawing, Writing, Reading, and Smoking Rooms; Fireproof Floors; Perfect Sanitation; Telephone; Night Porter.

Bedrooms from 2s. 6d. to 5s. 6d.

Inclusive charge for Bedroom, Attendance, Table d'Hôte Breakfast and Dinner, from 8s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. per day. Full Tariff and Testimonials on application.

Telegraphic Address: "THACKERAY, LONDON."

EATON'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL,
22, Guilford Street, Russell Square,
LONDON.

Facing the Gardens of the Foundling Institution.

Central. Homelike. Beds from 1s. 6d. Breakfast and Tea from 1s. Patronized repeatedly by many visitors during the 30 years of its existence.

SWITZERLAND and the ITALIAN LAKES.—FEW VACANCIES in a SELECT PARTY leaving August 3. Seventeen days for 13 guineas, inclusive.—Particulars from Rev. Hugh C. Wallace, 10, Devonshire-road, Bristol.

Terms for Advertisements.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF-PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6

Special Terms for a Series.

Calendar Notices, 10s. per year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge 1/6.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 20 words, 1s. 3 insertions charged as 2.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. The entire remittance should accompany all orders to insert Advertisements.

Printed by UNWIN BROTHERS, LTD., 27, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. Sole Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 20 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, July 9, 1904.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3238. NEW SERIES, No. 342.] LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 16, 1904. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 449
LEADER—
After Fifty Years 456
ARTICLES—
Presentation to the Alake of Abeokuta 451
A Hungarian Holiday 452
Articles in the Reviews 452
Institutes of Social Service 453
MEETINGS—
Missionary Conference 453
The Unitarian Home Missionary College 456
CORRESPONDENCE—
Martineau Memorial Hall and Sunday Schools 451
Unitarian Home Missionary College ... 451
A Warning 451
OBITUARY—
Mr. James Allosh, J.P. 454
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 455
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 462
OUR CALENDAR 463
ADVERTISEMENTS 463

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE two long reports of the Summer School at Oxford last week, and of the Home Missionary College this week, have crowded out a large amount of matter, and we must ask the patience of our readers. Among other things that stand over is the report of the Eastern Union annual meeting on Thursday week; another letter from the Rev. Charles Hargrove, dated from Melbourne, June 8; a letter from the Rev. James Harwood on his recent visit to Wales; Miss Clephan's paper on Religious Teaching (long overdue), and a number of reviews.

THE King's visit to Kiel has been quickly followed by the announcement of the signing of an agreement between Great Britain and Germany, "providing for the settlement by arbitration of differences which may arise of a legal nature or relating to the interpretation of existing treaties between the two countries." The document, we are told, is identical in terms with the agreements recently concluded with France, Italy, and Spain. These provide for the reference of all differences of a judicial character, and not involving "vital interests or national honour," to the decision of the Hague Tribunal, each reference, however, to be preceded by a special agreement setting out the subject in dispute, the powers of the arbitrators, and the constitution of the Court.

IT need hardly be said that this close circumscription of the occasions of arbitration robs the agreements of any very epoch-making character, for the topics ruled out are just the topics out of which wars arise, while the topics covered are those on which give-and-take agreements are usually arrived at sooner or later, though no arbitration treaty exists. It would be a mistake, however, to assume that these agreements are without serious value. They at least lay the foundations—or add another layer to the foundations—laid at the Hague Conference of a complete system of international arbitration. The final substitution of law for physical force as the governing factor in international relations will come only by slow degrees. The present treaties are at least a step, if only a small one, in the right direction.

BY far the most important result of this week's truncated debates on the Licensing Bill has been the adoption in face of the brewers' opposition of the Government amendments regulating the conditions of the issue of new licences. There is a great deal to criticise in these amendments. It is an entirely wrong principle that the granting of new licences should be bartered in exchange for the surrender of superfluous old ones. Superfluous licences should lapse without purchase in either money or fresh privileges, but it is something, at least, that, if new licences are to be granted and old ones surrendered in exchange, compensation is not to be given as well on the scale ordained by the Bill for other non-renewals. Neither is it proper that any class of licence should be withheld for a term of years from the regular annual supervision of Brewster Sessions on the question of good conduct. But it is well that new licences should be plainly and categorically debarred from all claim to compensation in case of non-renewal; and the principle that after a fixed number of years all claim to renewal shall lapse forms an invaluable precedent for the establishment by a Liberal Government of a time-limit for existing licences as well as for new ones. On Wednesday, with help of the closure, the Bill passed through Committee. "The event," says the Daily News, "marks the lowest level that Parliament has reached in this generation."

FEW thoughtful people will be inclined to regret the withdrawal of the Aliens Bill. It dealt with an evil which is largely—perhaps almost wholly—imaginary, and it dealt with it in a manner calculated to create new evils far more serious than those at which it was aimed, even if one accepts all that is said on this score. The opponents of the measure offered to agree to its passage through the Grand Committee to which it had been referred if the Government would confine its operations to the exclusion of criminal aliens, abandoning the clauses relating to aliens without visible means of subsistence. But the Government preferred to abandon the measure altogether in order to re-introduce it next session—if they survive so long.

THERE is no reason why we should allow known criminals to transfer their criminal activities from their own country to ours. But the Bill, as drafted by the Government, would have excluded persons who had never been convicted of crime by process of law, and it would have put it into the power of foreign Governments to obtain the exclusion of persons obnoxious to them on purely political grounds, thus destroying that right of asylum for political offenders which has been one of our finest traditions, and has given us so many useful and grateful citizens. Again, the provisions which professed to secure the exclusion of actual or potential paupers offered no machinery for discriminating between useful and useless citizens. A man may be without visible means of subsistence on his arrival in this country, and may even remain in that condition two years thereafter, and still, when he ultimately "finds his legs," prove himself a very great acquisition to the country of his adoption.

MOST objectionable of all, however, were the provisions which kept presumably innocent men under police surveillance for two years after landing, and which gave to Government agents the power, without any legal process whatever, not only of preventing the landing of an alien, but of actually ordering his deportation at any time within two years of his arrival. Such provisions were in the strictest sense of the word "un-English," and we are heartily glad to be rid of them.

ONE could wish that a more encouraging reception had been given to the exceedingly influential deputation which presented to Lord Londonderry on Monday a petition in favour of the teaching of hygiene in schools, constituting a "manifesto of practically the whole medical profession." Everyone who has had anything to do with the children of the poor knows how vast a share of the ills that afflict them are due to their own and their guardians' ignorance of the elementary laws of hygiene in all its branches. The remark might, indeed, be truthfully applied far beyond the ranks of "the poor." As regards proper feeding, at any rate, the most appalling ignorance is displayed from time to time not merely by working-class mothers, but by parents and guardians in almost every grade of society.

IMPROPER housing and bad economic conditions generally have, of course, a great deal to answer for. But even while these remain as they are, an enormous amount of infant mortality and adult feebleness and ill-health could be prevented by the proper inculcation of the laws of health in the schools. For ourselves, we would not rest satisfied with the teaching of hygiene in schools. We would send missionaries to the homes of the people, and especially to young mothers, tactfully to entreat due regard to hygienic rules, and we would legalise forthwith such experiments as that made by the Manchester City Council recently in the supply of sterilised milk. The time, too, has surely come when, as Sir William Broadbent urged, the explanation of the deleterious effect of alcohol on the system should be made a compulsory subject in the school curriculum. It is certainly discouraging, in the light of known facts, to find Lord Londonderry saying that he will have to "wait for the report of the Commission appointed by the Duke of Devonshire on the physical condition of the people before knowing exactly what remedies are necessary." We need no Royal Commission to tell us what are the hygienic laws most neglected by the people and most needing inculcation in their schools.

ON Tuesday next the King is to lay the foundation-stone of the Liverpool Cathedral, which is to be built in a commanding situation on St. James's Mount, where, when the design is completed, its great towers will dominate the city, and form a very noble object as seen from the river. Contributions amounting to £183,000 have been already paid or promised, of which about £30,000 has been paid for the site and legal expenses. It is estimated that £240,000 will be required to build the choir and part of the transepts (to accommodate a congregation of 3,500), so that the diocese is only at the beginning of this great work. The designs show what promises to be a unique and very impressive Gothic building—unique, at any rate, in this country. In the competition of designs that of Mr. G. Gilbert Scott was successful, and he, with Mr. G. F. Bodley, R.A., are appointed the joint architects of the cathedral. The Freemasons are giving the chapter-house as a memorial of the late Earl of Lathom. To complete the east end all that is needed now is the morning-chapel, for which very beautiful designs have been prepared. The chapel is to seat a congregation of 300, and the estimated cost is £25,000.

WRITING in the New Year's number of his Diocesan Gazette, the Bishop told of the happy prospect that the King would lay the foundation-stone of the cathedral this summer, and with a deep sense of responsibility he added:—

> We have put our hands to a gigantic work, and time will show what are the motives which prompt us. When the Stone is laid and the crowds which have witnessed the ceremony have dispersed, the long years of steady, unwearying, self-sacrificing labour will follow. One point I would most earnestly impress upon my fellow Churchmen. All boastfulness and unworthy ambition must be laid aside. All vain-glorious talking about the cathedral being the loftiest or the largest in the land must be banished. Our cathedral is to be Liverpool's offering to God for His countless mercies to the people of the diocese. We must give Him our best, and only grieve that our best is so inadequate.

In the same true spirit the Bishop writes again, in the last number of his Gazette:—

> The King, accompanied by the Queen, will lay the foundation-stone of our new cathedral on the afternoon of Tuesday, July 19. It will be a great occasion in the history of the Church of England in south-west Lancashire. But while we look forward with loyal and grateful hearts to the Royal visit, and to a ceremonial stately and dignified as becomes so great an event, we must be careful not to suffer the thought of the pageant to obscure in the slightest degree the idea of the act of worship. The rite will be religious from first to last. The diocese will be taking the first step in giving to Almighty God a holy and beautiful house as an offering of faith and hope and love, and it must be done with heartfelt prayer and praise by those who will gather about the foundation-stone. They will be there not only as spectators of a great historical scene, but as worshippers who are presenting to God their very best for the honour of His great Name and for the welfare of His Church in this city and diocese.

A semi-circular stand, capable of seating 7,000 people, has been erected on the site of the stone-laying. A choir of 1,000 voices, drawn from the choirs of the diocese, will lead the singing of the hymns and responses, and will sing the Hallelujah chorus at the close. They will enter in procession, followed by the clergy and bishops. The band of the Grenadier Guards will play while people are taking their seats, and will also accompany the choir in the service.

THE dedication of a theological college at Hankow marks an important stage in the work of the London Missionary Society in China: The building has been erected by the Rev. Griffith John, D.D., and handed over as a gift to the Mission, and through it to the people of China, while the cost of furnishing has been met by personal friends of the veteran missionary. The occasion was one for a large rally of members of the various missionary societies, together with native students and preachers. For forty-three years has Dr. John been at work in this district, striving, as he says, to make the hills and valleys of Central China resound with the music of the cross. By the year 1897, and as a result of thirty-six years of itinerant preaching and teaching, the native membership had reached over 2,000, and village churches had been established. The need for consolidation was felt. A school for boys, boarding school for girls, high school, normal school, have been started, and now the scheme is completed by the opening of the theological college, for it was held necessary to turn out not only followers, but leaders.

ONE remark of Dr. Griffith John's, as reported in the Examiner, is of peculiar interest. He has faith in the capacity of the Chinese, and this faith takes the form of an increasing confidence in the ultimate evangelisation of China. This is no fancy of youthful enthusiasm, for the speaker's years of toil in that country outnumber the years of many of our lives. And yet to an observer there is something of the pathetic in such an expectation, when it is compared with the very small numerical result obtained by all the Christian mission efforts. If we were to remove the work of the medical missions from our survey, what is left is strangely small. But medical missions, whether in London or China, attract people from motives in no sense religious. The report before us is naturally brief, and it does not show what are the grounds of Dr. John's prophecy. That being so, it is difficult to resist the conclusion that a strong conviction of what ought to be is a substitute for a cool calculation of what is likely to be. One thing, however, is clear, that the work of this great missionary is carried out with force and devotion that cannot fail of success, though the success should not take the hoped for form. The world cannot spare any of its hopes, even if they be forlorn.

AN interesting article on "Hawthorne in Manchester" appeared in the Manchester Guardian of July 4, the day of his centenary. During the four years of his residence as American Consul in Liverpool, Hawthorne naturally paid several visits to Manchester. He went in 1857 to see the Art Treasures Exhibition, and spent dutiful days looking at the pictures. "It is like having innumerable books open before you at once and being able to read only a sentence or two in each," he said. The pictures of the Præ-Raphaelites and of the Dutch masters had most attraction for him, which was natural, the writer says, for "his own literary art was closely akin to theirs."

But one day he heard that Tennyson was there, and hastened to get a look at him, and saw what he cared about more than pictures or relics. "Gazing at him with all my eyes, I liked him well, and rejoiced more in him than in all the other wonders of the Exhibition." Hawthorne never became acquainted with Tennyson personally (both were too reserved to seek each other out), and it is remarkable that a man of such celebrity, even then, in the literary world should in the course of four years make only casual acquaintance with a few of England's great authors and become intimate with hardly any of them. This was due in large measure to his natural shyness, intensified by long years of rather morbid seclusion in early manhood, resulting in a disinclination, a dislike almost, for society. Henry Bright, of Liverpool, sympathetically and truly interpreted this in his "Song of Consul Hawthorne," in which he says that he

> Hardly ever goes to dinners,
> Never goes to balls or soirees;
> Thinks one friend worth twenty friendly;
> Cares for love but not for liking;
> Hardly knows a dozen people.

CONSIDERABLE space has been devoted in recent issues of the Examiner to the question of lay preaching among the Congregationalists. The writer of the articles draws attention to two facts: that the rate of increase in membership has been more rapid among the Methodists than among the Congregationalists, and that this corresponds with the fact that the former are served by a much larger force of lay preachers than the latter. He attempts to show that the one phenomenon is the cause of the other, and deduces the rule : few lay preachers, few members; many lay preachers, many church members. It appears that among the Methodists there are ten lay preachers to every ordained minister. Among the Congregationalists the proportion is only two to one. Probably the existence of a strong body of unprofessional preachers is as much the result of the vigorous life of a community as the cause of it. In any case it is interesting to apply the consideration to our own churches, where the lay preaching strength is very much smaller.

To the argument that in order to make the churches strong there must be many lay preachers, Mr. Edward Smith, President of the Midland Adult Sunday School Association, replies, that we need not so much lay preaching as lay teaching. A story related by Mr. Smith of a mining village is worth repeating. The women and the children were to be found at the church or the Methodist services; the men for the most part abstained. An adult school was started with some numerical success. When the men were asked why they did not go to the churches, one of them replied, "We'm sick of preachen."

IN last week's Spectator the following lines by "G. A. J. C." on the late George Frederick Watts appeared :—

Beyond a striken world that bore
The hot breath of the Minotaur,
And naked piled at Mammon's knee
The outcast slaves of luxury,
He saw Hope touch her harp ; to him
Age was not ; here the cherubim
Spanned the great arch of heaven ; there
Creation smote through wreaths of air ;
And in the light God's shaft had made
Young Time strode onward unafraid.

TO CORRESPONDENTS. — Letters, &c., received from J. W. A., H. D., A. H., C. H., F. H., J. T. H., H. A. R. J., W. S. K., W. A. M., P. P., C. R., M. R., C. J. S., A. D. T., J. M. Ll. T., L.T.

COUNTRY HOLIDAY MOVEMENT.—Miss Lawrence, 23, Campden House Chambers, Campden Hill, London, W., acknowledges, with many thanks, receipts for this fund of the following sums :—Miss Hibbert, £1 1s.; Mrs. Talbot, 10s.; Miss Florence Glover, 5s.; Mrs. Jevons, £1.

SUMMER SERVICES.—The Missionary Conference, through its committee, has made arrangements for a series of eight Sunday services to be held during the present season at Douglas, I.O.M. A similar series will also be held in the Albert Hall, Cross-street, Windermere. The first of the services will be conducted on July 24, at both places, at 11 a.m., and the support of Unitarians, residents and visitors, is earnestly invited. The Rev. W. R. Shanks, 50, Malvern-road, Beeston Hill, Leeds, is secretary of the Conference, and will be glad to hear from ministers who intend to be in the Isle of Man or at the Lakes, and would be willing to conduct services.

PRESENTATION TO THE ALAKE OF ABEOKUTA.

THE following is the text of the address presented to the Alake shortly before he left London, together with a copy of Channing's Works, by the president and other members of the Central Postal Mission and Unitarian Workers' Union. The deputation, which consisted of Miss Tagart (president), Miss Florence Hill (secretary), Miss Jevons, Miss Lister, Miss L. Martineau, Miss Teschmacher, Mrs. Morton, Mrs. Stronge, and Mrs. Summers, was received at the Westminster Palace Hotel.

To His Majesty the Alake of Abeokuta.

YOUR MAJESTY,

We, the ladies of the Unitarian Workers' Union, are rejoiced at this opportunity of offering an Address of Welcome to your Majesty to these shores. For some time past we have had letters from your Majesty's subjects, both white and coloured, in Lagos and the neighbourhood, telling us how much your Majesty has done in the country of Abeokuta; the efforts your Majesty has made to subdue the fighting spirit and make men live as brothers and work industriously to promote the growth of cotton, the india-rubber, and also the timber and other trades.

Thus the Alake brings peace and prosperity to his people!

Our late revered Queen Victoria introduced the Bible to your Majesty and your people; we ladies, following her gracious example, come to offer another book by a great Unitarian Christian writer, Dr. Channing, who taught love to the one true God, our Heavenly Father, and love to all mankind, His children of every race and creed. Channing also laboured in the great cause of Temperance, Freedom, and Peace. Such a religion accords well with the simple lives of your people, and may well become a national religion.

May the blessing of God rest on your Majesty and all your people, and bring you safely back to your own country.

Signed by—
M. LUCY TAGART, President,
FLORENCE HILL, Hon. Secretary,
ETHEL C. LAKE, Hon. Treasurer, and other members of the Committee.

The Alake, in reply, said that Queen Victoria's gift of the Bible had been the foundation of the prosperity and higher civilisation of his people. He thanked the ladies for their gift of Channing's Works, and said that such a book, advocating love to God and love to man, expressed what he himself recognised as being at the foundation of all true religions.

THE annual distribution of prizes at the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen, took place on the last day of June. Professor G. Dawes Hicks presided, and the other members of the deputation from the Presbyterian Board (the governing body of the College) were Dr. Talfourd Ely, who examined in classics, and Mr. Harold Baily, of Hampstead. Mr. I. S. Lister examined in English literature; the Rev. J. H. Woods in textual criticism and kindred subjects; the Rev. H. S. Perris in ecclesiastical history, comparative religion and homiletics. Dr. Hicks, in addition to philosophical subjects, examined in the history of Christian doctrine and senior apologetics. Both he and the other examiners expressed unusual satisfaction with the results. The prizes and certificates were distributed by Mrs. Dawes Hicks. The Rev. Philemon Moore was welcomed back to his old chair at the College.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MARTINEAU MEMORIAL HALL AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

SIR,—The responses so kindly and promptly made thus far to the advertised appeal in your issue of July 2, have, I am deeply thankful to say, resulted in reducing the sum still required for the site of the above to £270. If friends who are interested, and, doubtless, intend subscribing, would make up this comparatively small remainder before they leave home for the summer, they would have the satisfaction of knowing that they have placed the memorial on an assured basis, and greatly relieve those on whom falls the anxiety of securing it.

(Mrs.) F. A. MOTTRAM (Hon. Sec.).
The Birches, Bracondale, Norwich,
July 12, 1904.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

SIR,—At the close of the meetings held last week to celebrate the Jubilee of the College a conference of friends and alumni was held. The meeting was pervaded by a deep sense of gratitude for the remarkable success that had attended all the Jubilee gatherings. An attempt was made to place on record the individual services rendered during these memorable celebrations, from those of the Rev. J. C. Street, whose inspiring sermon so vividly recalled the conditions out of which the College arose and rekindled the fervour which marked its birth, down to the unique demonstration at the Memorial Hall, unparalleled for fervour and enthusiasm in the experience of all present, which brought the meetings to a close. The numbers, however, of those who had rendered generous service, stretched out and seemed inexhaustible, and finally the effort to write to all personally had to be abandoned. We are, therefore, requested to beg the favour of your courtesy, to assure all those whose presence and help secured so signal a success that the committee and alumni are deeply grateful for their kind help; they proved once more, by their numbers and enthusiasm, that the College is deep rooted in the affections of the great mass of our fellow Unitarians.

CHARLES PEACH.
THOMAS P. SPEDDING.

A WARNING.

SIR,—I write to put my brethren in the ministry on their guard against a short, thick-set man, Johnson by name, who asks for pecuniary assistance, stating that he is seeking work in the North of England as a metal polisher, a member of the Great Meeting at Leicester, having, unfortunately, run through his resources. He is able to give the names of certain members of the Great Meeting who, he assures me, would willingly back up his statements, but his knowledge does not go very far. On inquiry, I am afraid I must denounce him as a fraud. His custom is to call very late at night, when he supposes the person from whom he desires help will be only too glad to get rid of him as speedily as possible by the gift of a shilling or two.

Liverpool. J. C. ODGERS.

A HUNGARIAN HOLIDAY.

As our brief holiday visit to Hungary was nearing its close, the Editor's mandate reached me, asking for a letter or two for The Inquirer, telling of our journey and of my impressions of the Magyar land and people, and of the Unitarian churches in particular. Holidays in a far country are usually busy times, and especially when they are spent among generous and hospitable friends, who cannot do enough to make your sojourn among them delightful. This has certainly been the happy experience which has befallen my wife and myself; and hence the impossibility of doing more than scribble some rough and hasty notes during a twenty-four hours' railway journey to the Tyrol, a fatiguing exercise, but bringing home within a more appreciable distance. How can I better utilise a part of this Sunday morning?

We left home on June 12, crossing via Dover and Calais on the 13th. A calm sea, light air, and bright sunshine, together with the unexpected company of Mr. Pritchard and Mr. Tarrant, on their way to a French Protestant Conference, made the brief passage very enjoyable. Then a long journey to Cologne, arriving near the witching hour of night, a heavy thunderstorm with torrential rain, a consequently abbreviated sail up the Rhine—from Coblenz to Bingen, during which the rain kindly kept away, and the clouds lifted—and on we sped to Aschaffenburg for the second night. On Thursday we spent a few hours in picturesque Nuremberg, and then away to Ratisbon (Regensburg). This was for me the first step into an unknown land, and I strongly advise those who know it not, to pay a visit to this quaint old town, and see its ancient watch-towers, its picturesque bridge over the double stream of the Danube, and its magnificent Walhalla some six miles away on the top of a hill overlooking the Danube. A finer building it has never been my lot to see. It was built of white marble by King Ludwig I. in imitation of the Parthenon at Athens, and is a splendid specimen of Greek architecture. The interior is as beautiful as the exterior, if the association of a German legendary paradise with the art of ancient Greece does seem rather incongruous—the presence of 101 beautiful busts of notable German heroes of ancient and modern times making it none the less so. From Regensburg we proceeded to Passau, most picturesquely situated on a tongue of land at the junction of the Danube and the Inn. The sail down the Danube from Passau to Linz, Linz to Vienna, Vienna to Pozsony (Presburg), and Pozsony to Budapest, I shall not attempt to describe; but will only say that there is nothing on the Rhine to compare with it, and that it gave us four delightful days of varied scenery, reviving many historical memories, and making us enter more than ever into mid-European life. But what a pity that the magnificent water-way of the Danube is so little used. Here are splendid opportunities for commerce and association that would do much to break down the barriers of national jealousy and suspicion, which, I fear, are chiefly acountable for the comparative silence of this noble river. Of Vienna I will only say that, on the whole, it impressed me more favourably than Paris, and that parts of the Ringstrasse, with its majestic buildings, are finer than any boulevard I have ever seen. Budapest we were delighted with; it is on the whole, for situation and for its tout ensemble, the most handsome city which I have been privileged to visit.

And here we touch Unitarian ground, and the interest for many of your readers will begin. As we landed from the steamer, we were met by the Rev. N. Józan, with his wife and little boy, and heartily welcomed into Hungary on behalf of our Unitarian brethren there. The greeting was made all the more impressive by the graceful courtesy, so characteristic of the Magyar people, which found expression in the presentation to my wife from Mrs. Józan of a beautiful bouquet of red rose-buds, white carnations, and blue cornflowers (the English colours), bound up with the red, white, and green ribbon of the Hungarian nation. Here let it be noted that the Hotel Erzherzog Stéfan, at which the English party stayed three years ago; and to which we had directed our luggage (let us draw a veil over the weary formalities of red tape, of which we had consequent experience) no longer exists, but the Hotel Bristol on the Danube front gave us excellent accommodation instead. Mr. Józan kindly acted as our guide, philosopher, and friend during a three days' stay in Budapest, and steered us safely through the perils of the Magyar language, which is fearfully and wonderfully made, and utterly unlike all European tongues with which I have the slightest bowing acquaintance. What we should have done without his friendly mediation and calm patience in certain eventualities I fear to think. Perhaps we should have been in Budapest still, vainly trying to find a lost basket trunk.

By the kind invitation of the Budapest Unitarian friends, we had a delightful evening at the Margarethen Island on the Danube, where we were warmly welcomed and hospitably entertained by a party of about thirty of the members of the congregation. Others would have been of the party also—a princess among others, we were told, and we felt quite royal in consequence—but that the holiday season had begun, and they had betaken themselves to the hills. Nothing could have exceeded the kindness of the greetings or the warmth of good feeling which was shown for the English Unitarians. Many British ears must have tingled that evening, for we talked of many of the readers of The Inquirer, and I was commissioned with more personal messages than I fear I can ever convey or even remember. But I know that we were regarded as bonds of union between the two nationalities as well as between the widely separated members of the same household of faith. In a few informal words spoken by Mr. Józan and myself we did our best to make all present feel that we were one in heart and spirit, and that the glorious Unitarian faith knit together even more closely those whose political sympathies are so nearly allied; for the British and the Hungarian nations have been in the very forefront of the struggle for a free church, a free press, and free civic institutions. If the mixture of tongues spoken on this occasion in order to render thought intelligible was a reminder of the confusion of Babel, I trust it will be forgiven for the sake of the good intent.

Two words more about Budapest, and I must bring this letter to a close. The Unitarian church at Budapest struck me as being a tasteful, commodious, and well-situated building, its only drawback being the flight of stairs leading up to it, and the fact that it is a small part of a large block of buildings. But as the land was the gift of the city, and without the rest of the buildings the church could not have been, and the whole block is a very handsome one, there is very good reason for contentment, if not for pride.

The new Houses of Parliament are simply magnificent both inside and out. We were most kindly shown over them by Mr. Bedö, a leading member of the Government party in the House of Commons and president of our Budapest church.

We had the pleasure of seeing one stalwart member of the Kossuth party, who is over ninety years of age, and has been a member of the Hungarian Parliament for over sixty years. Judging by the vigour of his interruptions he should be an independent member for many years to come.

The story of our delightful visit to Kolozsvar and Torda I must leave until next week.

C. J. Street.

July 3, 1904.

ARTICLES IN THE REVIEWS.

"The Religious Situation in France" is the subject of an article in the July Contemporary by M. Paul Passy. The great majority of Frenchmen, he thinks, belong to no definite religion. What they hold is "a Deism variously tinged with a mixture of pagan survivals and Christian influences." Nor is this a new state of things. From the Middle Ages onward, the truth of the people were nominally Catholics. "In former times the masses were not Christian, but they thought they were; now they see that they are not." Yet they are ready "to follow, though perhaps blindly, anyone who will bring to them a doctrine capable of satisfying both their desire for earthly justice and their thirst for the infinite." In the party of "Free-Thought," vigorous and anti-religious, M. Passy has no confidence, nor does he hope much from the Protestant churches, evidently disliking the liberal element in them. His hope is set on a popular return to primitive Christianity, but he does not prophesy. A valuable practical article in the same number is on "Economic Nutrition." Let no dyspeptic overlook this.

There can be no doubt that most people "dig their own graves with their knives and forks." As Abernethy said, there is no ass in the world so overloaded as the human stomach.

Note also the article on "Maurus Jokai and the Historical Novel," an estimate of the great Hungarian novelist and patriot, in whose work Unitarians have a special interest.

In the Nineteenth Century and After, Mrs. Higgs adds a weighty protest to several that have been recently made, on the subject of Tramp Wards, showing how they combine the maximum of cruelty with the minimum of helpfulness to those who are unfortunately obliged to seek their refuge. Dr. William Ewart writes on "Medicated Air," pleading not only for a full recognition of the value of open-air treatment, but for the provision of air in hospitals and crowded cities assimilated as far as possible to the conditions of health. Bishop Welldon, urging release from the bondage of the Athanasian Creed, quotes from Jeremy Taylor's "Liberty of Prophesying" words of which he says that none wiser or more Christian have been spoken on the subject. Mr. Slade Butler, in a brief article on the Virgin Birth, shows how the idea was of Greek, not Hebrew origin, and since the earliest Christian writers, including the Apostle Paul, had never heard of it, asks why belief in such a doctrine, resting as it does on scanty and unsatisfactory evidence, should any longer be insisted on.

In the Independent Review Mr. Goldwin Smith writes on "Lines of Religious Inquiry," called on the cover, "Towards the Truth." At the conclusion, he repeats his first word: "There is no salvation for us, but in the fearless, cautious, reverent pursuit of truth." Dogmatic materialism is vain, neither can positivism permanently help; but if truth is sought, it must be with reverence. The Rev. A. L. Lilley takes up the subject of "Religion and Revelation" in reply to Mr. Dickinson's articles in the last two numbers. His aim is to show "how religion is involved in the growing life of man, how that life in the experience of its highest representatives makes certain instinctive affirmations which are the very stuff of religion; how their affirmations are absorbed into and proved by the increasing purpose of the life of mankind."

The Monthly Review has a Nathaniel Hawthorne article by Mary E. Coleridge, and two tributes to the late Julian Sturgis. Mr. Alfred Stead's article on "Japan and the Policy of a White Australia" is a serious contribution to the consideration of a vital question. There are two illustrated articles, on recent excavations at Carthage and in Ægina respectively.

The World's Work puts on a new face this month as the World's Work and Play. The frontispiece is a striking portrait of Sir Edward Grey, among other things "probably the best dry-fly fisherman in the country."

In the July number of Sermons for the Day the Rev. R. A. Armstrong has printed his two recent addresses at Manchester College, Oxford, the Visitor's Address, and that of Welcome into the Ministry, at the Valedictory service, which appeared also in full in these columns. The Rev. Charles Hargrove's sermon in the Mill Hill Pulpit is on "What is Christ?" The final answer to this question is that he who loves most is the best Christian, "for Christ taught not 'Thou shalt believe,' or 'Thou shalt do,' but this only, 'Thou shalt love,' and love is enough."

Poets, in seeking the beautiful, find more truths than philosophers in seeking the true.—Joubert.

INSTITUTES OF SOCIAL SERVICE.

On Tuesday, the 28th ult., in view of the formation of the British Institute of Social Service, Dr. Josiah Strong gave an address at Devonshire House on the work of the similar and parent Institute in New York. He showed how the introduction of machinery into industrial processes has opened out the possibility of material abundance for all, how there is already adequate production of wealth, but its distribution is at fault. Although the last decade has witnessed a marvellous acceleration in production—especially in America—and wages have risen rapidly (in nominal value, at least), yet the conditions of city life with its continual spectacle of wealth in contrast with poverty and the increase of wants consequent upon increase of knowledge, have resulted in the growth of discontent. The development of great cities in every part of the civilised world has been the marked characteristic of the nineteenth century, and every city has its slums. The slum with its human products—ignorance, vice, and wretchedness in combination—threatens to destroy the civilisation which has called it into being; and there is no great American city which has not been compelled to call out troops for the suppression of riots.

As an example of slum influences even upon men of good physique, Dr. Strong related the experience of a minister who went to live in one of the tenement homes of his parish, in a quarter of New York popularly known as "Hell's Kitchen": how the first morning he woke with severe headache, and the second with sore-throat and a terrible nerve-craving for spirits induced by the foul air—a craving only kept at bay by the sense of his "reputation," that social support to character which is unknown to the slum-dweller.

Turning to the place of the Institute in modern life, the lecturer spoke of the organic nature of society, and the interrelation of all its members, as the great discovery of our times. But the constant close contact of men and women of all classes in our city-life has shown how little we yet understand the meaning of this truth. The idea of a human family is the only adequate social ideal—but if we are to realise it, it can only be through the continual readjustment of social relations to the conditions of modern industrial life. So far our efforts towards readjustment have lacked the knowledge which the Institute of Social Service brings to the solution of the problem. By collecting, filing, and indexing the social experience of thousands of persons and enterprises, it is in a position to assist all who are willing to learn from the experiments of others. Its information is disseminated through the press, through its circulating library of photographs, and through periodical circulars and special reports to its subscribers. It seems to have initiated the work of social secretaries in large business houses; and in various ways it has promoted confidence between employers and employed. The Institute is a scientific agency, but it serves an ethical end; for the science which it promulgates is also an art—it is the science of right social living.

H. B. P.

MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The annual meetings of the Missionary Conference were held in the Memorial Hall, Manchester, on Wednesday and Thursday, July 6 and 7; the President, the Rev. J. A. Kelly, in the chair. On Wednesday, the proceedings were opened with a devotional service conducted by the Rev. W. Harrison. Afterwards, the President delivered his address, in the course of which he said he had always regarded missionary work as one of the noblest branches of human endeavour. As members of that Conference the basis of their communion was not in unanimity of expression so much as in sympathy of purpose; not so much in like-mindedness as in like-heartedness; not in common conclusions, but in common aims. He thought they should not spread their energies over too wide a field. The longer he lived the more he was impressed with the importance of emphasising the simple and direct teachings of Christ, of putting prominently forward his life of toil and self-denial and his beautiful forgiving spirit, being persuaded that there is nothing higher, nobler, sweeter than the possession of the spirit of the Master. Once that is attained then all other things will naturally fall into their proper places. He believed with all his soul that if they committed themselves to definite religious teaching, making Christianity the centre, and putting Christ in the forefront, they would appeal most powerfully to those whose minds are disturbed by the theology of the creeds, and their future would be one of increased and increasing usefulness and prosperity. Mr. Kelly concluded his address with a touching reference to the late Henry McKean, who was a universally beloved member of the Conference from the very beginning of its history.

On Thursday morning the proceedings were opened by the President with the reading of Scripture and prayer, after which the Rev. W. L. Schroeder read a paper on "Ideals and Idiosyncrasies." The progress of life, he said, was in the direction of the discovery of the soul or self by the individual; the problem of the higher life was to co-ordinate, in true relations, the facts of existence with the spiritual essence that is of God. Life was estimated in terms of consciousness, the development of the soul was in the direction of self-knowledge, the consciousness of the self as a spiritual essence marked the point of departure whence existence was reinterpreted in spiritual terms. The unity of all being was found in the sympathetic realisation of souls other than their own, the divinity of life was experienced in the working out of a recognised God-force within. No one could question the spiritual aspect of the Unitarian's faith; and yet Unitarianism was the religion of unfulfilled and but mildly attempted ideals. More than any other religion it had cast itself free of the trammels of an historic tradition; less than most other religions it had availed itself of the opportunities afforded by its spiritual freedom. This theme Mr. Schroeder developed in a vigorous and suggestive manner, and his paper was followed by a lively discussion.

At the business part of the proceedings it was decided to arrange for summer Sunday services both at Windermere and Douglas.

Memorial resolutions on the death of the Revs. T. B. Broadrick and Henry McKean were passed, with expressions of admiration for their faithful work.

On the motion of the Rev. W. C. Hall, seconded by the Rev. J. C. Street, it was unanimously resolved :—

That we, the members of the Missionary Conference, offer to the committee of the Unitarian Home Missionary College hearty congratulations on the completion of fifty years' work in the service of the Churches. We bear witness that the College, from which the conference had its origin, has always maintained interest and zeal for missionary enterprise, and thereby assisted the popular extension of undogmatic and practical Christianity. We rejoice in the endeavour, initiated by the alumni of the college, to secure permanent collegiate buildings in Manchester, and have confidence that the appeal issued by the Jubilee Committee will meet with the ready and generous support of the Churches."

The Rev. John Ellis was elected President for the ensuing year, the Rev. W. R. Shanks was re-elected Secretary, and the Rev. T. P. Spedding Treasurer.

OBITUARY.

MR. JAMES ARLOSH, J.P.

The somewhat sudden death of Mr. James Arlosh, of Woodside, Cumberland, in his 70th year, will be sincerely regretted not only by the religious body with which for several years he had heartily identified himself, but also by those who still remain of the ardent politicians who some twenty years ago found in him an enthusiastic and efficient comrade in their strenuous struggles on behalf of Liberal political principles. In the excellent memorial notice of him which appears in the Carlisle Journal for July 8, and which, if we rightly guess, is from the able pen of the Rev. Charles Travers, Mr. Arlosh's ability and work as a politician are thus vividly described :—

He was a clear and forcible speaker, whose speeches were the fruit of a keen intellect and sincere conviction. They were full of knowledge and argument, and rendered good service to the cause he had at heart. In the early eighties he was a familiar figure on the platform of Liberal meetings, and he took a prominent part in this district in the great struggle over the Reform Bill of 1884.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Arlosh descended from very old Cumberland families. They were married in 1859. Mrs. Arlosh's father was Captain Thomas Benn, R.N., who served in the Royal Navy in the Napoleonic and American wars at the beginning of the last century. Mr. Arlosh's ancestors can be traced back to very near the time of the Norman Conquest. In the fourteenth century they had either been granted, or, as Mr. Arlosh thought was more probable, had quietly appropriated and cleared a goodly tract of land in the old Inglewood Forest, and there laid the foundations of the present very beautiful and most interesting mansion. The original structure, however, which still in great part remains within the far more imposing exterior with which the successive proprietors have encased it, was a much smaller, though far more formidable building than the present one. It was one of those "peels," or residences fortified by a tower and by an enclosed "barnakan," which were common on both sides of the Border at the time when the English and Scotch were given to making frequent forays into each other's lands. The story of the gradual transformation of this primitive structure into the existing "Woodside" would take long to tell. It would require a volume to fully describe the growth of the edifice, and to give an account of its grand library and of the many beautiful and antique objects which Mr. Arlosh's ancestors, who travelled much on the Continent, have gradually accumulated. A complete knowledge of the house and its history would imply an acquaintance with nearly all the successive stages in the social life of England.

The circumstance which caused the owners of Woodside to remove from their charming home in Cumberland, and to dwell for several years in the neighbourhood of Oxford, and which at the same time made Mr. Arlosh less of a practical politician than he had previously been, was a very melancholy one. Their only child, Godfrey Arlosh, a youth of great promise, was sent to Brasenose College, Oxford, and there met his death owing to an unfortunate riding accident on Port Meadow. His grief-stricken parents, whose earthly hopes had been centred in their child, buried him in the Holywell Cemetery in Oxford, and feeling that it would be impossible, for some time at least, to return to their northern home, made Oxford their place of residence for several years. Here they formed lasting friendships, which have sweetened and uplifted the lives of those who enjoyed an intimate acquaintance with them. Their coming to Oxford was almost contemporaneous with the transference of Manchester College from London to that city. They at once began to attend the College services in the room in High-street, and on the erection of the present buildings, to which they liberally contributed, they, in memory of their son, presented the College with those much-admired windows in the chapel from designs by Sir E. Burne-Jones, which so fitly and beautifully typify the six days of Creation.

A knowledge of Mr. Arlosh's ancestry throws much explanatory light on the great interest which, ever since he became acquainted with it, he has taken in Manchester College. As we have said, his forefathers had been the "lairds" or squires of Woodside since the fourteenth century, but it was not till the time of his great-grandfather, John Losh,* that a new strain of religious interest entered into the family. Mr. Arlosh's great-grandfather, John Losh, who was well known in the county as the "Black Squire," on account of the big black horse that he rode, and who had more than once pursued Scotch marauders and compelled them to restore the English beeves they were driving across the Border, married the gifted and beautiful Miss Liddell, the sister of Joseph Liddell, of Moorhouse. The Liddells were near kinsmen of Lord Ravensworth; Joseph Liddell was a man of mark as a classic and a metaphysician, and was the most eminent of Cumberland Unitarians. To this marriage several children were born, of whom at least three became of some historical importance, and their careers are graphically depicted in Dr. Lonsdale's "Cumberland Worthies." Miss Liddell's Unitarianism was evidently of a very active kind, for it has largely leavened the religious ideas of her descendants. Her second son James, the grandfather of James Arlosh, graduated at Cambridge in 1786. He then studied for the Church, but, being led to adopt Unitarian principles, soon forsook theology for law, was called to the bar, and finally became the Recorder of Newcastle. His gifts were great and various, and he exercised a powerful influence on the social, the philanthropic, and the literary life of that important town. It was a happy circumstance that our friend who has just departed this life was named after his distinguished grandfather, for in some respects they closely resembled each other. Of the grandfather Dr. Lonsdale writes :—

Being in communion with the Unitarians—a large and influential and, it may be added, most intellectual body in Newcastle, under the happy guidance of the Rev. Mr. Turner—Mr. Losh aided his minister in many excellent schemes for the improvement of the morals and education of the young.

To those who are aware of the very warm interest which Mr. and Mrs. Arlosh have always taken in the Charles-street Institute at Oxford, it will be evident that the grandson was in this respect a worthy successor of his eminent ancestor. And those who have enjoyed close intimacy with James Arlosh, and have noted his ever-ready kindness, his deep interest in philanthropic causes and his exceedingly gentle and unassuming demeanour will see no slight similarity between his character and the following picture which Dr. Lonsdale gives of his grandfather :—

James Losh was high-minded, honourable, and independent in his public conduct; warm-hearted, affectionate, and benevolent in private life; and mild and unassuming in both; ardently beloved by his friends, and held in high esteem by all who had intercourse with him.

Like his grandfather, James Arlosh was educated with a view to the Anglican ministry. He graduated M.A. at the University of Durham, and then took orders. After holding one or two brief curacies he became the incumbent of Ponsonby, in Cumberland, and remained there nearly ten years. From the sermons which he then preached, some of which he allowed the present writer to read, it is evident that he was a Churchman of a very "broad" type, so that, as might have been expected, he became at length clearly conscious that he shared his grandfather's Unitarianism, and that it was his duty to resign his position in the English Church.

Hence it was that when he came to reside at Oxford he naturally found his way to the religious services of Manchester

* In the early records the family name is sometimes written Arlosh, and sometimes Losh, but for the last two centuries the name Losh had been exclusively used, until some years before he succeeded to the family estate, on the death of his father in 1888, the subject of this notice resumed the old name of Arlosh.

College, and when, in 1899, he and his wife returned to Woodside they at once associated themselves with the Unitarian church in Carlisle, and a few years ago presented to the congregation a commodious house as a residence for the minister. The spirituality and originality of Mr. Travers' thought, and his active interest in popular education and in Liberal politics, were very congenial to Mr. Arlosh. They met frequently at Woodside, and Mr. Arlosh occasionally took the services at the pretty chapel on the Viaduct.

James Arlosh's religion was of the purest and noblest sort. Nature was to him a constant source of delight, for he discerned the indwelling God in all natural objects, and as ever-present and active throughout the whole process of cosmical evolution. Few men have entered more fully than he did into the meaning of the sublime truth that God is Love. His fundamental religious principle was that expressed by the Apostle: "God is Love, and he who loveth dwelleth in God, and God in him." It was the deep persuasion of this truth that led him and his wife to place beneath one of the Burne-Jones windows in the College Chapel, Coleridge's immortal words:—

He prayeth best who loveth best
All things both great and small,
For the dear God who loveth us,
He made and loveth all.

C. B. U.

A brief memorial service, in connection with the funeral of the late Mr. Arlosh, was held, in accordance with his expressed desire, in the chapel of Manchester College, on Monday, at a quarter to three. There a few friends gathered, in sorrow for the loss of one of the kindest and most unselfish men they had ever known, and in sympathy with his widow. The Principal read portions of Scripture and offered prayer, and the Rev. C. B. Upton gave a very appropriate address, full of deep feeling inspired by an intimacy of many years. At the close of the service, most of those who had attended it joined the funeral procession, which passed the college doors on its way to Holywell Church (St. Cross), where the Burial Service of the Church of England was performed. Six men from the Woodside estate bore the coffin to the grave, and laid Mr. Arlosh's body by the side of that of his only son. Among those present were the Principal of Brasenose, Professor and Mrs. Wright, Dr. and Mrs. Drummond, Mr. and Miss Upton, Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter, the Rev. Charles Travers (late of Carlisle), Dr. and Mrs. J. G. Evans, Mr. A. H. Worthington, Mr. W. J. Heskett (of Penrith), Mr. T. W. Jackson, of Worcester College, at whose house in Oxford Mr. Arlosh died, and many relatives of Mrs. Arlosh.

BE noble! and the nobleness which lies
In other men, sleeping, but never dead,
Will rise in majesty to meet thine own.

J. R. Lowell.

Is the dead friend mysteriously here, even as we are here mysteriously, with God? Know of a truth that only the time-shadows have perished or are perishable.—Carlyle.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

THE QUEEN OF THE WHITE LIGHT.

"UNCLE, what's 'glory'?" cried Miriam, running out to me into the garden.

As a matter of fact I am neither her mother's brother nor her father's brother, neither step-uncle nor uncle-in-law, but, by Miriam's grace, uncle-in-heart. Otherwise, I am only the lodger.

"Why, this is glory," I said, as I stopped banking the potatoes and rested on my hoe.

"What, hoeing potatoes? Why, you're dripping hot!"

"Well, not exactly that," I said, "the glory is just this great ocean of glowing sunshine at the bottom of which we little crabs are crawling about and picking up our bread and cheese."

"Crabs!" repeated Miriam sceptically, on the lowest note she could reach. "We're not crabs; what a funny man you are!" So we dropped the crabs.

The wheat standing stalwart after the recent rains was now in flower. The grass was mostly down and lay in long swathes ripening. In a field beyond the haymakers were tossing, and the sweetest of all scents of field or garden was let loose and blown over the earth. The birds were silent as they are wont to be in the heat of the day, and the sun looked down from his throne in pride and joy at his fair kingdom. As for us, there were we, man and child, in a cottage garden.

So nigh to the great warm heart of God
We almost seemed to feel it beat
Down from the sunshine and up from the sod.

I went on hoeing. Lying there with her head in the grass, her eyes shaded by the broad brim of her hat, and looking straight up at the sky, Miriam presently asked, "Why do we never see rainbows in the middle of the day? They are glorious, aren't they?"

I tried to explain that a rainbow is a kind of magic-lantern show on a big scale, and that if the lanterns were, like the sun then over our heads, pointing down at us, we could not very well arrange the sheet so that we could see the picture. "But," I added, "there is another story about the rainbow and the sunshine which I must tell you; for the other day, when I lay looking up into the sky as you are doing, I saw a cloud made. High up in the clear blue a faint mist began to appear, as if the spirits of the air were weaving a veil of gossamer. It grew whiter and whiter until the gauzy haze was a fleece of snow. And I watched it so intently that I forgot I was on the earth, and found myself in the sky rising higher and higher in the very face of the sun, and there on the cloud of the snowy fleece I saw the beautiful Spirit of the White Light, with a throng of rainbow spirits, loveliest of all fairies, round about her. I could not speak for wonder and delight. All the spirits held in their hands variously coloured rays of light which shone softly all over their faces and bodies. There were ray bearers of sapphire-blue, of amber and garnet, of violet and lilac and purple, of emerald, and rose, of ruby. One by one, or in clusters and rings, they flew close up to the Spirit of the White Light casting their staves into her lap. Again they seized them, again they cast them down. But though every separate wand was of one colour or another, when they were thus piled together they all gleamed with the brightness of the sun at noon. I could not understand the meaning of it, so I called one of the rainbow spirits to me and asked her. She replied, 'We are the spirits of beauty and goodness. We make the earth fair. We weave the rainbows and we dye the sunsets. We stain the flowers, make sleeping smiles, and sow the seeds of gentleness in the hearts of men. We cast the silver bells of laughter, and we keep the crown of honour bright. These are our wands of power:—Green for beauty, blue for joy, red for love, gold for wisdom. The Spirit of the White Light is our queen. Her name is Truth. We all bring our rays to her, lights of flowers and skies, lights of faces and hearts, lights of sweet habits and gentle manners and brave deeds, and we cast them all together into her arms till she looks like a gleaner from the harvest-fields of the sun; and that is what makes the white light of truth. It is all things good together. At noonday when the sky is clear truth passes over the earth in a cloud so pure and radiant that it casts no shadow, and as she goes she sings her song—the sweetest ever heard—and yet she teaches it to everyone who wishes to learn it. Flowers and birds and children learn it most easily. We come with her to help her. We fly down to the earth, and for a little while every day we reap the shadows as closely as we can draw them, so that the smile of Truth and the light of her eyes may go right into the heart of things and down to their very feet. Look at that blue flax. Its shadow is almost quite gone now, rolled up to its stalk, and it has opened its face so straight to the sky that it has become exactly the same colour'

"Then I looked and saw how this wondrous clear light which all the colours of the rainbow in heaven had gone to make, penetrated to the beginning and the end, to the foundation and the centre of things. It went down to the roots of the grasses and glistened through the wool of the lambs and flickered on the ripples of the water. It lit up a wrinkled smile on an old man's face, it cleared the mist from a thinker's brain, it shone in and out of the eyes of the children going home from school, and it made a heart that was sad and dull shine softly like a great pearl."

"That was glory, wasn't it?" said Miriam.

"Yes, there is nothing more glorious than truth. Some say other lights are more lovely because of their rich colours, such as the light of fancy or the light of wishing, but the white light of truth is full of them all, of beauty and of love, of joy and of goodness. For, indeed, when they are separated one from another, these ray-bearers do give us blossoms of gladness and rainbows of peace, but when they are all bound up together they make the white light of truth."

"And what became of the fairies' cloud?" asked Miriam.

It just dissolved away."

H. M. LIVENS.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged credit is taken

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C.

LONDON, JULY 16, 1904.

AFTER FIFTY YEARS

WE must be content here with the briefest reference to the Jubilee of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, for the report of the proceedings has taken up almost the whole of our available space. And first a word of cordial congratulation to the old students of the College on the eminent success which they secured for the celebration, and also to the coming students for the very pleasant home that has been secured for them. However the future may unfold itself, if generous friends find the necessary money, without injury to more pressing needs, that is all to the good.

The eloquent sermon preached by the Rev. JAMES C. STREET at the Jubilee Memorial Service was a splendid example of the devotion and enthusiasm which many of the old students are showing in less conspicuous ways. We trust that they are all at one with Mr. STREET in his presentation of the ideal of the College, and are determined that in accordance with that ideal its future shall be shaped. It has been from the first a Unitarian College, but, said Mr. STREET,

"this Unitarianism has not been dogmatic, or set forth as the final revelation of God to man. There has been from its chairs the broadest and freest teaching: neither tutor nor student was ever bound to a creed, or required to serve in a Unitarian community. The men were equipped for their religious work, and sent forth unfettered into GOD'S harvest field. A larger meaning has been given to an old name, until it has become the symbol of all that is free and ennobling."

If that is so, let us be glad for the College, and let those words be borne in mind in reading the President's address. On his hostile reference to the suggestions that have been made for a better co-ordination of forces in our two Colleges we need not dwell further here, but with regard to the aims of Manchester College, Oxford, take the liberty of referring to a leading article which appeared in THE INQUIRER of January 30. It is not a question of the relative advantages of Manchester and Oxford for the training of ministers. Our men should have the advantages of both.

THE UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE

JUBILEE CELEBRATIONS.

WE briefly recorded last week the celebration in Manchester of the Jubilee of the Unitarian Home Missionary College. In furnishing now the following full report of the proceedings we may note that in last week's Christian Life readers will find not only the Visitor's Address, illustrated by the pictures of the new residence taken from the programme, but also the complete text of the Rev. J. C. Street's jubilee sermon and the President's Address at the public meeting.

THE VISITOR'S ADDRESS.

On Tuesday, July 5, after the usual public examinations, the Rev. J. Edwin Odgers, D.D., gave the Visitor's Address to the students, with which was combined, as there was to be no valedictory service, a farewell to Mr. Simon Jones, B.A., the student who was leaving, on the completion of his course.

The Address opened with congratulations on the jubilee and good wishes for the continued prosperity and enlarged usefulness of the College. He might venture to assume, Dr. Odgers said, that it would not fall to his lot to deliver another Visitor's Address within those familiar walls; and he added :—

"It will hardly be expected of me that I should endeavour a melodious tear over the Memorial Hall regarded as a forsaken haunt of the Muses. Yet, surely, as day nursery for several generations of students, and a workshop for three or four generations of tutors, it has not been without its happy associations, nor without its humours. Yet while change is in the air, we cannot but meditate on the changes which these past fifty years have seen—changes in the method and form, even in the constitution, of this academy itself; changes, and, indeed, astonishing developments of academic life in Manchester, with which, no doubt, this College is destined to be more and more associated—none of these developments more noteworthy than the last, whereby the Victoria University of Manchester has not only joined the Universities of London and of Wales in establishing an open faculty of theology whose examinations shall be a public testimony that there is a theological scholarship which is common to all churches but has gone further in the organisation of theological instruction on the broad principle of its examination."

Referring next to the inevitable changes brought by time, and especially to the death of Mr. Harry Rawson, Dr. Odgers said :—

"May his worthy surviving colleagues be blest with accessions to their ranks of men endowed with that ability, that sagacity, that steady capacity of doing work and doing it well, which during long years he placed at the service of this institution and of Manchester College."

Turning to the subject of the examinations, he continued :—

"It might strike the casual observer that the motto of this College might be found in the words of the Son of Sirach, "Be not ignorant of anything in a great matter or a small." But you know very well that far beyond the importance of learning this or that particular thing, is the importance of learning to learn, of learning to work. At school you are taught, and you learn this or that. The aim of all higher education is to enable you to teach yourself. You are to acquire ability, readiness, mental gymnastic, method, the instinct that apprehends the first thing first, the eye for perspective among principles and facts."

Having then given some good advice as to thoroughness in study, he added :—"But, you may say, when I leave this place my chief interest will be not in continuing theological study, but in preaching and practical work. That may be, but at the same time you ought to realise (as I fear our people do not generally realise) the great area of common ground which the higher theological studies in all the churches have thrown open to those who can use it with understanding. You ought to cultivate what you have in common with Congregationalists of the school of Fairbairn, and Methodists of the school of Peake. And apart from these you must have studies of your own. If not connected and progressive theological study, still something that can claim and keep for you some private life that is life, and not merely a slack time between public duties; that shall not be merely a refreshing change of work, but shall hold in training and in increasing power a mental vigour that can keep you from flagging in the midst of oft-repeated duties, and give a touch of new interest to familiar themes. Work at local history, for example. There is a whole field of research in the social history of the English people, as it may be illustrated from the archives of a little old municipality like Altrincham or Woodstock. Work at local religious history, before it is too late, before local apathy has sold as waste paper the records from which it may be recovered. Such pursuits as these may be called winter studies.

"I would have you cultivate a summer study too. I wish I had been wise enough to take up some one branch or other of the study of Nature in the days of my early ministry. I feel the want of it still, though a keen delight in natural scenery and in the life of living things, together with some observing of local antiquities, has to some extent made up the deficiency to me personally. But I beg you to note that with the present keen awakening of interest in Nature study far and wide, nothing is so leading the way to community of interest and feeling in the old and the young as the ability to organise and guide such pursuits. And nobody who remembers the influence which our late friend Mr. Freeston won over young people who walked and talked with him, no one who has heard him speak with a glow of pure enthusiasm of the religious influence of Nature, can doubt that there is a doorway to a ministry of religion that can do much to counteract the mean and material views of life, the unhealthy passion for excitement, the depraving of taste, and the numbness of feeling which banishes all too soon the sunshine and the flowers from the hearts of the youth of our great populations."

Of the public ministry to which they were destined, he said :—

